

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

284 P.—286 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:

284 P. 209

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

County Cases Reported in
PACIFIC REPORTER

COPYRIGHT, 1930, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 284, Nos. 1-5; Vol. 285, Nos.
1-4; Vol. 286, Nos. 1-4.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

City of Madison and Page
of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

284 P. 209

WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 284-286 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Ackerman v. Beach, App.	285	895
Ackerman v. Beach, App.	285	896
Adams; Ingram v., App.	285	365
Adams v. Kaiser, App.	285	751
Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Exnicios, App.	286	453
Ætna Ins. Co., Hartford, Conn.; Foristiere v., Sup.	285	849
Aguilar v. Riverdale Co-op. Creamery Ass'n, App.	285	889
A. H. Busch Co. v. Strauss, App.	284	966
Ahern v. Livermore Union High School Dist. of Alameda County, Sup.	284	1105
Albers v. Shell Co. of California, App.	286	752
Alberti; Albertoni v., App.	286	473
Albertoni v. Alberti, App.	286	473
Allen; State Compensation Ins. Fund v., App.	285	1053
Allenberg v. Rapken & Co., App.	286	1059
Ambassador Petroleum Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles Coun- ty, Sup.	284	445
American Farms Co.; Reclamation Dist. No. 833 v., Sup.	285	688
American Grinder Mfg. Co.; Jonas v., App.	285	371
American-La France Fire Engine Co. of California; Klepper v., App.	285	1048
Anderson; Lindemann v., App.	284	1053
Andrews v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	284	494
Anglo-American Land Co.; Varni v., App.	284	520
Arkelian v. National Bank, App.	284	933
Armstrong v. Day, App., ...	284	1083
Arrand; Wild v., App.	286	480
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Gundry v., App.	286	718
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Sinan v., App.	284	1041
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Switzler v., App.	285	918
Aydlott v. Key System Transit Co., App.	286	456
Ayres v. Wright, App.	284	1077
Bach v. C. Swanston & Son, App.	286	1097
Backus v. Duffy, App.	284	954
Bailly v. Loock, App.	284	235
Baker; Bunnell v., App.	285	877
Baker; Bunnell v., App.	286	1090
Baldwin; People v., App.	285	864
Bank of America; McGaffey Canning Co. v., App.	284	977
Bank of Italy; Comeau v., Sup.	286	1040
Bank of Italy; Wass v., Sup.	286	1043
Bank of Italy; Western States Acceptance Corporation v., App.	285	340
Barasch; Rinaldi v., App.	284	948
Barnes v. Osgood, App.	284	975
Baroni v. Rosenberg, Sup.	284	1111
Barrett v. Superior Court of Alameda County, App.	286	443
Baruch, In re, App.	285	927
Bayside Land Co. v. Dolley, App.	284	479
Beach; Ackerman v., App.	285	895
Beach; Ackerman v., App.	285	896

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Beardsley Land & Investment Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	285	908
Benton; Brewer v., App.	285	722
Berg v. Traeger, App.	285	332
Berg v. Traeger, App.	286	469
Bergevin; Gierster v., App.	285	871
Berman, Ex parte, App.	286	1043
Berning v. Colodny & Colodny, App.	284	496
Berry; Woods v., App.	286	1073
B. F. Schlesinger & Sons v. Kohler & Chase, App.	284	244
Bishop v. Jordan, App.	285	1096
Blair v. Guarantee Title Co. of Long Beach, App.	284	719
Blodgett v. Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, App.	286	492
Blodgett v. Superior Court of Santa Barbara County, App.	286	1077
Board of Education of City of Los Angeles; Matteson v., App.	286	482
Board of Medical Examiners of State of California; McPheeters v., App.	284	938
Board of Trustees of City of Woodland; Mitchell v., App.	285	865
Bocci & Sons Co. v. Town of Lawndale, Sup.	284	654
Bomke; Kibele v., App.	285	907
Boms; Card v., App.	285	1059
Bowers v. Putman, App.	284	470
Bowman v. Motor Transit Co., Sup.	284	443
Brahm; People v., App.	284	256
Brandes; Warden v., App.	284	1050
Braswell; People v., App.	284	709
Brewer v. Benton, App.	285	722
Bristow; City of Turlock v., App.	284	962
Brown v. Brown, App.	285	1086
Brown v. City Council of City of Hawthorne, App.	284	254
Brown v. Montgomery Ward & Co., App.	286	474
Bruno; People v., Sup.	286	1037
Bullock v. McKeon, App.	285	392
Bunnell v. Baker, App.	285	877
Bunnell v. Baker, App.	286	1090
Busch Co. v. Strauss, App.	284	966
Buttrick v. Seines, App.	284	224
Byers; Hussong v., App.	285	888
Caberera; People v., App.	286	176
California Cotton Credit Corporation; Schumann v., App.	286	1068
California Ins. Co. of San Francisco; Foristiere v., Sup.	285	849
California Sweet Potato Corporation; Edwards v., App.	286	733
Calley; Smith v., App.	284	974
Campbell; McCartney v., Sup.	284	220
Canfield; Security Trust & Savings Bank v., App.	285	363
Canfield's Estate, In re, App.	285	363
Card v. Boms, App.	285	1059
Carpentier's Estate, In re, App.	285	348
Carrillo; People v., App.	285	866
Carrillo; People v., App.	286	493
Carter v. Stevens, Sup.	284	217
Central Mendocino County Power Co.; Cook v., App.	286	736
Chanslor; Wood Estate Co. v., Sup.	286	1001
Chapman; Zachary v., App.	284	703
Chas. S. Mabrey Const. Co.; Wetenhall v., Sup.	286	1015
Cherney v. Johnson, Sup.	286	1005
Chicago Fire & Marine Ins. Co.; Zecchini v., App.	285	1072

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Chipman; Davis v., App.	286	429
Chipman; Dozier v., App.	286	433
Chorley; Peterson v., App.	284	956
Christman v. Guaranty Mortg. Co. of California, App.	284	517
Chute; Community Lumber Co. of Baldwin Park v., App.	284	466
Ciani; People v., App.	286	459
Citizens' State Bank; Dudley v., App.	284	958
City and County of San Francisco; Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v., App.	284	506
City and County of San Francisco; Morrissey v., App.	286	433
City and County of San Francisco; Mt. Olivet Cemetery Ass'n v., App.	284	509
City and County of San Francisco; O'Connell v., Sup.	284	655
City Council of City of Hawthorne; Brown v., App.	284	254
City Council of Culver City; Lynn v., App.	286	1082
City of Gustine; Kennedy v., App.	285	361
City of Los Angeles v. Hall, App.	284	707
City of Los Angeles; Jones v., App.	286	161
City of Los Angeles; Rutherford v., App.	286	165
City of Los Angeles; Stern v., App.	286	165
City of Los Angeles; Wittman v., App.	286	165
City of Marysville v. Freeman, App.	285	1051
City of San Bernardino; People v., App.	285	875
City of Santa Cruz; Clinton v., App.	285	1062
City of Turlock v. Bristow, App.	284	962
Clark v. Hamilton Diamond Co., Sup.	284	915
Clarke's Estate, In re, App.	284	231
Claudius v. Vila, App.	284	221
Cline Electric Mfg. Co.; Scott v., App.	285	349
Clinton v. City of Santa Cruz, App.	285	1062
Cohn v. Klein, App.	284	967
Cohn v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co., App.	284	1051
Coley v. Wolcott, App.	284	241
Colodny & Colodny; Berning v., App.	284	496
Comeau v. Bank of Italy, Sup.	286	1040
Comeau v. Keene, Sup.	286	1038
Commercial Discount Co.; Fletcher v., App.	284	990
Community Lumber Co. of Baldwin Park v. Chute, App.	284	466
Continental Casualty Co.; Sherman v., App.	284	946
Cook v. Central Mendocino County Power Co., App.	286	736
Coover v. Painless Parker, Dentist, App.	286	1048
Corcoran; First Nat. Bank v., App.	286	1105
Cossins v. Hershel California Fruit Products Co., App.	284	1038
C. Swanson & Son; Bach v., App.	286	1097
Cushman; Keller v., App.	285	399
Cypress Lawn Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	284	506
Dabney; Davidson Inv. Co. v., App.	284	673
Darling; Nelson v., App.	284	1095
Davidson Inv. Co. v. Dabney, App.	284	673
Davies v. Mt. Gaines Min. & Mill. Co., App.	286	740
Davis v. Chipman, App.	286	429
Davis v. Davis, Sup.	284	442
Davis; People v., App.	284	516
Davis; White v., App.	284	1086
Davison; Mathews v., App.	284	672
Dawson; People v., App.	286	749
Day; Armstrong v., App.	284	1083
De Dodson; Long Beach Brick Co. v., App.	285	382

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Della v. Home Bank, App.	286	1064
Denovan v. Golden State Woolen Mills, App.	286	714
Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety; Hoffman v., Sup.	284	451
Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety; Ingram v., Sup.	284	212
De Ryana; Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v., App.	284	462
Dewey; Gelbach v., App.	286	1062
Dockstader v. First Nat. Bank, App.	285	715
Dodson; Long Beach Brick Co. v., App.	285	382
Dolley; Bayside Land Co. v., App.	284	479
Doud's Estate, In re, App.	284	705
Dozier v. Chipman, App.	286	433
D. Q. Service Corporation v. Securities Loan & Discount Co., App.	285	335
D. Q. Service Corporation v. Securities Loan & Discount Co., App.	286	470
Dreher; Woodward v., App.	285	334
Dudley v. Citizens' State Bank, App.	284	958
Duffy; Backus v., App.	284	954
Dugan v. Forster, two cases, App.	285	384
Duke; Pacific Fruit Exchange v., App.	284	729
Duncan v. Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, App.	285	732
Dunn v. Farrow, App.	286	709
Dunn; Siller v., App.	284	232
E. B. & A. L. Stone Co.; Lisle v., App.	284	680
E. Clemens Horst Co.; Fahrenbraker v., Sup.	284	905
Economy Home Builders; Ridens v., App.	286	481
Edwards, Ex parte, Sup.	284	916
Edwards v. California Sweet Potato Corporation, App.	286	733
Elliott; People v., App.	284	733
Elliott; People v., App.	285	401
Eng-Skell Co.; Leiner v., App.	285	905
Exnicios; Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v., App.	286	453
Fahrenbraker v. E. Clemens Horst Co., Sup.	284	905
Fallis v. Julian Petroleum Corporation, App.	285	1077
Fall River Joint Union High School Dist. v. Shasta Union High School Dist., App.	285	1091
Farrow; Dunn v., App.	286	709
Farwell; Stout v., App.	285	336
Farwell; Stout v., App.	286	471
Favali v. Richardson, App.	285	1062
Feinstein; Golish v., App.	285	390
Ferris; Winter v., App.	285	348
Fickbohm v. Knaust, App.	284	692
Finch; People v., App.	286	1068
Finley, In re, App.	284	941
Finley v. Finley, App.	284	941
First Bank of Jamestown v. Gillis, App.	286	451
First Nat. Bank v. Corcoran, App.	286	1105
First Nat. Bank v. Dockstader, App.	285	715
First Nat. Bank v. Terry, App.	285	336
First Nat. Bank v. Terry, App.	285	339
Fix; Palmer v., App.	286	498
Fletcher v. Commercial Discount Co., App.	284	990
Foothill Irr. Dist.; People's Ditch Co. v., App.	284	514
Foristiere v. Ætna Ins. Co., Hartford, Conn., Sup.	285	849
Foristiere v. California Ins. Co. of San Francisco, Sup.	285	849

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Forster; Dugan v., App.	285	384
Freeman; City of Marysville v., App.	285	1051
Freer; People v., App.	285	386
Freithofer; People v., App.	284	484
French; Pacific Employers' Ins. Co. v., App.	285	876
Funge; Robbins v., App.	285	856
Gable; Wallace v., Sup.	285	309
Gackstetter v. Market St. Ry. Co., App.	285	409
Gaetano Bocci & Sons Co. v. Town of Lawndale, Sup.	284	654
Galloway; People v., App.	286	476
Garvey; Harney v., App.	284	464
Gate City Creamery Co.; San Bernardino County v., App.	284	457
Gater v. Skinner, App.	284	697
Gaudin; Tracy v., App.	285	720
Gaylord; People v., App.	285	1066
Gelbach v. Dewey, App.	286	1062
General Acceptance Corporation; Henderson v., Sup.	286	1014
General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation; Lodge v., App.	286	1065
Getzoff, Ex parte, App.	286	1044
Gibbs v. Mendoza, App.	284	250
Gierster v. Bergevin, App.	285	871
Gill v. Johnson, App.	284	510
Gillis; First Bank of Jamestown v., App.	286	451
Gillispie; People v., App.	286	502
Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission of State of California, Sup.	284	661
Gofoor; Poundstone v., App.	285	403
Goldwater v. Oltman, App.	285	734
Golen State Woolen Mills; Denovan v., App.	286	714
Golish v. Feinstein, App.	285	390
Gomez; People v., Sup.	286	998
Goodwin; People v., App.	286	1087
Gray v. Hall, App.	285	1076
Green v. Hanson, App.	284	1082
Gregg v. Phillips, App.	286	1071
Guarantee Title Co. of Long Beach; Blair v., App.	284	719
Guaranty Mortg. Co. of California; Christman v., App.	284	517
Gubin v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	285	1071
Gubin v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	286	471
Gundry v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	286	718
Gury, Ex parte, App.	284	944
Gustason; Kling v., App.	284	1065
Gutterman v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	703
Guzman; People v., Sup.	286	1037
Hackel v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	704
Hahn v. Wilde, App.	285	714
Haight v. Marin Municipal Water Dist., Sup.	284	926
Haines; Rogers v., App.	285	412
Hall; City of Los Angeles v., App.	284	707
Hall; Gray v., App.	285	1076
Hamilton Diamond Co.; Clark v., Sup.	284	915
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Los Angeles County, App.	285	896
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Moore, App.	286	504
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Richardson Building & Engineering Co., Sup.	285	851
Hammond Lumber Co. v. Richardson Building & Engineering Co., Sup.	285	855
Handley v. Johnson, App.	286	428

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Hann; People v., App.	285	1070
Hanrahan Co.; Rice v., App.	285	414
Hanson; Green v., App.	284	1082
Harney v. Garvey, App.	284	464
Harney's Estate, In re, App.	284	464
Harris v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	699
Havens v. Loebel, App.	284	676
Havens v. Loebel, App.	284	717
Hawkins v. Hawkins, App.	286	747
Henderson v. General Acceptance Corporation, Sup.	286	1014
Henderson; Lewis Pub. Co. v., App.	284	713
Hendley; Pacific Finance Corporation v., App.	284	736
Hendley; Pacific Finance Corporation v., Sup.	285	1048
Henigan v. Yolo Fliers Club, Sup.	284	906
Hennessey v. Robinett, App.	286	700
Heron v. Riley, Sup.	284	209
Herriff, Ex parte, App.	285	927
Hershel California Fruit Products Co.; Cossins v., App.	284	1038
Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. De Ryana, App.	284	462
Higgins v. Julian Petroleum Corporation, App.	285	396
Hill v. Knight, Sup.	285	691
Hill; Medley v., App.	285	891
Hill v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., App.	286	1103
Hillard; People v., App.	284	1070
Hilliker; Schapiro v., App.	285	362
Hilton; Porter v., App.	286	463
Hoffman v. Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Sup.	284	451
Homan; People v., App.	284	252
Home Bank; Della v., App.	286	1064
Honnold v. Pacific Finance Corporation, App.	286	1101
Hopkins; Merchants' Trust Co. v., App.	284	1072
Hopkins v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	286	1053
Howe v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	698
Huber, Ex parte, App.	284	509
Hull; State Bar of California v., App.	284	492
Hussong v. Byers, App.	285	888
H. W. Smith, Inc., v. Swenson, App.	286	1050
Industrial Accident Commission; Loudon v., App.	286	1045
Industrial Accident Commission; Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v., App.	285	707
Industrial Accident Commission; Royal Indemnity Co. v., App.	285	912
Industrial Accident Commission; United Dredging Co. v., Sup.	284	922
Industrial Accident Commission of Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Department of Industrial Relations; Lacoe v., App.	284	474
Industrial Accident Commission of State of California; Globe Indemnity Co. v., Sup.	284	661
Ingram v. Adams, App.	285	365
Ingram v. Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Sup.	284	212
Ingram's Estate, In re, App.	285	365
Interstate Transit Co.; Rogers v., App.	284	499
Interstate Transit Co.; Rogers v., App.	285	731
Isaacson v. Union Trust Co. of San Diego, Sup.	286	1017

CASES REPORTED

	P.
	Vol	Page
Isleton Canning Co. v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, App.	286	447
James Rolph & Co. v. Krueger, App.	286	1060
Johannsen v. Klipstein, App.	284	1047
Johnson; Cherney v., Sup.	286	1005
Johnson; Gill v., App.	284	510
Johnson; Handley v., App.	286	428
Johnson v. Johnson, App.	285	902
Johnson; Oswald v., App.	285	1067
Jonas v. American Grinder Mfg. Co., App.	285	371
Jones v. City of Los Angeles, App.	286	161
Jones; Magnavox Co. v., App.	286	1084
Jones v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., App.	285	709
Jones v. Summers, App.	286	1093
Jordan; Bishop v., App.	285	1096
Julian Petroleum Corporation; Fallis v., App.	285	1077
Julian Petroleum Corporation; Higgins v., App.	285	396
Justice's Court of City of Berkeley; Proctor v., Sup.	285	312
Kaiser; Adams v., App.	285	751
Kalinowsky; Ososke v., Sup.	285	318
Kaplan v. Reid Bros., App.	285	868
K. Arakelian, Inc.; Madera Canal & Irrigation Co. v., App.	284	971
Keaton v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	696
Keene; Comeau v., Sup.	286	1038
Keene; Wass v., Sup.	286	1041
Kehrlein; Stolte v., App.	284	221
Keller v. Cushman, App.	285	399
Kennedy v. City of Gustine, App.	285	361
Kerr v. Russell, Sup.	285	311
Keyes; People v., App.	284	1096
Keyes; People v., Sup.	284	1105
Key System Transit Co.; Aydlott v., App.	286	456
Kibele v. Bomke, App.	285	907
Kimbrow v. Kimbro, App.	284	935
Kimes v. Razor, App.	285	359
King; Pritchard v., App.	285	1086
Kirby; Layne v., Sup.	284	441
Klein; Cohn v., App.	284	967
Klepper v. American-La France Fire Engine Co. of California, App.	285	1048
Kling v. Gustason, App.	284	1065
Klinger v. Modesto Fruit Co., App.	286	727
Klipstein; Johannsen v., App.	284	1047
Klitgaard; Petersen v., App.	284	519
Knaust; Fickbohm v., App.	284	692
Knight; Hill v., Sup.	285	691
Kohler & Chase; B. F. Schlesinger & Sons v., App.	284	244
Kraft v. Rooke, App.	284	935
Krause v. Rarity, App.	285	879
Kress v. Tooker-Jordan Corporation, App.	284	685
Kruce v. Parlier Winery, Sup.	284	671
Krueger; James Rolph & Co. v., App.	286	1060
Lacoe v. Industrial Accident Commission of Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Department of Industrial Relations, App.	284	474
Lample v. McDougall, App.	285	328
Landis Bros. Co. v. Lawrence, App.	286	177
Lane v. Superior Court in and for Fresno County, App.	285	860

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Lasker; People v., App.	286	703
Lawrence; Landis Bros. Co. v., App.	286	177
Layne v. Kirby, Sup.	284	441
Lee's Estate, In re, App.	284	948
Leiner v. Eng-Skell Co., App.	285	905
Lemka v. Nauman, App.	284	1062
Leonards; McClintick v., App.	285	351
Lewis Pub. Co. v. Henderson, App.	284	713
Liebman v. Richmond, App.	284	731
Lindemann v. Anderson, App.	284	1053
Lisle v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., App.	284	680
Livermore Union High School Dist. of Alameda County; Ahern v., Sup.	284	1105
Lodge v. General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, App.	286	1065
Loebel; Havens v., App.	284	676
Loebel; Havens v., App.	284	717
Loescher v. Whipple, App.	286	741
Long Beach Brick Co. v. De Dodson, App.	285	382
Long Beach Brick Co. v. Dodson, App.	285	382
Loock; Bailly v., App.	284	235
Lopez; People v., App.	285	856
Los Angeles County; Hammond Lumber Co. v., App.	285	896
Los Angeles Soda Works v. Southern California Aquazone Co., App.	284	253
Louden v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	286	1045
Lowe; People v., Sup.	286	697
Luke v. Southern Surety Co., App.	286	490
Lynn v. City Council of Culver City, App.	286	1082
McArthur's Estate, In re, App.	284	718
Macbeth; People v., App.	286	448
McCann; Weddington v., App.	285	1052
McCartney v. Campbell, Sup.	284	220
McClintick v. Leonards, App.	285	351
McDonald v. Smoke Creek Live Stock Co., Sup.	286	693
McDonough v. Waxman, App.	284	482
McDougall; Lample v., App.	285	328
McFarlane; Miles v., App.	286	507
McGaffey Canning Co. v. Bank of America, App.	284	977
McGee; People v., App.	284	229
McKenna v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., App.	286	445
McKeon; Bullock v., App.	285	392
McKeon v. Neuschwander, Sup.	286	1010
McKnight; Robinson v., App.	284	1056
McLain v. Sacramento Valley Sugar Co., App.	285	893
McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners of State of California, App.	284	938
McPherson; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v., App.	286	442
McVea v. Nickols, App.	286	761
Madera Canal & Irrigation Co. v. K. Arakelian, Inc., App.	284	971
Magnavox Co. v., Jones, App.	286	1084
Maguth, Ex parte, App.	284	940
Majors; Sears v., App.	285	321
Manes; People v., App.	285	1073
Marin Municipal Water Dist.; Haight v., Sup.	284	926
Market St. Ry. Co.; Gackstetter v., App.	285	409
Mathews v. Davison, App.	284	672
Matteson v. Board of Education of City of Los Angeles, App.	286	482
Matthews Fruit Co.; People's Finance & Thrift Co. of Pomona Valley v., App.	286	710

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Matthieson; Morgan v., App.	285	325
Mantino v. Sutter Hospital Ass'n, App.	285	369
Meadows v. Snyder, Sup.	286	1012
Medley v. Hill, App.	285	891
Mendoza; Gibbs v., App.	284	250
Merchants' Trust Co. v. Hopkins, App.	284	1072
Merritt v. Rey, App.	286	510
Meyer v. State Land Settlement Board, App.	286	743
Michaels v. Pacific Soft Water Laundry, App.	286	165
Michaels v. Pacific Soft Water Laundry, App.	286	172
Michaels v. Pacific Soft Water Laundry, App.	286	1071
Miles v. McFarlane, App.	286	507
Miller v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	698
Miller v. Price, App.	284	1035
Millum; People v., App.	284	224
Milo v. Prior, App.	284	701
Mingramm; Smith v., App.	285	354
Mitchell v. Board of Trustees of City of Woodland, App.	285	865
Modesto Fruit Co.; Klinger v., App.	286	727
Montgomery Ward & Co.; Brown v., App.	286	474
Moore; Hammond Lumber Co. v., App.	286	504
Moore v. Reynolds, App.	284	222
Moore v. Reynolds, App.	285	360
Moore v. Reynolds, Sup.	286	1008
Moore; Richmond v., App.	284	681
Moore v. Rogers, Sup.	284	916
Moore v. Thornburg, Sup.	284	218
Moore; Williamson v., App.	286	764
Morel v. Simonian, App.	284	694
Morgan v. Matthieson, App.	285	325
Morgan v. Superior Court, in and for Kings County, App.	286	1054
Morrissey v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	286	433
Mortara v. Rizzi, App.	285	1071
Morton v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	286	1072
Motor Transit Co.; Bowman v., Sup.	284	443
Mt. Gaines Min. & Mill. Co.; Davies v., App.	286	740
Mt. Olivet Cemetery Ass'n v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	284	509
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Gutterman v., Sup.	285	703
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Hackel v., Sup.	285	704
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Harris v., Sup.	285	699
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Howe v., Sup.	285	698
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Keaton v., Sup.	285	696
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Miller v., Sup.	285	698
Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles; Schwartz v., Sup.	285	698
Nasaroff v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., App.	286	486
Nasser; Weber v., App.	286	1074
National Bank; Arkelian v., App.	284	933
National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Nasaroff v., App.	286	486
Nauman; Lemka v., App.	284	1062
Neilson v. Walker, App.	286	1091
Nelson v. Darling, App.	284	1095
Nelson v. Parker, App.	286	1078
Nelson's Estate, In re, App.	286	439
Neuschwander; McKeon v., Sup.	286	1010
New Amsterdam Casualty Co.; Hill v., App.	286	1103
Nickols; McVea v., App.	286	761

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Northern California Conference Ass'n of Seventh Day Adventists v. Smith, Sup.	285	314
Northwestern Pac. R. Co.; Stephenson v., Sup.	284	913
Nunziato v. Prout, App.	286	455
Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	285	707
O'Connell v. City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	284	655
Odenwald; People v., App.	285	406
Odenwald; People v., Sup.	286	161
Oltman; Goldwater v., App.	285	734
Osaki; People v., Sup.	286	1025
Osgood; Barnes v., App.	284	975
Osgood; People v., App.	285	753
Ososke v. Kalinowsky, Sup.	285	318
Oswald v. Johnson, App.	285	1067
Pacific Electric Ry. Co.; McKenna v., App.	286	445
Pacific Employers' Ins. Co. v. French, App.	285	876
Pacific Finance Corporation v. Hendley, App.	284	736
Pacific Finance Corporation v. Hendley, Sup.	285	1048
Pacific Finance Corporation; Honnold v., App.	286	1101
Pacific Fruit Exchange v. Duke, App.	284	729
Pacific Gas & Electric Co.; Jones v., App.	285	709
Pacific Soft Water Laundry; Michaels v., App.	286	165
Pacific Soft Water Laundry; Michaels v., App.	286	172
Pacific Soft Water Laundry; Michaels v., App.	286	1071
Painless Parker, Dentist; Coover v., App.	286	1048
Palmer v. Fix, App.	286	498
Pantages; People v., App.	286	467
Pantages, Ex parte, App.	286	469
Parker; Nelson v., App.	286	1078
Park Ridge Country Club; Tyler v., App.	284	247
Parlier Winery; Kruce v., Sup.	284	671
Pashley v. Wukeyevich, App.	285	910
Pedrotti; Sarina v., App.	284	472
Pelkey v. Southern California Ass'n of Seventh Day Adventists, App.	284	1067
People v. Baldwin, App.	285	864
People v. Brahm, App.	284	256
People v. Braswell, App.	284	709
People v. Bruno, Sup.	286	1037
People v. Caberera, App.	286	176
People v. Carrillo, App.	285	866
People v. Carrillo, App.	286	493
People v. Ciani, App.	286	459
People v. City of San Bernardino, App.	285	875
People v. Davis, App.	284	516
People v. Dawson, App.	286	749
People v. Elliott, App.	284	733
People v. Elliott, App.	285	401
People v. Finch, App.	286	1068
People v. Freer, App.	285	386
People v. Freithofer, App.	284	484
People v. Galloway, App.	286	476
People v. Gaylord, App.	285	1066
People v. Gillispie, App.	286	502
People v. Gomez, Sup.	286	998
People v. Goodwin, App.	286	1087

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
People v. Guzman, Sup.	286	1037
People v. Hann, App.	285	1070
People v. Hillard, App.	284	1070
People v. Homan, App.	284	252
People v. Keyes, App.	284	1096
People v. Keyes, Sup.	284	1105
People v. Lasker, App.	286	703
People v. Lopez, App.	285	856
People v. Lowe, Sup.	286	697
People v. Macbeth, App.	286	448
People v. McGee, App.	284	229
People v. Manes, App.	285	1073
People v. Millum, App.	284	224
People v. Odenwald, App.	285	406
People v. Odenwald, Sup.	286	161
People v. Osaki, Sup.	286	1025
People v. Osgood, App.	285	753
People v. Pantages, App.	286	467
People v. Riga, App.	285	1069
People v. Rocco, Sup.	285	704
People v. Sampsell, App.	286	434
People v. Seccombe, App.	284	725
People v. Smith, App.	284	1066
People v. Stevenson, App.	284	487
People v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, Sup.	284	449
People v. Superior Court in and for Imperial County, Sup.	284	451
People v. Superior Court in and for San Bernardino County, App.	285	871
People v. Thomas, App.	285	870
People v. Thorp, App.	285	916
People v. Turco, App.	285	349
People v. Valenti, App.	284	485
People v. Vicunia, App.	286	1061
People v. Washburn, App.	286	711
People v. Weeks, App.	286	514
People v. Wilson, App.	284	988
People v. Woofter, App.	284	1095
People's Ditch Co. v. Foothill Irr. Dist., App.	284	514
People's Finance & Thrift Co. of Pomona Valley v. Matthews Fruit Co., App.	286	710
People's Finance & Thrift Co. of Porterville v. Phoenix Assur. Co., Limit- ed, of London, App.	285	857
Petersen v. Klitgaard, App.	284	519
Petersen; Schomaker v., App.	285	342
Peterson v. Chorley, App.	284	956
Phillips; Gregg v., App.	286	1071
Phoenix Assur. Co., Limited, of London; People's Finance & Thrift Co. of Porterville v., App.	285	857
Pioneer Exp. Co. v. Riley, Sup.	284	663
Pollak v. Staunton, App.	284	226
Poncino v. Sierra Nevada Life & Casualty Co., App.	286	729
Porter v. Hilton, App.	286	463
Poundstone v. Gofoor, App.	285	403
Pozzo's Guardianship, In re, App.	285	330
Price; Miller v., App.	284	1035
Prior; Milo v., App.	284	701
Prisk; Roberts v., App.	284	984

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Pritchard v. King, App.	285	1086
Proctor v. Justice's Court of City of Berkeley, Sup.	285	312
Prout; Nunziato v., App.	286	455
Putman; Bowers v., App.	284	470
Putman v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Sup.	286	425
Rapken & Co.; Allenberg v., App.	286	1059
Rarity; Krause v., App.	285	879
Rasor; Kimes v., App.	285	359
Reclamation Board of California v. Riley, Sup.	284	668
Reclamation Dist. No. 833 v. American Farms Co., Sup.	285	688
Reid, Ex parte, App.	284	518
Reid Bros.; Kaplan v., App.	285	868
Relovich v. Stuart, App.	286	449
Rey; Merritt v., App.	286	510
Reynolds; Moore v., App.	284	222
Reynolds; Moore v., App.	285	360
Reynolds; Moore v., Sup.	286	1008
Rice v. Hanrahan Co., App.	285	414
Richards v. Sellers, App.	285	391
Richardson; Favali v., App.	285	1062
Richardson Building & Engineering Co.; Hammond Lumber Co. v., Sup.	285	855
Richardson Building & Engineering Co.; Hammond Lumber Co. v., Sup.	285	851
Richmond v. Moore, two cases, App.	284	681
Richmond; Liebman v., App.	284	731
Ridens v. Economy Home Builders, App.	286	481
Riga; People v., App.	285	1069
Riley; Heron v., Sup.	284	209
Riley; Pioneer Exp. Co. v., Sup.	284	663
Riley; Reclamation Board of California v., Sup.	284	668
Rinaldi v. Barasch, App.	284	948
Ritter v. Ritter, App.	284	950
Riverdale Co-op. Creamery Ass'n; Aguilar v., App.	285	889
Rizzi; Mortara v., App.	285	1071
Robbins v. Funge, App.	285	856
Roberts v. Prisk, App.	284	984
Robinett; Hennessey v., App.	286	700
Robinson v. McKnight, App.	284	1056
Rocco; People v., Sup.	285	704
Rockefeller v. Smith, App.	286	487
Rogers v. Haines, App.	285	412
Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., App.	284	499
Rogers v. Interstate Transit Co., App.	285	731
Rogers; Moore v., Sup.	284	916
Rolph & Co. v. Krueger, App.	286	1060
Rooke; Kraft v., App.	284	935
Rosenberg; Baroni v., Sup.	284	1111
Rothwell; State Compensation Ins. Fund v., App.	284	943
Royal Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, App.	285	912
Rucker v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	286	732
Russell; Kerr v., Sup.	285	311
Rutherford v. City of Los Angeles, App.	286	165
Ryan v. Shannahan, Sup.	285	1045
Sacramento Valley Sugar Co.; McLain v., App.	285	893
Sacramento Valley Sugar Co.; Weinrich v., App.	285	893
Sampsell; People v., App.	286	434
San Bernardino County v. Gate City Creamery Co., App.	284	457

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
San Mateo Junior College Dist. of San Mateo County; Strauch v., App.	286	173
San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. Co.; Cohn v., App.	284	1051
Sarina v. Pedrotti, App.	284	472
Schaefer v. United Bank & Trust Co. of California, App.	286	723
Schapiro v. Hilliker, App.	285	362
Schlesinger & Sons v. Kohler & Chase, App.	284	244
Schluter's Estate, In re, App.	284	222
Schluter's Estate, In re, App.	285	360
Schluter's Estate, In re, Sup.	286	1008
Schmitz; Witt v., App.	284	987
Schomaker v. Petersen, App.	285	342
Schumann v. California Cotton Credit Corporation, App.	286	1068
Schwartz v. Municipal Court of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	698
Scott v. Cline Electric Mfg. Co., App.	285	349
Sears v. Majors, App.	285	321
Seccombe; People v., App.	284	725
Secondo v. Superior Court in and for Monterey County, App.	286	1089
Securities Loan & Discount Co.; D. Q. Service Corporation v., App.	285	335
Securities Loan & Discount Co.; D. Q. Service Corporation v., App.	286	470
Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Canfield, App.	285	363
Security Trust & Savings Bank; Woody v., App.	285	356
Seegelken's Estate, In re, App.	284	987
Seelig; Worsley v., App.	284	970
Seines; Buttrick v., App.	284	224
Sellers; Richards v., App.	285	391
Shannahan; Ryan v., Sup.	285	1045
Shasta Union High School Dist.; Fall River Joint Union High School Dist. v., App.	285	1091
Sheehan v. Vedder, App.	285	724
Shell Co. of California; Albers v., App.	286	752
Sherman v. Continental Casualty Co., App.	284	946
Sierra Nevada Life & Casualty Co.; Poncino v., App.	286	729
Siller v. Dunn, App.	284	232
Simonian; Morel v., App.	284	694
Sinan v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	284	1041
Singer; Sudden Lumber Co. v., App.	284	477
Skinner; Gater v., App.	284	697
Sklar; Wiseman v., App.	285	1081
Smith v. Calley, App.	284	974
Smith v. Mingramm, App.	285	354
Smith; Northern California Conference Ass'n of Seventh Day Adventists v., Sup.	285	314
Smith; People v., App.	284	1066
Smith; Rockefeller v., App.	286	487
Smith v. Smith, App.	284	705
Smith; Western Iron Works v., App.	284	715
Smith, Inc., v. Swenson, App.	286	1050
Smoke Creek Live Stock Co.; McDonald v., Sup.	286	693
Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, App.	284	696
Snyder; Meadows v., Sup.	286	1012
Southern California Aquazone Co.; Los Angeles Soda Works v., App.	284	253
Southern California Ass'n of Seventh Day Adventists; Pelkey v., App.	284	1067
Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Stibbens, App.	285	374
Southern Surety Co.; Luke v., App.	286	490
Stafford, In re, Sup.	284	670
State Bar of California v. Hull, App.	284	492

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
State Bar of California; Vaughan v., Sup.	284	909
State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Allen, App.	285	1053
State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Rothwell, App.	284	943
State Land Settlement Board; Meyer v., App.	286	743
Staunton; Pollak v., App.	284	226
Stephenson v. Northwestern Pac. R. Co., Sup.	284	913
Stern v. City of Los Angeles, App.	286	165
Stevens; Carter v., Sup.	284	217
Stevenson; People v., App.	284	487
Stolte v. Kehrlein, App.	284	221
Stout v. Farwell, App.	285	336
Stout v. Farwell, App.	286	471
Strauch v. San Mateo Junior College Dist. of San Mateo County, App.	286	173
Strauss; A. H. Busch Co. v., App.	284	966
Stibbens; Southern Pac. R. Co. v., App.	285	374
Stuart; Relovich v., App.	286	449
Sudden Lumber Co. v. Singer, App.	284	477
Summers; Jones v., App.	286	1093
Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Duncan v., App.	285	732
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Hopkins v., App.	286	1053
Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco; Isleton Canning Co. v., App.	286	447
Superior Court in and for County of Los Angeles; Welch v., Sup.	285	698
Superior Court in and for Fresno County; Lane v., App.	285	860
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; People v., Sup.	284	449
Superior Court in and for Imperial County; People v., Sup.	284	451
Superior Court, in and for Kings County; Morgan v., App.	286	1054
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Ambassador Petroleum Co. v., Sup.	284	445
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Andrews v., App.	284	494
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Beardsley Land & In- vestment Co. v., App.	285	908
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Gubin v., App.	285	1071
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Gubin v., App.	286	471
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Morton v., App.	286	1072
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Putman v., Sup.	286	425
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Rucker v., App.	286	732
Superior Court in and for Monterey County; Secondo v., App.	286	1089
Superior Court in and for San Bernardino County; People v., App.	285	871
Superior Court of Alameda County; Barrett v., App.	286	443
Superior Court of Santa Barbara County; Blodgett v., App.	286	492
Superior Court of Santa Barbara County; Blodgett v., App.	286	1077
Sutter Hospital Ass'n; Mautino v., App.	285	369
Swenson; H. W. Smith, Inc. v., App.	286	1050
Switzler v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	285	918
Terry; First Nat. Bank v., App.	285	336
Terry; First Nat. Bank v., App.	285	339
Thomas; People v., App.	285	870
Thornburg; Moore v., Sup.	284	218
Thorp; People v., App.	285	916
Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. McPherson, App.	286	442
Tooker-Jordan Corporation; Kress v., App.	284	685
Town of Lawndale; Gaetano Bocci & Sons Co. v., Sup.	284	654
Tracy v. Gaudin, App.	285	720
Traeger; Berg v., App.	285	332

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Traeger; Berg v., App.	286	469
Turco; People v., App.	285	349
Tyler v. Park Ridge Country Club, App.	284	247
Union Trust Co. of San Diego; Isaacson v., Sup.	286	1017
United Bank & Trust Co. of California; Schaefer v., App.	286	723
United Dredging Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, two cases, Sup.	284	922
Valenti; People v., App.	284	485
Varni v. Anglo-American Land Co., App.	284	520
Vaughan v. State Bar of California, Sup.	284	909
Vedder; Sheehan v., App.	285	724
Vedovi v. Watson & Taylor, App.	285	418
Vicunia; People v., App.	286	1061
Vila; Claudius v., App.	284	221
Walker; Neilson v., App.	286	1091
Wallace v. Gable, Sup.	285	309
Warden v. Brandes, App.	284	1050
Washburn; People v., App.	286	711
Wass v. Bank of Italy, Sup.	286	1043
Wass v. Keene, Sup.	286	1041
Watson & Taylor; Vedovi v., App.	285	418
Waxman; McDonough v., App.	284	482
Weber v. Nasser, App.	286	1074
Weddington v. McCann, App.	285	1052
Weeks; People v., App.	286	514
Weinrich v. Sacramento Valley Sugar Co., App.	285	893
Welch v. Superior Court in and for County of Los Angeles, Sup.	285	698
Western Iron Works v. Smith, App.	284	715
Western States Acceptance Corporation v. Bank of Italy, App.	285	340
Wetenhall v. Chas. S. Mabrey Const. Co., Sup.	286	1015
Whipple; Loescher v., App.	286	741
White v. Davis, App.	284	1086
Whitney's Estate, In re, App.	284	1067
Wild v. Arrand, App.	286	480
Wilde; Hahn v., App.	285	714
Williamson v. Moore, App.	286	764
Wilson; People v., App.	284	988
Winter v. Ferris, App.	285	348
Wiseman v. Sklar, App.	285	1081
Witt v. Schmitz, App.	284	987
Wittman v. City of Los Angeles, App.	286	165
Wolcott; Coley v., App.	284	241
Wood, In re, App.	285	323
Wood v. Wood, App.	285	323
Wood Estate Co. v. Chanslor, Sup.	286	1001
Woods v. Berry, App.	286	1073
Woodward v. Dreher, App.	285	334
Woody v. Security Trust & Savings Bank, App.	285	356
Woofter; People v., App.	284	1095
Worsley v. Seelig, App.	284	970
Wright; Ayres v., App.	284	1077
Wright; Wynne v., App.	286	1057
Wukejevich; Pashley v., App.	285	910
Wynne v. Wright, App.	286	1057
Yolo Fliers Club; Henigan v., Sup.	284	906
Zachary v. Chapman, App.	284	703
Zecchini v. Chicago Fire & Marine Ins. Co., App.	285	1072

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

284 PACIFIC REPORTER

HERON, Director State Department of Finance, v. RILEY, State Controller.
(S. F. 13658.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1930.

Rehearing Granted Feb. 6, 1930.

1. States ⇨127—Expenditure for liability insurance premiums on state automobiles held payable from "emergency" fund (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565; St. 1929, pp. 81-96).

Expenditure for liability insurance premiums covering state automobiles under Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565, held payable from emergency fund provided in budget bill of 1929 (St. 1929, pp. 81-96), since situation presented "emergency" within intent and definition of Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Emergency.]

2. Statutes ⇨119(1)—Statute respecting state's liability for loss occasioned by negligent driving of automobiles by its officers, agents, or employees held not invalid for insufficient title (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565).

Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565, making state and certain designated political subdivisions owning motor vehicles responsible to persons sustaining damage to person or property as result of negligent operation of such motor vehicles, or of any other motor vehicle operated negligently by officer, agent, or employee acting within scope of authority, held not invalid on ground that title was insufficient.

3. States ⇨191(1)—State may be sued only by its express consent.

State cannot be subjected to suits against itself except by its express consent, but it may surrender its sovereignty in that particular.

4. States ⇨119—Statute respecting state's liability for agents' negligence in automobile accidents held not invalid on ground payment of judgments against state constitutes gift of public money (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565).

Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565, respecting state's liability for loss occasioned by negligent driving of automobiles by its officers, agents, or employees, held not invalid upon ground that application of funds to pay judgments obtained against state constitutes gift of public money, within prohibition of Constitution.

5. Constitutional law ⇨205(2), 208(16)—Statute respecting state's liability for agents' negligence in automobile accidents held not invalid as class legislation or as granting special privileges (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565; Const. art. 1, § 21).

Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565, respecting state's liability for loss occasioned by negligent operation of automobiles by officers, agents, or employees, held not invalid as being class legislation or as violating Const.

art. 1, § 21, providing no citizen or class of citizens shall be granted special privileges.

6. States ⇨112—Right of action to one injured through operation of instrumentality used by state is statutory.

Right of action to one injured through operation of instrumentality used by state did not exist at common law, and is not inherent right, and therefore exists only so far, and in favor of such persons, as may be declared by legislative power of state.

7. Constitutional law ⇨208(1)—Law to be general in scope need not include all classes of individuals in state.

Law to be general in its scope need not include all classes of individuals in state, but it answers constitutional requirements if it relates to and acts uniformly upon the whole of any single class of individuals or objects, and classification is founded upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction.

8. Evidence ⇨14—It is common knowledge that operation of automobiles imposes hazard on practically entire population.

It is common knowledge that operation of automobiles upon streets and highways of state imposes hazard upon practically entire population.

9. Statutes ⇨85(4)—Statute respecting state's liability for agents' negligence in automobile accidents held not invalid on ground provision for subrogation to rights of injured person violated provision against special laws regulating practice of courts (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565; Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3).

Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 565, respecting state's liability for loss occasioned by negligence of officers, agents, or employees in operating automobiles, held not invalid as against contention that provision for subrogation to rights of person injured under which state may in turn recover from officer, agent, or employee causing damage, violates inhibition of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3, against special laws regulating practice of courts, since such provision does not relate to practice in courts.

In Bank.

Application by Alexander R. Heron, Director of State Department of Finance, for a writ of mandate, prayed to be directed to Ray L. Riley, State Controller of the State of California, to compel respondent to draw a warrant for the payment of liability insurance premiums. Writ granted.

Webb Shadle, of Sacramento, for petitioner.
Thomas H. Christiansen, of Sacramento, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The Legislature, at its last session, added a new section to the Civil Code (section 1714½, St. 1929, p. 565) making the state and certain designated political subdivisions owning any motor vehicles responsible to persons sustaining damage by reason of death or injury to person or property as the result of the negligent operation of such motor vehicles by any officer, agent, or employee, or as the result of the negligent operation of any other motor vehicle by any officer, agent, or employee when acting within the scope of his office, agency, or employment. Such damaged person may now sue the state or political subdivision in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state in the manner directed by law. In case of a recovery under the provisions of the section, the state or appropriate subdivision is subrogated to the rights of the person injured, and may, in turn, recover from the officer, agent, or employee causing the damage the amount of any judgment recovered against the state or subdivision in the damage suit. The state and the designated political subdivisions are authorized by the provisions of the act to insure their liability in any insurance company permitted to transact the business of such insurance in the state of California, and the premiums for such insurance shall be a proper charge against the respective general funds of the state or subdivision.

After the effective date of the new law, the petitioner, under the authority vested in him as director of the state department of finance, contracted with a qualified insurance company for policies of insurance indemnifying the state, in the event of responsibility arising under the provisions of the section. The policies, duly authorized, were executed, issued, and delivered. The petitioner prepared and presented to the respondent, state controller, a claim against the emergency fund provided in the budget bill of 1929 (St. 1929, pp. 81-96) for the sum of $23,747.49, that being the amount of the total premiums on the policies so secured. The respondent has refused to allow the claim, and declines to draw his warrant for the amount. Petitioner is here seeking a writ of mandate to compel him to do so. Respondent has demurred to the petition.

[1] The controller does not question the power of the petitioner to direct the payment of the claim for the amount of the premiums, if section 1714½ is constitutional, provided a valid appropriation was made for the purpose, but interposes several objections to its being recognized as a legal demand.

The first of these is that there is no valid express appropriation for the payment of the premiums in the act itself or in the general appropriation bill, his further contention being that the "emergency fund" carried in the general budget cannot be drawn upon for any such purpose.

The act making appropriations for the support of the government of the state of California for the biennial period 1929-31, after setting aside specific amounts for each of the departments of state and its many institutions and for other public purposes (St. 1929, supra), provides as follows:

"Emergencies.

"For emergency fund, one million dollars ($1,000,000) (exempt from section 4 of this act) to be expended only on written authorization of the state department of finance for emergencies. Emergencies within the meaning of this provision are hereby defined as contingencies for which no appropriation or insufficient appropriation has been made by law."

It has been the practice in this state for many years for the Legislature to include a similar provision in the general appropriations act, thus providing for the payment of emergency claims against the state and its activities, rather than subject the departments of the state and its officers to embarrassment in the administration of the state's business, and put claimants to the annoyance and uncertainty of having to depend upon subsequent Legislatures for reimbursement for services and supplies furnished. The purpose and policy of such an appropriation in the general budget bill has gone unquestioned during the time many Legislatures have met. The plan seems meritorious, and, so far as we are given to understand, it has not been challenged heretofore in its general application. We see no good reason, therefore, for now saying that it is not a proper plan to pursue, provided, of course, the demands against the emergency fund are just and reasonable. The definition in the act of what circumstances shall be sufficient to give rise to an "emergency," subjecting the emergency fund to a valid demand, seems to us to be logical and reasonable. We see no reason why it may not be held that the present situation presents an "emergency" within the intent and definition of the Legislature. The distinction between the situation here presented and the facts in Ingram v. Colgan, 106 Cal. 113, 38 P. 315, 39 P. 437, 28 L. R. A. 187, 46 Am. St. Rep. 221, so strongly relied on by respondent, is that in that case the statute (1891, p. 280) not only, like the one in the present instance, made no provision for the payment of the claims there involved (coyote scalps), but, in addition, there was no provision made in the general appropriations bill for the payment of any emergency claims against the state. In the instant case the Legislature has set aside a definite sum, to wit, $1,000,000, for the payment, among other things, of "contingencies for which no appropriation has been made." We think the use of the word "contingencies" is sufficiently general to include a situation like the one here presented. As to the wisdom of such a course—a question suggested by the respondent—of reposing such a power in the hands of an executive officer of the state, that is a matter resting solely with the Legislature.

[2] The other objections advanced by the respondent may be classed as resting on constitutional grounds. It is urged that the title of the act is insufficient. It is as follows: "An act to add a new section to the Civil Code to be numbered 1714½, relating to negligence upon the part of officers, agents and employees of the state, counties, cities and counties, municipal corporations, school districts, irrigation districts, districts established by law and political subdivisions of the state and authorizing the issuance of insurance covering such liability." The provisions of the act are relevant to the liability of the state and its political subdivisions for damages for injuries caused by the negligent operation of automobiles used in public service. In this sense they are expressive of but one general subject, and all parts of the general object to be attained by the statute are sufficiently catalogued in the title. In re Application of Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 293, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706. See, also, Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 519, 221 P. 628.

[3, 4] We are not strongly impressed with the contention of the respondent that the application of funds to pay judgments obtained against the state constitutes a gift of public money, within the prohibition of the Constitution. The state cannot be subjected to suits against itself except by its express consent; but it may surrender its sovereignty in that particular. It has done so in this instance through the act of its duly authorized representative, the Legislature. The judgments which are to be paid bear no semblance to gifts. They must be first obtained in courts of competent jurisdiction, to which the parties have submitted their claims in the manner directed by law. In other words, they are judgments obtained after the requirements of due process of law have been complied with. The Legislature has not attempted to create a liability against the state for any past acts of negligence on the part of its officers, agents or employees—something it could not do, and the doing of which would, in effect, be the making of a gift—but has provided that "hereafter" it shall be liable for certain things done which cause damage to its citizens, its liability to be first determined by an appropriate action at law.

[5-8] It is objected that the section is class legislation, in that it inures to the benefit of a favored class of citizens, that is, only those who are damaged through the negligent operation of automobiles owned by or used in the service of the state, and thereby makes a distinction in their favor as against citizens who may suffer damages through being injured by other state owned and operated instrumentalities, and who are without recourse against the state because it has made no such remedial provision for them. This objection goes only to the policy of such legislation, and the wisdom of the Legislature in enacting it. A right of action to one injured through the operation of an instrumentality used by the state did not exist at common law. It is not an inherent right, and exists only so far, and in favor of such persons, as may be declared by the legislative power of the state. The provisions of the Constitution were not intended to make it necessary that the Legislature, when conferring new rights of action upon particular classes of citizens for injuries not previously actionable, should, by the same act, declare that all persons who may suffer damages from injuries of that character shall also have such right of action. Pritchard v. Whitney Estate Co., 164 Cal. 564, 568, 129 P. 989. Consequently, a law, to be general in its scope, need not include all classes of individuals in the state. It answers the constitutional requirements if it relates to and acts uniformly upon the whole of any single class of individuals or objects, and the classification is founded upon some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction. Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 230, 24 P. 383; People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 397, 156 P. 451. If good ground for the classification exists, such classification is not void because it does not embrace within it every other class which might be included. It is common knowledge that the operation of automobiles upon the streets and highways of the state imposes a hazard upon practically the entire population. It is alleged by the petitioner, and not denied, that the state owns and operates, in connection with its business approximately 2,500 motor vehicles, and operates, under a mileage arrangement with certain of its officers, agents, and employees, approximately 1,000 additional motor vehicles. The operation of such a large number of motor vehicles means that inevitably many claims will arise for injuries caused to persons and property. One of the allegations of the petition is that, since section 1714½, supra, became effective, "many claims have been presented to the state by persons alleging damage to property caused by the negligent operation of state-owned motor vehicles, and that other claims for damage to persons by reason of deaths and injury and damage to property caused by the negligent operation of state-owned motor vehicles and other motor vehicles operated by officers, agents and employees of the state will be presented to the state from time to time." In a very recent case, the Supreme Court of the United States took judicial notice of the "increasing frequency of litigation" arising from the use of the automobile as an instrument of transportation, and held that such use "is peculiarly the subject of regulation," and that "whether there has been a serious increase in the evils of vexatious litigation in this class of cases, * * * is for legislative determination. * * * Its wisdom is not the concern of courts. * * * It is enough," said the court in conclusion, if the "statute strikes at the evil where it is felt and reaches the class of cases where it most frequently occurs." Silver v. Silver, 280 U. S. 117, 50 S. Ct. 57, 59, 74 L. Ed. —.

The complaint that the act violates that part of section 21 of article 1 of the state Constitution which provides that no citizen or class of citizens shall be granted privileges which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens, is, we believe, sufficiently answered by what we have said on the question of the classification by the act of those permitted to maintain an action under its provisions, and by other decisions of this court. County of San Luis Obispo v. Murphy, 162 Cal. 590, 123 P. 808, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 712; Pritchard v. Whitney Estate Co., supra.

[9] We discern little merit in the contention that because the act provides that, in case of a recovery under its provisions by one who has been injured, the state or political subdivision is subrogated to the rights of the person injured, and may, in turn, recover from the officer, agent, or employee causing the damage, it violates the inhibition of subdivision 3 of section 25 of article 4 of the state Constitution against special laws regulating the practice of courts of justice. The provision complained of but serves to give to the employer or principal of the person causing the injury the benefit of the well-settled rules of equity, now recognized in law, upon the subject of subrogation, which are part of the substantive law, and does not relate to practice in the courts.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the respondent state controller to audit and allow the claim of petitioner herein, as prayed for.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 633

INGRAM et al. v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY, et al. (S. F. 13447.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1930.

1. Master and servant $\S$ 417(1) — Where commission treated petition to set aside order denying rehearing as petition for rehearing, petitioner could petition for review, though not filing petition for rehearing following final decision.

Where petitioner filed petition for rehearing on award which was denied January 14, 1927, and on February 7, 1927, he filed a petition to set aside order denying rehearing and for rehearing and Industrial Accident Commission granted petition and treated it as petition for rehearing, referring to it as petition for rehearing and making its final decision of July 27, 1928, as its "decision after rehearing," petitioner, because of circumstances making it inequitable to permit commission to prevail in its claim that its proceedings therein were not on rehearing, did not forfeit right to petition court for review by failure to file petition for rehearing following final decision and award of July 27.

2. Master and servant $\S$ 416—Commission's powers of additional rehearing on ground of newly discovered evidence should be exercised with caution (Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 20(d).

Power of Industrial Accident Commission of additional and further hearing under Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 20(d), St. 1917, p. 850, invoked on ground of newly discovered evidence, should be exercised with great caution, and when fraud, inadvertence, mistake, or excusable neglect are clearly shown.

3. Master and servant $\S$ 417(7)—When odd jobs may be found by commission to constitute one employment, not casual, court should approve commission's action based on sufficient evidence (Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 8(c).

When work performed by employee doing odd jobs is of such nature as that it may be found by commission that all of odd jobs constituted one employment of duration and value to remove it from definition of "casual," as defined by Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 8(c), St. 1917, p. 835, liberal construction of statute enjoined upon court should impel approval of commission's action in holding employment was not casual when based on sufficient evidence.

4. Master and servant $\S$ 361—Injury, employee sustained while painting roof of lawyer's house, acquired to be rented or sold, was not in course of employer's profession, etc.; "course of trade, business, profession, or occupation of employer" (Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 8(c).

Where employee sustained injury while painting roof of house owned by lawyer, who had no other regular business, and his wife, who had no business or occupation other than housewife, and house was acquired for purpose of repairing and improving it for rental or sale, and parties owned no other similar property, work performed at time of injury was not in "course of trade, business, profession, or occupation of his employer," within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act, $\S$ 8(c), St. 1917, p. 835.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Third Series, Course of Business.]

5. Master and servant $\S$ 361—Where employment was not casual, that employment was not in course of employer's business, etc., did not exclude compensation.

Where Industrial Accident Commission found on sufficient evidence that employment of injured person was not casual, fact that employment did not tend toward preservation, maintenance, or operation of business, business premises, or business property of employer, and was not performed in course of trade, business, profession, or occupation of employer, did not exclude employee from benefits of Workmen's Compensation Act.

6. Master and servant ⇨398—Wife filing affidavit attached to husband's petition for rehearing 8 months after injury held not estopped to claim claim against her 17 months after injury was barred (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11; Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3).

Where injured employee filed claim against husband alone within 6 months from injury, but wife was made party nearly 17 months after injury, wife held not estopped to claim that claim was barred by limitation of time under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11 (St. 1917, p. 841), where nearly 8 months after injury she filed affidavit attached to husband's petition for rehearing stating she was owner of property on which employee performed labor at time of injury, and that, if judgment should be declared in cause, she would be party responsible only, and that she had meritorious defense, since there was no estoppel of record and elements of equitable estoppel, as set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, were not present.

7. Limitation of actions ⇨124—Suit cannot be considered as having been commenced against parties brought in by amendment until they are made parties.

Suit cannot be considered as having been commenced against parties brought in by amendment until they are made parties, and statute of limitations continues to run in their favor until thus made parties.

8. Master and servant ⇨398—Where employee's claim against husband was timely filed, claim asserted against wife 17 months after injury was not "further claim" within statute "of any person or persons" (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11).

Where employee injured while working on house held in wife's name, filed claim against husband as employer within 6 months, claim asserted against wife as the other employer 17 months after injury was not a "further claim," as contemplated by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11 (St. 1917, p. 841), since words "further claims" do not relate to an additional employer but to additional claims against the same employer, and the language "of any person or persons" after the phrase "further claims" includes other claimants for compensation against the same employer arising from the same transaction.

9. Master and servant ⇨398—Where injured employee filed claim against husband within 6 months, claim against wife, brought in by amendment 17 months after injury held barred (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11).

Where employee filed claim against husband for injuries within 6 months after injury, claim against wife made party by amendment nearly 17 months after injury held barred by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11 (St. 1917, p. 841).

In Bank.

Petition by J. E. Ingram and another against the Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, and another, to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. Award as to petitioner named affirmed, and award as to the other petitioner annulled.

Superseding opinion in 275 P. 844.

F. Britton McConnell, of Los Angeles (J. W. Carrigan, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. Petition to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

A procedural question will first be considered. The original award was made on November 24, 1926, against petitioner J. E. Ingram alone. On December 16, 1926, he filed a petition for rehearing which was denied on January 14, 1927. On February 7, 1927, he filed a "Petition to Set Aside Order Denying Rehearing and for Rehearing and for Order under Section 16, Workmen's Compensation Act." The commission on March 1, 1927, granted this petition, referring in its order to said petition as one for a "rehearing." Further hearings were had on August 15 and 24, 1927, wherein the transcript of the proceedings thereon recites that this cause came on regularly for hearing "on rehearing." Following these hearings the commission rendered its decision in writing wherein it denominated the same as its "Decision after Rehearing," and wherein it recited that, "a rehearing of this cause having been duly granted, and said rehearing having been regularly heard * * * and submitted for decision, it is hereby ordered as and for the decision after rehearing that the findings and award heretofore made and filed herein be, and hereby are, rescinded and annulled and new findings and award made and substituted therefor as follows:" (Then follow the findings and award attacked in the present proceeding.) The final decision and award were filed July 27, 1928. The petitioner Minnie H. Ingram, on August 17, 1928, filed a petition for a rehearing of the decision and award of July 27, which petition was denied by the commission on August 20, 1928. The petitioner J. E. Ingram filed no petition for a rehearing of the decision and award of July 27th. Wherefore the respondents contend the petitioner J. E. Ingram has no standing before this court on this application for review. The argument is made that the commission, in acting upon and denying the petition of J. E. Ingram for a rehearing on January 14, 1927, proceeded under section 64(a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 873); that the remedy of said petitioner as against the award of November 24, 1926, after the denial of his petition for a rehearing, was an application for a review in the courts as provided in section 67(a) of said act, which remedy was not pursued by him; that there is no place in the law for a second petition for a rehearing of the original decision and award, citing Crowe Glass Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 84 Cal. App. 287, 258 P. 130; that, in granting second petition of J. E. Ingram for a so-called "rehearing" on March 1, 1927, the commission was acting pursuant to its continuing jurisdiction under section 20d of the act, citing Bartlett-Hayward Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 203 Cal. 522, 265 P. 195, and Brunski v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 203 Cal. 761, 265 P. 918; that the remedy of the petitioner J. E. Ingram, as against the decision and award of July 27, 1928, was to file a petition for a rehearing, which remedy was not pursued; and that the failure of said petitioner to file such petition for a rehearing has foreclosed his right to petition the court for review.

[1] The action of the commission, both in its original and its final decision and award, was taken before the decision of the District Court of Appeal in the Crowe Glass Co. Case and before the decision of this court in the Bartlett-Hayward and the Brunski Cases. When such action was taken by the commission, the right of a party to a proceeding before it to apply for a second rehearing under section 65(a) of the act and the powers of the commission under section 20(d) of the act were not clearly understood or defined. The petition of J. E. Ingram, filed February 7, 1927, had a twofold aspect. It was a petition for a rehearing following the original decision and award, and, being a second petition for a rehearing, it was in this respect unauthorized under the construction of the statute as laid down in the Crowe Glass Co. Case. However, it was treated by both parties as a petition for a rehearing. The commission especially treated it as such from the beginning, referring to the same as a petition for a rehearing, and making its final decision of July 27, 1928, as its "Decision after Rehearing." If it were properly such, no further petition for a rehearing was necessary or available as a prerequisite to an appeal to the courts for a review under the doctrine of the Crowe Glass Co. Case. In view of the uncertainty in the law at the time of the final award of July 27, and further in view of the action of the commission and its attitude throughout its proceedings on the petition for rehearing filed February 7, it would be highly inequitable to permit the commission now to prevail in its claim that its proceedings therein were not on rehearing or that the final award was not a "Decision after Rehearing." Because of the particular circumstances here presented, we conclude that the petitioner J. E. Ingram did not forfeit his right to petition the court for a review by his failure to file a petition for a rehearing following the final decision and award of July 27.

In its second aspect, the petition of J. E. Ingram of February 7 was for an additional and further hearing on the grounds stated in the petition, thus invoking the exercise of the powers of the commission under section 20d of the act. When treated as such, the proceedings thereunder were in the nature of new proceedings under the statute, and the decision and award made thereon was a final determination of such additional and further proceedings so as to necessitate a petition for rehearing as a prerequisite to the right to petition the courts for a review.

Petitioner Minnie H. Ingram, against whom an award was first rendered on July 27, 1927, filed her petition for a rehearing, and there is no question of her standing as a petitioner in the present proceeding.

[2] It appears to be assumed by both parties that the final award of the commission on July 27 was made pursuant to proceedings had in the exercise of the powers of the commission under section 20(d) of the act. No point is made by either party that the power so invoked was not properly exercised. It should be said, however, that the petition filed February 7, when viewed in its second aspect, invokes the power of the commission under section 20(d) on the ground of newly discovered evidence only, which ground is specifically made one of the bases of a petition for a rehearing under section 65(a) of the act. We are not to be understood as indicating that the power of the commission under section 20(d) may not be invoked on this ground, but we desire to state that such power, invoked on the ground of newly discovered evidence, should be exercised with great caution, and when fraud, inadvertence, mistake, or excusable neglect are clearly shown. Otherwise the process of introducing evidence before the commission would be interminable, and the commission might be held to abuse its discretion in the exercise of its power under section 20(d).

We now pass to the second point urged by petitioners, viz.: That the employment of J. A. Stoolfire, in whose favor the award was made, was both casual and not in the course of the trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer. If this be true, it is contended that Stoolfire was excluded from compensation under section 8 of the act.

The employee, Stoolfire, as an independent contractor, engaged with the petitioners to perform certain finish carpenter work on the inside of the house belonging to Minnie H. Ingram for the sum of $40. This work could not be done until the house had been lathed and plastered. Another contractor had agreed to do the lathing and plastering for the contract price of $110. It was necessary that Stoolfire await the completion of the lathing and plastering before he could commence his inside carpentering work. In the meantime he was engaged by the petitioners herein to do odd jobs outside of the house and about the place at 75 cents per hour. These odd jobs consisted in building a fence, a couple of garages, steps in front of the house, cleaning up the place, and in general doing whatever he was directed to do by the petitioners from time to time during the period of waiting for the inside work. While Stoolfire was painting the roof of the house at the instance of the petitioners, he fell and received the injury for which compensation was sought. In performing these so-called odd jobs, Stoolfire worked more than 10 days, and the cost of labor exceeded $100.

[3] It is contended by the petitioner that the evidence shows without conflict that the employment in which Stoolfire was engaged when injured was separate and distinct from every other employment; in other words, that there was no continuous employment as to the odd jobs, but that each was a separate employment from time to time, and that therefore the job of painting the roof and sides of the house was casual, involving in itself about $16 worth of labor. The petitioners testified in support of this contention, and the evidence so presented was sufficient to support a finding that the job of painting the roof and sides of the house was a separate and distinct employment. On the other hand, the testimony of Stoolfire was sufficient to support the finding of the commission that he was employed in the capacity of "painter-carpenter-laborer," and that the odd jobs which he was called upon to perform in the period of waiting were collectively the work "contemplated" to be completed under a single employment, and that each job, including the painting of the roof, was not a separate and distinct employment. It would require a too narrow construction of the Workmen's Compensation Act to hold that a so-called "jack-of-all-trades," employed continuously to do numerous classes of work each of a casual nature when considered by itself, should in all cases be excluded from compensation. When the work performed by such an employee is of such a nature as that it may be found, as here, that all of the odd jobs constituted one employment of the duration and value to remove it from the definition of "casual" as defined by section 8(c) of the act, the liberal construction of the statute enjoined upon the court should impel an approval of the action of the commission when based upon sufficient evidence. We so construe the record and action of the commission in this regard.

[4] It is also urged by the petitioners that the work performed by Stoolfire was not in the "course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer," as that phrase is defined in the act. The petitioner J. E. Ingram is a lawyer, and has no other regular business or profession. The petitioner Minnie H. Ingram is his wife, and has no business or occupation other than housewife. The property on which Stoolfire performed his work was not the home of the Ingrams. It was acquired by one or both; the title being taken in the name of the wife. It was their purpose to repair and improve the place for rental or sale or for the occupancy of a relative, and they owned no other similar property. It is upon this state of facts that the present claim is made. The statute provides that "the phrase 'course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer' shall be taken to include all services tending toward the preservation, maintenance or operation of the business, business premises or business property of the employer," and that "the words 'trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer' shall be taken to include any undertaking actually engaged in by him with some degree of regularity. * * *" It was established by the petitioners beyond controversy that the undertaking of repairing and improving the premises in question was not in line with or incidental to the business, profession, or occupation of either, and that it was not engaged in by them or either of them with any degree of regularity. The case of Archbishop v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 660, 230 P. 16, relied on by the respondent, does not, when carefully considered, support the respondents' cause. That case went off on the question of the burden of proof. The petitioners in the present case have sustained the burden on this point. In the case of Hedges v. Bedford and the Ind. Acc. Comm. (S. F. No. 13115), also relied on by the respondents, this court denied an application for a writ of review on August 16, 1929, on the ground that it appeared that, as the petitioner, as a real estate broker, was engaged in repairing and remodeling houses for the purpose of either rental or sales, such undertakings were so closely related and incidental to his regular business as to bring him within the terms of the act. On the other hand, the case of Rissman v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 190 Cal. 619, 213 P. 991, 992, is not authority for the petitioner on this point, for the reason that it was conceded by the petitioners in that case that the renovating of two houses for the purposes of sale was not in the employer's business. The point was therefore not adjudicated. The Archbishop Case refers in the discussion to two other cases in the following language: "According to two other decisions (Lauzier v. Industrial Accident Commission, 43 Cal. App. 725, 185 P. 870, and Ford v. Industrial Accident Commission, 53 Cal. App. 542, 200 P. 667) the making of repairs necessary and incidental to the upkeep of four small frame houses, in the one case, and a flat in the other, which the owners let for hire, is not a business within the contemplation of the Compensation Act." Pacific Employers' Insurance Co. v. Department of Industrial Relations, 91 Cal. App. 577, 267 P. 880, is a ruling to the same effect.

[5] But it was settled in the Rissman Case that the employment must not only be casual, but also not in the business, etc., of the employer, in order that the employee be excluded from the benefits of the act. It was therein said, at page 622 of 190 Cal., 213 P. 992: "The defense of casual employment is not available unless the employment was not only casual as defined by the act, but also not in the trade, business, profession, or occupation of the employer. If either of these conditions be present, the employee comes within the provisions of the act." Therefore, when the commission, as here, found on sufficient evidence that the employment of Stoolfire was not casual, the fact that his employment did not tend toward the preservation, maintenance, or operation of the business, business premises, or business property of his employer did not necessarily exclude him from the benefits of the act.

[6] Finally it is contended by the petitioners that the claim is barred as against Minnie H. Ingram. This contention is based on the following undisputed facts: Stoolfire was injured on April 27, 1926. His claim was filed against J. E. Ingram alone within 6 months to wit, on June 9, 1926. After a hearing thereon, findings and award were made which were set aside and additional hearings had. During these additional hearings, it was made to appear that Minnie H. Ingram was a necessary party to the proceeding. The showing as to such necessity was that it appeared that the title to the property on which Stoolfire worked was in Minnie H. Ingram; that during the course of the work Stoolfire dealt with both husband and wife, received instructions from each, and was paid in part by each. Accordingly, an order was entered making Mrs. Ingram a party defendant. This order was made on September 20, 1927, or nearly 17 months after the injury. On October 14, 1927, Minnie H. Ingram filed an answer in which she pleaded, among other things, that the application for compensation as to her was barred by limitation of time under section 11 of the act. The commission found that Minnie H. Ingram was estopped from setting up the bar of the statute. No reason for the estoppel is stated in the findings but in the record it appears that on December 14, 1926, or nearly 8 months after the injury, an affidavit was subscribed and sworn to by Minnie H. Ingram, which affidavit was attached to the petition for rehearing filed by J. E. Ingram on December 16, 1926. In this affidavit Minnie H. Ingram deposed that she was the owner of the real property on which the applicant for compensation performed his labor and claimed to have been injured; that she observed the work done by the applicant, kept a record of the work, and paid him for the same; that she was unavoidably absent from the city, and could not be present at the hearing theretofore had before the commission; that she requested her attorney, J. E. Ingram, to ask the referee to continue said hearing until she could be present, and that she was informed that the referee refused the request; that "she has a meritorious defense to the above entitled cause and respectfully requests that she be permitted to give her testimony on account of not being present at the hearing; also, that she is actually the defendant in said cause and not the said J. E. Ingram; that he was acting for her on said premises in her absence only, and that if judgment should be declared in this cause she would be the party responsible only;" that she verily believed that, if she had been present and had testified at said hearing, "no judgment would have been entered against her or the said J. E. Ingram." With the foregoing affidavit before it, the commission denied the petition for a rehearing on January 14, 1927. Notwithstanding said order of denial in the face of said affidavit, the commission found that Minnie H. Ingram was estopped from claiming the limitation of time as against the order making her a party defendant in said proceeding on September 20, 1927.

[7] It must be remembered that said affidavit was filed nearly 8 months after the injury, when the 6-months' period of limitation had long since expired, and that, when the order was entered making Minnie H. Ingram a party, she promptly filed her answer setting up the bar of the statute. We find none of the elements of estoppel present in her acts or conduct. The commission and Stoolfire were informed by the testimony of J. E. Ingram on August 12, 1926, within 4 months after the injury, that Minnie H. Ingram owned said property, but no action was taken within the 6-months' period to make her a party. There was no estoppel of record against the claim of the bar of the statute, and the elements of equitable estoppel as set forth in section 1962, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, are not present. "The vital principal is that he who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such a change of position is sternly forbidden. It involves fraud and falsehood, and the law abhors both." Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 94, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154, citing Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 687, 47 P. 695, quoting from Dickerson v. Coligrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. Ed. 618; 10 Cal. Jur. p. 626. The petitioner Minnie H. Ingram was guilty of no act of commission or omission prior to the running of the statute in her favor by which the status or rights of the employee or the authority of the commission were in any wise prejudiced, and at no time has she waived her rights under the statute. When she was ordered into the proceeding as a party, she interposed the bar of the statute, and has at all times relied upon the same. "The general rule is well settled that, when new parties are brought in by amendment, the statute of limitations continues to run in their favor until thus made parties. The suit cannot be considered as having been commenced against them until they are made parties." 37 Cor. Jur. 1066, and cases therein cited.

[8] Assuming that it might be held that there was no estoppel on the part of Minnie H. Ingram to interpose the bar of the statute, it is further argued by the commission that the claim against her is not barred because of the provision in section 11 of the act, which section specifies the 6-months' period. The proviso is as follows: "Provided, that the filing of an application with the commission for any portion of the benefits prescribed by this act shall render this section inoperative as to all further claims of any person or persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, and the right to present such further claims shall be governed by the provisions of section twenty (d) and section sixty-five (b) of this act." It is argued that, as the claim against J. E. Ingram was timely filed, it must follow that the claim asserted against Minnie E. Ingram about 17 months after the injury was a "further claim" as contemplated by the proviso. The contention is without merit. The words "further claims," as used in the statute, plainly refer to additional claims against the named employer, which additional claims are not mentioned in the original application or to claims for "further disability" as the latter phrase is subsequently used in the section. And the language "of any person or persons" after the phrase "further claims" includes other claimants for compensation against the same employer arising from the same transaction. Fogarty v. Department of Industrial Relations (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 641; Great W. P. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 196 Cal. 593, 238 P. 662. It is assumed that, on the facts as they developed during the additional hearings before the commission in this matter, the petitioners herein were subject to a joint and several liability on account of the injury. Satisfaction from one would therefore be satisfaction as to both. Consequently this is not a case where the bringing in of an additional party is essential to a recovery against the person already a party. The claim for compensation is against the employer or employers if there be more than one. In a case of this sort, the statute affords the claimant 6 months to proceed against his employer, and the words "further claims" do not relate to an additional employer, but to additional claims against the same employer.

[9] From what has been said it follows that the award as to Minnie H. Ingram must be annulled, and that the award as to J. E. Ingram must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

CARTER et al. v. STEVENS, State Fire Marshal, et al. (L. A. 11958.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1930.

1. Statutes $\S$ 166—Where new act revised, amended, and republished title and every section of original act, and re-enacted practically all substantive provisions thereof, omitted provisions of original act only held repealed (St. 1929, p. 288, amending St. 1927, p. 1924; Pol. Code, $\S$ 325).

Where St. 1929, p. 288, amending St. 1927, p. 1924, being an act to reduce fire insurance hazards of clothes cleaning establishments, revised, amended and republished title and every section of original act and re-enacted practically all substantive provisions thereof, provisions of original act omitted from amendment held repealed, and portions of original act which were not altered are considered as law from time they were enacted, and new provisions are considered as having been enacted at time of amendment, in view of Pol. Code, $\S$ 325.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1107—Though act involved was amended and substantially re-enacted between time of judgment and appeal, questions involved held not moot, where parts of original were continued in force (St. 1927, p. 1924, as amended by St. 1929, p. 288).

Questions on appeal from judgment in action to enjoin fire marshal and assistants from proceeding to reduce fire insurance hazards of business of clothes cleaning establishments under St. 1927, p. 1924, held not moot, warranting dismissal of appeal, where St. 1929, p. 288, enacted between time of judgment and appeal, though practically amending all substantive provisions of former act, continued in force certain provisions thereof, since invalidity may inhere as well after as before amendment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles B. MacCoy, Judge.

Action by Jose D. Carter and others, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, against Jay W. Stevens, as State Fire Marshal, and others, in which numerous other parties intervened. From the judgment rendered, plaintiffs and interveners appeal. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

William Schreider and Lyon, Fleming & Robbins, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and James S. Howie and John L. Flynn, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. Plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves and all other parties similarly situated, brought this action against the fire marshal and his assistants to enjoin them from taking action of any kind or character under the provisions of an act of the Legislature, approved June 3, 1927 (St. 1927, c. 880), the basis of their attack being that said statute, as a whole and as to each provision thereof, and all regulations promulgated by defendant fire marshal thereunder, were illegal and the act void because in contravention of various constitutional provisions, and the regulations unreasonable and oppressive. Numerous other parties were thereafter allowed to intervene in said action as plaintiffs. Issues were joined and the cause brought to trial; findings of fact and conclusions of law were made; and on July 13, 1929, judgment was entered.

The effect of the said judgment was to sustain the validity of said act in toto, but to declare invalid, as being unreasonable and oppressive, certain of the many rules and regulations promulgated by the state fire marshal thereunder. All plaintiffs and interveners appealed. On the 22d day of November, 1929, defendants and respondents, appearing by the attorney general, moved the dismissal of said appeals upon the ground that all questions involved therein had become moot. The basis for this contention is that on August 14, 1929, an amendatory act of the Legislature became effective (St. 1929, c. 155), which, it is urged, superseded all the provisions of said act of 1927; hence the issues involved in this action have been thereby obliterated.

We are not in accord with this contention of defendants. The act of 1927 consisted of a title and four sections. The title read as follows: "An act to reduce the fire insurance hazards of the business of clothes cleaning establishments, providing for the enforcement thereof by the state fire marshal, providing ways and means for enforcement and providing penalties for violations." The several sections were intended to put in operation a system of regulation for clothes cleaning establishments for the purpose of reducing fire hazards attendant thereon. Manifestly an error, by insertion of the word "insurance," crept into the title of the act of 1927. The act of 1929 corrects and recasts the title of that act; it also revises and amends each and every section of it and in addition thereto adds two new sections, having doubtless for its object the correction of mistakes made in the first enactment and a change in the system of administration of said act by the creation in the department of industrial relations of a new division, known as "a division of industrial fire safety," with the state fire marshal as chief thereof. It should be noted, however, that the duties of the fire marshal as an individual are not entirely abrogated by the new act.

[1] We thus have a situation where the new act revises, amends, and republishes the title and every section of the former act. We also have a situation where practically all the substantive provisions of the original act have been re-enacted by the amendatory act. Under this situation, by virtue of the well-understood rule of statutory interpretation, all provisions of the original act omitted from the new enactment are repealed, while, at the same time, the portions thereof not altered are considered as having been the law from the time they were enacted and the new provisions are considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment. Pol. Code, § 325; Riley v. Havens, 193 Cal. 432, 225 P. 275; Vallejo, etc., Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 177 Cal. 249, 170 P. 426; San Joaquin, etc., Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 221, 128 P. 924; Estate of Martin, 153 Cal. 225, 94 P. 1053; 23 Cal. Jur. p. 699, § 87.

[2] It therefore follows as a necessary conclusion that the attack in the present proceeding upon such provisions as were continued in the amended act must be allowed to proceed, for, as to them, invalidity may inhere as well after as before the amendment. It is true that by virtue of the amendment only a portion of the sections of the amended act will be under review and appellants may meet other difficulties, but this is not ground upon which to declare the questions moot nor to deny appellants such solace as they may receive by an attack upon such provisions as have been continued in the new act.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 657

MOORE v. THORNBURG et al. (S. F. 13595.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1930.

1. Statutes ⇨ 123(6)—Title to act providing for improvement districts within organized irrigation districts held not invalid (St. 1927, p. 1415; Const. art. 4, § 24).

Title to St. 1927, p. 1415, entitled an act to provide for organization and creation of improvement districts within irrigation districts, to provide for construction of improvements therein, and for levy of assessments on lands of such improvement districts, held not to violate Const. art. 4, § 24, providing that every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title.

2. Statutes ⇨ 123(6)—Act providing for improvement districts within irrigation districts held not unconstitutional because of word "improvement" in title (St. 1927, p. 1415; Const. art. 4, § 24).

St. 1927, p. 1415, entitled an act to provide for organization and creation of improvement districts within organized irrigation districts and to provide for construction of improvements therein, held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring every act to embrace but one subject expressed in title, because word "improvement" used in title is so broad as to define nothing, since improvement district may carry on only such improvements as prior organization might undertake.

3. Waters and water courses ☞227—Contention that statute providing for hearing of objections before formation of improvement district gives board no power to pass on objections held without merit (St. 1927, p. 1415, § 5).

Contention that St. 1927, p. 1415, § 5, providing for hearing of objections before formation of improvement district within irrigation district, gives board of directors of irrigation district no power to pass on objections, held without merit, since power would be implied if it were not expressly given.

4. Waters and water courses ☞224—Improvements in improvement districts within organized irrigation districts held not merely for benefit of private parties (St. 1927, p. 1415).

Improvements made in improvement districts within organized irrigation districts pursuant to St. 1927, p. 1415, held not merely for benefit of private parties, since under Constitution and statutes use of water in manner provided is public one.

In Bank.

Application by W. R. Moore, opposed by D. C. Thornburg and others, constituting the board of directors of the Turlock Irrigation District, and others, for certiorari to review the organization of a subordinate improvement district within an irrigation district. Writ discharged, and petition denied.

Nathan B. McVay and Hu Jones, both of Modesto, for petitioner.

Thomas C. Boone and Griffin & Boone, all of Modesto, for respondents.

Hankins & Hankins, of San Francisco, A. L. Cowell, of Stockton, and Charles L. Childers, of El Centro, for Irrigation District Ass'n of California and Woodbridge Irrigation District.

PRESTON, J. Petitioner, a taxpayer, procured an original writ of review in this court directed to respondents, having for its object a declaration by this court that the organization within the Turlock irrigation district of a subordinate body, under the Statute of 1927 (Stats. 1927, chap. 748, p. 1415), known as "Improvement District No. 1," was an illegal and void proceeding. Admittedly respondents complied with the requirements of the statute in the organization of this subordinate district. The attack upon the proceedings is confined solely to the contention that the above-mentioned statute is invalid and void.

The title of said act is as follows: "An act to provide for the organization and creation of improvement districts within irrigation districts organized under the 'California irrigation district act,' to provide for the construction of improvements therein, and for the levy of assessments on the lands of such improvement districts." Section 1 permits two-thirds in number of the holders of title to any tract or contiguous tracts situate within the irrigation district and susceptible of irrigation through laterals, ditches, and pipes for irrigation, separate and apart from the main irrigation system of said irrigation district, to petition the board of directors of such district for the organization of an improvement district, and to levy an assessment for the payment thereof. Section 2 of the act defines the nature and contents of the petition. Section 3 provides the plans and specifications, estimate and proposed assessment. Section 4 provides for the giving of notice. Section 5 provides for hearing and determination of objections to said petition and the formation of said district and proposed assessments and confers power upon the board to change the boundaries of said district. It further provides that in the event that more than one-third in number of the owners in said proposed district shall object, the application for the formation of such district shall be denied altogether by the board. Section 6 provides for the final order establishing the district and levying said assessment according to benefits and providing for a lien upon the land for payment thereof. Section 7 provides for the issuance of warrants for the amount of the assessment and for payment thereof out of funds derived from the levy and collection thereof. Section 8 provides for the manner of doing the work, the cost thereof to be paid only out of said assessment on the lands in the improvement district. Section 9 provides for additional assessments in case of insufficiency. Section 10 provides that the directors and officers of the district shall have the same powers concerning the improvement district that they possess respecting the irrigation district, including the right of said district to condemn lands and to acquire, own, and hold property within said improvement districts.

[1] The contention that the title to the act violates article 4, § 24, of the Constitution is without merit and requires no discussion.

[2] The further contention that the word "improvement" found in the title to said act is so broad as to define nothing and so come within the rule announced in Lewis v. Dunne, 134 Cal. 291, 66 P. 478, 55 L. R. A. 833, 86 Am. St. Rep. 257, is likewise without merit. It is manifest that the improvement district may carry on only such improvements as the prior organization might undertake.

[3] The claim that the section providing for the hearing of objections before formation of the district gives the board no power to pass on the objections is totally without merit as this power would be implied were it not expressly given.

[4] The contention that the improvement made in such district is purely for the benefit of private parties is also without merit, as under the Constitution and statutes of this state the use of water in the manner provided is a public one.

Petitioner makes several other objections, but they are, if anything, less meritorious than the ones noted above. He cites little, if any, authority to sustain his contentions, and it is hard to believe that any great number of them are urged with confidence. It may be noted in passing that we have considered all the objections made by him and find no merit in any of them. Moreover, all of said questions have been expressly or inferentially decided adversely to him in such cases as Tarpey v. McClure, 190 Cal. 593, 213 P. 983; Palo Verde Irr. Dist. v. Seeley, 198 Cal. 477, 245 P. 1092; and Wheatley v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 279 P. 989.

Manifestly, this act was passed with the design to create elasticity in the government of irrigation districts so that special improvements independent of the general plan of improvement of the district might be made therein, and the burden thereof rest solely upon the shoulders of those benefited thereby.

The writ is discharged, and the petition denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

Justices SHENK and LANGDON, deeming themselves disqualified, do not participate in the foregoing.

208 Cal. 647

MCCARTNEY v. CAMPBELL et al.
(L. A. 11047.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 10, 1930.

Appeal and error 780(2)—Plaintiff's appeal in action to quiet title would not be dismissed on ground that plaintiff had conveyed interest in land (Code Civ. Proc. § 385).

Plaintiff's appeal in action to quiet title would not be dismissed on ground that plaintiff had conveyed her interest in land, since under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, the litigation could proceed either in name of plaintiff, or substitution could be had and suit continued in name of grantee.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Holzner, Judge.

Action by Alice G. McCartney against A. P. Campbell and others. From an unsatisfactory judgment, plaintiff appeals. On defendants' motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Harry L. Cohn, of Long Beach, and William J. Clark, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondent Timm.

C. E. McDowell, of Los Angeles, for respondent E. E. McCalla & Co.

W. C. Shelton and George Burch, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for respondent Bachman.

Leet W. Bissell and F. Walton Brown, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Keena.

PRESTON, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. Plaintiff, as the owner of a certain tract of real property in Los Angeles county, having the same under subdivision, sued the various defendants in an ordinary action to quiet title. Issues upon the complaint and answers thereto and upon cross-complaints by certain defendants and answers thereto were made up, as was also the issue made by one complaint in intervention and answer thereto. The defendants constitute a large body of persons, some of them claiming under an agency contract executed by the plaintiff to defendant A. P. Campbell, and others claiming as purchasers from agents of lots in said tract. The action was tried, findings made, and judgment entered. Plaintiff appealed.

Respondent Timm moves herein the dismissal of plaintiff's appeal upon the ground that plaintiff and respondent McCalla have composed their differences by each executing a conveyance of their respective rights in and to said tract to a third party, in which conveyance plaintiff included the lot in said tract to which respondent Timm has laid claim. The argument is that by this conveyance on the part of plaintiff, a new contract has arisen which supersedes all the issues involved on this appeal.

We can discern no merit whatsoever in the motion. There is no privity between respondent McCalla and respondent Timm. Their rights are in no sense interdependent. The adjustment did not include respondent Timm. The cause of action against her remains as before. Consequently, when plaintiff conveyed all her interest in the tract of land or in the lot therein claimed by respondent Timm, the litigation could proceed either in the name of plaintiff herself or substitution may be had, and it may proceed in the name of the grantee. Section 385, Code Civ. Proc. The case of Armstrong v. Sacramento Valley R. Co., 179 Cal. 648, 650, 178 P. 516, is not at variance with these views. In that action a compromise and settlement of the controversy was made by all the parties, which, of course, superseded the judgment theretofore rendered therein.

The motion is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

103 Cal. App. 147

CLAUDIUS et al. v. VILA et al. (Civ. 6783.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1930.

Landlord and tenant ⇨278—Evidence held to sustain finding that lessor's entry on premises and occupation thereof was lawful and peaceable.

In action for forcible entry and forcible detainer, where it appeared that lease provided no assignment should be made without written consent of lessor, and that husband of lessee entered into possession under oral agreement with lessor, that thereafter lessee surrendered possession of part of premises to another, who on moving from premises relinquished possession to lessor, evidence held to sustain finding that lessor's entry on premises and occupation thereof was lawful and peaceable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by H. P. Claudius and others against Catherine G. Vila and others. From a judgment for the defendants and an order denying new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

H. A. Postlethwaite, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. A. Kennedy and Raymond Salisbury, both of Oakland, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. Action for forcible entry and forcible detainer. The complaint is in two counts, which allege substantially the following facts: On the 9th day of June, 1928, plaintiffs were in the peaceable and actual possession of certain property located at Twenty-seventh avenue and Foothill boulevard, Alameda county. The property was known as the "Lawrence Service Station." It consisted of a residence, a battery shop, and certain personal property, including equipment and the like. It is charged that, while plaintiffs were absent from the premises, defendants entered upon said property by force and by breaking open a window and locked doors and took possession of the same; that thereafter, on the 10th day of July, 1928, plaintiffs caused to be served upon defendants a demand and notice to surrender the property. It is then alleged in the second count that defendants have forcibly withheld and kept possession of the property at all times since the said 9th day of June, 1928.

After trial judgment went in favor of defendants. Motion for a new trial was made and denied. This is an appeal from the judgment and order.

It is the contention of appellants that all the material allegations of the complaint are supported by ample testimony, and there is a complete absence of contradictory evidence as to all the material facts. There is evidence, however, to show that defendant Catherine G. Vila was the sole owner of the property in question, and that she leased the same to certain parties. The lease provided that no assignment of the same should be made without the written consent of the lessor. Thereafter several written assignments were regularly made until finally the possession of the property passed into the hands of appellant, Donald W. Hughes, under some sort of oral arrangement with the lessor. Hughes became ill and he entered into negotiations with one McKinley to purchase the business. After investigating the same, McKinley concluded not to make the purchase. Hughes, who at the time was having marital differences with his wife, thereupon abandoned the premises, leaving his wife to obtain what she could for the business. At this time the gasoline station was not a going concern, as there was no gasoline in the tanks and no oil or other merchandise on the property. There was also evidence to show that plaintiff Velma Hughes surrendered possession to one Savatier who operated a battery shop on other parts of the premises, and that Savatier, who was moving from the premises, relinquished his possession to Mrs. Vila. Thereafter Mrs. Vila took possession of the station in the manner indicated in the complaint.

Under this evidence the trial court found that the entry upon said premises and occupation thereof by defendant Catherine Vila was lawful and peaceable, and that plaintiffs or any of them were not in the peaceable or actual possession or any possession of said property. As above pointed out, there is evidence in the record to sustain this finding. This being so, the judgment and order should be, and each is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 123

STOLTE v. KEHRLEIN et al. (Civ. 6670.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨237—Where sale of corporate assets was void, no title passed, and original stockholders were liable for debts incurred during time purchasers managed corporation (Corporate Securities Act).

Where sale of corporate assets in property violated Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), and was therefore a void transaction, no title passed, and original stockholders were at all times sole stockholders, and were liable for debts incurred by corporation while it was being managed by purchasers.

2. Corporations ⇨243(2)—One who purchases stock through fraudulent inducements is not subject to stockholder's liability.

One who has purchased stock through fraudulent inducements is not subject to stockholder's liability, particularly where no question is raised by creditors as to question of estoppel.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by W. V. Stolte against Oliver Kehrlein and others, on a stockholder's liability for corporate debts. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John G. Robertson, of Oakland, for appellants.

Joseph A. Brown and F. A. Anderson, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action upon a stockholder's liability for corporate debts. On November 4, 1916, the Franklin Amusement Corporation was incorporated with an authorized capital stock of $50,000, divided into 5,000 shares of the par value of $10 each. On November 15, 1916, a permit was obtained from the commissioner of corporations, authorizing the issuance of 2,800 of these shares. About the year 1919 the shares so issued were purchased by appellants and Emil Kehrlein, Jr. On September 28, 1923, the Kehrleins entered into an agreement with J. M. Maurer, George W. Tatterson, and L. B. Gross to sell all the assets and property of the corporation to them and to transfer the 2,800 shares of issued stock. The unissued stock, consisting of the remaining 2,200 shares, formed part of the consideration of the sale, and they were also transferred to the purchasers. Subsequently, on October 14, 1923, the purchasers took possession of the Franklin Theatre, the property of the corporation, and operated the same for a period of some twenty weeks, after which they surrendered the property to the sellers, the Kehrleins, and served them with a notice of rescission, claiming that they had been defrauded. Demand was made for a return of the consideration paid and certain other sums expended and lost by reason of alleged fraudulent misrepresentations. Thereafter the purchasers brought an action and recovered judgment against the sellers, which judgment was subsequently affirmed by this court. Tatterson v. Kehrlein, 88 Cal. App. 34, 263 P. 285.

In the present action plaintiff sued both the sellers and the buyers on a stockholder's liability for obligations incurred during the interim the theater was operated and managed by the purchasers. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against the Kehrleins only, and in favor of the codefendants, Gross, Maurer, and Tatterson, the purchasers.

[1] Appellants here claim that they are not liable for bills incurred by the Franklin Amusement Corporation while it was being managed by the purchasers, as they were not stockholders during the period the obligations were incurred, and had no authority or power, and did not incur the obligations, or bind the corporation for the same. In Tatterson v. Kehrlein, supra, this court held the contract of sale between the parties to be absolutely void, for the reason that it violated the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), in that part of the consideration consisting of 2,200 shares of stock in the corporation were never authorized to be issued by the commissioner of corporations.

It being a void transaction, no title ever passed, and appellants were therefore at all times the sole stockholders. No question of estoppel is herein involved, the creditors being satisfied with the judgment against the Kehrleins alone. Moreover, when an issue of stock is wholly without consideration, the principle of estoppel does not apply. Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 631, 40 P. 1047; Honn v. Hamer, 81 Cal. App. 276, 253 P. 336. It has also been held in this state that one who holds under an invalid issue is not subject to a stockholder's liability. Boyd v. Heron, 125 Cal. 453, 58 P. 64.

[2] We are of the opinion that the same principle applies to one, who, as here, has purchased stock through fraudulent inducements, and particularly so where no question is raised by the creditors as to the question of estoppel. Helliwell on Stockholders, § 459. The contract being a void transaction from its inception, no title ever passed to the purchasers, and appellants were therefore at all times the sole stockholders of the corporation, and as such they were liable for its debts.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

IN RE SCHLUTER'S ESTATE.★

MOORE v. REYNOLDS.

(Civ. 6511.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨231—Claim against decedent's estate, not filed within time required by notice to creditors, is barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 1493).

Claim against estate of decedent, which is not filed within time required by notice to creditors, is barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 1493.

2. Guardian and ward ⇨68—Guardian is entitled to lien for moneys expended on ward's behalf only against property in guardian's possession.

Guardian is entitled to lien for moneys advanced and expended on behalf of ward only against property either actually or constructively in possession of guardian.

3. Guardian and ward $\hookrightarrow$ 33—Guardian with notice before ward's death that one having joint bank account with ward had stopped payments thereon could proceed to gain possession of money to maintain ward (Code Civ. Proc. § 1800).

Where guardian had notice prior to death of ward that one who had joint bank account with ward had stopped payments on such account, it would have been proper for guardian, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1800, to have proceeded against such person with view to gaining possession of money in order to maintain ward if money was being wrongfully withheld.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charlotte Schluter, deceased. Motion by Adelaide Moore against Willetta Reynolds, being the same person as Mrs. James J. Reynolds, executrix, for an order to subject the assets of the estate to a certain charge and lien. From an adverse order, executrix appeals. Reversed.

George Acret, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county, subjecting assets of estate to a charge and lien in favor of guardian.

On July 20, 1926, the decedent made her last will and testament, in which she appointed appellant executrix thereof. At the same time she established a joint bank account with right of survivorship between herself and said appellant, and turned over to appellant certain personal property, all of which was located in Los Angeles county, that being decedent's residence.

Subsequently, under proceedings instituted in Monterey county, to which county decedent had removed temporarily, respondent was appointed guardian of the person and estate of said decedent, and was given possession of a few shares of valueless stock and certain articles of wearing apparel of decedent, but none of the Los Angeles county property.

On December 12, 1926, decedent died in Monterey county, being a resident of Los Angeles county. Thereafter appellant was appointed executrix of the last will, and caused publication of notice to creditors to be published; the date of first publication thereof being February 2, 1927. Meanwhile respondent presented to the superior court of Monterey county her final account as guardian, and said court, under date of April 7, 1927, made an order settling said account and allowing said guardian, as a charge and lien against the property and estate of said decedent, the sum of $775.08 on account of money expended by her before and after her appointment as guardian for maintenance and care of the incompetent, without specifying how much was expended before such appointment, together with $200 for her services as guardian and $175 on account of attorney's fees.

The record does not show that appellant ever had actual notice of the order settling final account made by the court of Monterey county, or ever had notice that respondent had a claim against the estate until during the month of September, 1927, at which time respondent presented her claim, to which was attached a copy of the order made by the court of Monterey county. This claim was rejected by appellant on September 20, 1927, and under date of January 27, 1928, respondent filed in the probate case pending in Los Angeles county a motion for an order to subject the assets of the estate to the charge and lien allowed by the court of Monterey county. Appellant resisted said motion, alleging that the claim had been filed several months after the time had expired within which claims were required to be filed against the estate, and that the court was without jurisdiction to subject the estate to the said lien claimed or to allow said claim at all.

Upon hearing of the motion, the trial court made its order subjecting the assets of the estate to a first lien in favor of respondent for the sum of $1,260.07. From this order executrix of said estate prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The respondent's claim, not having been filed within the time required by the notice to creditors, is barred. Section 1493, Code Civ. Proc. Furthermore, it is elementary that a guardian is entitled to a lien for moneys advanced and expended on behalf of the ward only against the property either actually or constructively in the possession of the guardian. Estate of Clanton, 171 Cal. 381, 153 P. 459. In the instant case, the guardian made no claim against the property which she had in her possession, but delivered it to the executrix of the last will and testament of the decedent.

[3] The record shows that the respondent had notice prior to the death of her ward that appellant had stopped payment on the joint bank account in Los Angeles county. It would have been proper for respondent, under the provisions of section 1800, Code of Civil Procedure, to have proceeded against the appellant with a view to gaining possession of this money in order to maintain her ward, if appellant was wrongfully withholding the same. But no such proceeding was instituted.

Having done none of the several things she might have done in order to charge the estate of deceased, respondent is not now entitled to a lien against the estate.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

103 Cal. App. 163

PEOPLE v. MILLUM. (Cr. 1872.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

1. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 569—Evidence, in prosecution for possession of morphine, showing defendant on witness' suggestion went to certain place and was arrested when leaving, held not to show entrapment, where defendant denied having morphine on person at time (State Poison Act).

In prosecution for having in possession preparation of morphine in violation of State Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended), evidence showing witness suggested to defendant that woman wanted to see him, that he went to her house and made appointment to call on her later, that he called in company with witness, and on leaving witness was called back, and in a few moments defendant arrested, held not to show entrapment, where defendant testified he had no morphine on his person at time and denied officers' testimony that he dropped it when accosted by them.

2. Criminal law $\Rightarrow$ 1023(9)—Appeal cannot be taken from verdict finding defendant guilty.

Appeal cannot be taken from verdict finding defendant guilty of violation of State Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

George E. Millum was convicted of having possession of preparation of morphine, in violation of State Poison Act, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John F. Groene, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Friedlander, Morfoot & Gray, of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. The defendant was found guilty by a jury of having possession of a preparation of morphine in violation of the State Poison Act (St. 1907, p. 124, as amended), such possession being a felony, as charged in an information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county. Defendant filed notice of appeal: "(1) From the verdict of the jury finding defendant guilty of violation of the State Narcotic Act, and (2) from the order of the trial court denying the motion and grounds of defendant for a new trial; and (3) from the judgment made and entered herein, and sentencing this defendant to the State's Prison at San Quentin as required by law."

[1] Defendant was convicted upon sufficient evidence, which, however, was denied in many particulars by the defendant himself as well as by several of his witnesses. There was no direct evidence showing entrapment. From some circumstances introduced in evidence, it is argued that such a conclusion might possibly be inferred, but it would not be a logical conclusion to be drawn therefrom. The argument is evidently based on the theory that one witness induced the defendant to go to the home of a colored woman and purchase the drug. There is no such evidence; the evidence showing only that a witness did suggest that the woman wanted to see defendant, that he went to her house and made an appointment to call on her later in the day, that he did call in company with such witness, and when the witness and defendant were leaving together, the witness was called back by the woman, and that in a very few moments the defendant was arrested by the officers. The defendant, however, testified in his own behalf and swore he had no morphine on his person at all. He denied the officers' testimony that he dropped it from his hands when accosted by the officers—thus entrapment could not be deduced from any of the facts in evidence.

None of the points raised by appellant are sufficient for the reasons argued or authority cited to justify this court in discussing the questions attempted to be raised. Therefore, the appeal from the verdict of the jury finding defendant guilty, and from the order of the trial court denying the motion of defendant for a new trial and from the judgment made and entered, sentencing defendant to San Quentin, as required by law, is not well taken.

[2] The judgment and order are affirmed; the appeal from the verdict is dismissed as not an appealable order.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: HOUSER, J.

BUTTRICK v. SEINES et al. (Civ. 6353.) *

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 13, 1930.

1. Appeal and error $\Rightarrow$ 757(1)—Brief, failing to present each point separately and to have printed therein any of pleadings, findings, or judgment, was insufficient (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a, 953b, 953c; Rule 8 of District Court of Appeals).

Appellant's brief failing to present each point separately under appropriate headings showing nature of questions presented in accordance with requirement of Rule 8 of the District Court of Appeals, and not having printed therein or in supplement any of the pleadings, findings, except for a few brief excerpts, or judgment from which appeal was taken, was insufficient under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, which requires parties under alternative method of appeal in accordance with section 953a, 953b, 953c, to print in their briefs or in a supplement appended thereto such portions of record as they desire to call to attention of court.

$\Rightarrow$ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Hearing granted. 289 P. 616.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 757(1)—Appellate court is not required to search typewritten transcript for errors not specifically pointed out (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, 953b, 953c).

Appellate court is not required on appeal by the alternative method in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, 953b, 953c, to search the typewritten transcript for errors claimed by party to exist but not specifically pointed out.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Gussie C. Buttrick against E. Bryon Seines and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, for respondent Hamilton.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. [1] This appeal is taken under the alternative method. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953a, 953b, 953c. By stipulation filed herein the appeal was submitted on the briefs on file, consisting of appellant's opening brief and respondent Hamilton's reply thereto. The one brief filed by appellant does not, as required by rule VIII of the rules of this court, "present each point separately, under an appropriate heading, showing the nature of the question to be presented," nor has appellant printed therein or in the supplement appended thereto any of the pleadings, the findings (except for a few brief excerpts therefrom) or the judgment from which the appeal is taken, or even sought to lighten the labors of this court by a reference to the pages of the clerk's transcript on which they may be found. He apparently seeks to make the point that the findings are not supported by the evidence, but he has failed to incorporate any of the evidence in his brief or to refer therein to the page of his supplement or of the reporter's transcript where it may be found. This falls far short of the requirements of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires the parties, under the alternative method of appeal, to "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court."

[2] This court is not required, as we have so frequently observed, to search the typewritten transcript—in this case a volume containing 332 pages—for errors claimed by a party to exist but not specifically pointed out. Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 169 P. 379; Marcucci v. Vowinkel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 P. 430; Estate of McPhee, 156 Cal. 335, 104 P. 455, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 899. In the first of the cases just cited it was said: "Neither in his brief nor in any supplement thereto is there anything to indicate what relief was sought by the action, nor is there anything printed in the brief indicating the nature of the judgment which appellant says was erroneously rendered. All presumptions indulged in are in favor of the regularity of the judgment and proceedings upon which it is based; hence it devolves upon an appellant to affirmatively show the existence of the error upon which he asks for a reversal. Upon the showing made, how can this court say the judgment thus attacked is erroneous? Assuming that appellant's real contention is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings, the answer is that the findings so attacked are not printed in the brief, without which, and the evidence upon which they are based, this court cannot say they are unsustained. The brief does not purport to contain all or other than a meager part of the evidence upon which the trial court made its findings. The direction contained in the statute is clear that, where the record is brought up under the provisions of sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appellant shall print enough of such record to show the alleged error of which he complains, and also illustrate the points made in the argument. When not thus exhibited, no duty devolves upon the court to examine a voluminous typewritten transcript of the stenographic report in search of error upon which to base a reversal."

As long ago as 1925, the Supreme Court forcibly called the attention of the bar to the fact that "It has been reiterated approximately 100 times in the decisions of this court and of the District Courts of Appeal that it is incumbent upon an appellant who relies upon a typewritten transcript to print in his brief or in a printed supplement thereto sufficient of the record to justify a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from." Jeffords v. Young, 197 Cal. 224, 239 P. 1054, 1056. Since that decision was handed down, the process of reiteration has continued without abatement, but apparently "the seed has fallen upon barren ground." Withers v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 281 P. 518; Kellogg v. Snell (Cal. App.) 270 P. 232; Barrett v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 269 P. 551; Lanini v. Rosa, 91 Cal. App. 596, 267 P. 145; Eddy v. Stowe, 43 Cal. App. 789, 185 P. 1024; and many other cases.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

POLLAK v. STAUNTON et al. (Civ. 7060.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 15, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 13, 1930.

1. Money received ⇨8—Action for money had and received held proper remedy to recover proceeds of stock obtained from plaintiff through fraudulent representations.

Where plaintiff, through fraudulent representations, was induced to turn over to defendants corporate stock for sale and application of proceeds to purchase of option shares, plaintiff was entitled to return of stock, and, stock having been converted into money, was entitled to money, for which action for money had and received would lie; plaintiff having received nothing which equity required him to restore as condition of rescission.

2. Appeal and error ⇨728(1)—Sweeping claim that defendant was prevented from showing plaintiff's conduct constituting ratification held insufficient to warrant review of objections to testimony.

On appeal from judgment in action for money had and received, defendant's sweeping claim that he was prevented from showing conduct of plaintiff amounting to ratification of sale of stock and purchase of option stock held insufficient to entitle him to review of objections to testimony.

3. Release ⇨27—Release of several defendants in action for money had and received for proceeds of stock held not release of other defendants.

Where plaintiff through fraudulent representations was induced to part with stock and direct conversion thereof into money, plaintiff's release and dismissal of action for money had and received as to several defendants held not release of other defendants, action not being for tort, or unliquidated damages caused by fraud or deceit, nor for value of property obtained by deceit, and liability of each defendant was several for amount received by him.

4. Money received ⇨1—Action for money had and received is based on fact defendant has money which in equity and good conscience belongs to plaintiff.

Action for money had and received is of an equitable nature, and judgment against defendant is based on fact that he has money which in equity and good conscience belongs to plaintiff.

5. Money received ⇨12—Defendant, sued for money had and received, can urge in defense that codefendants received all money, except specified sum, where evidence showed amount each received.

In action for money had and received for proceeds of stock, which plaintiff was induced to part with through defendants' fraudulent representations, one defendant is entitled to urge in defense that his codefendants and not he have all of money, except specified sum, where evidence showed exact amount each defendant received.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by A. J. Pollak against W. E. Staunton and others. Action was dismissed against defendants other than John Salsberry. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Salsberry appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

John H. Crabbe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Respondent recovered judgment against appellant in an action prosecuted in the form of the common count for money had and received. The theory upon which the judgment is defended is that the appellant by fraudulent representations obtained from respondent the possession of a certain 20,000 shares of corporate stock, obtained respondent's consent to the sale thereof, and also obtained respondent's consent to the application of the sale price of said stock to the purchase of 100,000 more shares. The said shares having been sold by appellant before respondent discovered the fraud and commenced this action, the judgment followed the complaint, awarding respondent the proceeds of the sale of the stock, instead of the stock itself. Upon payment of $5,000 by Berger, Staunton, and Western Lead Mines Company, the action was dismissed as against them before trial. Judgment was for plaintiff in the amount of $16,532.49 against defendant Salsberry, who is appellant here.

The parties to this appeal are very little in disagreement about the main facts of the case. The respondent's version, which finds adequate support in the record of testimony, is as follows:

In August, 1925, Western Lead Mines Company was organized in Nevada. The three defendants were the incorporators and directors. The major part of the capital stock was issued to appellant in exchange for mining properties. Defendants persuaded plaintiff to buy 20,000 shares of the stock from appellant for $5,000. A little later the defendants had the company execute to respondent an option for 100,000 shares of treasury stock at 25 cents per share. In December, defendants attempted to persuade respondent to exercise his said option. He refused. About a week later the three defendants called on respondent and represented that their negotiations with C. C. Julian had reached a stage where it appeared that Julian would purchase a large block of stock of Western Lead Mines Company; that they had represented to Julian that respondent Pollak had already exercised his option, and had paid $25,000 into the treasury of Western Lead Mines Company; that, in order to make good this representation, the three defendants—Salsberry, Staunton, and Berger—had raised $25,000 (Salsberry selling a ranch, and Berger pawning his wife's jewelry), which they had paid into the treasury of Western Lead Mines Company for the account of Pollak. They represented to Pollak that Julian would list the stock on the mining exchange, which would cause the stock to greatly enhance in value. They stated that they expected reimbursement from Pollak, and for that purpose proposed to Pollak that he turn over to them the 20,000 shares of Western Lead Mines Company, which he had purchased in August, 1925, to be sold; and that thereupon they would apply the proceeds of the sale of the 20,000 shares to Pollak's indebtedness to them.

Pollak, believing these representations, finally accepted the proposal and turned over the certificate for 20,000 shares to Staunton, receiving a receipt therefor, signed by defendant Staunton, dated December 28, 1925. On the same date defendant Staunton executed to respondent another paper in the form of a letter which read:

"With reference to that certain option given by Western Lead Mines Company to you, dated Reno, Nevada, September 5, 1925, wherein and whereby you are given the exclusive option to purchase all or any part of one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the capital stock in said corporation; you are advised that with your consent, and without any responsibility attaching to you therefor, the undersigned has exercised the privilege granted in said option, and has paid into the treasury of said company the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00) in lawful money of the United States, and has had issued to you certificate No. 183 for one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of the capital stock in said Western Lead Mines Company.

"Your indorsement on said certificate and delivery to me of the same is herewith requested, and upon delivery of said certificate so indorsed, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned shall handle or dispose of said one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of capital stock as he deems for the best interest of yourself and himself; it being understood that in the event of sale of said one hundred thousand (100,000) shares of capital stock, or any part thereof, that from the proceeds thereof the undersigned shall first deduct and repay himself the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000.00), being the purchase price thereof, and the balance remaining shall be forthwith paid to you."

On January 11, 1926, Staunton, acting for himself and the other two defendants, sold the 20,000 shares for the sum of $21,532.49, and thereupon the defendants Berger, Staunton, and Salsberry divided the money among themselves equally. Thereafter respondent learned that the defendants had not in fact paid $25,000 into the corporation, and commenced this action. The appellant offered proof that a credit of $54,800 in favor of defendants appeared on the books of their company for services rendered, and that, when defendants divided and appropriated the amount realized from the sale of respondent's 20,000 shares, they caused bookkeeping entries to be made on the books of the company which charged off against their said credit the amount received and credited a like amount to respondent on the purchase of the 100,000 shares. We do not understand appellant to contend that these entries on the books purged them of the falsehoods they had put forward to respondent, which induced him to consent to the sale of his stock and to exercise the option to buy more stock. Neither did such book entries make such misrepresentations immaterial and nonactionable. The difference between the representations and the true facts was material and important.

[1] Appellant contends that the action for money had and received will not lie in favor of respondent, because he has not rescinded and restored appellant to his original position. Appellant has failed to expressly designate what thing he claims the respondent should have restored. It may be that he has in mind all the transactions of the parties as one unit.

The cause of action is not based upon all the transactions with the defendants. No complaint is made by respondent of his original purchase of shares and the option. He complains only that he was fraudulently induced to give up his stock for sale and to direct the application of the sale price to the purchase of the option shares. The fraud entitled him to have back the stock; but, that having been converted into money, he was entitled to the money. He had received nothing which equity required him to restore as a condition of rescission. Defendants were at all times in possession of the certificate for the 100,000 option shares issued and indorsed under conditions shown by the letter quoted above.

[2] Appellant makes the sweeping claim that he was prevented by the court from showing conduct of respondent amounting to a ratification of the sale of the 20,000 shares and the purchase of the 100,000 shares. The assignment is not sufficient to entitle him to a review of the objections. So far as any reference is made to the printed portion of the testimony, we find no erroneous ruling upon the admission of evidence. Moreover, the acts of respondent which appellant apparently claims to amount to a ratification were acts which occurred before respondent discovered the fraud.

Appellant vigorously asserts that none of the stock transactions, referred to above, were in violation of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673); but, believing that respondent has or will so claim, appellant contends that respondent is in pari delicto, and can, therefore, recover nothing. Respondent does not defend the judgment upon the theory that either of the stock transactions was in violation of the Corporate Securities Act (though he states that the 100,000-share transaction was such); but, fearing that appellant will so claim and also claim that respondent is in pari delicto, respondent is ready with authorities and argument to show that, even if the sale were in violation of the act, he is not in pari delicto. Under these circumstances, we do not decide whether any of the stock transactions were in violation of the act.

[3] After this action was commenced against the three defendants for the full amount of the sale price of the stock, $21,532.49, two of the defendants paid plaintiff $5,000 and took a release and a dismissal of the action as to themselves. The action proceeded against appellant alone to judgment for the balance, $16,532.49. Appellant claims that the action is for damages for a joint tort, and for that reason the release of his two codefendants released him also. He relies on Adams v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 266 P. 541, 57 A. L. R. 1066, and cases cited. The present action is not one for tort, nor for unliquidated damages caused by fraud or deceit, nor for the value of property obtained by deceit. It is like an action for the recovery of specific personal property. The property having been converted into money, the action is for that money. This action is for restitution, and not for damages. Woodward, Law of Quasi Contracts, §§ 270, 272, 276; Minor v. Baldridge, 123 Cal. 187, 55 A. 783. This action is like an action to recover the fruits of a rescission—a rescission of respondent's agreement to exercise an option to buy 100,000 shares of stock.

The authorities relied upon by appellant by no means can be said to declare that a discharge of one defendant in such an action will discharge the others in full. Woodward, Law of Quasi Contracts, §§ 296, 297. "If, however, a wrongdoer is not liable in quasi contract unless he has received some part of the plaintiff's property in the commission of the wrong, the extent of his liability would seem necessarily to be limited to that which he has received. This proposition, which is not disputed where the defendant is a sole tort-feasor, would seem also to determine the extent of the liability where there are joint tort-feasors. For if, in the case of a sole tort-feasor, the defendant is only liable in quasi contract for that which he has received, on what principle can he be made liable in quasi contract in the case of a joint tort for what has been received by another? * * *

Keener on Quasi Contracts, p. 200. "But where that which has in fact been received by another is received only in part for the defendant, and the action is not in tort, the tort, * * * being 'only an item of evidence tending to establish his interest in the proceeds,' it seems that on principle the extent of his interest in the property should be the limit of the recovery against him. If this view is correct, then his liability should be several, and not joint, or joint and several; for each obligation would depend upon questions differing in one particular, namely, the extent of the defendant's enrichment." Keener on Quasi Contracts, p. 201.

The liability of each defendant is several in this action for money had and received, and is limited in amount to the amount received by each. Minor v. Baldridge, supra; Whittier v. Home Savings Bank, 161 Cal. 311, 318, 119 P. 92; French v. Robbins, 172 Cal. 670, 153 P. 188; Smith v. Bach, 53 Cal. App. 63, 199 P. 1106; Smith v. Bach, 54 Cal. App. 236, 201 P. 611; 2 R. C. L. 761; Woodward, Law of Quasi Contracts, p. 439. These authorities operate at once to deny the appellant's contention that the discharge of two of the defendants operated to discharge the appellant, and also to sustain appellant's further contention that the judgment in this case against appellant was excessive, in that it was for more than the amount received by him.

[4, 5] Respondent contends that, inasmuch as all three defendants at first received the entire $21,532.49, they were thereupon liable in an action for money had and received, both jointly and severally. That might be true, if the evidence had stopped at that point; but it went further, and showed that each received exactly $7,177.23. The action of money had and received is of an equitable nature, and a judgment against a defendant is based upon the fact that he has money which in equity and good conscience belongs to the plaintiff. The appellant is entitled to urge in defense that his codefendants, and not he, have all the money, except $7,177.23.

The judgment is modified, by reducing it to the sum of $7,177.23, principal, with interest from the 11th day of January, 1926, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed; appellant to recover his costs.

We concur: STURTEVANT J.; NOURSE, J.

103 Cal. App. 149

PEOPLE v. McGEE. (Cr. 10.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 11, 1930.

1. Perjury $\S$ 33(8)—Positive testimony of facts contrary to that sworn to by accused, or absolutely incompatible with his evidence, may establish perjury (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1968; Pen. Code $\S$ 1103a).

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1968, and Pen. Code, $\S$ 1103a, requiring that perjury must be proved by testimony of two witnesses or one witness and corroborating circumstances, positive testimony of state of facts contrary to that sworn to by accused or absolutely incompatible or physically inconsistent with his evidence may be sufficient.

2. Perjury $\S$ 33(8)—Evidence contrary to defendant's testimony as alibi witness held sufficient to sustain perjury conviction.

In prosecution for perjury, where it appeared accused had testified that defendant in liquor prosecution was digging ditch at accused's home at time he was alleged to have made sale of liquor, evidence that ditch was not dug until some time after liquor sale held sufficient to sustain conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

William R. McGee was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney Sampson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BARNARD, J. The defendant has appealed from a judgment after conviction on a charge of perjury alleged to have been committed on July 1, 1929, during the trial of one Walter Meeks, who was accused of having sold liquor at his home in Orange county on February 16, 1929, to one E. M. Perry.

At that trial Perry testified that on the morning of February 16, 1929, he went to the home of Meeks in Orange county and purchased some liquor from him at about 10 o'clock a. m. For the purpose of establishing an alibi, defendant testified that on that same forenoon the said Meeks was digging a ditch at defendant's home in Los Angeles, about 30 miles from the Orange county home of Meeks. This testimony is the basis of the perjury charge involved in this action.

The main ground of this appeal is the claim that there is a total absence of any positive testimony to prove the defendant guilty of the crime charged; that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove by direct testimony that defendant was not at his residence talking to Meeks at the time referred to; and that the record discloses no witness who directly testified that the meeting between defendant and Meeks did not take place at the place and hour in question.

[1] It is true that perjury must be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances. Section 1968, Code Civ. Proc.; section 1103a, Pen. Code. This does not mean that it is necessary to produce some one who was present at the defendant's home on the morning of February 16, 1929, to testify that Meeks was not there at that time. It is, however, necessary to have positive testimony as to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused. People v. Porter, 104 Cal. 415, 38 P. 88; 20 Cal. Jur., p. 1023. Positive testimony of a state of facts contrary to that sworn to by the accused, or absolutely incompatible or physically inconsistent with his evidence, may be sufficient. People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 P. 384, 387, 389; People v. Casanova, 54 Cal. App. 439, 202 P. 45, 47; People v. Follette, 74 Cal. App. 178, 240 P. 502. In People v. Chadwick, supra, the court said:

"Direct evidence" is declared in section 1831 of the Code of Civil Procedure to be "that which proves the fact in dispute directly without an inference or presumption, and which in itself, if true, conclusively establishes that fact." Upon a trial for perjury, direct evidence is not limited to a denial in ipsissimis verbis of the testimony given by the defendant, but includes any positive testimony of a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by him at the former trial, or which is absolutely incompatible with his evidence, or physically inconsistent with the facts so testified to by him."

And in People v. Casanova, supra:

"The statute respecting the quantum of evidence necessary in perjury cases will be satisfied, if there be the testimony of one witness to facts that are absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, corroborated by circumstances which, of themselves and independently of such directly inculpatory evidence, tend, with a reasonable degree of certitude, to show that the accused is guilty as charged."

In People v. Wells, 103 Cal. 631, 37 P. 529, a case relied upon by appellant, the court said:

"As we have already suggested, in order that the evidence may be sufficient, there must be positive testimony to a contrary state of facts from that sworn to by the defendant at the previous trial. For instance, to support the charge of perjury as to the alleged false statement of defendant that he met the cow at the time stated upon this particular public highway, it was necessary to produce the positive testimony of one witness at least that such meeting did not take place, as that the defendant was not at that time at that place, or that the cow was not there.

* * *

[2] Applying the latter part of this language to the instant case, it would read: "It was necessary to produce the positive testimony of one witness, at least, that such meeting did not take place, that the defendant was not at that time at that place, or that Meeks was not there." The place in question was defendant's own home, and, while there is no evidence that defendant was not there at the time involved, there is positive evidence that Meeks was not there at that time. The defendant had testified that Meeks and a man named Bland were digging the ditch in question on the morning of February 16, 1929; that they went to work that morning at 8 o'clock, and were still working there when he left at 9:30 or 9:45 a. m.; that he paid Meeks for a full half day's work on that day; that this was the last day of three days it had taken to dig the ditch; and that the entire sewer pipe and connections were all installed later the same day. It was proved, however, that an application for a permit for the installation of this same sewer was signed by appellant, filed with, and approved by, the building department of the city of Los Angeles on April 10, 1929, and a permit issued the same day. E. J. Rutherford, the plumbing contractor who installed the pipes and made the connections, testified that he did not do the work before the permit was issued, but that he did the work on April 10, and that he ordered an inspection of the work by the city on April 11. An assistant plumbing inspector of the city of Los Angeles testified that he inspected the work on April 12, 1929, and that the ditch was not over 24 to 48 hours old at that time. Bland, who helped Meeks dig the ditch in question, testified that he did not know whether the ditch was dug in April, May, or June, but that the sewer was put in right away after the ditch was completed. On cross-examination, the defendant admitted the sewer was connected up by Rutherford in the month of April, and also stated that, while he believed it was not installed at the same time it was connected, he did not know.

There is positive evidence that Meeks was not digging this ditch at defendant's home on February 16, 1929, as there is positive evidence that the ditch was not dug until April. There is positive evidence of a state of facts contrary to that sworn to by appellant, and absolutely inconsistent and incompatible with his testimony that Meeks was digging this ditch at his home on the morning of February 16. There is no dispute that the ditch here referred to is the same ditch appellant referred to in his testimony. He testified that, when he returned home around 12 o'clock on Saturday, February 16, 1929, the digging of the ditch had been completed, and Meeks and Bland had left, and that Rutherford, the contractor, was laying the sewer pipe and completed the job about 2 o'clock. He also testified he had verified the date, by a receipt Rutherford had given him when he completed the work on February 16. He claimed to have lost his receipt, but Rutherford testified he had not been paid for the work until some time after April 10.

There was ample corroboration of the fact that Meeks was not digging a ditch at defendant's home at 9:30 or 9:45 of February 16, 1929. E. M. Perry testified that on the morning of February 16, 1929, he drove in his automobile to the home of Meeks on Smelzer road near Huntington Beach boulevard in Orange county; that Mr. Mandele and another man followed him in another car; that he observed the premises for ten minutes before he saw Meeks; that Meeks then came from within the house; that Meeks was about half dressed, having on a shirt and trousers, no necktie, and he did not think he had on any shoes or stockings; and that, after a short conversation, he went into the house with Meeks, where he purchased some liquor. Mandele testified that Perry and Meeks went into the house at exactly 10:05 and came out at 10:20. The county surveyor of Orange county testified that the distance between defendant's home in Los Angeles, where Meeks was supposed to be digging a ditch at 9:30 or 9:45, and the Orange county house, where Meeks had been for at least ten minutes before 10:05, is approximately 30 miles. While it might have been humanly possible for Meeks to have been transported between the two points in the 25 minutes between 9:30 and 9:55, the entire circumstances, including the transition from digging a ditch in Los Angeles at 9:30 or 9:45, to being in his own home in Orange county at 9:55, and coming out partially dressed, shortly thereafter, are sufficiently improbable to furnish substantial corroboration of the positive testimony that the ditch digging occurred at a different date. Incidentally, it may be observed that Meeks himself very nearly admitted he was at his own home in Orange county on the occasion in question. While he was being examined by defendant's attorney, the following testimony was given by him: "Q. Now Mr. Perry testified that he saw you at 12:05 or around 10 o'clock on the 16th of February without any clothes on—that you were just half-clad; do you remember how you were dressed when Mr. Perry first saw you? A. Well, I think I was in a— Q. Or did you—I had better not put it that way. At this time when he is supposed to have seen you on the 16th of February, 1929? A. Well, I was working in Los Angeles on that day, and I had my working clothes on." The first question asked is so clear that the spontaneous answer, although not completed, is significant. We think the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that defendant did not see and talk with Meeks at the place and time claimed. See People v. Hill, 36 Cal. App. 574, 172 P. 1114.

Appellant also contends that the trial court erred in denying his motion for dismissal before the case went to the jury; in refusing to strike out certain testimony; and that a certain remark of the district attorney, in his argument to the jury, was prejudicial misconduct. All these contentions are based upon the theory held by appellant that it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove that appellant did not see Meeks at the time and place testified to by him, by some witness who was actually then and there present. Under the view we take of this contention, these other points are without merit.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

I concur: SLOANE, P. J.

MARKS, J., deeming himself disqualified, takes no part in the decision of this case.

103 Cal. App. 243

In re CLARKE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6644.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 17, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

Wills ⇨435—Absence of ambiguity in language employed by testator precludes necessity of application of rules of construction.

Where no ambiguity exists in language employed by the testator in his will, and consequently intent is clear and manifest, no occasion is presented which requires the application of any rules of construction.

2. Wills ⇨775—Legatee to take under will providing for lapse of legacy in case of death before date of distribution must have been alive on such date (Civ. Code, §§ 1324, 3538).

Under will expressly providing that, in case of death of legatee before date of distribution of estate, such legacy should be deemed lapsed and accordingly become a part of residuum of estate, intended legatee, in order to take under will, must have been alive at date estate was distributed, in accordance with provisions of Civ. Code, §§ 1324, 3528, to effect that words used in a will are to be taken in their ordinary sense unless something to contrary is clearly apparent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Chauncey Dwight Clarke, also known as Chauncey D. Clarke, and sometimes known as C. D. Clarke, deceased, wherein Marie Rankin Clarke and Mary E. Duffield presented separate petitions to the probate court for the purpose of having construed various provisions of the will, as well as to settle final account of executors and to provide for distribution of the estate. From the judgment therein, petitioner first named appeals. Reversed.

Claude I. Parker and Ralph W. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Laughlin & Laughlin, and Frank L. Muhleman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. By the second paragraph of the will of the testator 11 different legacies were bequeathed to as many different persons "to be distributed in the due course of the settlement" of his estate. The ninth paragraph of the will provided as follows: "Should I pay the amount, or any part thereof, of any of above specified legacies to any of said named legatees, or establish trusts for said amounts, or any part thereof, for the benefit of any of said respective legatees, before my decease, the same shall be taken as satisfaction of said legacies for the amount so paid, to, or established, in favor of, such legatee. Should any of the above-named legatees or devisees die before my decease or before the date of payment or distribution herein specified, it is my will that the legacy or devise to such deceased legatee or devisee shall become a part of my residuary estate, unless otherwise herein specifically provided."

One of the 11 legatees mentioned in the second paragraph of the will died before the legacy left to her could be "distributed in the due course of the settlement" of the estate.

On each of two petitions presented to the probate court for the purpose of having construed the various provisions of the will to which reference has been had, as well as to settle the final account of the executor of the will and to provide for the distribution of the estate, the court made findings and rendered judgment thereon in substance that the effect of the language of the will by which in the second paragraph thereof (as hereinbefore indicated) each of 11 different persons was bequeathed a specified sum of money "to be distributed in the due course of the settlement" of the estate, was to immediately vest in each of such legatees the sum of money so bequeathed to him, and that on the distribution of the estate, of whatever date, he was entitled to have such legacy paid to him. It is from such judgment that the appeal herein is taken.

[1, 2] Although, with reference to the question submitted for the consideration of this court, many different rules of construction are suggested by the respective parties to the appeal, it is a cardinal rule, and one which requires the citation of no authority in its support, that, where no ambiguity exists in the language employed by the testator, and consequently that his intent is clear and manifest, no occasion is presented which requires the application of any rule of construction. To ascertain the intention of the testator in the matter is the sole object of the inquiry. If within the body of the will the intention of the testator is made certain and unmistakable, it is 'useless and unprofitable to inquire what other meaning might possibly be attributed to the directions which he has given concerning the disposition of his estate. With so much in mind, it may be well to again examine the language of the will, reduced to its simplest form so far as the provision here in question is concerned. By reference to the second and the ninth paragraphs thereof (considered together), it will be noted that in effect the testator gave to a certain person a specified sum of money "to be distributed in the due course of the settlement" of his estate, provided that, if such intended legatee should die before "the date * * * of distribution" of the estate, such legacy should be deemed lapsed and accordingly become a part of the residuum of the estate. Such language, in itself, will admit of no construction other than what it plainly imports, to wit, that in order to take under the will the intended legatee must be alive when the estate is distributed. However, it is contended that the words "date * * * of distribution"—not being or providing for an exact date so far as the ordinary calendar is concerned—are not specific, and hence not effectual as against the presumption that vesting of title in the legatee ensues immediately on the death of the testator. It is statutory that, unless something to the contrary is clearly apparent, words used in a will are to be taken in their ordinary sense (section 1324, Civ. Code); and that "that is certain which can be made certain" (section 3533, Civ. Code). Again, in reply to such contention, it need only be said that, where the intention of the testator clearly appears from the instrument itself, rules of construction affecting ambiguity have no place.

It will be observed that, in connection with the assumed vesting of title in the legatee, an extension of the language employed by the testator is that the legatee shall be living at the date of distribution "herein specified * * * unless otherwise herein specifically provided." Considering paragraphs of the will other than those to which attention heretofore has been directed, it is noted that by the third paragraph thereof a bequest of $10,000 was made to a "faithful cook" of the testator "to be paid and distributed to him" at the expiration of 10 years from the decease of the testator; that by the fifth paragraph of the will a bequest of $100,000 was to be "paid and distributed" to a niece of the testator, provided that she should be living at the expiration of 8 years from the death of the testator; and that by the sixth paragraph of the will it was provided that, on the decease of a certain named legatee, to whom the use of the sum of $75,000 was bequeathed during her natural life, the children of such legatee should receive said sum. It thus becomes clear that the "date of distribution" as to the legacies mentioned in the third, the fifth, and the sixth paragraphs of the will are "specifically provided" for otherwise than as appears in the ninth paragraph thereof; and consequently that the words "date of distribution herein specified" can have reference only to the second paragraph of the will, which is the paragraph under which the heirs of the deceased legatee claim title herein.

The conclusion would seem inevitable that, since the legatee, whose claim against the estate forms the basis of this appeal, was not living at the "date of distribution" of the estate, under the terms of the will the title to the legacy did not vest in her, and consequently neither her heirs nor representatives are entitled to participate in the distribution of the estate.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

103 Cal. App. 154

SILLER v. DUNN et al. (Civ. 3854.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 13, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 11, 1930.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨194(1)—Upon lessee's surrender of leased premises before expiration of term provided for in lease, lessor has three remedies.

Upon surrender of leased premises by lessee before expiration of term, lessor has three remedies: First, he may do nothing and sue lessee as each installment of rent becomes due, or for whole thereof when it becomes due; second, he may treat lease as terminated and retake possession and use premises for his own purposes as exclusive owner; or, third, he may retake possession for tenant's account and hold tenant in damages for difference between rentals provided for in lease and what in good faith he was able to procure from reletting.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨194(2)—Acceptance of surrender of lease will be inferred where landlord remodels premises, rendering them unavailable for purposes intended, and preventing collection of rent.

Where landlord takes possession of premises before expiration of term, remodels them rendering them unavailable for purposes leased, untenable during period of remodeling, and preventing collection of rent, acceptance of surrender of lease will be inferred as matter of law, and landlord estopped from asserting contrary.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨194(2)—Landlord's taking possession of furniture store before expiration of term and remodeling building into hotel held acceptance of surrender of lease, precluding recovery for rent.

Where lessor took possession of building rented as furniture store before expiration of term, and in furtherance of plan to convert premises into hotel remodeled building, rendering premises wholly untenable during period between surrender of lease and opening of hotel, lessor held to have accepted surrender of lease, and therefore estopped to maintain action for rent for that period.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by L. G. Siller against Minnie M. Dunn and others upon stockholders' liability. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert L. Shinn and Charles J. Hasman, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Downey, Brand & Seymour and Martin I. Welsh, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff began this action to recover from the defendants certain sums set out in the complaint as the respective liabilities of the defendants as stockholders of Dunn-Brett Furniture Company, a corporation, on account of an alleged indebtedness of said corporation based upon the provisions contained in a lease of real property, entered into between the plaintiff and the Dunn-Brett Furniture Company on or about the 8th day of March, 1926. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony the court granted the defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and from the judgment entered thereon the plaintiff appeals.

The portion of the lease relied upon by the plaintiff for a recovery is in the words following: "In the event of the lessee surrendering the said demised premises prior to the expiration of the term of this lease, responsibility for the payment of the rental herein provided shall continue until such time as the lessor shall have effected a retenant of the said premises satisfactory to him." Notwithstanding this provision in the lease, it is the contention on the part of the defendants that the testimony of the plaintiff established beyond question that by his own acts he had accepted a surrender of the lease, had repossessed himself of the premises in his own right and for his own uses and purposes, and had by operation of law released the defendants from further liability for the payment of rent. The lease in question provided a certain stipulated rental and also specified the purposes for which the premises were to be used, to wit, as a furniture and furnishing goods store, and that no other or different use of the said premises be made by the lessee without the written consent of the lessor first had and obtained. The lease described a building consisting of six stories in height and a basement situated on Ninth street between K and L, in the city of Sacramento, and excepting from the provisions of the lease certain described portions of the premises theretofore leased to a different party. On or about the 8th day of August, 1927, the Dunn-Brett Furniture Company delivered to the plaintiff the key to the premises described in the lease, and at the time of the delivery of the key the plaintiff handed to the president of the corporation a notice to the effect that he would still hold the corporation liable for rent until the premises were released. It is further shown by the testimony that, prior to the surrender of the premises by the furniture company and the delivery of the key to the premises to the plaintiff, the plaintiff had for about three months made some effort to find another tenant for the premises; the plaintiff having been informed by the officers of the furniture company that the business of the company was in failing circumstances, and that the company would not be able long to continue in business. There does not appear to be any testimony in the transcript to the effect that the plaintiff made any effort to obtain a tenant for the premises after the surrender thereof by the furniture company on the 8th day of August, 1927, or during any of the time for which judgment is asked in this case on account of rentals alleged to be due, nor does the testimony show what the efforts were by the plaintiff to relet the premises, or upon what terms they were offered, but from matters hereinafter referred to we do not deem this material. The testimony shows that, at or about the time the furniture company gave up the key to the premises, the plaintiff put into execution an idea or thought that he had entertained in relation to converting the premises into an hotel. His language was: "To throw it into an hotel so we could rent it." It further appears from the transcript that on or about the 17th day of August, 1927, the plaintiff began the remodeling of the six-story building herein referred to so as to make it available for hotel purposes, and that this remodeling was finished on or about the 15th day of February, 1928; the period of time for which the plaintiff claims rent being from the date when the defendant surrendered the premises up to the 15th day of February, 1928, when the same were ready for occupancy for hotel purposes. It further appears from the transcript that the cost of remodeling the premises was somewhere between $50,000 and $60,000; that the work of remodeling required approximately six months. The plaintiff's testimony is to the effect that during the time of remodeling the premises it would have been impossible for any tenant to have taken possession thereof. The questions and answers in this particular are as follows:

"Q. In other words, the property during that period was entirely untenable? A. Absolutely, until we got it finished.

"Q. There can be no doubt about that, can there, Mr. Siller? A. No."

The plaintiff then described in the testimony the manner in which the five upper stories of the building were divided into something like 100 rooms containing baths, etc. The questions and answers of the plaintiff, so far as need be quoted to illustrate this point, are as follows:

"Q. Mr. Siller, what did the work of remodeling in general consist of? A. The work?

"Q. Yes; just describe it generally to the court. A. Just lay it out into rooms, put the light-well into the center of the building, and all that kind of work that—to throw it into hotel rooms.

"Q. I understand then, Mr. Siller, it consisted of practically an entire dismantling of the interior of the building, did it not? A. Of the upper floors, it did, yes."

It does not appear to be questioned that the remodeling of the building does not come within the terms of repairs mentioned in the lease, nor does it appear to be questioned that the character of the remodeling of the building precluded the possibility of its being used as a furniture and furnishing store. Upon the testimony of the plaintiff showing that the remodeling of the building was not in the nature of repairs, was such as to preclude the further use of the premises for the purposes mentioned in the lease, and that the plaintiff intended to and did take possession of the premises for the purposes of converting them to a different use from that mentioned in the lease, and was doing so not for the benefit of the lessee, but for and on his own account, a nonsuit was granted. There is nothing in the testimony indicating that the plaintiff consulted the lessee as to the remodeling of the premises, or that it was understood that the premises were being remodeled for the uses and purposes of the lessee, or for any one except the owner thereof. We think the testimony is conclusive that the plaintiff took possession of the premises solely as owner in his own right and not in furtherance of any of the covenants of the lease, and that it was in execution of a plan to convert the premises into an hotel and change its uses entirely from that limited in the lease.

[1-3] The law seems to be pretty well settled that, upon the surrender of leased premises by a lessee before the expiration of the term provided for in the lease, the owner of the premises has three remedies: First, he may do nothing and sue the lessee as each installment of rent becomes due, or for the whole thereof when its becomes due; second, he may treat the lease as terminated and retake possession of the premises and use the same for his own purposes as the exclusive owner thereof; or, third, he may retake possession of the premises for the tenant's account and hold the tenant in damages for the difference between the rentals provided for in the lease and what, in good faith, he was able to procure from a reletting. Only one question is involved upon this appeal, and that is, notwithstanding the clause in the lease which we have quoted, the plaintiff abandoned the lease and by his actions is now estopped to maintain this action.

In the case of Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 P. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, it was held

(quoting from the syllabus) that: "Where tenants leased a building for a term of years as a store, and abandoned the premises after one year's occupation thereof, sending the keys to the landlord, the acts of the landlord in taking possession of the premises, and reletting them for a period longer than the remainder of the term, without notifying the original lessees that he should do so on their account, and without notifying them that he should continue to hold them liable for the rent, show an acceptance by the landlord of the surrender, and he is estopped from denying it." The opinion in that case shows what the landlord may do, as we have hereinbefore stated. It also shows that during the unexpired portion of the term of the lease the lessee has a right to resume possession of the premises unless the landlord has done something which is equivalent to the acceptance of a surrender of the lease. In 35 C. J. 1086 we find the rule thus stated: "A surrender by operation of law occurs where the parties without express surrender do some act or acts from which it is necessarily implied that they have both agreed to consider the surrender as made—acts which are necessarily inconsistent with the continued relation of landlord and tenant. While it has frequently been said that whether a lease has been terminated by operation of law is a question of intention of the parties, it is, nevertheless, held that this mutual agreement may be implied upon the principle of estoppel from the acts of the parties, independently of, and even contrary to, their actual intent." In Bernard v. Renard, 175 Cal. 230, 165 P. 694, 3 A. L. R. 1076, it is held (quoting from the syllabus in 3 A. L. R. 1076): "Acceptance of a surrender of a lease will be effective if, after the lessee's refusal to take possession or be bound by the lease, the lessor assumes absolute control of the property and attempts to let it without any notice to the lessee that he is not acting in his own right." In Voss v. Levi, 33 Cal. App. 671, 166 P. 359, 361, the court, in its opinion, used the following language: "Such acceptance of surrender was evidenced only at the time the plaintiff, on the 19th day of January, 1915, took possession of the premises and proceeded to have them remodeled. That an acceptance of surrender was then completely had we have no doubt." In Rehkopf v. Wirz, 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 P. 285, 286, in considering the question of the acceptance of a surrender of a lease, it is said, referring to the right of the lessor to relet the premises and hold the tenant liable: "But a lessor who chooses to follow that course must in some manner give the lessee information that he is accepting such possession for the benefit of the tenant and not in his own right and for his own benefit. If the lessor takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant and does so unqualifiedly, he thereby releases the tenant"—citing a number of authorities. And further: "An unqualified taking of possession by the lessor and reletting of the premises by him as owner to new tenants is inconsistent with the continuing force of the original lease.

* * * If done pursuant to the tenant's attempted abandonment, it is an acceptance of the surrender and likewise releases the tenant." There can be no difference in principle between the acts referred to in this case, which amounts to a release of the tenant, and the circumstances shown by the evidence upon the record in this case. The remodeling of the premises by the owner cannot be held to be anything other than a taking of possession of the premises exclusively by the landlord or owner for his own uses and purposes as such owner. As we have stated, the testimony in this case shows that the premises were rendered wholly untenable during the period for which rent is claimed, and also that the premises have been rendered wholly unusable for the purposes mentioned in the lease to the Furniture Company.

In the case of Meeker v. Spalsbury et al., 66 N. J. Law, 60, 48 A. 1026, 1027, the court, in considering a lease having in it a provision relative to repairs similar to the one under consideration, and where it was claimed that a surrender had been accepted by operation of law, used the following language: "He (referring to the landlord) was to have the right to enter and make such repairs as should be necessary for the preservation of the premises. When the plaintiff did more than that, he conclusively evidenced his intention to hold possession on his own account, thereby accepting the tenants' abandonment as a surrender." The case of Meeker v. Spalsbury, supra, is referred to and approved in the case of Fink v. Browe Co. (N. J. Ch.) 99 A. 926. To the same effect in principle is the case of In re Schomacker Piano Forte Mfg. Co. (D. C.) 163 F. 413. In 15 California Jurisprudence, 797, § 214, the rule is stated that making material alterations in the leased premises amounts to an acceptance of the abandonment of the premises by the lessee. We do not deem it necessary to cite or quote from other authorities, as the foregoing show the rule well settled that when a landlord remodels premises so as to make them unavailable for the purposes for which they were leased, and also renders them untenable during the period of remodeling, that rent for such period cannot be collected, for the reason that acceptance of the surrender of the lease will be inferred as a matter of law, and the landlord estopped from asserting the contrary. The respondents do not question the contention of the appellant that a clause in a lease, such as we have set forth herein, will be upheld where the parties have acted consistently therewith, but only contend that the plaintiff's evidence conclusively establishes that his acts were not consistent therewith, and that by his taking unqualifiedly possession of the premises, and as he says, practically dismantling five of the floors thereof and remodeling the building so as to fit it for an entirely different use and purpose, establishes beyond controversy in law an acceptance of the abandonment of the lease.

There being no evidence to the contrary, we think the order of the trial court in granting the nonsuit was correct, and the judgment entered thereon should be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 220
BAILLY v. LOOCK. (Civ. 23.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

1. Sales ⇨475—Seller under title retaining contract could transfer title and right to claim property in bankruptcy proceeding.

One selling out restaurant business under contract, whereby seller retained title and right to repossess property upon buyer's default, could transfer to third party title which he had, together with right to claim property in bankruptcy proceeding.

2. Sales ⇨459—Intention of parties determines whether sales contract reserves title in seller.

Whether contract is one of conditional sale reserving title in seller, or one transferring title to the buyer, is primarily a question of intention of the parties.

3. Sales ⇨459—Contract to transfer fixtures and stock in restaurant, providing for possession by buyers while contract was complied with and for bill of sale when price was paid, held conditional sales contract (Civ. Code, § 1140).

Where contract, for sale of restaurant business together with equipment, fixtures, stock in trade and supplies, and good will, provided that "the seller has agreed" to transfer the property and that upon payment in full of purchase price seller would deliver bill of sale transferring property referred to, and providing further that buyers should take possession and retain possession of premises "so long as they comply with the terms of this agreement," held that the contract was one for conditional sale under which title was not to pass to buyers until full payment of stipulated consideration; Civ. Code, § 1140, providing that title to personal property passes whenever parties agree upon present transfer and thing is identified.

4. Bankruptcy ⇨140(1½)—Trustee does not acquire title to goods in possession of bankrupt under conditional sales contract but not paid for.

Where bankrupt has possession of goods under conditional sales contract, reservation of title in seller until payment for goods is made will prevent title from passing to the trustee in bankruptcy where goods are not paid for, since trustee has no higher right in this regard than the bankrupt himself.

5. Bankruptcy $\Rightarrow$ 165(1)—Where buyer defaulted under conditional sales contract and seller had assigned his interest, assignee acquired nothing by buyer's subsequent release, and there was no preference as to buyer's trustee in bankruptcy.

Where agreement for sale of restaurant business reserved title in seller until payment in full of purchase price and seller thereafter assigned all his right, title, and interest, and buyer defaulted, title to the fixtures and stock in the seller's restaurant business passed by seller's assignment and bill of sale made out to assignee, and subsequent instrument executed by buyer releasing and abandoning his rights under the sales contract did not invest seller or seller's assignee with any new interest or ownership, and there was therefore no transfer by bankrupt which could be set aside as preference, in suit by buyer's trustee in bankruptcy against assignee.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; V. N. Thompson, Judge.

Action by E. W. Bailly, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of George Nick Georgelas, bankrupt, against Henning Loock. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Martin J. Coughlin and W. E. Byrne, both of San Bernardino, for appellants.

N. C. Peters, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. This is an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover the value of a restaurant business and equipment alleged to have been acquired by the defendant as a preferred creditor from the bankrupt George Nick Georgelas. The defendant was adjudged a bankrupt on the 16th day of March, 1928, and the complaint alleges: "That prior to said adjudication in bankruptcy, to-wit, on or about the 31st day of January, 1928, while said George Nick Georgelas was insolvent, the said defendant herein was a creditor of said bankrupt, claiming to have claims against him in the sum of $2,575.00 and in order to obtain a preference over other creditors of the same class, said defendant took possession of the restaurant equipment, stock and fixtures of said George Nick Georgelas known as the 'Star Grill' at No. 695 Third Street, San Bernardino, California, the reasonable value of which was the sum of $3,000.00."

The allegations of the complaint and the findings of the trial court are to the effect that the defendant acquired possession of said property by a preferential assignment and transfer from the bankrupt. It further appears from the record on this appeal that prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy Georgelas, the bankrupt, acquired the property in controversy under various sales contracts, and the real controversy on this appeal is as to who was the owner of the property at the time the defendant here obtained possession thereof.

Judgment was given for the plaintiff on findings sustaining the claim that prior to the said adjudication of bankruptcy, while the said George Nick Georgelas was insolvent, and while the defendant herein was a creditor of the said bankrupt, he obtained the possession of the restaurant equipment, stock of goods, and fixtures, as a preferred creditor under a transfer by the bankrupt, and that the value thereof was the sum of $3,000, and it was by the judgment appealed from, decreed that the plaintiff have and recover from the defendant the sum of $3,000 and costs taxed at $30.70.

The defendant contends on this appeal that the findings are not supported by the evidence, but that, on the contrary, it conclusively appears from the evidence in the case that the bankrupt was at no time the owner of this property, but that he held the same under conditional contracts of purchase, wherein title was reserved to the seller, in which title a right of possession on breach of the contracts was reserved to the sellers and that defendant obtained title and possession from the original vendors, after conditions broken.

The original restaurant plant was acquired by Georgelas from one Petropoulos, and at the time of the transfer to defendant was held by him under the following contract:

"Agreement of Sale.

"This Agreement, made and entered into this 9th day of December, 1923, by and between George Petropoulos, party of the first part, sometimes hereinafter referred to as the seller, and G. N. Georgelas and George G. Simon, both of the same place, parties of the second part, sometimes hereinafter referred to as the buyers,

"Witneseth: That for and in consideration of the purchase price hereinafter named, the covenants and agreements herein contained, and for other good and valuable consideration, the seller has agreed and does hereby agree to sell, transfer, assign, convey and set over unto said buyers all that certain personal property situate in the City of San Bernardino, County of San Bernardino, State of California, more particularly described as follows, to-wit:

"That certain restaurant and cafe business now owned, conducted and carried on in said City of San Bernardino at 695 Third Street, named and known as the 'Star Grill,' together with all equipment, fixtures, trade fixtures, including tables, chairs, stools, counters, partitions, dishes, cooking, kitchen, table and restaurant equipment therein, all stock in trade and supplies on hand of every kind, and the lease under which said seller occupies said premises, and also the good will of said business; for and at the agreed purchase price of Two Thousand ($2,000.00) Dollars, lawful money of the United States, said purchase price to be paid as follows, to-wit, Five Hundred ($500.00) Dollars, cash, upon the execution of this agreement, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by said seller, and the balance of the said purchase price to be paid as follows: all present existing indebtedness of said business, including the mortgage now thereon and outstanding bills, shall first be paid and satisfied by said buyers, and said buyers hereby agree to and do assume and agree to pay all such indebtedness as soon as it is possible for them to do so; and when said indebtedness is paid said buyers shall pay the said seller the sum of One Hundred ($100.00) Dollars per month on the first day of each and every month until said balance of said purchase price herein named is fully paid and discharged, it being agreed that no interest shall be paid thereon.

"It Is Further Agreed that upon the payment to said seller in full of the purchase price herein named, said seller will execute and deliver to said buyers, or their successors, a good and sufficient bill of sale transferring to said buyers all the property herein agreed to be sold.

"It Is Further Agreed that said buyers shall take immediate possession upon the execution of this agreement and shall retain possession of said premises and business and conduct and carry on the same as and for their own business from date hereof, so long as they comply with the terms of this agreement. Said seller is hereby released by said buyers from all indebtedness on said business herein mentioned and said buyers hereby agree to hold him harmless from any further liability thereon. An itemized list of the indebtedness herein referred to and which said buyers have assumed and agreed to pay has been this day agreed on and approved, attached hereto and made a part hereof.

"In Witness Whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands.

"G. Petropoulos.

"Party of the first part,

"Seller.

"G. N. Georgelas.

"Parties of the second part,

"Buyers."

Prior to the transfer to defendant, Georgelas had defaulted in deferred payments due on the contract purchase price, and on the 1st of February, 1928, and shortly prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, the defendant procured from Petropoulos the following instrument of assignment of agreement of sale of December 9, 1925:

"Assignment of Agreement.

"For valuable and sufficient consideration to me in hand paid, I, George Petropoulos of the City of San Bernardino, County of San Bernardino, State of California, hereby sell, assign and transfer to Henning Loock of said city, all my right, title and interest in and to the annexed agreement of sale dated the 9th day of December, 1925, by and between George Petropoulos as party of the first part and G. N. Georgelas and George G. Simon as parties of the second part.

"In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this first day of February, 1928.

"G. Petropoulos."

To which above assignment was attached the agreement of purchase and sale between Petropoulos and Georgelas, hereinbefore set out.

On the same date Petropoulos also executed to the defendant a bill of sale in words and figures as follows:

"Bill of Sale.

"For a valuable and sufficient consideration to me in hand paid, I, George Petropoulos of the city of San Bernardino, County of San Bernardino, State of California, hereinafter designated the Seller, do hereby sell, assign, transfer and set over to Henning Loock, of said City, hereinafter designated the Buyer, and to his heirs and assigns, all that certain personal property situate in said city more particularly described as follows, to-wit:

"That certain restaurant and cafe business now owned, conducted and carried on in said city of San Bernardino, at No. 695 Third Street, in said city, named and known as the 'Star Grill,' together with all equipment, fixtures, trade fixtures, including tables, chairs, stools, counters, partitions, dishes, cooking, kitchen, table and restaurant equipment therein, all stock in trade and supplies on hand of every kind, and the lease under which seller occupies said premises, and also the good will of said business.

"In Witness Whereof, the seller has hereunto set his hand this 1st day of February, 1928.

G. Petropoulos."

On February 3, 1928, the defendant obtained from Georgelas the following instrument, releasing and abandoning any right he might have under and by virtue of the sales agreement with Petropoulos of December 9, 1925:

"Be It Known, that I, G. N. Georgelas have abandoned and do hereby abandon all my right or rights under and by virtue of that certain agreement of sale dated December 9th, 1925, by and between George Petropoulos as seller and G. N. Georgelas and George G. Simon as buyers; that I have acquired all the right, title and interest of the said George G. Simon in and to said agreement and arising out of the same by virtue of an assignment duly executed and delivered by the said George G. Simon to me, and that I have surrendered up and do hereby surrender up to said George Petropoulos and his assigns the right to the possession to all that certain personal property described in said agreement of sale; and I hereby release said George Petropoulos and his assigns from any and all obligations whatsoever, arising out of said agreement of sale.

"Dated this 3rd day of February, 1928.

"G. N. Georgelas."

It is under the foregoing assignment and bill of sale from Petropoulos and release and quitclaim of Georgelas that appellant bases his claim of title unaffected by the bankruptcy proceedings on said restaurant and equipment, or at least to such part thereof as was covered by the original sales contract between Petropoulos and Georgelas.

[1] It seems clear, if Petropoulos, under the agreement of December 9, 1925, retained title to the property and premises therein described, subject to the right to repossess himself of the same upon default of Georgelas in complying with the conditions of the agreement and meeting the stipulated payments, that he had a vendable title to the property, which at the time of the transactions in question with defendant, he had a right to transfer to the latter, and which the defendant had a right to acquire.

If Petropoulos would have had a right to claim this property in the bankruptcy proceedings as against the bankrupt's creditors, it was a right which he could immediately transfer to a third party, and which a third party could properly acquire.

[2, 3] The trial court in effect finds from its construction of the sales agreement of December 9, 1925, and the finding rests wholly on the interpretation of this agreement, that the transaction was a sale, and that Georgelas became the owner of this property.

We do not think that this finding can be sustained. It appears, on the contrary, from the terms of the instrument itself, that it was the intention of the parties that title was not to pass to the purchaser until full payment had been made of the stipulated consideration, and a bill of sale executed to the purchaser.

The instrument is not in terms denominated an instrument of sale. It expressly stipulates that "the seller has agreed, and does hereby agree to sell, transfer, assign, convey and set over" the property in question.

It is further agreed "that upon the payment to said seller in full of the purchase price herein named, said seller will execute and deliver to said buyers or their successors, a good and sufficient bill of sale, transferring to said buyers all the property herein agreed to be sold."

And further, the provision with reference to vendee's possession is inconsistent with an intention to make a present transfer of title. The agreement recites "that said buyers shall take immediate possession upon the execution of this agreement, and shall retain possession of said premises and business and conduct and carry on the same as and for their own business, from date hereof, so long as they comply with the terms of this agreement."

It is true that the sales agreement contains no express retention of title, or words of surrender or cancellation in event of default in payments, but it has been repeatedly held in this state that whether or not a contract of this character is one of conditional sale, reserving the title in the seller, or one transferring title to the buyer, is primarily a question of intention. The well-settled rule is stated in 22 California Jurisprudence, p. 942, as follows: "A question as to the passing of title is to be determined by reference to the showing as to the intention of the parties."

And again at page 948: "Words of transfer or conveyance in the present or past tense, i. e., 'sells' or 'sold' not 'agrees to sell,' while not conclusive of the question as to whether the parties contemplated a consummated sale will, it seems, be held to be determinative, unless their force and effect is overcome by other provisions of the instrument."

In Kohler v. Hays, 41 Cal. 455, 458, the court uses this language with reference to the significance of providing for a subsequent bill of sale: "The provision for the giving of a bill of sale, upon the payment of the price of the piano, indicated that it was not the intention of the parties that the title should pass upon the making of the agreement."

To the same effect, in McArthur, etc., v. Hagihara, 22 Ariz. 100, 194 P. 336, 337, 13 A. L. R. 1038, it is said: "The provision in the contract that when the purchase price is paid in full, a bill of sale will be given is utterly inconsistent with the claim that the title was to pass when the agreement was made or that there was an absolute sale. * * *" (With citations.)

In Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 104 P. 432, 435, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, where the question was as to whether the parties agreed upon a present unconditional transfer, the court says: "Their intention in this regard is to be here ascertained from the written instruments duly executed and delivered. 'The agreement is just what the parties intended to make it. If that intention is clearly and unequivocally manifested, cadit questio.' Benjamin on Sales, § 309. In Elgee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall, 180, 187, 22 L. Ed. 863, it was said by the United States Supreme Court: 'It must be admitted there is often great difficulty in determining whether a contract is itself a sale of personal property so as to pass the ownership to the vendee, or whether it is a sale on condition, to take effect or be consummated only when the condition shall be performed, or whether it is a mere agreement to sell. It is doubtless true that whether the property passes or not is dependent upon the intention of the parties to the contract, and that intention must be gathered from the language of the instrument.' "

Section 1140 of the Civil Code provides that "the title to personal property sold or exchanged, passes to the buyer whenever the parties agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not."

[4, 5] The evidence shows that Georgelas was in default in his payments, and that nothing had been paid under this contract since December, 1927, and that upwards of $575 was due and unpaid.

The trustee succeeded to no greater rights in the bankrupt's property than the bankrupt himself had, and even if either the bankrupt or the trustee had the right to be relieved from default in payment by a tender of the amounts due, there is nothing to indicate that either at any time tendered any balance due under the contract, to either Petropoulos or the defendant here, his assignee.

The defendant Loock did not acquire his claim of title to this property from Georgelas. He acquired it, if at all, under the assignment and bill of sale from Petropoulos. The instrument executed by Georgelas is not, and does not purport to be, a transfer or assignment either to Petropoulos or the defendant. It is in express terms, merely a release or quitclaim of any claim of right under the sales agreement which he might have despite his default.

The rule is stated in 7 Corpus Juris, p. 123, as follows:

"In case of property sold to the bankrupt and not paid for, the trustee takes no title, if the conditions or circumstances of the sale were such that title did not pass to the bankrupt, but if title actually passed, the fact that the property was not paid for does not prevent the trustee from taking title.

"Where the contract was one of conditional sale the reservation of title in the seller until payment for the property is made, will prevent the title from passing to the trustee, although the goods were in the possession of the bankrupt."

The text, as thus stated in Corpus Juris, is sustained by the authorities cited.

In Bryant v. Swofford Bros., 214 U. S. 279, 291, 29 S. Ct. 614, 618, 53 L. Ed. 997, where the bankrupts prior to adjudication returned to the seller goods which they were purchasing under conditional sales contract, the court found that "the trustee has no higher rights in this regard than the bankrupt. * * * It follows that, so far as the identified goods * * * are concerned, * * * the dry goods company, must prevail."

It is held in Zartman v. First National Bank, 216 U. S. 134, 30 S. Ct. 368, 369, 54 L. Ed. 418, that, "The trustee takes the property of the bankrupt, not as an innocent purchaser, but as the debtor had it at the time of the petition, subject to all valid claims, liens, and equities."

In the case of In re Rosenbloom (D. C.) 280 F. 139, 141, certain goods had been sent to a dealer on consignment to be resold. Within four months prior to the dealer's adjudication in bankruptcy, the parties to the transaction had a settlement, and it was agreed that the dealer should hold the goods on hand in storage for the seller. The court held that the trustee in bankruptcy had no right to these goods, and in the opinion says:

"In view of the considerations hereinafter pointed out, it becomes unnecessary to determine whether the agreement involved was one of absolute sale with an attempted retention of title, operating as a chattel mortgage lien, in the petitioner, a contract of conditional sale, with title remaining in the petitioner until resale by the bankrupt, or an arrangement of pure agency. As this agreement, valid between the parties thereto and based upon a present consideration, was mutually settled and rescinded by such parties before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, that settlement, by which the petitioner received and accepted his own property, was also for a present consideration. * * *

"It cannot be successfully contended that the result of this settlement was to effect a voidable preference in favor of the petitioner. The contract under which the goods were delivered to the bankrupt having been made prior to the statutory four months period before bankruptcy, for a present consideration, and the rights of the parties with respect thereto being valid and enforceable as between them, the surrender of possession of this property was merely a delivery thereof to its owner, to which the latter was entitled, and was not a transfer by the bankrupt of his property to one of his creditors, and hence such transfer did not constitute a preference." (With numerous citations.)

In Illinois, etc., Co. v. Goldman (C. C. A.) 257 F. 300, 301, where the buyer obtained goods on credit through fraudulent representations, and later voluntarily transferred his accounts to the seller in payment thereof, the court said: "But on June 9th appellant concededly had a right to rescind the fraudulent sales and to recover back such of the goods as were then in the bankrupt's possession. Clearly a return of these goods would not be a preference; to the extent of their value, payment could no more effectuate a preference; neither transaction would diminish the estate to which bankrupt was then entitled. That appellant did not expressly assert a right of rescission is immaterial; it relinquished that right in confirming the sale; it then gave up a property interest equal to the value of the goods then on hand. To that extent the transfer was for a present consideration, and not preferential."

Under the transaction involved here, Petropoulos was entitled to possession of the property of the Star Grill covered by his sales contract because of the default of Georgelas in payment of the instalments due. This interest in the premises he had a right to transfer and did transfer to the defendant who was placed in his shoes in the matter of taking and holding possession.

In Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 459, 101 P. 299, 300, where the owners of an automobile had made a contract of conditional sale thereof, it is held that when a contract for the sale of personal property expressly reserves title in the vendors until the purchase money is paid, the title carries with it the right of possession in case of default, though such contract does not contain the usual provision to that effect. "The purchasers had no right of possession, except that given them by the contract, which must be construed as authorizing them to retain possession only so long as they should comply with the conditions required to be performed by them."

The same rule is expressed in Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Hansen, 46 Cal. App. 5, 8, 188 P. 292.

In Hart v. Emmerson, etc., Co. (D. C.) 203 F. 60, 62, the trustee brought suit to recover property or its value upon the ground that it had been transferred to the seller by the bankrupt as a preference under the bankrupt law. The court says: "In the case here presented the conditional vendor reclaimed its goods under a title which was superior to that of its conditional vendee, and as, at the time of the transaction, the return of the property was a lawful and valid act as between the parties, and as the rights of no creditor had then attached, it would seem clear upon principle that the transaction cannot be successfully assailed by one who is subsequently vested with the rights of a judgment creditor. (Citing authorities.) The same considerations lead me to the conclusion that the return of the goods cannot properly be treated as a preferential transfer, for the defendant took back the property under the assertion of a paramount title, and did not take it as a creditor for application upon a debt."

In Jennings v. Swartz, 86 Wash. 202, 149 P. 947, 949, a conditional seller repossessed property sold prior to the buyer's adjudication as a bankrupt, and the court says: "The vendee never complied with the contract of purchase, and therefore did not acquire title. The trustee in bankruptcy obtained no more interest in the boiler than the vendee had at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy."

We are satisfied that the weight of authority sustains the proposition that title to the original restaurant plant, as covered by the Petropoulos sales contract, remained in Petropoulos, and that the relinquishment by the bankrupt of any claim to said property did not constitute a transfer direct to Petropoulos or his successor in interest, the defendant. Even though Georgelas might have relieved himself of his default in failing to make the deferred payments, as required by his contract, by tendering the amounts due thereon, he did not elect to do so. On the contrary, by his declaration of release and abandonment, he notified Petropoulos and his assigns that he relinquished all right to consummate his contract of purchase. This cannot be construed as a transfer. It did not invest either Petropoulos or the defendant Look with any new interest or ownership. It was merely a surrender, or letting go, a waiver of any personal claim under the contract, to the property in question. Had Georgelas had title to this property at the time of this release, it doubtless by way of quitclaim, would have divested him of such right. Not having title, and right of possession having become subject to forfeiture by his default in meeting the conditions of his contract, he had nothing to transfer, and no interest that could pass to the trustee in bankruptcy.

Our conclusion is that, to the extent at least of the restaurant property covered by the original sales agreement of December 9, 1925, the defendant did not acquire the same from the bankrupt, and the plaintiff as trustee for the bankrupt estate was not entitled to recover its value from defendant. The goods thus affected are described in the sales contract as follows: "That certain restaurant and cafe business now owned, conducted and carried on in said city of San Bernardino, at 659 Third Street, named and known as the Star Grill, together with all equipment, fixtures, trade fixtures, including tables, chairs, stools, counters, partitions, dishes, cooking, kitchen, table and restaurant equipment therein; all stock in trade and supplies on hand of every kind, and the lease under which the seller occupies said premises, and also the good-will of said business, for an agreed purchase price of $2,000.00."

Respondent, however, calls attention to the fact that not all of the restaurant property involved in this action, and of which defendant came into the possession, was covered by the Petropoulos sales contract, and contends that the valuation of $3,000, found by the trial court against defendant, was upon portions of the restaurant equipment belonging to Georgelas, exclusive of the Petropoulos agreement.

This additional equipment of the restaurant concededly was to some extent acquired by Georgelas from other vendors, under conditional sales contracts, in which title was reserved to the sellers and had never vested in the bankrupt. The evidence in the record indicates that the defendant Look acquired this additional property by assignment from the original vendors after they had repossessed themselves of the property upon default of the vendees.

The finding upon which the recovery of $3,000 from defendant rests is "that said restaurant equipment, stock fixtures and other articles, including dishes, silverware and supplies which at the time belonged to George Nick Georgelas at said Star Grill, was of the reasonable value of the sum of $3,000.00, over and above contract interests of other parties, covering a portion of the property of said Star Grill."

This finding leaves in extreme uncertainty, just what portion of the restaurant and equipment was by the court included in this $3,000 valuation, and as to what portion was considered as covered by contract interests of other parties. If the amount of the judgment was based upon a valuation of the property included in the Petropoulos contract, it was erroneous; and that the valuation did include this portion of the restaurant equipment is indicated by the further words of the finding "that upon said third day of February, 1928, at which time said defendant obtained possession of said property, he also obtained a purported transfer or waiver from George Nick Georgelas, transferring the property to him as payment upon, or in cancellation of the claim of said defendant against said George Nick Georgelas, and without any further consideration therefor, and that, at the time, said defendant well knew and had reasonable cause to know, that said defendant (bankrupt) was insolvent, and that enforcement of said transfer would effect a preference."

Since the complaint in this action alleges this purported transfer or waiver as the gist of plaintiff's cause of action, and in view of the fact that such purported transfer or waiver related solely to the original Petropoulos agreement of December 9, 1925, the conclusion cannot be avoided that the trial court included the property acquired under that agreement, in fixing the amount to be recovered from defendant.

The evidence doubtless shows that there was property included in this restaurant equipment and belonging to the bankrupt, and which came into the hands of defendant, which was not covered by the various contract agreements referred to; but the extent or value of the same is not sufficiently shown to justify the finding of a valuation of $3,000 thereon.

Appellant claims that this possession of this last-described property was rightfully obtained by him under the terms of a chattel mortgage assigned to him by the mortgagee; but we think it sufficiently appears that this mortgage was invalid as to creditors of the bankrupt, by reason of failure at the time of its execution, to comply with the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code in giving notice of intention to execute the same.

Without ruling on this point, we are disposed to disregard defendant's claim of right of possession under this mortgage, but for other reasons hereinbefore stated the judgment is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 140

COLEY v. WOLCOTT. (Civ. 7057.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 10, 1930.

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 907(3)—On appeal on judgment roll, findings are presumed supported by evidence.

Where appeal is on judgment roll and evidence is not before reviewing court, presumption must be indulged that there was evidence before trial court sufficient to support all findings.

2. Pleading $\S$ 409(3)—Findings for defendant held not in conflict with admissions of answer, where answer was uncertain or ambiguous and no demurrer was filed (Usury Law).

As against contention that findings for defendant were in conflict with admissions of answer in action to recover under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), defendant's answer that agreement was in certain words and figures "and not otherwise," but also pleading facts to supplement and explain writing, held uncertain or ambiguous, and any objection on that ground was waived by failure to demur.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 907(3)—Claim that certain findings were outside issues held foreclosed by appealing on judgment roll alone.

Claim that certain findings were outside issues held foreclosed by appealing on judgment roll alone, since, in absence of evidence, reviewing court must presume findings, even though outside issues, were supported by evidence, and hence that issue, though not made by pleadings, was tendered at trial.

4. Usury $\S$ 115—In action under Usury Law, written agreement by parties held not so unambiguous as to preclude evidence showing transaction joint venture and not loan (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1647; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1856, 1860).

In action to recover treble amount of interest paid for use of money alleged to be in violation of Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), written agreement between parties held not so unambiguous as to preclude introduction of evidence, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 1647, and Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1856, 1860, to show that transaction was not loan but joint venture, and did not violate Usury Law.

5. Usury $\S$ 72—Contract subject to two constructions, one of which will render it usurious, will be construed lawful, in absence of evidence showing it usurious.

While court will tolerate no subterfuge to evade Usury Law and will admit evidence showing contract fair on face is nevertheless disguise for usurious transaction, it is equally true that contract subject to two constructions, one of which will render it usurious and one of which will render it lawful, will be construed lawful, in absence of other evidence requiring it to be construed as usurious.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

$\S$ For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Action by J. A. Coley against H. E. Wolcott to recover treble the amount of interest paid for use of money alleged to be in violation of the Usury Law. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

David D. Oliphant, Jr., of Oakland, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. Appellant sued to recover treble the amount alleged to have been paid to respondent as interest for the use of money in violation of the statute against usury. St. 1919, p. lxxxiii.

The parties entered into a contract in writing in the following language:

"Oakland, California, May 4, 1925.

"This memorandum of agreement made and entered into this day by and between H. E. Wolcott and J. A. Coley, witnesseth:

"That whereas H. E. Wolcott has this day entered into an agreement with the Bank of Alameda to redeem from foreclosure sale at an expense of $8425.75 that certain land described as follows: Located in the County of Contra Costa, State of California, and being

"The Northeast one-quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of Section Thirty-four (34), township one (1); Range Two (2) East; M. D. B. & M.'

"Therefore said H. E. Wolcott is to have for security for the money so paid to the Bank of Alameda and for security for interest on the same at seven per cent. (7%) per annum, compounding semi-annually, a Deed to the following described land:

"Lot 1 and 2 of the Northwest Quarter (N W $\frac{1}{4}$) the East (E) half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of the Northwest (NW) quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) the East (E) half ($\frac{1}{2}$) of the Southwest (SW) quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) and all of the Southeast (SE) quarter ($\frac{1}{4}$) of Section 7, all in Township 16 North (N), Range 8 East (E), M. D. B. & M. excepting from this conveyance, however, all of the lands heretofore conveyed by D. F. Norton to J. E. Taylor, in deed dated August 9th, 1909, and recorded in Book '109' of Deeds, Page '478,' records of the County of Nevada, State of California, to which records special reference is made for a full and particular description, with a Certificate of Title showing a good title in said H. E. Wolcott, subject only to an encumbrance of \$2,250.00 which can remain for at least one year. J. A. Coley to keep the interest and taxes on both properties paid, and the mortgage on said second piece satisfied.

"It is further agreed that all expense that said H. E. Wolcott may be put to in connection with said properties, shall be added to the principal investment and bear a like rate of interest.

"H. E. Wolcott to convey both properties herein described upon receipt by him, first, of the entire amount invested in same together with all expenses and interest as above stated; Second, of one-half of the differences between the net receipts and the gross costs to him of the said Contra Costa property; or to convey the Nevada County property, upon the receipt of $4,000.00.

"It is especially agreed and understood that the conveyance of the above property to H. E. Wolcott is intended to convey title absolutely in fee simple and that no foreclosure or suit in Court shall be necessary to complete ownership, and that unless said H. E. Wolcott shall within two years from date hereof be reimbursed as herein above provided, both of said properties shall be considered his without restrictions or claims whatsoever by J. A. Coley who hereby specifically waives any and all claim to same.

"H. E. Wolcott,
"J. A. Coley."

The Contra Costa county property was later sold for $16,000, and, if the transaction between the parties was a loan and the profits realized by the respondent were received as interest thereon, the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii) was violated.

The trial court found "that the transaction between the plaintiff and said defendant Wolcott, referred to in the pleadings on file herein, did not originate in a negotiation for a loan; that the plaintiff did not on or prior to May 4, 1925, apply to the defendant for a loan; that the transaction between the parties was in the nature of a joint adventure with respect to said Contra Costa County property in which the plaintiff furnished the information and some time, thought and services to the sale of said property and in which the defendant Wolcott was to furnish the money and was to give some of his time, thought and services to the venture, and the parties were to divide any profits made and the defendant Wolcott as and for an additional share in the profits was to receive seven per cent. per annum on the money invested in said venture. That it is true that in addition to investing the necessary funds in said venture the defendant Wolcott did expend time, labor and services upon said Contra Costa County property, and upon said venture of the parties, and in an effort to effect a sale of said property."

The court also found the allegations of certain designated paragraphs of the answer to be true, including paragraph IX, reading as follows:

"This defendant alleges that on and prior to May 4, 1925, the Contra Costa County property described in the complaint on file herein was owned in fee simple absolute by The Bank of Alameda, a California corporation, and that on and prior to said May 4, 1925, the plaintiff J. A. Coley stated and represented to this defendant H. E. Wolcott that said Contra Costa County real property could be purchased and acquired from said The Bank of Alameda for about $8,000.00 and that in the opinion of J. A. Coley it could be resold for a price in excess of $8,000.00, and that a substantial profit could be made, and said J. A. Coley further stated and represented to this defendant that he, said plaintiff did not have the money with which to buy said property from The Bank of Alameda, but that if the defendant H. E. Wolcott should buy said property from said The Bank of Alameda a resale could be effected and a profit could be made and that after H. E. Wolcott had deducted the amount of money paid by said H. E. Wolcott for said property, and any and all expenses or costs of the transaction and one-half of the net balance remaining and interest at seven per cent. on the amount invested, then the balance remaining should be paid to J. A. Coley as compensation for the information.

"That thereupon and on May 4, 1925, the plaintiff and this defendant pursuant to said representations of the plaintiff entered into that certain agreement in writing between the parties hereinabove in paragraph II set out, to which said agreement reference is hereby made and same is to be deemed incorporated herein by reference. That after the execution of said agreement this defendant H. E. Wolcott did buy said Contra Costa County property from said The Bank of Alameda, and said The Bank of Alameda did convey to and did grant, bargain and sell said Contra Costa property to this defendant H. E. Wolcott for the sum of $8,454.40, and that upon such sale by said The Bank of Alameda to said H. E. Wolcott, he, the said H. E. Wolcott, became the owner in fee simple absolute of all right, title and interest in and to said Contra Costa County property subject, however, to the rights of the plaintiff J. A. Coley to receive from the defendant H. E. Wolcott one-half of the profit made on the sale of said property by said H. E. Wolcott, less seven per cent. interest on said money invested as hereinabove alleged."

[1] As conclusions of law, the court found that the transaction was not a loan, but a joint venture, and that it did not violate the Usury Law, and accordingly ordered judgment for the defendant. The appeal is on the judgment roll, and, since the evidence is not before us, the presumption must be indulged that there was evidence before the trial court sufficient to support all the findings.

Appellant, however, contends: (1) That the findings above quoted are in conflict with the admissions of the answer; (2) that the contract is plain and unambiguous and on its face shows that it was a contract for the lending or forbearance of moneys, and (3) that the finding that respondent, Wolcott, gave time, labor, and services to the care and sale of the property is outside the issues.

[2] The first contention is based upon an allegation of the answer "that said agreement and each and every part thereof was in writing * * * and * * * was in the words and figures following, to wit, and not otherwise," which allegation was followed in hac verba by the writing quoted in this opinion. From this appellant argues that respondent is bound by these allegations, and that, since their effect is that the entire contract is fully expressed in the writing, it was error to admit any evidence to supplement or explain it. In this appellant too narrowly construes the effect of the pleading. In the same answer, in paragraph IX, above quoted, respondent pleaded facts to supplement and explain the writing. No demurrer was interposed by appellant to this answer. If it be conceded that the effect of these allegations with regard to the written instrument, standing alone, would be, as contended by appellant, to foreclose any evidence outside the contract to supplement or interpret its language, those allegations did not stand alone. They were accompanied in the same pleading by other allegations which were intended to explain the writing. This, at most, rendered the pleading uncertain or ambiguous, and any objection to it on that ground was waived by appellant's failure to demur.

[3] Appellant's claim that certain findings are outside the issues is foreclosed by his appealing on the judgment roll alone. In the absence of the evidence, this court must presume that the findings, even though outside the issues, are supported by evidence introduced without objection, and hence that the issue, although not made by the pleadings, was tendered at the trial. Turner v. Stock, 79 Cal. App. 662, 666, 251 P. 814; Fighiera v. Radis, 180 Cal. 660, 663, 182 P. 418; Peck v. Noee, 154 Cal. 351, 354, 97 P. 865; Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pac. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 296, 47 P. 60; Swallow v. Francisco, 73 Cal. App. 692, 239 P. 95.

[4] This leaves as the sole remaining point to be determined whether the written agreement of the parties is complete upon its face and unambiguous so as to preclude the introduction of any evidence to supplement it or explain its meaning.

No place in the written agreement is there any express language designating the transaction as a lending of money nor any promise on the part of appellant to pay the principal sum to respondent. But appellant argues that the language of the agreement is inconsistent with any other construction. Without analyzing the writing in detail, we are satisfied that its language is not such as to compel this interpretation. In its last paragraph it squarely negatives the idea that it is intended as a mortgage. That language is apparently a deliberate attempt to express the idea that Wolcott is to have title absolutely with a right in appellant to one-half of any profits realized from a sale of the property if made within two years from the date of the agreement. Certainly the writing leaves in doubt the true intention of the parties, and the court was justified in taking other evidence to aid it in arriving at its meaning.

Civ. Code, § 1647; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1860; Heslin v. Lapham, 77 Cal. App. 137, 246 P. 150; Shelley v. Byers, 73 Cal. App. 44, 55, 238 P. 177; Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. Quinn, 195 Cal. 377, 383, 384, 234 P. 313; Petroleum Midway Co., Ltd., v. Moynier (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 740.

[5] While courts will tolerate no subterfuge designed to evade the Usury Law, and will always admit evidence to show that a contract fair on its face is nevertheless a disguise for a usurious transaction, it is equally true that, if a contract is subject to two constructions, one of which will render it usurious and therefore unlawful and one which will render it lawful, the courts, in the absence of other evidence requiring the contract to be construed as usurious, will give it such a construction as will render it lawful. Shelley v. Byers, 73 Cal. App. 44, 57, 238 P. 177; Cobb v. Hartenstein, 47 Utah, 174, 152 P. 424, 427; Ohio Inv. Co. v. Brown, 89 Kan. 66, 130 P. 665; Lusk v. Smith, 71 Kan. 550, 81 P. 173; German Sav. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Leavens, 89 Wash. 78, 153 P. 1092; Martin v. Oklahoma State Bank, 86 Okl. 113, 206 P. 824; Foreman v. Needles, 78 Okl. 105, 188 P. 1087.

In this case, the written agreement not being clear on its face as to the true nature of the transaction between the parties, the trial court was justified in resorting to extrinsic evidence to arrive at its proper construction.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.
STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 195

B. F. SCHLESINGER & SONS v. KOHLER
& CHASE. (Civ. 7064.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Contracts ⇨221(3)—Clause in contract to operate department in store, requiring store to give notice of delinquent accounts, held not condition precedent to lessee's obligation to repurchase delinquent accounts.

Clause in contract, renting space in department store to conduct music department and requiring store to carry installment and charge accounts of that department, providing that department store shall give lessee notice of any delinquencies within 30 days following date thereof, held not condition precedent, but merely covenant, failure to perform which did not excuse performance by lessee of contract obligation to repurchase delinquent accounts.

2. Contracts ⇨221(1)—Condition precedent distinguished from covenant.

Distinctive feature of covenant in contract which distinguishes it from condition precedent is that, when it goes only to part of consideration, nonperformance is not a defense if breach of covenant may be paid for in damages.

3. Appeal and error ⇨931(4)—Absent proof of damage resulting from breach of covenant pleaded, appellate court must assume trial court impliedly found no damage was sustained.

In action to recover balance due under written contract to operate concession in department store, where defendant pleaded breach of covenant but did not make any proof regarding damages sustained by reason thereof, appellate court must assume on defendant's appeal from judgment that trial court impliedly found no damage was sustained by breach.

4. Accord and satisfaction ⇨11(1)—Compromise and settlement ⇨5(2)—Department store's acceptance of specified sum in full for disputed rental claims under contract held to constitute "accord and satisfaction" (Civ. Code, §§ 1521-1523).

Where controversy existed over amount of rental due under contract to operate music concession in department store, department store's agreement in writing to accept in full for all claims for rent specified amount, which was paid and received by it, held to constitute "accord and satisfaction" under contract within meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 1521-1523.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Accord and Satisfaction.]

5. Corporations ⇨426(10)—Corporation accepting benefits of accord and satisfaction entered into by manager, and not repudiating acts, held estopped to subsequently contend manager was unauthorized (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 20).

Where corporation accepted benefits of accord and satisfaction entered into by its active head and manager in ordinary course and conduct of corporate business, and did not at any time repudiate his acts, corporation held estopped to subsequently contend manager had no authority to enter into accord and satisfaction, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 20, raising disputable presumption that ordinary course of business has been followed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by B. F. Schlesinger & Sons against Kohler & Chase. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with direction to modify judgment.

A. E. Shaw, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dunne, Dunne & Cook, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the balance claimed to be due under a written contract. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $8,160.77. Defendant has appealed upon type-written transcripts.

The plaintiff corporation operated a department store in the city of Oakland under the name of "Kahn's"; the defendant corporation operated a music store in San Francisco. In the contract hereafter referred to the plaintiff was mentioned as "Kahn's," "Kahn Bros.," and "Schlesinger's"; and the defendant is referred to as the "Music Company."

The contract was duly executed by the two corporations on May 1, 1925. At that time a music department was being operated in Kahn's by one Jessen. This concession was sold by Jessen to defendant, and the latter retained Jessen as salesman in charge, or manager of sales. At the instance of plaintiff the contract of May 1, 1925, was executed providing that the Music Company should operate its department "wholly under the supervision of Kahn's, and, so far as the public is concerned, as an integral department of Kahn's." Space in the store was leased to the Music Company for a period of five years, the lease being subject to termination by either party on January 1, 1926. The Music Company agreed to pay as rental for the space, and in consideration of Kahn's carrying the installment and charge accounts, a sum equal to 12½ per cent. of the total net sales of the department. If the rental as so computed shall not have amounted to $12,500 for the six months' period commencing July 1, 1925, the Music Company was to make up the difference so that the rental for the six months' period should equal that amount. The Music Company was required to pay all its employees in the department and to expend at least 5 per cent. of its net sales in newspaper publicity. The Music Company agreed to hire all its employees through Kahn's subject to the latter's control and supervision. These employees were to be paid by Kahn's and the payments charged to the Music Company's account.

The arrangement by which Kahn's purchased and carried the installment and charge accounts of the department is found in the following language of the contract: "Kahn's shall purchase and carry the instalment contract accounts and charge accounts of the department. If any instrument covered by an instalment contract shall be taken in exchange or revert, or for any reason an account fails to meet four (4) consecutive monthly payments and becomes uncollectible in the opinion of Kahn's, the unpaid balance of the principal shall be charged against The Music Company and deducted from the gross sales before figuring net sales. Following the termination of this agreement Kohler & Chase agrees to repurchase, for cash, any contract or account which fails to meet four (4) consecutive monthly payments and which Kahn's may deem uncollectible, paying therefor the unpaid balance of the principal less twelve and one-half per cent. (12½%). All of such contracts or accounts are to be assigned by Kahn's to The Music Company without recourse."

Payments and collections on open charge accounts of Kahn's were to be applied pro rata against the music department items and the other items of the account, all of which were to be handled in the same manner and form as Kahn's handled its own installment and charge accounts.

The contract was prepared in the usual form used by Kahn's in leasing space in its store; but, before its execution, there was inserted at the special request of defendant and for the purpose of enabling the defendant to investigate and assist in making collections of unpaid accounts, a clause which reads: "Kahn's shall give The Music Company notice of any delinquencies within thirty (30) days following the date thereof."

The issues as tried are simple. The contract and lease were terminated by mutual consent as of December 31, 1925. Soon thereafter representatives of the parties endeavored to adjust the accounts between them covering instruments which had been sold in the store and returned to defendant. On May 13, 1926, plaintiff billed defendant for $1,044, being the amount then claimed to be due. On July 26, 1926, plaintiff's attorneys made demand on defendant for $11,264.51 claimed to be due on the open accounts, and on October 6, 1926, this action was commenced by the filing of a complaint in which the sum of $8,291.02 was claimed to be due upon the same accounts. After the complaint was filed, but before trial, defendant paid to plaintiff $2,813.23, and prior to the date of judgment plaintiff had collected on outstanding accounts over $1,300 of the amount sued for. Credit for some of these payments was given, and judgment on this issue went for plaintiff in the sum of $4,006.95. The dispute between the parties on this issue relates to the liability of the defendant to reimburse plaintiff on the overdue accounts of sales which plaintiff had assumed to collect for defendant. It is the contention of the defendant that it is not liable for any overdue account, notice of the delinquency of which was not given defendant as stipulated by the contract.

The other issue involved relates to the claim for unpaid rental of the store space. The net sales in the defendant's department having fallen far below the amount anticipated, the 12½ per cent. deduction failed to reach the minimum of $12,500 fixed as the rental for the first six months' period. It is the claim of defendant that it obtained oral consent of plaintiff to modify these terms of the contract, and that this change was executed for some time prior to the termination of the lease; that thereafter differences having arisen between the parties, a written accord and satisfaction was made and the amount then agreed on was paid by defendant and received by plaintiff. The plaintiff disputes the claim on the ground that the accord was unauthorized by the proper corporate officers and that the payment made thereunder was not a satisfaction because other conditions were not complied with.

[1-3] On the first issue the parties split on the interpretation of the clause of the contract whereby plaintiff undertook to give defendant notice of each delinquency within 30 days after it occurred. The plaintiff insists that it is merely a covenant, and the defendant argues that it is a condition precedent to its obligation to repurchase the delinquent accounts.

We take the view that the clause is merely a covenant the failure to perform which did not excuse performance by defendant. The evidence is clear that plaintiff did not give notice of these delinquencies to defendant as required by the contract, but there is no evidence of any character tending to prove what, if any, damage the defendant suffered by reason of such failure of performance. One of the distinctive features of a covenant which distinguishes it from a condition precedent is that, when it goes only to a part of the consideration, nonperformance is not a defense if the breach of the covenant may be paid for in damages. Ernst v. Cummings, 55 Cal. 179, 183. Here the defendant pleaded that the clause was inserted in the contract in order that it might investigate the delinquencies and assist in making collections and that plaintiff's failure to give the required notice caused defendant damage. But the defendant did not make any proof of damage, and we must assume that the trial court impliedly found that no damage was suffered by plaintiff's breach.

Accordingly, defendant has had its day in court on the issue raised in the pleadings, and the judgment on this phase of the case must stand, with these exceptions: The judgment on the uncollected accounts is manifestly $413.78 in excess of that shown by the evidence to be due, and the defendant is entitled to an assignment of all accounts which remain uncollected, or a credit on the judgment of all payments which have been collected by plaintiff subsequent to the trial. This portion of the judgment should therefore be modified so as to provide that the plaintiff shall recover the sum of $3,593.17 upon these uncollected accounts instead of the sum of $4,006.95, and that the plaintiff shall forthwith assign to the defendant the uncollected accounts to the amount of the judgment as modified, or, if any of said accounts have been collected in the meantime, then the judgment should be further reduced to that extent, taking into account in each instance the 12½% deduction provided for in the contract.

[4] The issue of unpaid rent was raised by plaintiff by amendment to its complaint some time after the litigation was started. It is merely an afterthought which has no foundation in equity or good conscience. On January 25, 1926, there existed between the parties a bona fide controversy as to their rights and obligations under the contract of May, 1925. This controversy related to the amounts due on uncollected accounts as well as to the amount due for rental of store space. It arose through plaintiff's failure to comply with the terms of the contract and through the oral modification of the terms relating to rental made in September, 1925. In the conference held in January, 1926, between the representatives of these parties, Mr. Schlesinger, acting for plaintiff, agreed in writing to accept in full for all claims for rental the sum of $3,054.48, and this sum was paid and received by the corporation in full satisfaction of that claim. There was therefore a complete accord and satisfaction of the claim for rent under the contract within the meaning of sections 1521-1523 of the Civil Code.

In support of this portion of the judgment plaintiff argues that there was no satisfaction because the accord was made conditional upon the settlement of other claims which were not paid. The language of the agreement of January, 1926, upon which this argument is based, reads: "This settlement does not release you (defendant) from your obligation under the contract for outstanding accounts any of which prove to be in arrears or in which there is a loss we expect you to reimburse us as per contract." There are two answers to the argument: First, the settlement of these outstanding accounts is not a condition to the accord and satisfaction, but the clear meaning of this portion of the January agreement is that the parties excepted the outstanding accounts controversy from the settlement and intended the latter to be a complete settlement and adjustment of the rent issue alone. Second, the time for reimbursement of the outstanding accounts was not fixed in the January agreement and the stipulation in the January agreement that the settlement of these accounts "which prove to be in arrears" should be made "as per contract" could mean nothing more than that such payments should be made by the defendant when found due. This contingency has not yet arisen as has been shown heretofore. Even during the course of the trial it appeared that plaintiff had been and still was engaged in collecting these outstanding accounts—that in some cases actions had been brought by the plaintiff against the purchasers, that attachments had been levied, and that these cases were pending and unsettled, while from the date of the January agreement to the time of the trial on November 9, 1927, the plaintiff itself was unable to fix any definite amount which it should claim to be due on these accounts.

[5] We are not impressed with plaintiff's argument that the accord was ineffective because not specially authorized by its board of directors. All transactions, from the execution of the original contract in May, 1925, to the settlement in January, 1926, were conducted by Mr. Schlesinger, who was the active head and manager of the plaintiff corporation, and his acts of January, 1926, were in the ordinary course and conduct of the business of the corporation. The corporation has not at any time repudiated any of these acts on the part of its manager, but, on the contrary, has accepted and retained all the benefits from these acts. It should not, therefore, be heard at this time to dispute the authority of Mr. Schlesinger to make the settlement. Grummet v. Fresno, etc., Co., 181 Cal. 509, 513, 185 P. 388; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 20; Reardon v. Richmond Land Co., 21 Cal. App. 357, 131 P. 894; Meister & Sons Co. v. Wood & Tatum Co., 26 Cal. App. 584, 587, 588, 147 P. 981.

For the reasons given the portion of the judgment which awarded plaintiff the sum of $3,054.58 by way of rental is error and that amount is accordingly stricken therefrom.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to enter a modified judgment in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the views expressed herein, with costs of this appeal to appellant.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 117

TYLER et al. v. PARK RIDGE COUNTRY CLUB. (Civ. 52.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨559(1, 4)—Injunction ⇨70 —Courts cannot either through receivership or by injunction prevent stockholders and directors from exercising powers conferred by them under by-laws.

Courts cannot either through a receivership or by injunction prevent stockholders and legally constituted directors of corporation from exercising powers expressly conferred on them under by-laws adopted by corporation for its government.

2. Receivers ⇨35(1)—Order appointing receiver for country club on ex parte application and without notice held erroneous.

Order appointing receiver for country club on an ex parte application and without notice held erroneous, particularly in view of fact that petition was verified as to many of essential allegations only on information and belief, and particularly in absence of allegation that any great or irreparable injury would result before application for receivership could be heard on notice.

3. Receivers ⇨35(3)—Subsequent denial of motion to vacate order appointing receiver did not make unauthorized appointment less erroneous.

Fact that trial court, after appointment of receiver for country club, on ex parte application without notice, subsequently entertained and denied a motion to vacate order appointing receiver, did not make the unauthorized appointment any less erroneous.

4. Perpetuities ⇨7(1)—Attempt to prevent sale or transfer of stock of country club to negroes was violation of rules regulating restraints on alienation (Civ. Code, § 715 et seq.).

An attempt either by appointment of a receiver or by injunction to prevent sale or transfer of capital stock of country club to members of negro race constituted a violation of rules regulating restraints on alienation, as provided by Civ. Code, § 715 et seq.

5. Contracts ⇨108(2)—Contracts limiting transfer and ownership of property to members of Caucasian race are void.

Contracts limiting transfer and ownership of property to members of Caucasian race are void, although contracts governing use and occupancy of property may be enforced.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; William H. Ellis, Judge.

Action by V. A. Tyler and another against the Park Ridge Country Club. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order appointing a receiver, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Edward T. Sherer and Welburn Mayock, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sarau & Thompson, of Riverside, Henry G. Bodkin and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, P. J. The plaintiffs are holders of membership privileges in the defendant Park Ridge Country Club, a corporation organized for and engaged in the business of promoting and furnishing to such membership participants facilities for outdoor sports and the enjoyment of social intercourse and good fellowship.

Plaintiffs brought this action for themselves and other membership participants to prevent the corporation and its directors from diverting the service of the club from the exclusive use of the members of the Caucasian race, and from selling its stock and extending its privileges to members of the negro race.

The action is brought and maintained under a complaint in equity, asking the appointment of a receiver to conduct and administer the affairs of the corporation in the protection of the exclusive rights of the Caucasians to its privileges. The court made the order appointing a receiver on an ex parte application upon the complaint filed herein, and without notice to the defendants.

The complaint alleges in part as follows:

"IV.

"That the membership in said club is by the by-laws limited to members of the Caucasian race and that no other person than a member of the Caucasian race is entitled to become a member of said club under the terms of the by-laws in existence at the time that the plaintiffs herein were induced to and did become members of said club, and at the present time.

"V.

"That at the present time there are approximately 500 members in good standing and unsuspended from said club and all of said members are entitled to all of the privileges of said club and each and every of the members are of the Caucasian race.

"VI.

"That by and according to the by-laws of said club the persons holding membership privileges therein are not entitled to voting power in the conduct of said club or of said corporation, nor in amending or changing in any manner the by-laws of said club.

"VII.

"That by and according to the articles of incorporation of said club and the by-laws now in full force and effect, the directors of said club and the owners of the stock therein have the sole right to amend the by-laws and to provide for the making of rules and regulations for the conduct of such club and the members thereof.

"VIII.

"That such directors and stockholders have the sole and exclusive right to amend said by-laws so as to provide that membership in said club shall not be limited to members of the Caucasian race and said directors and stockholders have it within their power to amend said by-laws so as to provide that members of the negro race may be entitled to full membership in said club and to enjoy all the privileges and rights now enjoyed by the plaintiffs herein.

"IX.

"That the by-laws of said corporation further provide that the board of directors may by majority vote extend the privileges and courtesies of the club, without charge, to any person or persons for a period not exceeding three months.

"X.

"That the by-laws of said club further provide that the board of directors shall elect new members and that two negative votes of the board of directors shall be sufficient to reject any candidate and the membership of said club has no right whatsoever to pass upon said proposed membership."

The complaint contains further allegations indicating that the present membership acquired its rights in reliance upon the existing race restrictions, and that an extension of membership rights or vesting the control of the corporation to negroes would destroy the value and availability of the club to its present membership, and render its further operation impracticable.

This result may readily be conceded. We have not reached a point in race assimilation where a social club of this character could function with a participating membership half white and half black, or where the two races are brought into contact on a basis of social equality. This would be true whether the organization was originally wholly white or wholly black.

The question on this appeal is as to whether or not the situation affords the plaintiffs any relief, and particularly the relief they are seeking to maintain.

In the first place, the charter and by-laws of the corporation, as pleaded by the plaintiffs, are not consistent with their demands. As set forth in the portions of the complaint above quoted, the by-laws provide that persons holding membership privileges "are not entitled to voting power in the conduct of said club or of said corporation, nor in amending or changing in any manner the by-laws of said club"; that "by and according to the articles of incorporation of said club, and the by-laws now in full force and effect, the directors of said club, and the owners of the stock therein, have the sole right to amend the by-laws and to provide for the making of rules and regulations for the conduct of said club and the members thereof"; that such directors and stockholders "have the exclusive right to amend said by-laws so as to provide that memberships in said club shall not be limited to members of the Caucasian race, and said directors and stockholders have it within their power to amend said by-laws so as to provide that members of the negro race may be entitled to full membership in said club, and to enjoy all the privileges and rights now enjoyed by the plaintiffs herein"; that "the by-laws of said corporation further provide that the board of directors may by a majority vote, extend the privileges and courtesies of the club without charge to any person or persons for a period not exceeding three months."

[1] When the fundamental laws adopted by the corporation for its government, and subject to which the plaintiffs and others whom they represent, presumptively accepted membership privileges, thus vests the exclusive right to remove all race restrictions, how can the courts either through a receivership, or even by injunction, prevent the stockholders and legally constituted directors of the corporation from exercising the powers thus expressly conferred upon them—powers of which the present membership had notice when they entered into this partnership relation? However disastrous to the interests of the present membership the adoption of such a course may be, there is nothing illegal about it where the organic laws of the corporation have authorized such procedure.

[2] Appellants further dispute the power of the court to create this receivership, taking from the corporate directors the management and control of all the corporate affairs, and vesting the entire management in a receiver, upon an ex parte application, and without notice, and particularly upon a petition which is verified as to many of the essential allegations only on information and belief. The allegation that the owners of the capital stock of the corporation intend to sell their stock to negroes is made on information and belief. The allegation that Dan Gilkey, the principal stockholder, is insolvent, is made upon information and belief. The allegation that the purpose of the transfer of stock to negroes is to enable the negroes to force the present members to sacrifice their membership rather than to maintain a membership in a club owned and operated by negroes is made on information and belief. The allegation that the present owners and directors are about to amend the by-laws of the corporation so as to enable members of the negro race to become participating members is made on information and belief.

There is a direct allegation that the clubhouse and grounds have been neglected, and that, if the neglect is continued, great and irreparable injury will result, but there is no allegation that such neglect will continue or is threatened, or that any great or irreparable injury would result to plaintiffs before the application for a receivership could be heard on notice.

There is no direct statutory limitation as to the showing of irreparable injury required in such a case, but the rule contended for by appellant is sustained by the decisions in this state. As is said in Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 138, 42 P. 561, 562:

"The general rule, no doubt, is that so harsh a measure as the appointment of a receiver to take property out of one's possession without trial will not be indulged in by a court without previous notice to the defendant. It would be unjustifiable, except where it clearly appeared that irreparable injury would be done during the few days necessary for a hearing on notice, and even in such an extreme case a temporary injunction would usually be sufficient. 'A motion to appoint a receiver will not be entertained unless notice has been given to the defendant, if practicable, and the appointment will not be made without notice, save in case of irreparable pending injury.' Beach, Rec. § 141, and notes."

In Ryan v. Murphy, 39 Cal. App. 640, 179 P. 517, 518, the court says:

"It is obvious that the receiver in this case was appointed without formal notice. Such an appointment, under the established law of this state, cannot be legally made except upon a showing of great emergency. Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 42 P. 561."

Again the rule is invoked that a receiver should not be appointed where a less drastic remedy would insure petitioner adequate protection. This is indicated in the decision last above quoted, where the court says:

"Moreover, it may be said that the plaintiffs could (if they had not done so) have adequately protected their interest in the property against future alienation thereof by filing a lis pendens. Thus in National Union Bank

[of Reading] v. Riger, 38 App. Div. 123, 50 N. Y. S. 545, which was an action by a judgment creditor to subject certain land to his claim, it was held erroneous to appoint a receiver where there was sufficient equity in the property to satisfy the judgment. The court remarked that in such a case the creditor was adequately protected by the filing of a lis pendens."

The citation of Fischer v. Superior Court, supra, recognizes the same limitation where an injunction or restraining order would give adequate protection pending hearing on notice.

In A. G. Col Co. v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 604, 613, 238 P. 926, 930, it is said:

"By numerous authorities, the principle is unequivocally announced that, from the standpoint of the business welfare of a defendant corporation, the appointment of a receiver on an ex parte application is so dangerous an expedient that it should be done only in cases of the greatest emergency and where, without such appointment, irreparable injury will unquestionably result. Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 42 P. 561; Hobson v. Pacific States M. Co., 5 Cal. App. 94, 89 P. 866; Ryan v. Murphy, 39 Cal. App. 640, 179 P. 517.

"It is also a well-established rule that a receiver should not be appointed where a remedy less drastic in its nature and scope is available, and which will insure to the litigants adequate protection. * * *

"Where an injunction will protect all the rights to which the applicant for the appointment of a receiver appears to be entitled, a receiver will not be appointed.' 34 Cyc., p. 25; Hickey v. Parrot Silver, etc., Co., 25 Mont. 164, 64 P. 330 [and other citations]."

[3] In the case before us a restraining order or temporary injunction would have held up any of the proceedings by the corporation or its officers, of which plaintiffs were apprehensive, until such time as a hearing on proper notice could have been had. The fact that the trial court subsequently entertained and denied a motion to vacate the order appointing a receiver makes the unauthorized appointment no less erroneous.

[4] Moreover, an attempt either by appointment of a receiver or by injunction to prevent the sale or transfer of the capital stock of this corporation to members of the negro race would be in violation of the rules regulating restraints on alienation, as provided by the provisions of the Civil Code, § 715 et seq., and as maintained by the decisions of our appellate courts. In re Walkerly, 108 Cal. 627, 658, 41 P. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97; 9 Cal. Jur. pp. 352-357; Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 P. 159.

[5] While, under the authorities in this state, contracts governing the use and occupancy of the property may be enforced, contracts limiting transfer and ownership to members of the Caucasian race are void.

For the various reasons stated, we are sat-ified that the ex parte order appointing a receiver in this case is erroneous.

The order and judgment is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 183

GIBBS v. MENDOZA et al. (Civ. 3977.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 15, 1930.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⚡3(4)—Contract for sale of land with delivery of deed on payment of part of purchase price, and providing for final payment within one year, was not mere option; "contract for sale of real property" (Civ. Code, §§ 1726, 1729, 1741).

Contract for sale of land for specified amount, with delivery of deed for portion of land on payment of part of purchase price, and providing for final payment on or before one year from date of delivery of deed, constituted a "contract for sale of real property," within Civ. Code, §§ 1726, 1729, 1741, and not a mere option.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Contract for Sale of Real Estate.]

2. Vendor and purchaser ⚡23—Contract for sale of land was binding without being signed by purchaser.

Contract for sale of real estate was binding on party without necessity of purchaser signing it.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⚡86—Assignee's failure to tender balance of purchase price until ten days after demand on original purchaser was not abandonment of contract.

Failure of assignee of contract for purchase of real estate to tender balance of purchase price until ten days after demand therefor on original purchaser did not operate as abandonment of the contract wherein time was not made the essence.

4. Interest ⚡23—Interest, without agreement to contrary, is payable only when principal becomes due.

In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, interest is payable only when principal becomes due.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚡93—Delay of ten days in paying final installment on contract without time of the essence does not authorize repudiation by vendor.

Where provisions of contract to sell real estate do not declare forfeiture for nonperformance, and time is not made essence, delay of ten days in payment of final installment will not authorize vendor to repudiate agreement or declare abandonment, when he may be fully compensated for such delay.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Jessie M. Gibbs against Jose Ygnacio Mendoza and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Preisker, Goble & Twitchell, of Santa Maria, for appellants.

Webster & Lyon, of Paso Robles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment decreeing specific performance of a contract to sell and convey real property.

The defendants were the owners of 320 acres of land in San Luis Obispo county, being lots 28 and a portion of lot 29, according to the subdivision map of the Morro y Cayucas Rancho on file in the office of the recorder of said county. July 22, 1925, the defendants executed and delivered to plaintiff's assignor, J. Rohrberg, a written contract to sell said land for $100 an acre. The sum of $500 was paid by the purchaser upon the execution and delivery of the contract, and the further sum of $11,500 was subsequently paid. Upon the payment of the last-mentioned sum, a deed of conveyance to 50 acres of the land was executed and delivered to the purchaser, as required by the terms of the contract, and he was thereupon given possession of the premises. The time for the delivery of no other deed was specifically designated. It was provided that the final payment of $20,300 should be made "on or before one year from the date of delivery of deed." The contract provided for 6 per cent. interest per annum on deferred payments. Time was not made the essence of the contract. Subsequent to the payment of the said sum of $12,000 on the purchase price of the property, the contract was duly assigned to plaintiff for a valuable consideration. On or about July 23, 1926, the defendants notified the original purchaser that prompt payment of the interest would be required. The assignee had no notice of this demand. On August 2, 1926, the plaintiff tendered to the defendants $20,300, the entire balance of the purchase price, together with the accrued interest, and demanded a deed of conveyance to the balance of the property, which was refused. This suit for specific performance of the contract was then commenced. The complaint recited the foregoing facts, and the contract was made an exhibit thereof. It was alleged that the purchase price of the land was fair and reasonable. The answer denied the allegations of the complaint seriatim, and declared that the instrument in question was a mere option, and not a contract to sell real property, and that it was breached by the purchaser by his failure to pay the interest as required. Upon trial the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff decreeing specific performance, which was to be accomplished within a prescribed time, and was conditioned upon the payment of the balance of the purchase price together with the accrued interest.

[1] The appellants contend that the document in question, which was signed by the vendors only, was a mere option, and not an agreement to sell real property, and that the instrument was breached, abandoned, and canceled by the failure of the purchaser to promptly pay the interest amounting to $1,218, which was due July 22, 1926.

From a construction of the terms of the instrument itself, together with the acceptance of $12,000 of the purchase price of the land and the conveying of 50 acres thereof and delivery of possession to the purchaser, it appears clear that this agreement was intended to be, and was in fact, a valid contract to sell the 320-acre tract of land, and not a mere option. The contract was not severable. The contract provided in part:

"This agreement, made this 22nd day of July, 1925, by and between Jose Ygnacio Mendoza and Maria Mendoza, parties of the first part, and J. Rohrberg, the party of the second part,

"Witnesseth: That said first parties agree to sell to said second party the following described premises * * * (here follows a description of the 320-acre tract of land).

"Terms of sale: One hundred dollars ($100.00) per acre, payable as follows, to-wit: Five hundred dollars ($500.00) cash, paid this day, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged. Eleven thousand five hundred dollars ($11,500.00) as soon as title is examined, and deeds are signed. Twenty thousand three hundred dollars ($20,300.00) to be paid on or before one year from date of delivery of deed. Time shall be given for examination of title. * * *

"Upon said $11,500 being paid, said first parties agree to convey to said second party fifty (50) acres of said land by grant, bargain and sale deed * * * (describing the fifty-acre tract). Deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of six (6) per cent. per annum from date. Possession of said premises to be delivered when said $11,500 is paid.

"Witness the hands of the said parties of the first part.

"[Signed and witnessed]

"Jose Ygnacio X Mendoza
"Maria X Mendoza"

[2] It was not necessary that the contract should be signed by the purchaser to make it binding. The payment of a substantial part of the purchase price of the land was ample evidence of acceptance of the terms of the agreement on the part of the purchaser. These payments, together with conveyance of a part of the land and possession of the entire tract, constitute ample evidence that the respective parties deemed the instrument to be, and we are of the opinion that it is, a valid contract to sell real property, and not a mere option. Sections 1726, 1729, and 1741, Civ. Code; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 P.

249; Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 P. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Smith v. Post, 167 Cal. 69, 74, 138 P. 705; Copple v. Aigeltinger, 167 Cal. 706, 140 P. 1073; Sparks v. Mauk, 170 Cal. 122, 148 P. 926; Karahadian v. Lockett, 33 Cal. App. 411, 165 P. 552.

[3-5] In addition to part performance of the contract in the present case, the plaintiff proved, and the court found, that an adequate tender of the entire balance of the purchase price, together with the accrued interest, was duly made on August 2, 1926. It is contended that this tender was too late, in view of the demand which was made upon the original purchaser on July 23, 1926, to promptly pay the interest, and that this default constituted a breach and abandonment of the contract. We cannot agree with this assertion. Time was not made the essence of the contract. The assignee and owner of the contract had no notice of this demand on the part of the defendants. The contract does not specify a date upon which the interest shall become payable. It merely provides that deferred payments shall "bear interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from date." In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, interest is payable only when the principal becomes due. Owens v. Graetzel, 146 Md. 361, 126 A. 224, 39 A. L. R. 943, and note; In re Payne, 171 Wis. 608, 177 N. W. 858, 10 A. L. R. 993, and note; 6 Permanent Supp. R. C. L. 3868, § 8. The contract in the present case provided that the balance of the deferred principal sum of $20,300 was "to be paid on or before one year from the date of delivery of deed." Assuming that this clause referred to the deed of conveyance to the remainder of the property not included in the description of the first 50 acres of land which had already been executed, neither this principal sum of $20,300 nor the interest thereon was due, for the reason that the defendants failed and refused to execute or deliver deeds of conveyance to the balance of the land. If the foregoing clause of the contract be construed to mean that the final payment of $20,300 was due one year from the date of the delivery of the deed which was executed to the 50-acre tract, then the tender was actually made within the time prescribed, for the record is undisputed that this deed was not delivered until August 3, 1925. Accepting appellants' construction of the contract, the plaintiff, at most, was in default of this final payment and interest for a period of only ten days. Since time was not made the essence of the contract, under the circumstances of this case this brief delay will not be construed to constitute an abandonment of the contract. The defendants were not injured by the delay, and a subsequent oral notice demanding prompt payment of the interest could not change the express terms of the contract. Where the provisions of the contract to sell real estate do not declare a forfeiture for nonperformance, and time is not made the essence of the contract, a mere delay of ten days in the payment of the final installment and interest will not authorize the seller to repudiate the agreement or declare an abandonment thereof when he may be fully compensated for such delay. Norris v. Hay, 149 Cal. 695, 698, 87 P. 380; 25 R. C. L. 321, § 136.

It appears that the purchase price of the land was fair and reasonable. The finding that the value of the land did not increase subsequent to the execution of the contract is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 161

PEOPLE v. HOMAN et al. (Cr. 1867.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

Criminal law §1170½(1)—Refusing to permit defendant police officers charged with bribery to show motive which actuated prosecuting witness held prejudicial error (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

Where evidence of guilt of defendant police officers charged with bribery consisted almost entirely in testimony of truck driver alleged to have given defendants money to avoid prosecution for traffic violation, and defense consisted of complete denial and well-supported alibi and considerable testimony by which good reputation for honesty and integrity of each of defendants was sought to be established, refusal to permit defendants to show motive which actuated prosecuting witness in premises held prejudicial error under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, providing that, although witness is presumed to speak truth, presumption may be repelled by evidence affecting his motives.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

William Homan and another were convicted of bribery, and they appeal. Reversed.

R. E. Parsons, of Los Angeles, and J. L. Granttham, of Riverside, for appellant Homan.

Joseph W. Ryan and Frank J. Ryan, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Davis.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered against each of them pursuant to their conviction on each of four counts in an information wherein they were charged with the crime of bribery. They also appeal from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Briefly, the facts relating to each of the four counts of bribery appear to be that the two defendants, who were traffic officers of the city of Los Angeles and who operated together at night in a large outlying district, stopped a Japanese (who at that time was driving an auto truck), for assumed violation of the traffic ordinance. What followed thereafter, as claimed by the prosecution, is illustrated by the testimony given by one of the prosecuting witnesses as follows: "He say stop. I stop. He say how many miles. I say 30 miles. He say 45 miles. He say too much speed. He say, 'Got any chauffeur license.' I say, Yes. He say no signs license. He say no chauffeur license. 40 miles speed. He say, go 10 days go to jail. * * * He say, want go there? I say, no dont. You have money? Yes, I give you. He say, thank you."

One of the alleged errors which occurred at the trial related to the refusal of the trial court to permit defendant to show the motive which actuated each of the prosecuting witnesses in giving the testimony upon which the prosecution and conviction of defendants depended.

On cross-examination of one of the prosecuting witnesses, counsel for defendants asked certain preliminary questions for the asserted purpose of laying a foundation to show "interest and bias." Objections by the people to each of such questions, as well as to a statement as to what facts were expected to be proved, and which statement was accepted as an "offer of proof," were sustained by the trial court. Thereafter, in the case in chief for defendants, both by attempted preliminary questions of the prosecuting witness, as well as by formal "offer of proof," defendants sought (but by order of the trial court were prevented from so doing) to introduce evidence affecting the "motives" of the prosecuting witness.

Among other things, section 1847 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that although a witness is presumed to speak the truth, such presumption may be repelled by evidence affecting his motives; and that the provisions of such statute are applicable to the facts of the instant case is attested by a long line of authorities appearing in 27 California Jurisprudence, p. 124 et seq.

The evidence of the guilt of defendants consisted almost entirely in the testimony of the Japanese truck driver to the effect as hereinbefore set forth. The defense consisted not only of a complete denial of the facts to which the prosecuting witness had testified, but also a well-supported alibi and considerable testimony by which the good reputation for honesty and integrity of each of the defendants was sought to be established. In such circumstances, the refusal of the trial court to permit defendants to show the motive which actuated the prosecuting witness in the premises may have been most prejudicial to the substantial rights of defendants.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

103 Cal. App. 105

LOS ANGELES SODA WORKS v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AQUAZONE CO.
et al. (Civ. 6249.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

Landlord and tenant Ⓒ200(2)—Agreement providing that after certain date rentals should be fixed, based on business which has been done, did not authorize court to fix rentals for unexpired term of lease (Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 3).

Agreement providing that after certain date rentals under lease should be fixed by a revised agreement, based on the business which has been done, held insufficient to authorize court to appraise and fix the value of the leased premises for the unexpired term, in view of Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 3, making unenforceable agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration, and that other considerations than payment of a monthly sum of rentals were to be performed by a lessee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Soda Works, a corporation, against the Southern California Aquazone Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis P. Boardman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Keeler, Fickert & French, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. Final judgment having been entered pursuant to an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint filed in this action without leave to amend, the plaintiff appealed.

Appellant alleged that on June 2, 1925, it became the sublessee of respondent Southern California Aquazone Company, a corporation, of premises belonging to the respondent F. G. Philipps, for a term extending until March 1, 1927, "and any renewal of the same," at the rental "specified in said lease"; that it entered and still had possession of the premises, and had performed all of the terms and conditions thereof; that the sublessor had declined to accept the monthly rental for June, 1926, demanding a larger amount than that tendered, or possession of the property. The plaintiff prayed that the court "appraise and fix as of June 2, 1926, the monthly rental of said leased premises and property for said unexpired term between June 2, 1926, and March 1, 1927, in fulfillment of the provisions of said lease." The facts pleaded are embodied in correspondence which, including the purported lease, is set forth in the complaint. The instrument in controversy consists of a letter, the material portions of which are as follows:

"Los Angeles, California, June 2, 1925.

"Mr. Frank R. Bray, Los Angeles Soda Works, 509 Commercial Street, Los Angeles, California. Dear Sir: This is to confirm the verbal understanding had between your company and the Southern California Aquazone Company in regard to your leasing this company's plant and equipment. * * * The understanding is that for the first year of our agreement, commencing June 1, 1925, you are to pay the rentals and perform the services hereinafter recited, with the understanding that at the end of this period a revised agreement will be made, based on the business which has been done, and which will cover the life of the lease & any renewal of same.

"For the first year you are to pay to F. G. Philipps, the lessee of the premises at 3408-10 South Main street, on the first of each and every month, one hundred and no/100 dollars ($100.00)."

On May 27, 1926, the respondent corporation, contending that since their contract had not been fulfilled in particulars immaterial to this decision, and "that at the end of such period a revised agreement was to be made," demanded a rental of $200 per month from and after June 1, 1926. Appellant replied that there was no foundation for the assumption that his lessor might arbitrarily fix the rent after the date last mentioned. It is contended by appellant that the contract constituted an agreement to arbitrate at the end of the first period as to the rental value of the premises, for the purposes of an extension, in aid of the main contract, which was a continuing one. His theory is best illustrated by quotation from Kaufmann v. Liggett, 209 Pa. 87, 58 A. 129, 134, 67 L. R. A. 353, 103 Am. St. Rep. 988, one of several authorities cited to the same rule in other jurisdictions:

"After a careful consideration of all the cases bearing upon the subject which have been brought to our attention, or which we have found, we are satisfied that the authorities well agree that equity will not compel an arbitration, and this upon the very good ground that the courts remain open to the parties, with better provisions for securing justice than are possessed by arbitrators, but that in cases of renewal leases the weight of authority clearly favors the view that the tenant in such a case has a quasi proprietorship—a right, lacking merely a valuation—and that the grossest inequity would be worked, should he lose his right through a failure upon the part of the arbitrators to fix a valuation."

It is argued therefrom that the same duty to appraise and fix the value of leased premises for a future or unexpired term lies with the courts of this state where the appraisement and fixing of rental is reserved by the contract. However, we think it unnecessary to further pursue this course of discussion, both for the reason that the contract contained no reference to an arbitration as to the rental value of the premises, which in any event would have been ineffective, and that it is too indefinite to enable a court of equity to specifically enforce it. Not only does the contract merely provide that after June 1, 1926, the rentals shall be fixed by a revised agreement, "based on the business which has been done," but subdivision 3 of section 3390 of our Civil Code denounces as unenforceable specifically "an agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration." Other considerations than the payment of a monthly sum of rental were to be performed by the lessee in the instant case. He agreed to manufacture all of certain specified waters for his lessor for which he would receive twenty cents per case, and to pay the running expenses of both parties to the lease, except that of keeping accounts of the lessor. What the parties might deem equitable as cash compensation for the use of the premises in addition to these concessions, cannot be conjectured, much less decided, judicially. We think the case falls within the rule expressed in Howard v. Burrow, 77 Cal. App. 4, 245 P. 808, 810, quoting with approval from 1 Williston on Contracts, § 45:

"Although a promise may be sufficiently definite when it contains an option given to the promisor or promisee, yet if something is reserved for the future agreement of both parties, the promise can give rise to no legal obligation until such future agreement. Since either party by the very terms of the promise may refuse to agree to anything to which the other party will agree, it is impossible for the law to affix any obligation to such a promise."

It is manifest that the complaint in this regard failed to state a cause of action, and that the demurrer was properly sustained.

The next point advanced by appellant is that, having remained in possession and performed the services specified after the expiration of the initial term, the relationship of landlord and tenant was continued, and that respondents were estopped to demand possession or to terminate the tenancy. It is sufficient answer to this contention that the complaint does not allege the facts relied upon but in fact avers that appellant elected to stand upon the original contract requiring an agreement between the parties as to future tenancy, the conditions of which had not been determined.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; BURNELL, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 113

BROWN v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF HAWTHORNE et al. (Civ. 6732.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 8, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1930.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨159(4)—Clerk's certificate, in absence of evidence, was conclusive on question whether person circulating petition for recall saw written signatures appended thereto (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963; St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, clerk's certificate was conclusive on question whether person circulating petition for recall of city councilmen "saw written signatures appended thereto," as required by St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended, where no evidence was offered on question, since uncontroverted presumption that city clerk regularly performed his duty and that law was obeyed would prevail.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨159(1)—Oath that signatures to petition for recall of councilmen "were signed in my presence" was tantamount to requirement that affiant state he saw them signed; "presence" (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended).

Oath that signatures to petition for recall of city councilmen "were signed in my presence" was tantamount to statutory requirement, under St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended, that affiant shall state that he saw them signed, since word "presence" means in a situation face to face with some person or persons; in view.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Presence.]

3. Officers ⇨70½—Statutes in aid of people's rights to determine removal should be liberally construed, and courts cannot interfere except on clear showing of violation of law (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended).

Statutes enacted in aid of rights reserved to people to determine whether or not their public servants shall be removed from office, such as St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, as amended, should be liberally construed, and courts cannot interfere except upon clear showing that law has been violated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. S. Baird, Judge pro tem.

Action by Benjamin F. Brown against the City Council of the City of Hawthorne and others, for a writ of mandate requiring the calling of a special recall election. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louis Greenbaum, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bonelli, Hughes & Miller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. A petition for the recall of appellants, who were three of the councilmen of the defendant city of Hawthorne, a city of the sixth class, was filed with the clerk of said council, who certified the same, and it was submitted to the council on March 11, 1929. No action having been taken thereon, the respondent petitioned the superior court of Los Angeles county for a writ of mandate requiring that a special election be called, which was granted, and this is an appeal from the judgment entered accordingly.

It is contended that the genuineness of the signatures upon the petition for a special election was not sufficiently established to require or justify action by the city council, and was not shown in accordance with the provisions of the statutes in the trial court. The findings are not questioned, except in this respect: The person who circulated the petition for a recall election appended his affidavit, reciting that "the signatures upon this sheet were signed in my presence and are genuine and that to the best of my knowledge and belief the persons signing were at the time of so signing qualified electors of said city and that their respective residences are correctly stated as set forth." By the Statutes of 1911, Ex. Sess. page 128, as amended, it is provided as follows: " * * * Each such separate paper shall have attached thereto an affidavit made by a qualified elector of the city or town (or particular subdivision thereof as the case may be) and sworn to before an officer competent to administer oaths, stating that the affiant circulated that particular paper and saw written the signatures appended thereto; and that according to the best information and belief of the affiant, each is the genuine signature of the person whose name purports to be thereunto subscribed, and of a qualified elector of the city or town (or particular subdivision thereof)."

Respondent alleged in his petition for a writ of mandate, and the court found, that the city clerk examined the petition for election, and that from an inspection of the records of registration he ascertained that the same was signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, that it was sufficient, and that he attached his certificate thereto, showing the result of said examination. The clerk testified that the petition which he identified in open court was the document in controversy, that it bore his certificate and signature, and that he presented the same to the city council.

[1-3] Appellants insist that there is no evidence tending to show that the person circulating the petition "saw written the signatures appended thereto," as required by statute or as alleged by petitioner herein. No evidence having been offered by appellants, the uncontroverted presumption that the city clerk regularly performed his duty, and that the law was obeyed in this regard, will prevail. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963. His certificate is conclusive. Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 173 P. 183. Hence the only remaining question of consequence is as to whether or not an oath that the signatures "were signed in my presence" is tantamount to the statutory requirement that the affiant shall state that he saw them signed. In Tucker v. Oxner, 12 Rich. (S. C.) 141, it was held upon the contest of a will that, while it did not sufficiently appear that the testatrix signed in the presence of the witness, the latter's attestation was legal if made while the testatrix stood in the doorway of a room wherein he signed his name. In the language of the court: "If she then stood at the door post she might have seen because she was 'within view,' which words have been held synonymous to 'in the presence.'" Funk and Wagnalls Dictionary defines "presence" as in a "situation face to face with some person or persons," "in view." Statutes enacted in aid of rights reserved to the people to determine whether or not their public servants shall be removed from office should be liberally construed, and the courts are not authorized to interfere except upon a clear showing that the law has been violated. Laam v. McLaren, 28 Cal. App. 632, 153 P. 985; Worth v. Downey, 74 Cal. App. 436, 241 P. 96.

The only other point attempted to be advanced by appellants is that the affidavit appended to the petition does not constitute legal evidence as prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure. However, since this affidavit is held to be sufficient in form within the meaning of the statute, and stands uncontradicted by any evidence whatever, it fulfills the purposes of the enactment. As to its admissibility in evidence, no objection was interposed below, and it was expressly stipulated that the question here principally discussed was appellants' only point.

The judgment is affirmed, and it is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue forthwith, as prayed.

We concur: IRA F. THOMPSON, J.; BURNELL, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 247

PEOPLE v. BRAHM. (Cr. 1858.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Jan. 17, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1930.

1. Criminal law ⇨274—After denial of motion to withdraw plea of guilty, leave may be granted on same facts more fully stated.

After denial of motion to withdraw plea of guilty and vacate judgment entered thereon, although leave to renew will rarely be granted unless it appears new state of facts has arisen since former hearing, leave may be granted in discretion of court on the same facts more fully stated.

2. Criminal law ⇨274—Denying permission to renew motion for withdrawal of plea of guilty rested in court's discretion.

Discretion rested with trial court to decide whether or not it would permit renewal of motion to withdraw plea of guilty and to vacate judgment.

3. Criminal law ⇨274—Denying second motion to withdraw plea of guilty to arson charge held not abuse of discretion, where only new facts were that defendant was in daze on night of fire.

Where motion to withdraw plea of guilty to charge of arson had been denied, trial court held not to have abused its discretion in denying second motion, where no new facts were presented other than two affidavits that on night of fire defendant was in daze and appeared to be out of her mind.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Alice Brahm pleaded guilty to a charge of the crime of arson. On appeal from an order denying a motion de novo for leave to withdraw a plea of guilty and to vacate the judgment entered pursuant to such plea. Affirmed.

Arthur Brigham Rose, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. The defendant and appellant was charged by information filed by the district attorney of Los Angeles county with the crime of arson. She pleaded guilty to the charge, and at her request was granted leave to make application for probation. After several continuances had been had of the hearing on the matter of probation, an order was finally made by which probation was denied and judgment was pronounced against her. Thereafter the defendant moved the trial court for leave to withdraw her plea of "guilty" and substitute therefor a plea of "not guilty," and at the same time moved the court to vacate the judgment. An order was made denying both of these motions, and an appeal was prosecuted in which the appellate court upheld the action of the trial court. People v. Brahm (Cal. App.) 277 P. 896. Subsequently, to wit, June 13, 1929, request was made upon the presiding judge of the superior court for further stay of proceedings and leave to present facts and evidence in support of a motion "de novo" for leave to withdraw the plea of guilty and to vacate the judgment. Said motion was argued, denied by the court, and this appeal is taken from the order denying said motion. A stay of execution was granted pending determination of this appeal.

Appellant in her brief maintains that the trial court refused to entertain the motion, for the reason that the matter was res adjudicata by virtue of the decision upon appeal from the order denying the first motion. An examination of the record discloses the fact that the trial court heard the motion upon its merits, but stated in denying it that no new matter had been presented which would justify a withdrawal of appellant's plea of guilty.

[1, 2] After a denial of such motion, "while leave to renew will rarely be granted unless it appears that a new state of facts has arisen since the former hearing * * * leave may, in the discretion of the court, be granted upon the same facts more fully stated." 18 Cal. Jur. p. 660. While appellant denominated the proceeding a motion "de novo," it was in effect a renewal of motion, and discretion rested with the court to decide whether or not it would permit such renewal.

[3] In support of the second motion, no new facts were presented other than two affidavits of officers of the Culver City police department to the effect that on the night of the alleged fire appellant was in a daze and appeared to be out of her mind. We are of the opinion that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in denying the motion here involved.

The order denying motion to vacate the judgment and withdraw plea of guilty is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

208 Cal. 694

LAYNE v. KIRBY. (S. F. 13065.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1930.

1. Libel and slander ⇨89(1)—Complaint alleging defendant wrote employer charging plaintiff with neglect of duty and inefficiency, if actionable, was actionable per se, making it unnecessary to allege special damage (Civ. Code, § 45).

Complaint alleging defendant wrote to Secretary of War a letter stating that plaintiff, chief clerk in district engineer's office, had outside business interests to which he devoted considerable of his time during office hours, in violation of government regulations, and generally charging him with neglect of duty and inefficiency, alleged matter having tendency to injure plaintiff in his occupation, and, if actionable under Civ. Code, § 45, was actionable per se, making it unnecessary for plaintiff to allege special damage.

2. Libel and slander ⇨45(1)—Complaint alleging defendant wrote letter to Secretary of War charging chief clerk in district engineer's office with inefficiency showed only qualified privilege (Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3).

Complaint alleging that defendant wrote letter to Secretary of War stating that plaintiff, chief clerk in district engineer's office, devoted considerable of his time during office hours to outside business interests and generally charging him with neglect of duty and inefficiency, if it showed privilege at all, showed only that publication was qualifiedly privileged, under Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3, relating to communication made to person interested therein.

3. Libel and slander ⇨93—Where complaint did not show communication was absolutely privileged, such privilege must be specially pleaded (Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 2).

Where it was not ascertainable from complaint that communication addressed by defendant to Secretary of War regarding plaintiff, chief clerk in district engineer's office, was intended to or did initiate an authorized proceeding for any purpose, so that communication would be absolutely privileged under Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 2, absolute privilege could not be successfully asserted by demurrer, but in such case privilege must be specially pleaded.

4. Libel and slander ⇨83—Where complaint shows only that libelous publication was made in communication to person interested, and malice is pleaded, plaintiff states cause of action (Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3).

Where complaint shows on its face no more than that libelous publication was made in communication to person interested, and malice is pleaded, plaintiff states cause of action, under Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Layne against Edmund Kirby for damages for libel. From a judgment entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 278 P. 1046.

John Ralph Wilson and Everette C. McKeage, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

George R. Andersen, of San Francisco, for respondent

SHENK, J. Appeal from a judgment entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint for libel. The plaintiff declined to amend, and the sole question is whether the complaint states a cause of action.

The complaint charges that on January 30, 1928, the defendant wrote and published of and concerning the plaintiff a certain letter, set out in full in the complaint, addressed to the Secretary of War at Washington, D. C. At that time the plaintiff was chief clerk in the office of the United States district engineer, First district, San Francisco, in which the defendant was and had been since about 1916 a subordinate clerk. Both the plaintiff and the defendant received their appointments from the Secretary of War. The letter shows that on December 21, 1927, the defendant was notified by the district engineer that, on account of a reduction in the force, he would be furloughed without pay effective January 31, 1928. From the correspondence which ensued between the defendant and his superior officers at San Francisco and at Washington, D. C., and which is included as a part of the publication, it is apparent that there had been friction between the plaintiff and the defendant in the district engineer's office since about 1921, and that the defendant believed that the plaintiff had been instrumental in effecting the defendant's furlough without pay in preference to more recently employed clerks. The letter to the Secretary of War in brief charged, among other matters, that "the chief clerk has outside business interests to which he devotes considerable of his time during office hours * * * in violation of government regulations"; that he took advantage of his immediate superior officer and used government property and time for his own private enterprises; that he "faked" or "fudged" statistical reports to the district engineer; that he knowingly allowed incorrect reports to be submitted; that he had been given a low rating on habits; and generally charged him with neglect of duty and inefficiency. The complaint also alleged that the designated portions of the letter claimed to be libelous "were and are false, defamatory and untrue and were known by said defendant to be false and untrue, and were wilfully and maliciously written and published of and concerning the plaintiff by said defendant for the purpose of injuring the reputation of said plaintiff in the eyes of his employer." The plaintiff did not allege special damages, but prayed for general damages only. The demurrer of the defendant was interposed principally on the grounds that the portions of the letter claimed to be defamatory, etc., were privileged under and by virtue of section 47 of the Civil Code, and that the statements were not actionable without allegations of special damage.

The appellant contends that the order sustaining the demurrer was erroneous, for the reasons that the alleged defamatory writing is actionable per se, and, if privileged at all, is only qualifiedly privileged under the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 47 of the Civil Code.

[1] We are of the opinion that both contentions must be sustained. Civil Code, § 45, defines libel as a "false and unprivileged publication by writing * * * which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." That the defamatory matter alleged in the complaint had a tendency to injure the plaintiff in his occupation and if actionable at all is actionable per se is supported by Stevens v. Snow, 191 Cal. 58, 214 P. 968, and Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 P. 290. It was not necessary, therefore, for the plaintiff to have alleged special damage.

[2-4] The complaint, if it shows privilege at all, shows only that the publication was qualifiedly privileged under the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 47 of the Civil Code. That subdivision provides that a publication is privileged when it is made "in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information." Section 47, subd. 2, provides that a privileged publication is one made "in any legislative or judicial proceeding, or in any other official proceeding authorized by law." But it is not ascertainable from the complaint that the communication addressed by the defendant to the Secretary of War was intended to or did in fact initiate an authorized proceeding for any purpose. If such indeed is the case—i. e., that the letter properly initiated a proceeding before the Secretary of War and the communication is claimed to be absolutely privileged by virtue of the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 47 of the Civil Code—that claim cannot be made nor the privilege be successfully asserted by demurrer when the complaint itself does not show such privilege. In such a case privilege must be specially pleaded. Stevens v. Snow, supra. Where, as here, the complaint shows on its face no more than that the libelous publication was made in a communication to a person interested, etc., and malice is pleaded, the plaintiff states a cause of action. The demurrer was improperly sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 676

DAVIS v. DAVIS. (S. F. 13681.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1930.

Divorce ⇐ 182—Defendant appealing from order in divorce suit denying change of venue could not have supersedeas to prevent enforcement of orders for alimony (Code Civ. Proc. § 942).

Defendant, on appeal from order denying change of venue in divorce suit brought against him by wife, held not entitled to writ of supersedeas to prevent enforcement pending determination of his appeal, of orders for payment to wife of alimony and counsel fees, since defendant had adequate remedy in superior court by appealing from judgment allowing alimony and filing bond in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 942.

In Bank.

Action by Myrtle Davis against John Charles Davis for divorce. Defendant appeals from an order denying change of venue, and applies for writ of supersedeas to prevent enforcement of orders for payment of alimony and counsel fees. Writ of supersedeas denied.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, and Maurice E. Gibson, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Robert E. Hatch, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an application for a writ of supersedeas. It is alleged that the plaintiff herein brought an action for divorce against the defendant in the superior court for the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, and that, in aid thereof, an order was issued temporarily restraining the defendant from disposing of his property; that defendant demanded a change of the place of trial to Los Angeles county, which motion was denied, and from which order defendant appealed. Later, it is alleged, the case proceeded to judgment, orders being made for the support by the defendant of his minor child and for the payment of alimony, costs, counsel fees, etc. It does not appear that any appeal was taken from the interlocutory judgment of divorce nor from any orders other than the order refusing to change the place of trial. It is also alleged that plaintiff is attempting to enforce the orders of the trial court for the payment of alimony, counsel fees, etc., by attachment and other means open to her, and defendant seeks this writ of supersedeas to prevent her from enforcing these orders in her favor until a determination of the appeal from the order denying his motion for change of place of trial.

Petitioner might have appealed from the judgment allowing plaintiff alimony, costs, etc., rendered in the divorce action, and might have filed a bond in accordance with the provisions of section 942, Code of Civil Procedure, and thus effected a stay of proceedings pending appeal. He is not entitled to relief in this court while he had an adequate remedy in the superior court by complying with the statutory requirements.

The writ prayed for is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

208 Cal. 652

BOWMAN v. MOTOR TRANSIT CO.
(L. A. 9764.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 13, 1930.

1. Negligence ⚡136(30)—Contributory negligence of plaintiff's husband, while driving automobile colliding with defendant's stage at intersection, held for jury.

In action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as result of collision of automobile in which she was riding with defendant's stage at street intersection, contributory negligence of plaintiff's husband, imputable to wife, held for jury, where there was credible testimony that he was an experienced and cautious driver and was at time in question proceeding with his usual due care.

2. Damages ⚡132(3)—$18,750 for injuries causing concussion of brain, nervous shock, impairment of mental powers, and permanent injury to eyesight, held not excessive.

Verdict assessing damages at $18,750, plus $326.90 expenses, for injuries to woman causing concussion of brain, severe bruising and laceration of head, nervous shock throughout her whole body, together with impairment of her mental powers and senses, and a serious and probably permanent injury to her eyesight, causing a change in her from an active, healthy, able, and mentally alert woman to one weakened, depressed, suffering mentally and physically, altered in disposition and mental power, and apparently permanently injured in health, held not excessive.

3. Evidence ⚡492—Permitting plaintiff's husband, driver of automobile colliding with stage, to testify regarding speed of stage, when 15 feet away, held not error.

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff in collision between automobile in which she was riding and defendant's stage, permitting plaintiff's husband, who was driving automobile, and who was not qualified as an expert on speed, to testify as to speed of stage, when it was 15 feet away from him held not error, since testimony was descriptive and did not purport to be expert opinion.

4. Evidence ⚡493—Plaintiff could testify regarding her changed mental condition, paralytic condition, and how her nervous system, eyesight, and other senses were affected by injury.

In action for damages for personal injuries, the court properly allowed plaintiff, who was unqualified as a medical expert, to testify as to her changed mental condition, and to state that she had paralytic condition on one side of her face, and to describe how her nervous system, eyesight, and other senses were affected, since such testimony was merely descriptive, and did not purport to be expert opinion.

5. Trial ⚡296(8)—Instruction that preponderance of evidence meant that evidence which produces conviction in unprejudiced mind of juror held not reversible error, in view of other instructions.

In instruction in effect that in civil cases affirmative of issue must be proved, and when evidence is contradictory decision must be made according to preponderance of evidence, and that by preponderance of evidence was meant weight of evidence, preponderance of probability, "or that evidence which produces conviction in the unprejudiced mind of the juror," quoted clause, added by court, held not reversible error, where other instructions bearing on same matter made it improbable that jurors could have been misled.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; H. G. Ames, Judge.

Action by Verna M. Bowman against the Motor Transit Company to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as the result of an automobile accident. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 279 P. 1014.

Kidd, Schell & Delamer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William L. Waters, of Fullerton, and Francis B. Cobb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. In this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff as the result of an automobile accident, the judgment is affirmed. We find that the record in this cause contains evidence amply sufficient to uphold the verdict and judgment, and that it is free from prejudicial error, both in the admission and rejection of testimony and in the giving and refusing of certain instructions. A résumé of the case follows:

At the time of the accident, plaintiff, in an Overland car driven by her husband, was proceeding in a southerly direction on Fullerton road, Orange county, towards its intersection with Central avenue. Defendant's stage was traveling west on Central avenue. At the northeast corner of the crossing a lemon orchard was so situated as to somewhat obscure the view at the intersection for drivers approaching it from the directions stated. As he entered the crossing, plaintiff's husband reduced the speed of his car to permit the passing of an automobile traveling east on Central avenue, but, proceeding slowly, he failed to see the approaching stage at his left until it was almost upon him; he then swung hard to the right in an effort to avoid it. The stage, however, continued swiftly toward him, catching his car by the front left fender. This caused the rear end to swing with great force against the side of the stage. The car then rebounded, and finally crashed to a standstill at the curb, with the back ripped from the front seat and husband and wife thrown unconscious in the rear. The stage stopped a short distance beyond.

Plaintiff did not regain consciousness for some days, due to severe bruising and laceration of the head, and concussion of the brain. She also suffered a nervous shock throughout her whole body, together with impairment of her mental powers and senses and a serious and probably permanent injury to her eyesight. The jury returned a verdict in her favor, assessing damages at $18,750, plus $326.90 expenses. They also returned two special verdicts, one to the effect that at said time defendant stage was being operated at a negligent rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour, and the other to the effect that defendant failed to keep a proper or careful outlook for the approach of plaintiff's auto and failed to yield it the right of way. The judgment for plaintiff followed, from which defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant complains of denial of its motion for a nonsuit, refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict in its favor, and denial of its motion for new trial. These several claims may be summed up and considered with its main contention of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment. The record contains an exhaustive survey, by both parties, of the somewhat conflicting evidence as to speed of the respective vehicles; condition of the intersection, conduct, and acts of the two drivers, together with their care or lack of care, and all other factors contributing to the collision. A detailed statement of these matters would not clarify the situation.

[1] As above stated, our review of the cause impels us to agree with the conclusion reached by the jury upon all the issues, including those of negligence and contributory negligence, and to state that both verdict and judgment are amply supported by competent and persuasive evidence. Neither is there necessity for a detailed discussion of the contention that plaintiff's husband was guilty of negligence, imputed to her, so indisputable as to constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law. The record affords no basis for this claim, especially in the light of credible testimony that he was an experienced and cautious driver and was at the time in question proceeding with his usual due care.

[2] The above remarks may also be applied to appellant's claim that the verdict was so grossly excessive as to amount to a miscarriage of justice and to necessitate reversal or substantial modification thereof. The record offers proof of an utter change in plaintiff as a result of her injuries from an active, healthy, able, and mentally alert woman to one weakened, depressed, suffering mentally and physically, altered in disposition and mental power, and apparently permanently injured in health by the shock to her nervous system, injuries to her brain, impairment of her vision, and at least temporary impairment of some of the other senses. The showing made, to our mind, clearly justifies an award of damages in the sum here named.

[3, 4] Appellant charges the court with errors in the admission of evidence in that it permitted plaintiff's husband, who was not qualified as an expert on speed, to testify as to the speed of the stage when it was 15 feet away from him, and allowed plaintiff, who was not qualified as a medical expert, to testify as to her changed mental condition, to state that she had a paralytic condition in one side of her face, and to describe how her nervous system, eyesight and other senses were affected. Two hypothetical questions propounded to plaintiff's expert medical witness are also criticized by appellant. We have examined carefully all assignments of error in this connection and find them to be without merit. The testimony offered by plaintiff and her husband was merely descriptive, and did not purport to be expert opinion. The hypothetical questions were included among other similar questions along the same line, and, even were their wording subject to the criticism made, such error would not be prejudicial under the circumstances shown by the record.

Lastly, we are asked to consider errors in the giving and refusing of certain instructions. The first concerns an instruction given at plaintiff's request, based on section 131, subdivision (a), of the Motor Vehicle Act (Act 5128, Deering's Cons. Supp. 1925-1927, p. 1537), which provides that, "when two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." We find no fault with the instruction, which was so worded as to place the instant situation before the jury in the terms of said statute, and charge them that, if they found from a preponderance of the evidence that the vehicles here involved approached said intersection in the manner therein stated, plaintiff had the right of way for the purpose of traversing it, and it was the duty of defendant's driver to yield it to her. Reading the entire charge to the jury, we do not find that said instruction is inconsistent or in conflict with later ones, nor do we find the existence of any reversible error whatsoever in any of the instructions given.

[5] Appellant requested the court to give the following instruction: "In civil cases the affirmative of the issue must be proved, and when the evidence is contradictory the decision must be made according to the preponderance of evidence. By preponderance of the evidence is meant the weight of the evidence, the preponderance of probability." The court gave the instruction, with the following clause added to it: "or that evidence which produces conviction in the unprejudiced mind of the juror."

Appellant, of course, does not challenge the accuracy of the instruction as requested by it, but severely criticizes said portion which was added by the court. That said clause was inaccurate and academically incorrect is beyond doubt. Instructions containing phrases similarly worded have been condemned in Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 629, 178 P. 510; People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 154 P. 468, and other cases. The phrase, however, was evidently intended to be used here in a sense synonymous with the word "preponderance," and in fact placed as great a burden upon plaintiff in proving negligence as it did upon appellant in proving contributory negligence. Furthermore, other instructions were given by the trial court bearing upon this very matter, and it seems improbable, if not impossible, that the jurors, in the light of the entire charge, could have been misled by said inaccuracy. In the recent case of East Bay Municipal Utility Dist. v. Kieffer (Cal. App.) 278 P. 476, this identical phrase was under consideration and, while deemed inaccurate academically, it was held not to constitute reversible error. Said holding is directly in point here, and to it reference is made for a fuller discussion of the issue, distinguishing the cases above mentioned and citing many other cases touching upon the subject. See, also, the following as authority for the ruling made: Estate of Guilbert, 46 Cal. App. 55, 57, 188 P. 807; Lawrence v. Goodwill, 44 Cal. App. 440, 450-454, 186 P. 781; Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Transit Rys., 182 Cal. 93, 103, 104, 187 P. 2; De La Torre v. Johnson, 203 Cal. 374, 378, 264 P. 485.

We find the record free from reversible error; hence our conclusion first announced.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 667

AMBASSADOR PETROLEUM CO. et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (L. A. 11962.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1930.

As Modified Feb. 10, 1930.

1. Parties $\S$ 51 (4)—Parties without whom complete determination of controversy cannot be had become necessary parties, and they must be brought in (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 389).

Where trial court finds, or record indisputably shows, that complete determination of controversy cannot be had without presence of other parties, such parties become necessary and indispensable parties, making Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 389, requiring court to bring them in, mandatory, and question becomes one of jurisdiction.

2. Prohibition $\S$ 32—If court proceeds without necessary parties prohibitory writ, "quousque" will issue (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 389).

If trial court assumes to proceed to determination of controversy without bringing in indispensable and necessary parties, as it is required to do under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 389, it may be subjected to prohibitory writ quousque; that is, until performance of certain act or happening of certain event.

3. Parties $\S$ 51 (4)—Generally, new parties defendant will not be brought in against will of plaintiff, unless presence is necessary to determination of action.

Generally, new parties defendant will not be brought in against will of plaintiff, unless presence of such new parties is necessary to determination of action.

4. Mines and minerals $\S$ 52—Lessors under oil and gas lease and trustee under lessee's trust deed held not necessary and indispensable parties to action to enjoin lessees from wasting natural gas (St. 1915, p. 1404, $\S\S$ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, $\S\S$ 9, 14; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 389).

Lessors of oil and gas wells and trustee under trust deed securing bond issue of one of lessees held not necessary and indispensable parties to action to enjoin unreasonable waste of natural gas by lessees operating oil and gas wells under St. 1915, p. 1404, §§ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, §§ 9, 14, required to be brought in under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, since, if parties violating statute are compelled to remedy abuses, complete determination of controversy is had as between parties before court.

5. Mines and minerals ☞52—Lessors' interest in increased production resulting in unreasonable waste of natural gas held not to make them necessary parties to action to enjoin waste (St. 1915, p. 1404, §§ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, §§ 9, 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

Interests of lessors under oil and gas leases to continuance of increased production, resulting in unreasonable waste of natural gas, held not such interest as to make them necessary and indispensable parties to action against lessees to enjoin waste under St. 1915, p. 1404, §§ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, §§ 9, 14, requiring them to be brought in under Code Civ. Proc. § 389.

6. Mines and minerals ☞52—Lessees under oil and gas lease defending suit to restrain waste of natural gas held in effect representatives of lessors, precluding bringing lessors in as necessary parties (St. 1915, p. 1404, §§ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, §§ 9, 14; Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

Lessees under oil and gas leases against whom action was brought to restrain unreasonable waste of natural gas under St. 1915, p. 1404, §§ 8b, 14b, as added by St. 1929, pp. 927, 930, §§ 9, 14, held in effect representatives of lessors in defending action, and therefore lessors are not necessary and indispensable parties requiring them to be brought in under Code Civ. Proc. § 389.

In Bank.

Original application by the Ambassador Petroleum Company and others for writ of prohibition directed to the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County and Hon. William Hazlett, Judge thereof. Alternative writ discharged, and preemptory writ denied.

Hunsaker, Britt & Cosgrove, Robert B. Murphey, and Wm. L. Murphey, all of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty Gen., and James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

Walter F. Haas, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ for Bell View Oil Syndicate.

Niel S. McCarthy, of Los Angeles, amici curiæ for Twin Bell Oil Syndicate and others.

PER CURIAM. Prohibition. On September 11, 1929, an action was commenced in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, entitled People of the State of California, on relation of Fred G. Stevenot, Director of Natural Resources of the State of California, v. Associated Oil Company et al., including among the defendants the petitioners herein. The purpose of the action was and is to enjoin the defendants therein, numbering 42 and more of the persons, firms, associations, and corporations operating oil and gas wells in the Santa Fé Springs area in said county, from the unreasonable waste of natural gas from the wells so operated by said defendants. It is alleged that 70,000,000 feet of natural gas is wasted daily in said area. Upon the filing of the complaint, the court issued an order directing the defendants to show cause at a specified time why a temporary injunction should not issue. The order to show cause came on regularly for hearing on October 14, 1929. In the meantime, on October 10th, the petitioners herein filed a demurrer to the complaint, and on October 14th they moved the court for an order requiring that some 165 of their lessors and a bank, trustee under a bond issue of one of the petitioners, be made parties defendant in the pending action. This motion was made on the ground that the lessors and the bank were necessary and indispensable parties; that a complete determination of the controversy could not be had without their presence in said action, and that, under section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was the duty of the court to order them in. After argument on this motion, the respondent court denied the same on October 18. On October 21 the present petition for a writ of prohibition was filed. An alternative writ was issued commanding the respondents herein to desist and refrain from taking any further proceedings based upon the allegations of the complaint in said action then pending in the respondent court, except to make an order bringing in some 33 parties specifically named in the alternative writ and making them parties in the pending action, and that the respondent court do not hear, determine, or conduct any proceedings therein until said named parties are brought in.

The pending action was commenced under the authority of a statute of this state enacted for the protection of the natural resources of petroleum and gas from waste and destruction through improper operations in production. St. 1915, p. 1404, as finally amended in 1929, St. 1929, p. 923. Section 8b of the act (as added by St. 1929 p. 927, § 9) declares that the "unreasonable waste of natural gas * * * is hereby declared to be opposed to the public interest and is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful." Section 14b (as added by St. 1929 p. 930, § 14) provides: "Whenever it appears to the director of the department of natural resources that the owners, lessors, lessees or operators of any well or wells producing oil and gas or oil or gas are causing or permitting an unreasonable waste of gas, he may institute, or have proceedings instituted, in the name of the people of the State of California, to enjoin such unreasonable waste of gas. * * * The owners, lessors, lessees or operators causing or permitting an unreasonable waste of gas in the same oil or gas field, although their properties and interests may be separately owned and their unreasonable waste separate and distinct, may be made parties to said action. * * * This statute was adopted as an emergency measure, effective immediately upon its approval by the governor on May 28, 1929, and recited as the reason for its urgency the fact that, at the time of the enactment of the statute, there were, in the oil and gas producing fields within the state, approximately 500,000,000 feet of gas daily blown into the air and wasted, and that new fields being opened up would increase the amount. The statute purports to provide reasonable regulations in the production and conservation of natural gas, to prevent the unreasonable waste thereof, and includes a plan for the assessment against oil and gas well operators of a sufficient amount annually to pay for such regulation and for inspection. The validity of the statute was questioned by certain of the defendants in the trial court, but its validity is not brought into question in the present proceeding. For the purposes of this proceeding, it will therefore be assumed that the statute is constitutional in all respects, and that it constitutes a valid enactment under the police power of the state. The only point now presented for determination is the contention of the petitioners that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in assuming to proceed with the hearing on the order to show cause why a temporary injunction should not issue without bringing in the alleged indispensable parties.

[1-3] It cannot be disputed that the respondent court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the cause pending before it and of the parties thereto, and to that end has the power to decide in the first instance all questions of law and fact properly involved in the case (United Security Bank & Trust Company v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 270 P. 184), subject, however, to the operation of section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the proceedings during the course of the hearing or trial. In so far as pertinent herein, that section provides: "The court may determine any controversy * * * before it, when it can be done without prejudice to the rights of others, or by saving their rights; but when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must then order them to be brought in." The meaning, scope, and effect of this section has been involved and declared in numerous cases in this state. Its application has, to some extent, resulted in an apparent but not real contradiction in terms. In Syverson v. Butler, 3 Cal. App. 345, 85 P. 164, 165, it was said that under this section "the power to order others brought into * * * is a discretionary one." In Solomon v. Redona, 52 Cal. App. 300, 198 P. 643, it was said that the requirements of the section are "mandatory." Both declarations are proper when applied to appropriate facts. Whether "a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties" may readily involve questions of fact as to which the discretion of the court might be exercised. But, when the trial court finds, or the record indisputably shows, that a "complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties," such parties become necessary and indispensable parties, and the section is mandatory, and the question then becomes one of jurisdiction in that the court may not proceed without bringing them in. If, nevertheless, it assumes to do so it may be subjected to the prohibitory writ quousque, that is to say, until the performance of a certain act, or the happening of a certain event. Carter v. Superior Court, 176 Cal. 752, 169 P. 667; Ash v. Superior Court, 33 Cal. App. 800, 166 P. 841. On the other hand, "the general rule is that the court will not order new parties defendant to be brought in against the will of the plaintiff, unless the presence of such new parties is necessary to the determination of the action." East Riverside, etc., Dist. v. Holcomb, 126 Cal. 315, 320, 58 P. 817, 818. Another statement of the rule is found in Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 P. 145, 147, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275, as follows: "It is the general rule in equity, continued in force by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 389, that all who are interested in the subject-matter of a litigation should be made parties thereto, in order that complete justice may be done, and that there may be a final determination of the rights of all parties interested in the subject-matter of the controversy." "The 'other parties' who may be brought in must be persons whose presence is essential to the complete determination of a controversy between parties who were already before the court." Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 571, 79 P. 171, 173.

[4] Applying the test announced in the last case cited, it cannot be doubted that a complete determination of the controversy before the court may be had with the presence of the present parties only. The pleadings on behalf of the state in the pending action conform generally to the allegations of the complaint filed by the Attorney General of Indiana in the leading case of Ohio Oil Company v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, 20 S. Ct. 576, 44 L. Ed. 729. The Indiana statute was upheld in an exhaustive treatment of the subject by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is true that the question of necessary or indispensable parties was not involved in that case, but it is significant that the state of Indiana was proceeding thereon against the operators of the gas wells who were the only persons transgressing the statute and as to whom obedience to its commands was sought by injunction. So here the state is proceeding only against those alleged to be violating the statute, viz., the operators of oil and gas wells, who are the only ones capable of altering the conditions which are alleged to be unlawful. If they only who are violating the statute are compelled by injunction to remedy the abuses, a complete determination of the controversy is had as between the parties before the court and constitutional requirements are to that extent satisfied.

Petitioners earnestly urge the other aspect of the equity rule codified in section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure as applicable to the present proceeding in their favor. It is alleged in their answer that they are operating such oil and gas wells under leases which require them diligently to prosecute the work of production under penalties of forfeiture of their rights thereunder for failure so to do, that their lessors are entitled to a percentage of the material produced, either in kind or in cash, and that, if they as lessees be compelled to conform to any program of conservation of gas imposed by the state, production will be diminished or destroyed with the consequent diminution of so-called royalties to the lessors. It is therefore argued that any order of injunction against the lessees either temporary or permanent will seriously result in prejudice to the rights of the lessors under their leases, and will further subject the petitioners to litigation against them prosecuted by the lessors based upon an alleged failure to prosecute production with due diligence. Wherefore, it is claimed, the lessors are indispensable parties defendant to the pending action. The rule invoked is expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank Co., 215 U. S. 33, at page 49, 30 S. Ct. 10, 14, 54 L. Ed. 80, as follows: "The relation of an indispensable party to the suit must be such that no decree can be entered in the case which will do justice between the parties actually before the court without injuriously affecting the rights of such absent party. 1 Street Fed. Eq. Pr. § 519. If the court can do justice to the parties before it without injuring absent persons, it will do so, and shape its relief in such a manner as to preserve the rights of the persons not before the court."

Many cases are cited by the petitioners wherein the court has found that certain absent parties were indispensable and has refused to proceed without their presence, or where the court has threatened to proceed in their absence and been prohibited from so doing until they are brought in. These cases need not be discussed in detail. Generally, it may be said that they involve disputes between private owners or lessees or rival claimants of oil or gas wells or property, or involve conflicting claims of the parties in their private capacities. When the action is one to enjoin the continuance of or to abate a nuisance, a different rule has been applied. For example, in the federal jurisdiction it has been held that the lessor is not a necessary party in actions to enjoin the use of real property for the unlawful purpose. Denapolis v. United States (C. C. A.) 3 F.(2d) 772; United States v. Lento (D. C.) 8 F.(2d) 432. On the other hand, the St. Louis Court of Appeals, in State v. Bandall, 220 Mo. App. 1222, 299 S. W. 155, held that the trial court committed reversible error in denying the motion of the Attorney General to bring in a co-owner of a defendant owner-lessor when it was discovered during the course of the trial that the absent co-owner had an interest in the property. In United States v. Gaffney (C. C. A.) 10 F.(2d) 694, 696, both the lessor and lessee were made parties. In the decision the court said: "In a certain sense the suit was against the nuisance, and such a suit must be (as was this one) against the owner of the fee, unless the nuisance be of such a nature that the owner's presence is not necessary to a complete determination of the controversy."

When the purpose and effect of the gas conservation statute of this state are considered, we are unable to say that the presence of the lessors in the pending action is necessary to a complete determination of the controversy. They are not charged with any violation of the law. The lessees have possession of the property and complete control of production operations, and, when coercive obedience to the state's program of conservation is enjoined upon them by appropriate court action, the controversy would seem to be fully determined.

[5] The contention of the petitioners to the effect that they will be subjected to actions on the part of their lessors to forfeit their leases, if they obey the injunctive regulations, based on the ground that the petitioners are not prosecuting the production of oil and gas with due diligence, is not persuasive. The leases contain the implied covenant that the lessees shall use the property lawfully. United States v. Gaffney, supra. The fact that the royalties of the lessors may be cut down by reason of regulations imposed upon the lessees would not result in any legal prejudice to their rights. If it be assumed that any temporary injunction or final judgment in the pending action may curtail production, such curtailment will be to the extent only that the operations of the petitioners constitute unlawful operations and a statutory nuisance.

The interests of the lessors will therefore be curtailed only to that extent. Their interest in the continuance of such a nuisance would not appear to be such an interest as the law contemplates should require them to be brought into the action. Whether they should be allowed to intervene on their own motion on the ground of interest or on a showing that the petitioners are not prosecuting a defense to said action in good faith are questions not involved in this proceeding. There is nothing in the record to convince us that the issues tendered and joined in the pending action may not as effectually be determined in the absence of the lessors as in their presence and without legal prejudice to them. This conclusion would apply equally to the trustee bank.

[6] It is suggested with much force by the respondents that the petitioners are operating said oil and gas wells under permission and authority granted them by their lessors, that the interests of both lessors and lessees in defeating the pending action are identical in so far as said action may result in a diminution of production, and that the petitioners are therefore the representatives of their lessors in defending said action. Certain it is that the interests of the parties so claimed to be represented and the interests of those before the court are not antagonistic. The statute permits the action to be prosecuted against all operators in the area as a class. The interests of the numerous lessors—in many instances the owners of small city lots in a single lease—are so inseparably bound up and identical with the interests of the lessees in the subject-matter of the action that both might well be deemed in the same class in the pending litigation. No violence would therefore be done to the doctrine of representation to hold that in defending said action the petitioners are representing their lessors.

The contention of the respondents that the present proceeding is premature is entitled to notice. The petition was filed and the alternative writ was served before the hearing on the order had developed. The respondent judge, in ruling on the motion, announced that at that time he was not satisfied that the lessors should be brought into the action, but that, if it should appear during the hearing that they should be brought in, a proper order to that end would be made. Notwithstanding this attitude on the part of the court, the present proceeding was commenced.

We conclude that the respondent court committed no abuse of discretion in denying the motion. It will therefore be justified in proceeding as it intends to do.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the petition for the preemptory writ is denied.

208 Cal. 688
PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.
(L. A. 11826.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1930.

Criminal law ⇨1001—Court could grant probation on manslaughter charge, although after commission thereof defendant was convicted of another offense committed prior to manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 367c, and § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493).

On May 21, 1928, motorist entered plea of guilty on charge of manslaughter arising from automobile collision on November 12, 1927. On November 16, 1927, four days after commission of manslaughter offense motorist was convicted of failing to stop and render aid on August 23, 1927, in violation of Pen. Code, § 367c. Motorist filed application for probation in manslaughter charge. Held, court had power to entertain and act on such application under Pen. Code, § 1203, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1493, for provision therein that probation should not be granted to any defendant unless court should be satisfied that he had never been previously convicted of felony applies to time of commission of offense, and not to time when application for probation was made.

In Bank.

Application by the People for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Imperial, A. C. Finney, Judge, to require enforcement of judgment. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion in 280 P. 203.

See, also, 284 P. 451.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for petitioner. Hickcox, Trude & Johnson, of El Centro, and Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for respondents.

R. B. Whitelaw and Utley & Nuffer, all of El Centro, for Salvadore Maggio.

SHENK, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent court and judge to enforce a judgment against the defendant Salvadore Maggio in an action (No. 1959) against him, charging manslaughter.

On the night of November 12, 1927, the defendant was returning in a truck to the Imperial Valley from Yuma, Ariz. About half-way between Yuma and Holtville the truck collided with a Ford car which had been left partly on the paved portion of the highway. The driver of the Ford car had stopped it at that place for the purpose of repairing a tube. The impact knocked the driver of the Ford car forward into another car which had stopped a few feet in front of the Ford car pending the tube repairs. From the injuries thus received the driver of the Ford car subsequently died, and Maggio was charged with manslaughter. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged in the information, and a new trial was granted on February 14, 1928. On May 21, 1928, the defendant appeared before the court, entered a plea of guilty as charged, and applied for probation. On June 1, 1928, he was sentenced to confinement in the state prison. The sentence was thereupon suspended and the defendant was placed on probation.

In another action in the same court (No. 1947) against this same defendant he was charged with a violation of section 367c of the Penal Code, so-called "failure to stop and render aid," etc., charge, committed on or about August 23, 1927. He was convicted in that action on November 16, 1927, four days after the commission of the manslaughter offense and the judgment of conviction was affirmed. People v. Maggio, 90 Cal. App. 683, 266 P. 813. The question is now presented whether it was within the power of the court to entertain and act upon an application for probation in the manslaughter charge in view of the fact that after the commission of that offense he was convicted on the so-called "failure to stop and render aid," etc., charge.

Section 1203 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1493), contains the provisions of the law under which application for and admission to probation were authorized in the action here involved. It is therein provided that after conviction or plea of guilty of a public offense, in cases where discretion is conferred on the court, the defendant may be placed on probation under the circumstances indicated in the section with the following proviso: "Further provided, however, that probation shall not be granted to any defendant who at the time of the perpetration of the crime or at the time of his arrest was armed with a deadly weapon (unless at the time he had a lawful right to carry the same) nor to one who used or attempted to use a deadly weapon in connection with the perpetration of the crime, nor to one who in the perpetration of the crime inflicted great bodily injury or torture, nor to any defendant unless the court shall be satisfied that he has never in any place been previously convicted of a felony. * * *

It is the contention of the petitioner herein that the word "previously" used in the clause last above quoted has reference to the time when the court is passing upon the application for probation. The respondents contend that the word "previously" has reference to the time of the commission of the offense, and that in any event the "second offense" rule laid down or approved in Re Tung Fong, 59 Cal. App. 499, 211 P. 32, and People v. Rose, 63 Cal. App. 762, 219 P. 1043, and kindred cases, should be applied. Those cases hold that in order to justify the heavier penalty the second offense must have been committed after conviction of the first.

There may be some analogy between the rule in "second offense" cases and in probation cases. In each the law imposes a more stringent penalty for the second offense. In the one case a more severe penalty is prescribed for the second violation of the same law. In probation cases a prior conviction of a felony in any place removes the defendant from the operation of the probation law and in so doing increases the penalty for the subsequent offense. The theory in both classes of cases is the same, in this, that the law as to both bears down more heavily on those who have failed to respond to the corrective purposes inherent in the prior conviction. But whatever the foregoing analogy may be, we find in the theory of the probation law itself, as expressed in the statute, a legislative intent in harmony with the respondents' contention. Under section 1203 the court must, if permission to apply for probation be not denied, refer the matter to the probation officer for investigation and report "upon the circumstances surrounding the crime and concerning the defendant and his prior record, which may be taken into consideration either in aggravation or mitigation of punishment." It is made the duty of the probation officer to "make an investigation of circumstances surrounding the crime and the prior record and history of the defendant," and report the same to the court. The "prior record" obviously means the record of the defendant before the commission of the offense of which he has been convicted and as to which he is making an application for probation. If it appear that he has suffered a prior conviction of a felony, that fact is in aggravation of punishment by removing him from the application of the probation law. If no such prior record appear, discretion is then vested in the court to determine whether there were mitigating circumstances requiring, or that the ends of justice would be subserved by granting, probation. The frequent reference in the section to the "circumstances surrounding the crime" and to the time of "the perpetration of the crime," together with the general theory and purposes of the probation law, indicate persuasively an intention to use the word "previously" as applying to the time of the commission of the offense and not to the time when the application for probation is being passed upon.

We are, of course, not to be taken as holding or intimating that the court may not, in the exercise of its discretion in passing upon an application for probation, take into consideration any fact or circumstance concerning the defendant, developed at any time prior to the court's final action on the application. Circumstances might arise after the commission of the offense or even after conviction which would render a probationary order inadvisable. We are here dealing with a question of power to entertain the application, and not with the discretionary exercise of that power.

The peremptory writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

208 Cal. 692

PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al.
(L. A. 11827.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1930.

1. Criminal law ⇨1001—Court held not shown to have abused its discretion in granting probation after affirmance of judgment of conviction on appeal (Pen. Code, § 367c).

Facts held not to show abuse of discretion on part of trial court in granting probation after affirmance of judgment of conviction of failing to stop and render aid in violation of Pen. Code, § 367c.

2. Criminal law ⇨1001—Application for probation may be granted after affirmance of judgment of conviction on appeal.

Trial court has power to hear and determine application for probation after affirmance of judgment of conviction on appeal.

In Bank.

Application by the People for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court in and for the County of Imperial and A. C. Finney, Judge. Writ denied.

Superseding opinion in 280 P. 202.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward W. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for petitioner.

Hickcox, Trude & Johnson, of El Centro, and Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for respondents.

R. B. Whitelaw and Utley & Nuffer, all of El Centro, for Salvatore Maggio.

SHENK, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent superior court and judge thereof to issue an appropriate order to put into effect a judgment heretofore rendered in said court in an action entitled People v. Salvatore Maggio (No. 1947). In said action the defendant was charged by information with the crime of failure to stop and render aid, etc., a felony (committed on or about August 23, 1927), as defined by section 367c of the Penal Code. Maggio was convicted on November 16, 1927, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison. He appealed from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The judgment and order were affirmed. People v. Maggio, 90 Cal. App. 683, 266 P. 813. Upon the going down of the remittitur, the respondent court, on May 31, 1928, made an order purporting to amend the judgment which had been thus affirmed, and on an appeal by the people from such order the same was reversed. People v. Maggio (Cal. App.) 274 P. 611. The remittitur on the second appeal was filed in the respondent court on February 24, 1929. Thereafter on March 15, 1929, the district attorney moved said court to direct that the commitment be issued and delivered to the sheriff for the purpose of enforcing the judgment. Concurrently, the defendant made an application for probation. The motion of the district attorney was denied and the application for probation was granted. On April 2, 1929, the petition in the present matter was filed, alleging that the superior court was without power to grant probation after the affirmance of the judgment of conviction on appeal.

[1, 2] The facts of the case, which need not be further recounted, show no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in granting probation, provided the court had the power to make the order. The question of the power of the court under present law to grant probation after the affirmance of a judgment of conviction was determined in the recent case of Lloyd v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 283 P. 931. It was there decided that the court has such power. On the authority of that case the petition for the issuance of the peremptory writ is denied.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

HOFFMAN v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY.★
(S. F. 13510.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1930.

Rehearing Granted Feb. 13, 1930.

1. Master and servant ⇨115(3)—Subcontractor held bound to lay and maintain plank flooring at second story for workmen's protection, though building had not yet reached higher elevation (St. 1921, p. 453, § 1(b)).

One contracting to erect steel frame of five-story building held bound by St. 1921, p. 453, § 1(b), to lay and maintain required plank flooring at second story for protection of workmen, though building had not reached elevation of "more than two stories"; statute applying to buildings which are to rise to more than such height.

2. Master and servant ☞352—Subcontractor held not guilty of "serious and willful misconduct" authorizing penalty in leaving spaces between second story temporary floor planks (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31 (b), and § 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376; St. 1921, p. 453, § 1(b)).

Subcontractor erecting steel frame of building held not guilty of "serious and willful misconduct," within Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), § 31(b), and section 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376, authorizing imposition of penalty on employer guilty thereof, in leaving spaces of 2 or 3 inches between planks forming temporary floor of second story, in violation of St. 1921, p. 453, § 1(b), where planks belonged to general contractor and were to be used later in forming joists and woodwork of upper stories and employee's injury was chiefly due to unknown hidden defect in plank, which broke under his and coemployee's combined weight.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Serious and Willful Misconduct.]

3. Master and servant ☞405(1)—Evidence held to show that subcontractor knew of statutory requirements as to plank flooring on second story of building for workmen's protection (St. 1921, pp. 453, 454, §§ 1(b)(c), 3, 4).

Evidence held sufficient to show that subcontractor, erecting steel frame of five-story building, was aware, in at least general way, of requirements of St. 1921, pp. 453, 454, §§ 1(b)(c), 3, 4, as to laying plank flooring on second and successive alternate stories of building for protection of workmen.

4. Master and servant ☞352—"Serious and willful misconduct," authorizing imposition of penalty on employer, means intentional doing of something with knowledge, or wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(b), and § 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376).

"Serious and willful misconduct," within Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), § 31(b), and section 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376, authorizing imposition of penalty on employer guilty thereof, is more than negligence, however gross, and means intentional doing of something with knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury, or wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences.

5. Master and servant ☞352—Whether employer's acts or omissions constitute serious and willful misconduct authorizing penalty depends on particular circumstances (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(b), and § 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376).

Whether employer's acts or omissions in violation of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) constitute "serious and willful misconduct" within section 31(b) and section 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376, authorizing imposition of penalty on employer guilty thereof, depends on circumstances of each particular case.

6. Master and servant ☞352—Statutory provisions authorizing imposition of penalty on employer for serious and willful misconduct must be strictly construed (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(b), and § 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376).

Penal provisions, such as those of Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 31(b), and section 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376, authorizing imposition of penalty on employer guilty of serious and willful misconduct, are to be strictly construed, and must not be so applied as to impose penalties without clear showing of such acts and conduct as evince, not only actual knowledge of law, but such intentional disobedience thereof as amounts to reckless disregard of employees' safety.

7. Master and servant ☞352—Subcontractor permitting plank flooring over wider space than statute allows without intermediate beams held not guilty of serious and willful misconduct authorizing penalty (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(b), and § 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376; St. 1921, p. 453, § 1(b)).

Steel framework contractor, causing or permitting plank flooring to be laid over portions of space more than 13 feet wide between beams without intermediate beams, in violation of St. 1921, c. 453, § 1(b), held not guilty of such serious and willful misconduct as to authorize imposition of penalty, in addition to compensatory award to employee injured when plank broke because of unknown hidden defect, under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), § 31(b), and section 6(b), as amended by St. 1923, p. 376.

Seawell, J., Waste, C. J., and Curtis, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Certiorari to the Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding by Paul Broschinsky, employee, for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, opposed by Leo Hoffman, employer, and his insurance carrier. Compensation with penalty for serious and willful misconduct was awarded by the Industrial Accident Commission of the Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, and the employer brings certiorari. Award annulled as to penalty.

Superseding opinion, 276 P. 1060.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, Frank J. Burke, and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner applied for a writ of review wherein he sought to have reviewed and annulled a decision of the Industrial Accident Commission, rendered upon the application of one Paul Broschinsky for an award against his employer, the petitioner herein, and the latter's insurance carrier, wherein, in making said award, the Industrial Accident Commission found that the petitioner, as the employer of Broschinsky, had been guilty of serious and willful misconduct with relation to the circumstances and conditions attending the injuries to the employee, and that, by reason thereof, the compensation payable upon said award should be increased 50 per cent.; the penalty thus imposed to be borne solely by the employer. It is the latter portion of the award imposing such penalty that the petitioner seeks to have annulled through the instant proceeding. The facts leading up to the accident which occasioned the employee's injuries are practically undisputed, and may be briefly stated as follows: The Golden Gate Iron Works had entered into a contract for the erection of a five-story steel frame apartment house at Palo Alto, Cal., and had sublet its contract for the erection of the steel frame portion of the building to Leo Hoffman, the petitioner herein. The building thus to be erected had no excavation under it, but was to rise from the ground level, and the work of its erection had so far progressed that the first and second stories of the steel structure had been erected and had risen to an elevation of about 20 feet, when it became necessary, in order that the further work of erection might proceed and also in order that the workmen engaged upon the portions of the building thus far constructed might be protected, that a temporary plank floor should be laid over the beams forming the framework of the second story. An inspection of the blueprints which show the detail of the structure discloses that the spaces between these beams, and which were to be covered by such flooring, varied in width from about 11 to about 16 feet. At the particular place where the accident occurred the span from center to center of the beams was 15 feet 2 inches. In order to lay such flooring, the usual arrangement was made between Hoffman and the general contractor by which the wooden floor joists which were eventually to be put in place upon the upper floors of the structure, and which consisted of pine boards 16 feet long, 12 inches wide, and 2 inches thick, were to be made use of by the subcontractor for the required temporary flooring, and, on the day before the accident in question, this planking had been hoisted and distributed along and across the beams in question to constitute said temporary flooring. This having been done, the employees of Hoffman, whose duty it was to distribute the columns which were to constitute the frame work for the third story, went about the performance of this work, and, while thus engaged, Broschinsky and another fellow laborer, one Jensen, happened to step upon the same plank at the same time, and, as they did so, the plank broke under their combined weight. Jensen succeeded in catching hold of a support and did not fall to the ground, but Broschinsky was not so fortunate, and he fell through the aperture caused by the broken plank to the ground, suffering the injuries which formed the basis of his claim for an award. The space which was occupied by the plank which thus broke was 15 feet and 2 inches from center to center of the beams upon which it had been laid, and its examination after the accident disclosed that it was a piece of timber which had been sawed immediately adjacent to a knot, so that the board thus produced, while apparently clear on one side, had the rings of the knot upon the other, and this constituted the weakness which caused it to break when the combined weight of the two men was placed upon it. This board had been placed in its position upon the temporary flooring with the knot side down, so that its defect was not visible either to those who laid the board or to the workmen whose combined weight caused it to give way.

[1, 2] The main award to the applicant, Broschinsky, is not disputed in the instant proceeding. The only question presented herein is as to whether the decision of the commission to the effect that the employer, Hoffman, was guilty of such serious and willful misconduct as would suffice to justify that portion of said decision which affixed the aforesaid penalty under the provisions of those sections of the Workmen's Compensation Law (section 6(b), St. 1917, p. 834, as amended by St. 1923, p. 376, and section 31(b), St. 1917, p. 860), which permit the imposition of such penalty shall be upheld. The serious and willful misconduct of which the petitioner herein was thus found guilty consisted in his alleged violation of the provisions of that certain statute enacted by the Legislature in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 452, et seq.), which purported to amend an earlier act requiring the placing of temporary floors in buildings of a certain height in course of construction. The original statute enacted in 1909 (St. 1909, p. 157) and amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1112) was made applicable to buildings more than three stories high while in course of construction, and by its later amendments, and particularly that adopted in 1921, was made applicable to buildings more than two stories high in the course of construction. By the terms of section 1, subdivisions (b) and (c) of its later amendment, it is provided that: "(b) If such building has a structural frame of iron or steel, the entire floor of every second story, except such space as may reasonably be required for the proper construction of such building, shall be thoroughly covered with planks tightly laid together, so that workmen shall have at all times planked floors within two stories below them. (c) If a span of a floor exceeds thirteen (13) feet, an intermediate beam shall be used to support the temporary flooring; provided, however, that spans not to exceed sixteen (16) feet may be covered by three (3) inch planks without such beam. Such intermediate beam shall be of a sufficient strength to sustain a live load of fifty (50) pounds per square foot of the area supported." By sections 3 and 4 of said act it is further provided as follows: "Sec. 3. Planked floors shall consist of planks tightly laid together of number one common lumber, not less than two inches thick and eight inches wide, free from protruding nails or other objects," etc. "Sec. 4. No owner, agent of the owner, general contractor, contractor, subcontractor, or other person shall proceed with any work assigned to or undertaken by him, or require or permit any other person to proceed with work assigned to or undertaken by either, unless the planking or nets required by this act are in place. Violation of this section shall constitute a misdemeanor."

During the hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, evidence was introduced to the effect that from time to time the commission had issued certain safety orders based upon the provisions of the foregoing statute containing more definite directions as to how the temporary flooring required by the terms of said statute should be laid, and there was also some evidence to the effect that these orders had been posted upon some of the buildings which were being erected by the Golden Gate Iron Works, but there was no evidence that the petitioner herein had been engaged in the work of erecting any of said buildings, nor that he had ever seen or heard of such orders or the contents thereof. No such orders had been posted upon the building in question; but there was some evidence to the effect that some three or four months prior to the accident, while erecting another building, the attention of Hoffman had been drawn by an agent of the commission to the fact that he was violating the provisions of the statute of 1921 above quoted.

It is the contention of the petitioner herein that at the time of the accident and in the state of construction to which the building had progressed he was not violating in any manner the provisions or requirements of said statute. His contention in this respect is based upon his interpretation of the terms of said amended statute which are embraced in section 1 thereof, and which provides in part as follows: "Any building more than two stories high in the course of construction shall have the joists, beams or girders of floors below the floor or level where any work is being done, or about to be done, covered with flooring laid close together, or with such other suitable material as will protect workmen engaged in such building from falling through joists or girders, and from falling planks, bricks, rivets, tools, or any other substance, whereby life and limb are endangered." It is the petitioner's contention that, since the building wherein the accident occurred had not at the time thereof reached an elevation of "more than two stories," it was not subject to the requirements of said statute with relation to the laying of a temporary floor, and hence that, at the time said floor was laid, or in the manner of the laying thereof, the petitioner was not violating the provisions of said amended statute. We do not deem this contention to be meritorious, in view of the manifest purposes and express provisions of said statute. We are of the opinion that it was intended, and manifestly intended, to have application to buildings which were in the course of their construction to rise to a height exceeding two stories, and to provide that in all such structures the temporary flooring designated by its terms should be laid at every second story of such proposed building, and hence that the petitioner herein was bound under the compulsions of said amended statute to lay and maintain in place at the second story of said structure the flooring of planks which the provisions of the act required. It is obvious that the petitioner herein so interpreted the terms of said act in so far as he was familiar with the same when he caused to be laid the flooring in question.

During the hearing before the commission some evidence was introduced bearing upon the question as to whether in laying such flooring the petitioner had sufficiently complied with the provisions of the subdivisions of the act above quoted, which required that the space to be occupied by such flooring "shall be thoroughly covered with planks tightly laid together, so that workmen shall have at all times planked floors within two stories below them." § 1(b). The evidence touching this subject indicated that in laying said planks the petitioner herein, or his workmen, had not closely followed the foregoing requirement, but that spaces amounting to 2 or 3 inches had been left between the planks, and that the existence of these spaces was due to the fact that, in order to avoid their presence, it would have been necessary to saw such spaces in said planks as would enable them to fit closely together. But in this regard the evidence disclosed that the planks in question were not the property of the petitioner herein, but that they belonged to the original contractor, and were to be used later on in forming joists and woodwork of the upper stories. It would seem, therefore, that whatever omission there may have been on the part of the petitioner to comply strictly with the foregoing requirement of the statute could hardly be held to be serious and willful misconduct on his part, especially in view of the fact that the accident in question was not due in any respect to the fact that the planks had not been laid closely together, but was chiefly due to the fact that the particular plank which broke under the combined weight of his two employees was defective in the respect above indicated, since the undisputed evidence before the commission disclosed that, had the plank in question been sound, it would have supported the weight of the two men, notwithstanding the fact that the space over which it was laid exceeded by about 2 feet the span of 13 feet designated in the act, and which requires an intermediate supporting beam under such temporary flooring when the span over which the same is laid exceeds 13 feet. In connection with the foregoing fact, the further fact should be noted that the undisputed evidence before the commission disclosed the defect and consequent weakness of the particular piece of planking which broke under the combined weight of the petitioner's employees was not known either to himself or to them, and that this was due to the circumstance that such defect was only observable upon the under side of said piece of planking, and that, so far as the upper side thereof disclosed, it was apparently as sound as the other pieces of planking which composed such temporary flooring.

[3-7] We are thus brought to consider the question as to whether such further evidence as we shall find to have been presented before the commission relating to petitioner's alleged violation of the requirements of said statute was such as to furnish a sufficient basis for the finding of the commission that the petitioner was guilty of "serious and willful misconduct" under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It was sufficiently shown in evidence before the commission that the petitioner herein was aware, in at least a general way, of the provisions and the requirements of the act of 1921 having relation to the laying down of plank flooring upon the second and successive alternate stories of such a building as was in this instance being erected. It is not necessary for the respondents herein to rely upon the presumption that all persons know the law, since it appears not only that the petitioner had upon a previous occasion had his attention called to his violation of certain other provisions of said act, but that, as to the particular provisions thereof which require the laying down of such plank flooring in such a structure, the petitioner showed by his compliance in the particular instance with the general terms of said act that he was familiar with its provisions. The undisputed evidence shows that the petitioner did put down such flooring, comprised of planking which was even larger in width and hence stronger in sustaining quality than the terms of the act require. His only non-compliance with the provisions of said act, upon the basis of which the respondents herein can sustain the charge of serious and willful misconduct on the part of the petitioner, consisted in the fact that he caused or permitted such flooring to be laid over portions of the space to be covered thereby, wherein the distance between the beams which were to support said flooring was in excess of 13 feet, without an intermediate beam sufficient to support such temporary flooring where the span was in excess of 13 feet. It may not be questioned that the omission of the petitioner to support this particular part of said flooring with an intermediate beam would have been such an act of negligence upon his part as would have amply sufficed to sustain the finding of the commission with respect to a compensatory award, but whether or not such omission would in and of itself be sufficient to justify a finding that the petitioner was thereby guilty of such serious and willful misconduct as would support the added award of the penalty complained of is the question which we are thus brought to the point of deciding. This court has had occasion in certain earlier cases to discuss and define the meaning of the phrase "serious and willful misconduct" as the same is used in the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act here under review.

In the case of E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Cal. 180, 188, 193 P. 105, 108, 16 A. L. R. 611, this court, in undertaking to define these terms, adopted the view expressed by Beven in his treatise on "Workmen's Compensation," at page 394 et seq., to the effect that "to constitute 'serious misconduct,' it is probable that the Legislature intended to signify conduct that an average workman in being guilty of either would know, or ought to know, if he turned his mind to consider the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize his own and his fellow workman's safety." "In our opinion," says this court, "the serious misconduct of an employer under our statute may be similarly defined. There should be no difference in principle between the degree of care required of an employer and that exacted from an employee 'Serious misconduct' of an employer must therefore be taken to mean conduct which the employer either knew, or ought to have known, if he had turned his mind to the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize the safety of his employees." The court in that case having found that the employer, in providing places and conditions of the employment which were patently unsafe, was guilty of "serious misconduct," proceeded to discuss the question as to whether such serious misconduct was "willful," and in so doing the court said: "It has frequently been said that willful misconduct involves the knowledge of the person that the thing which he is doing is wrong. (Citing cases.) Conceding that knowledge is required, it seems to us that in order to prove the requisite knowledge, it is not necessary for the evidence to show positively that the person was notified of the unsafe condition of his premises, but that it is sufficient if it appears that the circumstances surrounding the act of commission or omission are such as 'evinced a reckless disregard for the safety of others, and a willfulness to inflict the injury complained of.'"

In Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal. App. 416, 421, 185 P. 510, 512, it is said: "'Willful misconduct' means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. The term 'serious and willful misconduct' is described by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts as being something 'much more than mere negligence, or even gross or culpable negligence,' and as involving 'conduct of a quasi criminal nature, the intentional doing of something either with the knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences.'" (Citing In re Burns, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787.) The mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not, alone willful misconduct. It amounts only to simple negligence. To constitute 'willful misconduct' there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury. Smith v. Central, etc., Ry. Co., 165 Ala. 407, 51 So. 792." In denying a rehearing in the above case, this court reserved its opinion on the question as to "whether every failure to comply with a requirement of the Industrial Accident Commission or the statute is necessarily gross negligence or willful misconduct. On these questions we reserve expression of opinion."

Upon a maturer consideration of this question, we are satisfied that the foregoing quotation from the case of Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., supra, furnishes a correct interpretation of the meaning to be given to the terms "serious and willful misconduct" as the same are used in the Workmen's Compensation Act. The question as to whether the acts or omissions of the employer in violation of the requirements of the Workmen's Compensation Act constitute serious and willful misconduct depends upon the circumstances of each particular case. In that connection it may be stated as a sound principle to be applied to penal provisions of the nature of that here under review that such provisions are to be strictly construed and are not to be given application so as to impose penalties upon employers who are otherwise subject to the compensatory remedies provided for in the Workmen's Compensation Act, without a clear showing before the commission of such acts and conduct on the employers' part as evince not only actual knowledge of the law, but such an intentional disobedience thereof as would amount to a reckless disregard of the safety of their employees. We are unable to find in the facts of this particular case such a sufficient showing of willful and intentional disregard of the safety of his employees as would suffice to justify the findings and conclusion of the commission that the petitioner was guilty of such serious and willful misconduct as to bring him within the penalty prescribed by the Workmen's Compensation Act and imposed upon him in this particular case.

The award of the commission, in so far as it undertakes to impose such penalty, is therefore hereby annulled.

We concur: LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.

SEAWELL, J. I dissent. I am of the view that the award made by the Industrial Accident Commission on the issue of willful misconduct should not be annulled.

The petitioner failed to comply with the statute prescribing the duties of contractors constructing buildings more than two stories in height. The floor supports were at a greater distance by 2 feet than permitted by statute. The statutory distance of such supports is doubtless founded upon building experience. While a greater distance than that fixed by the statute, to wit, 13 feet, may in a great majority of cases prove safe for workmen, experience proves that a shorter distance makes for better safety, and correspondingly minimizes the hazards resulting from injuries inflicted by the breaking of the boards which may be weakened by such imperfections as seemed to have been the immediate cause of the workman's injuries. It is common knowledge that the most serious and common defect in the carrying strength of lumber is made by the intersection of the branches with the trunks of trees, commonly called knots. It is a defect reckoned with by owners and builders, and the presence or absence of knots in lumber determines its classification. The knot in the instant case is said to have been on the under side of the board. But some one handled it and saw or ought to have seen danger in its use. Willful negligence is a relative term. If the board upon which the workmen are required to do their work is of such height that death or injury will surely ensue should the board break, surely some degree of care in its selection should be exercised by the person responsible for its placement. A patent defect, such as a knot causes, ought, it would seem, to be seen upon a casual inspection. The seriousness of the injury that will probably result to the workman from a failure or refusal to comply with safety devices or measures is to be considered in determining whether an employer is guilty of serious and willful misconduct. Such conduct has some relevancy to the perils of the situation.

The object of the statute is not solely to award compensation for injuries received, but also by its rather drastic penalties to prevent Injuries and deaths which in a wider sense are noncompensable. It was also intended to have a preventive effect.

Had the plain provisions of the law been complied with, there is reasonable probability that the injuries would not have been inflicted. No sufficient reason appears for excusing its violation.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.

103 Cal. App. 367

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY v. GATE CITY CREAMERY CO. (Civ. 50.)★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

Contracts ¶131 — Subscription undertaking to pay specified sum toward purchase of designated site for county courthouse held not invalid as being against public policy.

Subscription contract undertaking to pay to board of supervisors of county contribution of $2,000 for purchase of designated site for county courthouse held not invalid as being against public policy, where no personal benefit or advantage was offered or accrued to any member of board, especially in view of Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 6, and § 4062a, recognizing and authorizing acceptance of private contribution in aid of public enterprises.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by the County of San Bernardino against the Gate City Creamery Company. From a judgment dismissing action, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

George H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., and M. O. Hert, both of San Bernardino, for appellant. Walter E. Byrne, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. This appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the state of California and thereafter transferred to the Fourth District Court of Appeal, upon a judgment of dismissal of plaintiff's action, after demurrer sustained to second amended complaint and failure of plaintiff to amend.

The action was brought by the county of San Bernardino to recover from the defendant, Gate City Creamery Company, a corporation, a balance of $1,800 alleged to be due and owing upon a subscription contract, whereby the defendant had undertaken and agreed to pay a contribution of $2,000 toward the purchase of a site for the county courthouse.

The subscription agreement was executed by the defendant and a number of other citizens and taxpayers of San Bernardino for the payment of various individual amounts, and is in words and figures as follows:

"January 12, 1925.

"We, the undersigned citizens and taxpayers of San Bernardino County, promise to pay to the Board of Supervisors on demand, the sums placed opposite our names, provided said sum is to be used for the purchase of ground situate on Third and Arrowhead Streets, comprising six hundred feet on Arrowhead Avenue to a depth of three hundred feet, said land to be purchased by the Board of Supervisors, if possible, and to be condemned, if necessary. The purchase price of the entire property is not expected to exceed Seventy-five thousand dollars, the salvage of the houses thereon to go toward the purchase of said property, and to be deducted from the total of Seventy-five thousand dollars. The Board of Supervisors is to agree to use this property for the purpose of erecting thereon the County courthouse and other buildings which are necessary, such as jail, hall of records, etc. In the event that a bond issue for the Court House should fail, this agreement is to be null and void, unless the Board of Supervisors decide to build the County Court House and other county buildings on said property by direct taxation. In such case, the undersigned agree to furnish the same (designated below) amount of money ($75,000.00) as per their respective signatures. The undersigned also agree to pay the cost of all condemnation proceedings on any property that can not be bought outright."

The courthouse site designated in this agreement was accepted and purchased by the board of supervisors and the county courthouse constructed thereon. Defendant paid $200 upon its subscription contract, and having refused to pay any further amount this action was brought to collect the unpaid balance. The second amended complaint alleges:

"V. That after the execution of the agreement herein set out, the plaintiff herein, relying upon the promises of the defendant and of the various persons signing said agreement, and agreeing to contribute money toward the buying of said site for said buildings, bought the said site and said lands for said purpose, and proceeded to, and has constructed thereon the buildings mentioned and designated in said agreement, and said buildings are completed and are now occupied by the officers and governmental agencies of plaintiff herein and by the Superior Courts of the State of California, in and for the County of San Bernardino and the various other agents of said plaintiff. * * *

"VII. That by reason of the subscription of the said defendant hereinbefore referred to, and by reason of the said plaintiff relying thereon and acting as hereinbefore alleged in good faith upon said subscription, and by reason of the payment by said defendant of the said sum of two hundred dollars to apply thereon, the said defendant is, and should be estopped from denying the validity of said subscription agreement and is and should be estopped from denying and refusing to pay the remainder of said subscription so made."

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

This amended complaint was demurred to on the ground that the same "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendant."

The defense relied upon by defendant to avoid the obligation of this agreement is that the contract is void and unenforceable, "is against public policy and illegal, in that it has a tendency to influence the board of supervisors in the discharge of their official duty by trammeling their judgment in the matter of a selection of a courthouse site in which the board should have been left free to act as the public interest alone may dictate or require."

It is conceded and indeed affirmatively alleged in the complaint that the board of supervisors, in selecting the site for the courthouse, was influenced in making such selection, by these stipulated contributions to the purchase price. The sole question to be considered is as to whether or not the acceptance and consideration of such contributions is, in the state of California, against public policy.

It may be conceded, as set out in respondent's brief, that "subscription contracts to acquire particular sites and to erect thereon public buildings are of three classes:

"(1). To the first class belong all such contracts which are authorized by statute; and as each state has a right to determine its own questions of public policy, contracts so authorized are not illegal.

"(2). To the second class belong all such contracts where the location and selection of the site is determined by the votes at an election held for that purpose;" it being the law that the influence of such agreements upon the electors themselves is not against public policy.

(3). To the third class belong all such contracts where the contract is not expressly authorized by the statute, or the selection of the site determined by a popular vote, but where the location sought to be influenced by the subscription is left solely to the judgment of the administrative officers, who are elected by the people to exercise their judgment and determination for the best interests of the entire community, freely and unhampered, and without undue influence.

The case at bar belongs either to the first or third of these classifications. If it can be held that the Legislature of the state of California has authorized the consideration and acceptance of this class of subscriptions, it will be unnecessary to go further into the discussion of this case.

In enumerating the powers of boards of supervisors, subdivision 6 of section 4041 of the Political Code includes the power "to purchase, receive by donation, lease or otherwise acquire water rights, or real or personal property necessary for the use of the county, for a courthouse, jail, hospital * * * and other public purposes, and also property upon which to sink wells to obtain water for sprinkling roads and other county purposes, and to improve, preserve, take care of, manage and control the same."

Section 4052a of the Political Code provides that: "The board of supervisors are hereby authorized to accept or reject, as they may deem advisable, any gift, bequest, or devise heretofore, or that hereafter may be made to or in favor of the county represented by such board in their official capacity, or to or in their favor in trust for any public purpose, and to hold and dispose of the same, and the income and increase thereof to and for such lawful uses and purposes as have been or may hereafter be prescribed in the terms of such gift, bequest or devise."

It is contended by respondent that the subscription which is the subject matter of the present case is not a gift or donation; that it is merely a conditional promise to contribute to the county of San Bernardino the specified sum of money in consideration of the location of the county courthouse at a designated place. It certainly does not come within the legal definition of a gift. Section 1146 of the Civil Code defines a gift as "a transfer of personal property made voluntarily, and without consideration." The instrument in question certainly does not transfer any property or thing, and the promise to do so is not absolute, and is for an express consideration which imports something of value to be received by the donor.

There is reason to assume, however, that contributions of this character to the public use were intended by the Legislature to come within the provisions of the sections of the statutes above quoted. The use of the words in section 4052a of the Political Code "in trust for any public purpose, and to hold and dispose of the same, and the income and increase thereof to and for such lawful uses and purposes as have been or may hereafter be prescribed in the terms of such gift, bequest or devise," would seem to indicate transactions specifying some particular use and application of the gift directing and restricting the dominion of the public over it to that specific purpose. What may be said to be the almost universal accompaniment of such contributions to the public gives further force to the language of the Legislature as being intended to apply to subscriptions of the character here under consideration. It rarely happens that such subscriptions to public buildings are not conditioned upon the choice of some specified location. As is said by the supreme court of Ohio, in the case of Commissioners of Canal Fund v. Perry, 5 Ohio, 56, an action on a contract to subscribe to the location of a canal:

"We think the common usual method of doing such things was in the contemplation of the law, the obtaining a promise to give or convey, at an agreed time, upon whatever condition the giver chose to impose, and the obtaining written evidence of the undertaking. One proposes to give one thousand dollars in a year, if the canal goes through his land. The construction contended for by the defendant's counsel, would deprive the state of power to avail itself of aid under such a condition. We are unable to perceive any sound reason against the making a valid contract, under the law, to pay on the happening of the condition."

Whether or not the above code citations may be construed as empowering the board of supervisors to accept and take into consideration a subscription of this kind, they obviously have their bearing upon the question of public policy in this state. They recognize and authorize the acceptance of private contributions in aid of public enterprises, and the fact that legislative sanction or acceptance of such contributions by popular vote removes the ban of corrupting and undue influence requires only an additional step to sanction such considerations on the part of other representatives of the public interest.

"We do not deem it necessary, however, to go to the extent of holding that there is express authority in these code provisions for accepting and considering a subscription of this character in the selection of a site for a public building. Considering the liability created by such a subscription purely on the grounds of public policy, we think that the weight of reasoning and authority is against the contention of respondent. The principle applicable to the definition of the term is well expressed and generally accepted as set forth in 6 California Jurisprudence, at page 109 et seq.: "Public policy is a term of vague and uncertain meaning, and it has been said that few cases can arise in which its application may not be disputed. The term has not been precisely defined by the courts, but has been left loose and free of definition in the same manner as fraud. The authorities all agree, however, that a contract is not void as against public policy, unless it is injurious to the interests of the public or contravenes some established interest of society. Fundamentally it pertains to the law-making power to declare what contracts are against public policy. The policy of the state can be ascertained only by reference to the constitution and laws passed under it, or which is the same thing, to the principles underlying and recognized by the constitution and laws. Courts are apt to encroach upon the domain of the law-making branch of the government if they characterize a transaction as invalid because contrary to public policy, unless the transaction contravenes some positive statute or some well established rule of law."

It will be conceded that any influence brought to bear upon a public board or official which has the evil tendency to influence such officer or board in the discharge of its public duty by trammeling the judgment in matters about which these public representatives should be left free to act as the public interests alone may dictate or require, is against public policy, and if such vitiating element is present and has that tendency in the eyes of the law, it makes no difference what the actual motive of the public officials in the particular instance may be. But is such a tendency present or apparent in the case in question? Here is a condition where the board of supervisors of San Bernardino county is called upon to select and procure a site for a county courthouse. In this, as in every such determination, one of the important considerations to be taken into account is the cost to the public. Other things being equal, it would clearly be the duty of the board to select the site which could be obtained at the least expense to the public. Of two locations offered, otherwise equally desirable, one at the full market value of the property, and the other as a donation, irrespective of the fact that the motive for the gift might be a selfish and self-serving one, it would be clearly the right and duty of the official body to accept the offered donation. What difference in principle is involved if a part or if the whole of the cost of a building site is tendered by a subscription from individuals who expect a profit by a location.

We have examined each of the numerous authorities cited by counsel in this case and find that in most of the decisions where the location of a public building has been influenced by private contributions to the cost, and the transaction held to be against public policy, the circumstances have been such that the contribution offered or suggested some personal gain or benefit to the officials having the decision in hand.

In the case of Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 336, 83 Am. Dec. 69, cited by respondent, the question of the location of a postoffice was involved, and the offer of financial aid inured directly to the postmaster. In holding this agreement against public policy, the decision recites: "It is said that this particular contract is not against public policy, because in fact the place selected was suitable and convenient for the public use. The question of the validity of the contract does not, however, depend upon the circumstance, whether it can be shown that the public has in fact suffered any detriment, but whether the contract is in its nature such as might have been injurious to the public, and which public policy requires should not be made by public officers in regard to the discharge of their duties. Upon this point the case of Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 472, is pertinent. In that case, it appears that Fuller was a stockholder in the Boston and Worcester Railroad Corporation, and for a consideration he agreed to use his influence in procuring that corporation to locate its depot at a particular place in Boston, it being expressed in the agreement that Fuller was of the opinion that the road ought, from a view to the public good and the good of the stockholders, to locate its depot at that place. The contract was held to be void on the ground that the road was established for the public accommodation, although a private corporation, and that the public had an interest in the question of the location of the depot, and that though the contract was not made to induce a party to do an unlawful act, it put him under an influence to do that which might injuriously affect the interests of the public. * * * 'Nor is it any satisfactory answer to say that when the agreement was entered into, he had come to the opinion that the location in question was the best for the interests of the public and for the interests of the corporation. That opinion might be changed by new views and new offers; and besides, the terms upon which this boon was to be obtained, was still an open question. But upon all these questions the influence of the promise of separate and distinct advantage deprived him of the power of exercising a free, disinterested, and unbiased judgment.'

A similar distinction is pointed out in many of the cited cases. In the present case no personal benefit or advantage was offered or accruing to any member of the board of supervisors. The subscription tendered was purely in the interest of the tax-paying public, and its acceptance does not even suggest any improper motive.

The true doctrine applicable to this case, we believe, is set forth in the case of Currier v. U. S., 184 F. 700, 701, decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals, involving a contract to contribute to the purchase of a site for a public building. The court says:

"The plaintiffs in error invoke the familiar rule against agreements which tend improperly to influence those engaged in the performance of public duties, or to induce them to subordinate the public welfare to individual gain.

"Assuming that we can take cognizance of their objection in a case like this, we think it is untenable. There is no charge of the receipt of a personal consideration by any representative of the government connected with the transaction, and for that reason most of the cases cited for plaintiffs in error are inapplicable. The action of the Secretary was wholly free from any influence, save his judgment of the suitability of the location and the donations towards its cost. Those donations were to the government, the public itself, not to an official, and we perceive nothing in them that would tend to public detriment. Even if they influenced him, it does not follow the public interest was not subserved. All reasonable inferences are to the contrary. Obviously a site at least as suitable and convenient could be procured with the larger means as with the smaller, and in all reasonable probability a better one, notwithstanding any claim to the contrary. Every influence upon official action is not against public policy. It is only that which is immoral in its conception, or tends to impair official fidelity, or otherwise contravenes the established interest of society. * * * It is not against public policy for the owners of a very valuable location to reduce the price to the sum appropriated by Congress for the sake of profiting by an increase in value of their adjacent property, or for the owners of adjacent property to pay direct to the owners of the property selected, and thereby reduce the cost to the government. A contribution to the government itself cannot be different in principle.

"A public building was to be erected in Greeley, and a site satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury had to be selected. The donations in question inured to the benefit of the public. They were not given to any official for the purpose of influencing his judgment, nor to an individual to influence the judgment of an official charged with a public duty, nor was there tendency to affect the exercise of the judgment of an official contrary to the public interest. There is abundant authority for the rule that, if a public institution must be located or structure built, private contributions on condition that a particular location is selected are not against public policy. (Citing Island County v. Babcock, 17 Wash. 438, 50 P. 54; State v. Johnson, 52 Ind. 197; Stilson v. Commissioners, 52 Ind. 213; George v. Harris, 4 N. H. 533, 17 Am. Dec. 446; Ford v. North Des Moines, 80 Iowa, 626, 45 N. W. 1031; Wells v. Taylor, 5 Mont. 202, 3 Pac. 255.)"

Most of the decisions sustaining the validity of this class of contracts subscribing to public improvements do not turn upon the construction of the subscription as a gift, but rather recognize the benefits received by the subscriber as a legitimate and binding consideration.

In Fearnley v. De Mainville et al., 5 Colo. App. 441, 39 P. 73, the syllabus, as sustained by the text, recites: "A contract by which one, in consideration of another's leasing to the government a building for a post office at a nominal rent, agrees to pay to the lessor a certain sum for each month of the term is valid, notwithstanding the purpose was to enable the lessor to outstrip other competitors for the location of the office at some other point."

Stilson v. Board of Commissioners, 52 Ind. 213, and State v. Johnson, 52 Ind. p. 197, contain an exhaustive discussion and citation of authorities covering the question of public policy. In the Stilson Case the conclusions of the court are covered by the syllabus in the following language: "A written promise to pay into the county treasury a certain sum of money, upon the condition that the county commissioners, who had removed the county court-house from the public square and were building a new court-house elsewhere, would remove it back to said square, which offer was accepted by said commissioners, who entered on their records an order for such relocation, was not void as against public policy, though the commissioners were not expressly authorized by statute to receive such donations."

The court says in the opinion: "The question arising in the record was fully considered, and decided adversely to the appellant, in the case of The State v. Johnson, at the present term, ante, [52 Ind.] p. 197. Upon the authority of that case, the judgment in the present case must be affirmed. The two cases differ in this, that in the above cited case there was a statute which authorized the reception of donations in money or materials, while in the present case there is no such legislative sanction. But the ruling in the present case is predicated upon the general principles of law relating to public policy, as laid down in the above cited case."

In the case last cited, the court, in discussing the question of public policy, adopted the following proposition:

"The propriety of any particular location of public buildings may depend, in some measure, upon the sum proposed to be given by the citizens of any place. The public interest obviously requires that such location should be made with a view to all the circumstances, and the greater or less burden to the whole State would be an important circumstance to be taken into consideration, in determining between several places, in other respects equally convenient. The increased value of the property, in the vicinity of public buildings, would seem to require that those, who are benefited, should contribute some part of the increase, for the purpose of erecting them, rather than that the whole advantage should accrue to them, and the expense be wholly borne by the citizens generally. We can see no foundation for the objection made to this subscription, on the ground of public policy or propriety."

* * * What principle of public policy does it violate? The members of the board of police, as individuals, will not receive any portion of the money for which the note was given. At the time of the contract it was not intended or expected that they should receive it. It was not a proposition by the defendants to pay them so much as individuals, in consideration that they would not change the site of the court-house. If it had been, it would have been clearly illegal, and could not have been enforced. But the contract was made by them in their official capacity, for the benefit of the county. * * *

"But further than this, the power of courts to declare a contract void for being in contravention of sound public policy, is a very delicate and undefined power, and like the power to declare a statute unconstitutional, should be exercised only in cases free from doubt."

"After mature and thoughtful consideration, we have arrived at the conclusion that the contract sued upon is not against sound public policy. * * * The sum donated lessened the public burden and placed it on those who would receive a personal advantage by such location. The money donated went into the fund provided for the erection of suitable buildings. * * * There is no pretence that there was any favoritism or partiality on the part of the Governor or the commissioners who aided him by their counsel. Nor is it claimed that a bad location was made. In the case of railroads and other quasi public corporations, the directors are stockholders and have a personal and pecuniary interest in all donations made. Under these circumstances, they might, in consulting their own interest, lose sight of the public good. In the case in judgment, the Governor was not subjected to any such temptation."

It would serve no useful purpose to consider all the authorities cited in detail. The general principles discussed may, however, be reinforced by calling attention to the conclusions reached by recognized commentators on the law as to where the weight of authority lies. Corpus Juris, under the subhead "Location of Public Offices," vol. 13, p. 437, says:

"When the general public is interested in the location of a public office, a contract to influence its location at a particular place for individual benefit or personal gain, is against public policy; although a contract which is conditioned on the location of a public building or office in a particular place will be sustained where the use of improper influence to secure such location is not contemplated."

"Where individual contributions to secure the location of a public building or the construction of a public improvement inure to the benefit of the public, and are not given to any official for the purpose of influencing his judgment, or to an individual to influence the judgment of an official charged with a public duty, and do not tend to affect the exercise of the judgment of an official contrary to the public interest, they are not against public policy."

Ruling Case Law, one of the most careful and reliable compilations of elementary principles as adopted by the courts, on this subject says (6 R. C. L. p. 748): "Without denying the fact that there may be circumstances under which contributions to the expense of erecting a public building might be lawful and proper to be considered in determining the best location for the public, some courts have declared that the donation of money must not be the inducement to the selection of a site apart from the public interests concerned. The argument urged against the validity of contracts tending to influence the location of public buildings is that the administrative officers charged with the duty of procuring a site are bound by virtue of their office to exercise their best judgment in procuring a location which will be most advantageous to the public, and hence it would be contrary to public policy to allow them to be influenced by external aid. But the weight of authority is in favor of the validity of a contract, the object of which is to influence the location of a public building by contributing money or property into the public fund on condition that the building shall be located at a particular place, even though the officers in charge of the construction of the building have not express legislative sanction to receive contributions. This conclusion would seem to presuppose that there is no improper motive or corrupt conduct and that the benefit of the contribution inures to the public and not to the administrative officer. It has been said that the propriety of any particular location of public buildings may depend, in some measure, upon the sum proposed to be given by the citizens of any place. The public interest obviously requires that such location should be made with a view to all the circumstances, and the greater or less burden to the whole state would be an important circumstance to be taken into consideration, in determining between several places in other respects equally convenient. * * * In such cases contributions made on condition that the building should be erected at a particular place constitute valid agreements when accepted by the public officers."

In the present instance, nothing appears in the record to indicate that the subscription agreements in question tended in any way to influence the board of supervisors in the selection of a site for the courthouse, beyond the legitimate consideration of the fact that the money subscribed was an element of value to the general public in selecting such location.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. v. DE RYANA et al. (Civ. 7061.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 4, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Fraudulent conveyances §241(2)—Equitable action to establish trust could be maintained, where property was attached, though claim against principal defendant was not reduced to judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 542, subd. 2).

In action to recover loan and to establish trust in realty, plaintiff held entitled to proceed in equity to reach property fraudulently transferred, though case against principal defendant was dismissed and plaintiff's claim had not been reduced to judgment, where property was attached and parties other than principal defendant tendered issue of ownership, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 542, subd. 2, providing that property standing in name of one person but owned by debtor may be attached at suit of creditor.

2. Appeal and error §1170(6)—Error, if any, in permitting continuance of equitable action before proceeding against principal defendant held not to affect codefendant's substantial rights (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a).

On appeal by defendants in action to establish trust in realty, error, if any, in dismissing action against principal defendant and permitting action to continue against others before plaintiff's claim against principal defendant was reduced to judgment, held not to affect substantial rights of codefendant, and therefore did not result in miscarriage of justice, justifying reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of additional evidence admitted on appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, showing that since trial plaintiff in another action has reduced claim against principal defendant to judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against J. V. De Ryana and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Rachel Cafiero appeals. Modified, and as modified affirmed.

Walter E. Hettman, Chauncey F. Eldridge, and Leo R. Friedman, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Tobin & Tobin and Geo. A. Clough, all of San Francisco (Robert H. Borland, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the sum of $7,000 loaned to defendant J. V. De Ryana and to establish a trust upon certain real property standing in the name of defendant Cafiero and claimed to be owned by said De Ryana. Plaintiff had judgment as prayed, and the defendant Cafiero alone appeals on typewritten transcripts.

The defendant J. V. De Ryana was a fugitive from justice and was not served with process. The cause was dismissed as to him and proceeded to trial against the appellant and Rosalia De Ryana, wife of J. V. De Ryana. The evidence disclosed that J. V. De Ryana while serving a term in the state penitentiary for the crime of forgery was released on parole and came to San Francisco, where he assumed the name of De Ryana and entered into the real estate business on a large scale. He transacted all his business in the name of his wife and kept his principal bank account in her name. During this time his average bank deposits, carried in the name of his wife, totaled $30,000 annually, and upon his disappearance in 1927 these deposits ceased and the account was practically closed. The appellant was the sister of Rosalia De Ryana. She had about $4,000 which she possessed in her own right. During the times mentioned real properties were purchased by De Ryana in the name of his said sister-in-law, the source of the funds used for that purpose being one of the questions in dispute at the trial.

In 1922 the real property in dispute was purchased by J. V. De Ryana in the name of his wife and J. V. De Ryana and his wife and appellant moved into the premises and continued to reside there during the transactions hereinafter noted. Other flats on the premises were leased in the name of the wife. In 1924 a pretended sale of these premises was made by Mrs. De Ryana to the appellant, the entire transaction being conducted by J. V. De Ryana. No change of possession was made by the parties and no change was made in the outstanding leases of the flats, but the lessees continued to pay rent to Mrs. De Ryana according to the terms of their leases. In November, 1926, by means of forgery of deeds and other documents, J. V. De Ryana fraudulently secured from respondent a loan of $7,000, which sum was deposited in the respondent bank to his credit. A few days after obtaining this credit, J. V. De Ryana withdrew from respondent bank two separate amounts, and at about the same time appellant made two separate deposits to her account in another bank of approximately like amounts to those withdrawn by J. V. De Ryana. The appellant then withdrew from her bank the sum of $3,500 which J. V. De Ryana paid through the title company in satisfaction of a second mortgage on the property in suit.

The case made by respondent was that this property was at all times owned by J. V. De Ryana; that the original purchase in 1922 was made in the name of his wife but for his account; that the transfer to appellant in 1924 did not convey to her any title because Mrs. De Ryana had given to the title company a deed which was intended as a mortgage, and hence when the title company deeded to appellant (the only conveyance to appellant under which she could claim title) it had no title to convey to her. The respondent further claims that the parties disclosed by their actions that no transfer of title or ownership was made or intended.

The trial court found upon conflicting evidence that the real property in suit was in fact the property of J. V. De Ryana and that the legal title which stood in the name of his wife and later in the name of appellant was held merely in trust for him. On this appeal the main attack upon the judgment is based on the claim that this finding is not supported by the evidence. It would serve no purpose to outline the evidence more in detail. The positive evidence of the transactions of J. V. De Ryana, taken with the inferences which were properly drawn from these facts, is sufficient to support the finding. It is true that the testimony of the appellant raised some conflict, but her testimony was so evasive, contradictory, and, in many respects, wholly impossible that the trial court might well have disbelieved her entire testimony. In this respect the case is not unlike Staples v. Hawthorne (Cal. Sup.) 283 P. 67, and Waizman v. Black (Cal. App.) 281 P. 1087, where the direct testimony of an interested party was held to have been overcome by the uncontroverted evidence of facts and circumstances, illustrating, as said in Pugh v. Bell, 21 Cal. App. 530, 534, 132 P. 286, 288, the truth of the old saying that "actions speak louder than words." Our examination of the entire record satisfies us that the evidence is sufficient to support this finding and this disposes of the appeal except for the questions of procedure.

[1] The objection is made that because the respondent dismissed the action as to the principal debtor the trial court lost jurisdiction to proceed as to the others. The argument is that a creditor must first reduce his claim to judgment against the debtor before he can resort to an equitable action to reach property fraudulently transferred by the debtor. The respondent does not quarrel with the rule contended for, but insists that the case here is an exception to the rule. With this we agree. Section 542, subd. 2, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that property standing in the name of one person but owned by the debtor may be attached at the suit of the creditor. Such was the procedure followed here. An attachment lien was placed on the property, and thereafter the appellant and Mrs. De Ryana tendered the issue of ownership, which issue was met by respondent and fairly tried and determined. Manifestly the trial court had jurisdiction to try this issue. Horan v. Varian (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 637; Becker v. Beldt (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1059.

[2] Since the issue of ownership in so far as this appellant is concerned was fairly presented and determined, the question of the effect of the dismissal as to J. V. De Ryana is to be considered on the basis of prejudice to this appellant and not on the basis of any rights which J. V. De Ryana might assert. As to appellant, therefore, it is merely a question of procedure. Then the question is: Did the error in procedure, if any, result in a miscarriage of justice? This is the question which the Constitution requires us to determine before we can reverse the judgment. But we find nothing in appellant's briefs which suggests any prejudice to her in this respect. Her sole claim is that because decisions have read that the creditor must first reduce his claim to judgment the court in this instance was without jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the issues tendered. To offset any possible claim of prejudice to appellant the respondent has moved that a certified copy of the final judgment rendered against J. V. De Ryana on the claim in another action be filed herein as new evidence. Such a motion is permitted under section 956a, Code of Civil Procedure, the evidence of the judgment being "additional evidence of or concerning facts occurring * * * prior to the decision of the appeal." The motion is granted and the evidence is admitted for the purpose of showing the want of prejudice to appellant from any of the proceedings complained of. With this evidence before us the case presented on this appeal is simply this: The plaintiff, in another action in which J. V. De Ryana was a party, has now reduced its claim against him to final judgment and has subjected the property here involved to the lien of that judgment. Throughout the trial of the cause which is on appeal the claim thus reduced to judgment was treated as an adjudicated claim; that is to say, the claim here asserted and the circumstances under which it arose were the same as those appearing in the other action in which final judgment was had. The appellant had her day in court upon a fair trial of all the issues involved. The failure of plaintiff to reduce its claim to judgment prior to this trial did not affect the trial of the issues in any particular in so far as this appellant is concerned. Hence, if the reduction of the claim to judgment were a prerequisite the failure to do so was an error in procedure only—an error which did not affect the substantial rights of appellant and hence one which did not result in "a miscarriage of justice" which would support a reversal of the judgment under the terms of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

However, for the purpose of terminating the litigation as we are enjoined to do by the provisions of section 956a, Code of Civil Procedure, the complaint should be amended so as to plead the entry of the final judgment against J. V. De Ryana in the other action and the sale of the property here involved in execution of that judgment, and the findings should be amended so as to find in accord with the amendment. It is therefore ordered that the plaintiff may file in the superior court, prior to the time our judgment herein becomes final, an amendment to its complaint covering these allegations. In the meantime the complaint will be deemed to have been so amended, and upon the record and evidence before us the findings are amended by adding thereto: "That, in the action entitled Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. J. V. De Ryana et al., in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, No. 194314, judgment was duly entered in favor of said plaintiff and against

J. V. De Ryana, on the 17th day of December, 1928, adjudging and decreeing that said defendant was indebted to said plaintiff in the sum of $7,000 for money loaned; that said defendant was the owner of an interest in the real property described in said judgment; that a portion of said sum was used by said defendant for the purpose of paying of incumbrances upon said property which were purchase money incumbrances used by said defendant as a part of the purchase price of said property; that the real property described in said judgment is the same property which is involved in this action and which is fully described in finding No. 12 on file herein; and that said judgment constitutes a lien upon all the right, title, and interest of said J. V. De Ryana in and to said real property. That, in execution of said judgment of December 17, 1928, all the right, title, and interest of said J. V. De Ryana in and to said real property described in said judgment was duly and regularly sold at sheriff's sale to Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, plaintiff therein, for the sum of $7,000.00."

It is further ordered that the judgment appealed from be modified so that the third paragraph thereof shall read: "It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said Rachel Cafero holds the legal title to the real property hereinafter described in trust for the benefit of the said J. V. De Ryana, subject to the lien of said judgment of December 17, 1928, and claim of plaintiff, etc."

The judgment as modified is affirmed, with costs to the respondent.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 349

In re HARNEY'S ESTATE. ★

HARNEY v. GARVEY et al.

(Civ. 7252.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Wills §55(1)—Contestant's testimony showing mental incapacity held sufficient to support verdict finding testator was of unsound mind when he executed will.

In will contest, contestant's testimony, if believed by jury, showing testator's mental incapacity, held sufficient to support verdict finding testator was of unsound mind at time he executed will.

2. Wills §384—Whether verdict finding execution of will was procured through undue influence was supported by evidence was immaterial where evidence supported verdict finding mental incapacity.

On appeal by proponents in will contest, whether verdict finding testator executed will while under undue influence was sustained by evidence held immaterial, where verdict finding testator was of unsound mind at time he executed will was supported by evidence.

3. Wills §360—Complaint for first time on appeal that mere propounding of questions to proponents' witness in will contest was misconduct held too late.

Proponents' complaint for first time on appeal in will contest that mere propounding of questions to proponents' attorney on cross-examination while on stand as witness was misconduct held too late.

4. New trial §143(2)—Jurors' misconduct cannot be shown by their affidavits.

Misconduct on part of jurors cannot be shown by their affidavits.

5. Wills §360—Proponent in will contest, if knowing of jurors' misconduct, held under duty to call matter to court's attention and not to take chance on favorable verdict.

Proponent in will contest, if knowing of misconduct of jurors, held under duty to call matter to court's attention, and not to wait and take chance on favorable verdict.

6. Appeal and error §1078(1)—Objections on appeal were not considered, where no portion of record was quoted, no argument made, and no authorities cited calling upon court to pass on points.

Objections presented on appeal by proponents in will contest, where no portion of record was quoted, no argument made, and no authorities cited calling upon court to pass thereon, were not considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

Proceeding by Julia Harney, to contest the will of John Harney, deceased, opposed by John J. Garvey and others. From a judgment for contestant, proponents appeal. Affirmed.

Frank W. Hooper (Albert M. Hardie, of Oakland, of counsel), for appellants.

Stanley R. Sterne and Richard Liebman, both of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. After the death of John Harney, John J. Garvey filed a petition asking that a certain document be admitted to probate as the will of the deceased. Julia Harney, the surviving widow, appeared and filed an opposition to the petition. The opposition was answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the contestant. The verdict consisted of two special verdicts. By the terms of the first one, the jury found that the decedent was not of sound mind at the time the alleged will was executed, and by the second verdict it found that he was acting under undue influence. From a judgment entered on the verdict, the proponents have appealed, and have brought up typewritten transcripts.

[1] The proponents claim that the evidence produced by contestant was insufficient. Before proceeding to discuss the point further, it should be noted that the parties proceeded on two distinct lines. In her case in chief, the contestant introduced proof tending to show that, from the 18th day of April, 1928, until the 14th day of May, 1928, the date of the death of the decedent, the decedent was in the last stages of the disease from which he died. Covering said period of time the contestant took the stand in her own behalf and testified to the things that she observed, and she called certain intimate acquaintances who testified to things that they had observed, and then she called certain doctors who testified regarding the examinations which they had made and the conclusions they formed after making said examinations. One of those doctors was a specialist in nephritis or Bright's disease. Going further, she called another doctor whose specialties are nervous and mental diseases. To the latter her attorney propounded a hypothetical question based on the history of the case as told by the witnesses just mentioned. In this manner she produced testimony to the effect that from April 18, 1928, the decedent was suffering from senile dementia with associated arteriosclerosis; that said disease was progressing from day to day; that from these causes the brain cells had become dead; and that on the 26th day of April, 1928, the decedent no longer had any mentality but that at that time "he was a vegetable, no mental capacity." On the other hand, the proponents called as witnesses the two witnesses of the will, the executor named in the will, the attorney who drew the will, and others. From said persons the proponents elicited testimony to the effect that, during the afternoon on which the will was drawn, and at the particular time at which it was drawn and signed, they talked to the decedent, and he talked to them or in their presence, and from said conversation they formed the opinion that the decedent was of sound mind. If the jury believed the testimony given by the witnesses for the contestant, then the verdict of the jury, which was to the effect that the decedent was of unsound mind, is abundantly supported by the evidence. The evidence went further than the verdict—it was to the effect that at said time the deceased had no mind.

[2] In the next place the proponents contended that the verdict of undue influence was against both the evidence and the law. We have just shown that the verdict based on unsound mind was abundantly sustained. That being so, it is immaterial whether the verdict based on undue influence was sustained or was not sustained. Estate of Baker, 176 Cal. 430, 437, 168 P. 881. We need not further consider the point. However, it is only fair to the trial court and the jurors to state that it cannot be said that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of undue influence.

[3] When introducing the case for the proponents, one of their attorneys took the stand as a witness. On cross-examination he was asked if he was going to call Dr. Parker as a witness for the proponents. The proponents objected to the question, and the objection was sustained. There was no claim in the trial court that the mere propounding of the question was misconduct, and the trial court was not asked to rule thereon. It is too late at this time to claim misconduct.

After the jury had been out some time, it returned into court, and the following proceedings were had:

"The Court: The jurors are present. Ladies and gentlemen, have you agreed upon a verdict?"

"Juror Love: Your Honor, the jury would like to know if Mr. Sterne would have had the right to put Dr. Parker on the stand before he closed his case?"

Thereupon followed a colloquy covering nearly five typewritten pages. The proponents assert that "the comment of the court tended to call the attention of the jurors to the fact that Dr. Parker could be called by contestant, but that they did not have the right to go into the enemy's camp if they chose." They do not print in their brief any language which supports them. We have read the transcript, and we do not find anything in the language used by the trial court that was in the least improper.

The proponents assert that the verdict was contrary to the evidence measured in terms of law. In this connection they quote from Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 768, 251 P. 778, 782: "Ability to transact important business, or even ordinary business, is not the legal standard of testamentary capacity, though it seems to be quite generally but mistakenly supposed, outside the ranks of the legal profession, that a capacity to transact important business is the criterion of fitness to make a valid will." The contestant did not assume the law to be different than as just quoted. On the contrary, she was at great pains to develop the facts that at the time the decedent made the purported will he did not have sufficient mental capacity to understand his relation to his relatives and those around him with a clear remembrance as to those in whom, and those things in which he was mostly interested; nor to be able to understand and carry in his mind the nature and situation of his property; nor to understand the act he was doing; nor to understand the relation in which he stood to the objects of his bounty free from any delusions or effect of disease which might lead him to dispose of his property otherwise than he would if he knew and understood what he was doing.

[4, 5] The proponents assert misconduct on the part of the jurors. They do not claim it was shown by the reporter's transcript. In the trial court they attempted to use affidavits of jurors. They were not entitled to do so. Rosenberg v. George A. Moore & Co., 194 Cal. 392, 396, 229 P. 34. Disregarding the affidavits of jurors and addressing ourselves to the other evidence, the record shows that the affidavit of Mattie Frazier was fully contradicted by the affidavit of juror Jones. The affidavit of John J. Garvey does not show any misconduct, and, if he knew of any, it was his duty to have called the matter to the attention of the court and not to wait and take a chance on a favorable verdict. Furthermore, if we assume that all of the affidavits were competent evidence, the affidavits do not disclose any misconduct on the part of the jury that was prejudicial to the rights of either party.

The proponents contend that their motion for a new trial should have been granted. In this behalf they rely upon the alleged misconduct of a juror. That subject has already been considered, and we need not repeat what has been said above.

[6] Other objections are presented, but no portion of the record is quoted, no argument is made, and no authorities are cited calling upon the court to pass on the points.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

COMMUNITY LUMBER CO. OF BALDWIN PARK et al. v. CHUTE et al., and Four Other Cases. (Civ. 3913.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 18, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Bills and notes $\S$ 376—Note not made void in its inception by usury statute is valid in hands of innocent purchaser (Usury Law, $\S$ 2).

Where note is not made void in its inception by Usury Law, $\S$ 2 (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), it is valid in hands of innocent purchaser, and when law only makes note void as to interest, note itself is not void.

2. Bills and notes $\S$ 370, 375—Neither lack of consideration nor illegality of consideration prevents note from being good in hands of innocent holder.

Neither lack of consideration nor illegality of consideration prevents note from being good in hands of innocent holder for value.

3. Usury ☞111(2)—Usury is special defense which must be pleaded.

Usury is special defense, and as such must be pleaded.

4. Usury ☞95—Principal, if due, must be tendered before plea of usury can be relied on.

Since agreement to pay interest is separable from agreement to pay principal, persons alleging usury must tender principal, if due, before they can rely on plea of usury.

5. Usury ☞126—Third party should not be permitted to complain of usury except for exceptional reason.

Where parties to agreement are willing to comply with it, third party should not be permitted to complain of usury except for some exceptional reason.

6. Corporations ☞92—Note held not illegal on ground part was given in full payment of stock, whereas 40 per cent. of purchase price should have been paid in cash, where stock was purchased a week after corporation purchased note.

Note held not illegal because part thereof was given in full payment of stock of corporation which corporation was only authorized to sell and issue when at least 40 per cent. of purchase price was paid in cash, where corporation paid price for note crediting amount to account of stock purchaser and agreeing to pay it out at stated intervals, and a week later stock was purchased and account charged with amount thereof.

7. Bills and notes ☞525—Corporation under evidence held to have taken note in due course without notice of rights of mechanic's lien claimants.

Corporation held under evidence to have taken note in due course and without any notice of rights of mechanic's lien claimants, where maker, payee, and indorser, who were only persons who might object when corporation took collateral, all assured purchaser there were no secret equities.

8. Mortgages ☞151(3)—Trust deed representing purchase price of lots recorded before commencement of work or furnishing of materials held superior to mechanics' lien claims.

Deed of trust representing entire purchase price of lots, which was of record before commencement of any work or furnishing of any material and recited it was subsequent to certain specified deed of trust only, held superior to claims of mechanics' liens.

Appeal from the Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Actions by the Community Lumber Company of Baldwin Park and others, by George H. Whyte, Jr., by the Truscon Steel Company, and by C. W. Grizzelle and others, against W. H. Chute and others, and by the Weaver Roof Company against the West Coast Trim-mings Company and others. From judgments establishing priorities respecting plaintiffs' mechanics' liens, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Zach Lamar Cobb and Earl A. Littlejohns, both of Los Angeles, James B. Ogg, of Alhambra, and Musick, Burr & Pinney, Mitchell, Silberberg & Davis, and Hulme, Hastings & Bartlett, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bush & Bush, of Los Angeles, M. W. Conkling, of San Diego, and Clarence E. Fleming, Fredericks & Hanna, Arthur L. Veitch, James Van Law, and A. G. MacRobbie, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PULLEN, Justice pro tem. The question here is one of priorities between appellants, who are mechanics' lien claimants, and respondents, who are beneficiaries under certain liens, secured by deeds of trust. The trial court granted priorities to the holders of the trust deeds, and the mechanics' lien claimants appeal. It will be necessary to set forth the facts in some detail.

W. H. Chute, one of the respondents, purchased the property in question from James A. Keeney, giving him as the entire purchase price a promissory note for $5,000, secured by a deed of trust, which recited that it was subsequent and subordinate to a deed of trust for $15,000 dated June 1, 1925, maturing six months from date in favor of the Union Engineering Company, Inc.

Chute, desiring to improve the property by the erection of a building thereon, entered into an agreement with respondent Union Engineering Company whereby Chute employed the Union Engineering Company as his agent or superintendent to erect such building and the Union Engineering Company was authorized to make all contracts relating to the construction of such building in the name of the owner, W. H. Chute.

In accordance with the further terms of such contract, Chute executed and delivered to Union Engineering Company promissory notes in the sum of $32,000, $15,000 of such notes being secured by a trust deed which was a first lien upon the property and immediately prior to the deed of trust in favor of Keeney for $5,000 already referred to, and the balance of the $32,000 in notes to be secured by a third deed of trust upon the property. In said agreements between the owner and the engineering company it was provided that the company should accept said notes "secured as aforesaid, as the agent of the owner and shall use said notes for the payment of all material and labor necessary to erect and construct to completion the above-mentioned building. The Superintendent shall have full authority to pay said subcontractors and materialmen performing the work or furnishing material in connection with the said building by said Trust Deed notes, by assignment thereof to said contractors and materialmen without recourse. The Superintendent shall also have full authority to sell such portion of said notes as it may deem necessary to obtain cash which may be necessary for the erection of said building," and "after said erection and construction of said building is completed and all costs of said erection and construction have been paid, the Superintendent shall be entitled to retain any and all of the above-mentioned notes which have not been used in defraying costs of said building as its full compensation for service rendered under this agreement."

Thereafter the Union Engineering Company entered into contracts with the various plaintiffs, in the name of W. H. Chute, and the materials and labor were furnished as agreed, and the building completed and notice of completion duly filed in the office of the recorder of Los Angeles county.

Shortly after the execution and delivery of the notes referred to, the Union Engineering Company borrowed from defendant Leonard L. Jones the sum of $6,000 and executed to Jones its promissory note in the sum of $6,500 and secured the repayment thereof by a transfer and assignment of the note and deed of trust of $15,000 already referred to. Thereafter Jones sold the note of $6,500 of the Union Engineering Company to the Western Discount Corporation and also assigned the collateral referred to which he had received from the Union Engineering Company, Jones receiving therefor $6,000 in cash.

Thereafter the engineering company borrowed from the Western Discount Corporation $950 and gave its note therefor in the sum of $1,000, and the engineering company assigned to the discount corporation all its equity in the note and deed of trust for $15,000 of Chute, which had been theretofore pledged by the engineering company to Jones and by Jones transferred to the Western Discount Corporation as heretofore set up.

The court found that the notes of $6,500 and $1,000 had not been paid and that there was due thereon to the Western Discount Corporation the sums of $6,000 and $950, respectively, with interest, according to the terms of the notes as the amounts found due. All of the deeds of trust were recorded June 12, 1925, and the first work and materials furnished was on June 13, 1925.

Appellants urge as their first specification of error that the court should not have allowed the Western Discount Corporation interest on the amounts advanced by them because both of the notes were usurious.

It is clearly established, and the court found, that on the note of the engineering company to Jones in the sum of $6,500 they were to receive and did receive only the sum of $6,000; that Jones in turn sold the $6,500 note of the engineering company to the discount corporation and received $6,000 cash. As to this transaction the court found:

"That in purchasing the note for $6,500 secured by the note and trust deed for $15,000 in these findings referred to, the defendant Western Discount Corporation had no knowledge whatsoever of the existence of the contract between W. H. Chute and the Union Engineering Company herein referred to and had no knowledge of the terms and conditions hereof."

And it is further found by the court:

"That subsequent to the execution of said promissory note by Union Engineering Company in favor of said Leonard L. Jones the defendant Western Discount Corporation purchased said promissory note in good faith for value and in the due course of business from said Leonard L. Jones, and said Leonard L. Jones by proper endorsement on the back of said promissory note duly assigned, transferred and set over the same and all of his right, title and interest therein to the defendant Western Discount Corporation, and did at the same time and as part of the same transaction assign, transfer and set over unto said defendant the collateral security on said promissory note consisting of said note and trust deed for $15,000 executed by W. H. Chute and Leotta Chute in favor of Union Engineering Company as hereinabove set forth, and that said Western Discount Corporation ever since has been and now is the owner of said promissory note and of said collateral security; that said promissory note was purchased by said defendant in good faith for value in the ordinary course of business and without notice of any offsets of any kind or nature and without notice of the existence of the contract between W. H. Chute, Leotta Chute, his wife, and Union Engineering Company hereinabove referred to."

As to the note of the engineering company of $1,000 in favor of the Western Discount Corporation, the court found:

"That on or about the 4th day of August, 1925, and subsequent to the purchase by defendant Western Discount Corporation of said note for $6,500 from Leonard L. Jones, together with collateral upon the same, the defendant Western Discount Corporation loaned to Union Engineering Company, one of the defendants herein, the sum of $950.00 for a period of thirty days with interest at the rate of 8% per annum, and said Union Engineering Company by its officers thereunto duly authorized did execute and deliver to said Western Discount Corporation its certain promissory note in writing in the principal sum of $1,000 dated August 4, 1925, and due thirty days after date with interest at the rate of 8% per annum; that said Union Engineering Company did then and there pledge, assign, transfer, hypothecate and deposit with said Western Discount Corporation all of its equity in and to said promissory note of $15,000, executed by W. H. Chute and Leotta Chute, his wife, in favor of Union Engineering Company as collateral security on the said promissory note for $6,500 in favor of Leonard L. Jones and which by said Leonard L. Jones had been assigned, transferred and set over to Western Discount Corporation, as hereinbefore found.

"The Court finds that said last mentioned loan of $950.00 to Union Engineering Company was made by Western Discount Corporation in the ordinary course of business and in good faith and without any knowledge on its part of the various agreements alleged by certain of the plaintiffs to have existed between said Union Engineering Company and said W. H. Chute and Leotta Chute, his wife."

The trial court gave judgment in favor of Western Discount Corporation for $6,000 with interest from date of the note on the note of $6,500, and also the sum of $950 on the note of $1,000 with interest from date of the note.

[1, 2] The provisions of the Usury Law as adopted by the electors at the general election November 5, 1918 (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), which are applicable to the case, are as follows:

Sec. 2. "No person * * * shall directly or indirectly take or receive in money, goods or things in action, or in any other manner whatsoever, any greater sum or any greater value for the loan or forbearance of money, goods or things in action than at the rate of twelve dollars upon one hundred dollars for one year. * * * Any agreement or contract of any nature in conflict with the provisions of this section shall be null and void as to any agreement or stipulation therein contained to pay interest and no action at law to recover interest in any sum shall be maintained and the debt can not be declared due until the full period of time it was contracted for has elapsed."

It will be noted that the act quoted above does not declare the note void, but only the portion of the agreement or contract as to the payment of interest shall be null and void, which is entirely different from declaring the entire instrument void.

It is true that there is a divergence of authority in other states, but many apparent conflicts may be reconciled by a reading of the acts themselves.

It is said in Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. 241, 22 L. Ed. 633, that unless a note is by statute made void in its inception it is valid in the hands of an innocent purchaser, and that when the law only makes the note void as to interest the note itself is not void and that neither lack of consideration nor illegality of consideration prevents a note being good in the hands of an innocent holder.

In the note to Union Trust Co. v. Preston N. Bank, 4 Ann. Cas. 347, California is placed in the list of states in which all illegalities are cured where negotiable paper passes into hands of an innocent purchaser for value.

In the note found in the case of Gate City Bank v. Thrall, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 886, may be found an analysis of the cases and the reasons therefor.

The courts of New York, in discussing this matter, said:

"The business of the country is done so largely by means of commercial paper that the interests of commerce require that a promissory note, fair on its face, should be as negotiable as a government bond. Every restriction upon the circulation of negotiable paper is an injury to the state, for it tends to derange trade and hinder the transaction of business. * * * It would be intolerable if every bank had to learn the true history of each piece of paper presented for discount before it could act in safety." Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kellogg, 183 N. Y. 92, 75 N. E. 1103, 1104, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299, 111 Am. St. Rep. 717, 5 Ann. Cas. 158.

The Supreme Court of our own state, in the leading case of Haight v. Joyce, 2 Cal. 64, 56 Am. Dec. 311, which case has been many time approved, and particularly as late as Union Coll. Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 166, 88 P. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609, used substantially the same language, saying:

"A rule requiring the indorsee of every bill or note to inquire into the consideration, would retard commercial transactions, and, in the language of Lord Kenyon, 'shake paper credit to its foundation.' * * * Any other decision would destroy confidence in commercial transactions, and open a wide door to fraud and perjury."

[3, 4] There is another reason why appellants may not urge their defense of usury. Usury is a special defense and as such must be pleaded, and the agreement to pay interest being separable from the agreement to pay the principal, they must, if due, tender the principal before they can rely upon the plea of usury. Innes v. Goldwater, 30 Cal. App. 101, 157 P. 18; Jackson v. Shawl, 29 Cal. 267; 14 Cal. Jur. 686, 687.

The court below gave judgment in favor of respondents for the amounts actually advanced, and therefore appellants cannot complain.

[5] It will be noted also that the parties to the agreement here set forth are willing to comply with their agreement, and except for some exceptional reason a third party should not be permitted to complain. De Wolf v. Johnson, 10 Wheat. 392, 6 L. Ed. 343; In re Worth (D. C.) 130 F. 927, 930; Levy v. Hallager, 119 Misc. Rep. 695, 197 N. Y. S. 257.

In the case of Matthews v. Ormerd, 140 Cal. 578, 74 P. 136, 137, the court in discussing the constitutional provision prohibiting a contract for the payment of taxes on a mortgage debt by the debtor, as the law then stood, said:

"With respect to the constitutional provision in question, and the rights of parties under it, the principles are clearly applicable which have been judicially applied to the asserted rights of parties under general usury laws. It is in its essential elements a usury law. In Matthews v. Ormerd, 134 Cal. 87, 66 P. 67, 210, it is called by the court, 'this provision against usury'; and in Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 611, 34 P. 342, and London Bank v. Bandmann, 120 Cal. 224, 52 P. 583, 65 Am. St. Rep. 179, the doctrine generally applied to usury laws, namely, that they are for the benefit of the borrower, and that he may waive the privilege, * * *

[6] Appellants also claim that the court erred in excluding from evidence the permit issued by the commissioner of corporations to the Western Discount Corporation and in not adjudging the $6,500 note illegal and void because the note to the extent of $1,500 thereof was given in full payment of certain stock of the Western Discount Corporation, which stock it was only authorized to sell and issue when at least 40 per cent. of the purchase price was paid in cash.

The court found that the discount corporation paid Jones the sum of $6,000 in cash for said $6,500 note, and the evidence supports that finding. It appears that upon the consummation of the transaction $6,000 was credited to Mr. Jones' account upon the books of the discount corporation, they agreeing to pay it out at stated intervals. A week later Jones purchased the stock in question and his account was charged with the amount thereof. It nowhere appears that the purchase of the stock was a part of the consideration at the time the money was placed to the credit of Jones. We therefore see no error in the ruling of the trial court.

[7] Appellants also claim that the Western Discount Corporation was charged with notice of the contract between Chute and Union Engineering Company, and that it took the $15,000 collateral deed of trust and note subject to the provisions of that contract or agreement. The answer to that is that these appellants were not parties to this agreement in any way. Prior to the commencement of any work or the furnishing of any material by any of these appellants, the deed of trust referred to was of record. The amounts being definite and ascertained, nothing has been attempted by the discount company, by Chute, or the engineering company that would increase the amount of the prior obligation. If the parties to the agreement saw fit, they could waive the entire amount or proceed to pay in accordance with the terms thereof. When the discount corporation took the collateral referred to, the only persons who might object were the maker, the payee, and the indorser. They all assured the purchaser there were no secret equities. The evidence sustains the findings that the discount corporation took the notes in due course and without any notice of right of appellants.

[8] Appellants also object to the findings of the trial court holding the lien of the deed of trust held by Keeney superior to the claims of the mechanics' liens, but we cannot agree with appellants. Keeney's deed of trust represented the entire purchase price of the lots in question, it was of record before commencement of any work or the furnishing of any materials, it recited it was subsequent to a certain specified deed of trust only, and there is nothing appearing in this case which would tend to deprive Keeney of his rights under the trust deed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, Acting P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 289

BOWERS v. PUTMAN et al. (Civ. 3947.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 20, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—The rule that decision will not be disturbed for insufficiency of evidence, where the evidence is conflicting, requires for its operation that the conflict be material and substantial.

A conflict in the evidence must be material and substantial in order to overrule assignment of error that evidence is insufficient to support decision, on the principle that such assignment is not well taken where the evidence is conflicting.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(10)—Conflicting evidence as to collision between truck and automobile held to sustain judgment for defendant.

Conflicting evidence as to the facts surrounding the collision of plaintiff's car with defendant's truck held to support judgment and determination for defendant.

Appeals from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Separate actions by George Bowers, individually and as administrator of the estate of Alice Alma Lubman, against O. O. Putman and another, individually and as copartners transacting business under the firm name and style of the Colusa Milk Company and another. Judgment for defendants in each case, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Duryea, of Marysville, for appellant. A. A. King, of Colusa, and Theodore W. Chester and Downey & Chester, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The above-entitled actions are based upon a collision between two motor cars, were tried before the court sitting without a jury, and upon a stipulation that both cases should be tried at once, and that the evidence should apply to both cases, so far as applicable. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and judgments entered in both cases for the defendants. From the respective judgments the plaintiff in both cases prosecutes the appeals now being considered herein.

The first action is for damages on account of the death of Alice Alma Lubman, caused by the collision referred to herein. The second action is for the sum of $1,250 alleged to be the damages to the automobile belonging to the plaintiff. The answer, among other things, presents the question of contributory negligence. Upon the appeals herein the plaintiff presents in both cases, as grounds for reversal, the following: First, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision; second, that the decision is against law.

[1] So far as the authorities cited by the appellant to sustain his appeals in the respective cases, we may state that a consideration of them fully sustains the position taken by the appellant that, where a conflict of the testimony is relied upon in answer to the assignment that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict, it must appear that the conflict is substantial. As we read the record in this case, the correctness of the authorities cited, based upon the facts of the respective cases being considered, the respondents do not take issue with the appellant. It being conceded that the law requires a substantial conflict, and not merely the semblance of a conflict, and that the conflict must be upon some question which goes to the real merit of the issues presented, and not to immaterial questions, we will proceed with the consideration of the first assignment as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision of the trial court in the respective cases.

[2] The record shows that on or about the hour of 6 o'clock in the afternoon of July 30, 1926, one Homer A. Bowers was driving westward on a highway leading from Colusa to Williams, in the county of Colusa, the automobile driven by him being known as a Willys-Knight. The deceased, Alice Alma Lubman, was one of three women riding in said Willys-Knight car, and was killed in the collision involved in this action. It is alleged in the pleadings that, as Homer A. Bowers was driving said Willys-Knight in a westerly direction, a Graham truck driven by Wayne Crowell, and belonging to the other defendants named, was so carelessly and negligently operated that it collided with the Willys-Knight car, resulting in the death of said Alice Alma Lubman, and the damage to the Willys-Knight car. The testimony shows that just prior to the collision there was another truck preceding the Willys-Knight car, and traveling in the same direction, at a distance of from 75 to 100 feet in advance thereof; that the Graham truck, traveling in the opposite direction, met the truck so preceding the Willys-Knight car, both trucks traveling on their respective right-hand halves of the paved highway; that almost instantly thereafter the collision occurred between the Graham truck and the Willys-Knight car. The testimony shows that the paved portion of the highway was approximately 15 feet in width.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiff that upon the meeting of the two trucks the defendant, Wayne Crowell, the driver of the Graham truck, recognized the driver of the other truck and turned to wave his left hand in salutation or as a sign of recognition, and that as he did so he turned the steering wheel so as to propel the truck in a direction toward the left-hand half of the paved portion of the highway, and in so doing caused the Graham truck to collide with the Willys-Knight car. The testimony tends to show that the left-half front of the Graham truck collided with the Willys-Knight car a short distance in front of the rear left wheel. The Willys-Knight car was turned over; Alice Alma Lubman was thrown from the car and sustained injuries which resulted in her immediate death. On the part of the respondents it is contended that the Graham truck remained upon its proper right-hand half of the paved highway; that the Willys-Knight car, following the truck which we have heretofore mentioned, had swerved to the left, and that the driver thereof had endeavored to bring the car back to its proper right-hand side, and thus gave the Willys-Knight car a position on the highway slightly diagonal to the direction of the westerly course of the highway, and at this instant of time it was struck by the Graham truck.

As it appears in the transcript, it would seem that the testimony in favor of the appellant preponderates somewhat over the testimony introduced by the defendants, and, if the court had found in favor of the plaintiff in both cases, the transcript would have contained sufficient evidence to sustain the judgments in favor of the plaintiff. On the other hand, we may state that, if the trial court believed the testimony of Wayne Crowell, the driver of the Graham truck, and which the trial court had a right to accept as the true version of the accident, then and in that case there is nothing presented to us upon which to base an order of reversal. The testimony of the driver of the Graham truck is to the effect that he was on his own proper right-hand side of the paved portion of the highway; that, immediately after the two trucks had gone on their respective courses, the Willys-Knight car loomed up in front of him on his left-hand side, and on the wrong side of the highway—that is, on the wrong side of the dividing line—and in this manner the two cars collided. If this is true, the Willys-Knight car was where it should not have been, and the owners of the Graham truck are not liable.

The transcript contains evidence to the effect that a deputy sheriff and the traffic officer visited the scene of the collision shortly after its occurrence and testified to certain marks on the highway, indicating that from a point south of the medial line of the paved portion of the highway were tracks indicating that the impact between the two cars was on that half of the highway where the Graham truck properly belonged, and that from these marks there were automobile tracks leading off to the right to the place where the Graham truck finally came to a standstill against the embankment of a ditch to the south of the highway, and on the right-hand side as the Graham truck was traveling eastward, and that from the same marks on the highway there were automobile tracks to the right and to the north of the paved portion of the highway toward where the Willys-Knight car finally stopped. The transcript shows much contention as to whether the marks to which we have referred were made by the Willys-Knight car or by the truck. That was one of the disputed questions for the court to decide.

It appears that the traffic officer revisited the scene the next morning and found the tracks just as he had found them the evening before. One of the witnesses who examined the tracks made a memorandum of what he saw on his visit immediately after the collision, and refreshed his memory therefrom at the trial, which was had a little over a year thereafter. This testimony is all contradicted by a number of witnesses for the plaintiff, but it only raises a conflict. The vital issue to be determined was the point on the paved portion of the highway where the impact occurred. If it occurred to the south of the medial line, the owners of the Graham truck were not and are not responsible. If it occurred to the north of the medial line, the judgments should have run in favor of the plaintiff. Upon the testimony to which we have referred, the trial court, if it accepted the version given by the defendants' witnesses rather than that given by the plaintiff's witnesses, could only enter judgments as it did.

The foregoing shows that the conflict in the testimony was and is substantial, and involves directly the material facts presented for decision, and having been resolved in favor of the respondents, the judgments in both cases must be and are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 203

SARINA v. PEDROTTI et al. (Civ. 3858.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1930.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(2)—Persons entering possession before lease terminated without lessee's consent were mere trespassers, not making landlord liable under covenant of quiet enjoyment.

If others entered into possession of premises prior to date of expiration of lease without consent of lessee, they were mere trespassers, and landlord was not liable under covenant of quiet enjoyment and possession of leased premises, such covenant being equivalent to stipulation that lessee shall not be rightfully disturbed in his possession during term, and not that he shall not be disturbed at all.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨130(2)—Lessor is not responsible under covenant of quiet enjoyment for acts of mere trespasser.

The lessor is not responsible under the covenant of quiet enjoyment for the acts of a mere trespasser, though the effect of the trespasser's acts may be to deprive the lessee of the benefits of the lease, the remedy of the lessee being against the trespasser, not against the lessor.

3. Tenancy in common ⇨51—Tenant in common cannot bind cotenants by contract.

A tenant in common has no power to bind any of his cotenants by contract.

4. Landlord and tenant ⇨48(2)—Evidence held insufficient to prove agreement between lessee and lessor to sell land and personal property of lessee together.

Testimony held insufficient to prove agreement between lessee and one of lessors, who was tenant in common with other lessor, to sell land leased and personal property of lessee together, but merely to show that parties had under consideration prospect or possible opportunity of making sale.

5. Landlord and tenant ⇨180(6)—Whether, lessee, suing for eviction, was entitled to reasonable value of plowing and seeding land held for jury.

Where evidence relating to count of complaint in action for eviction demanding reasonable value of plowing and seeding certain land alleged to be certain amount conflicted, it was for jury to determine whether lessee was entitled to recover judgment in some amount from one of lessors for plowing and seeding part of land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Action by Robert Sarina against Mathias J. Pedrotti and others. From an adverse judgment, the defendants appeal. Reversed.

Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, and George W. Howe, of Crescent City, for appellants.
Puter & Quinn, of Eureka, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. For many years prior to the transactions herein mentioned the defendants were the owners of a dairy ranch of something over 500 acres in Del Norte county, which was held under lease by the plaintiff and on which he kept a dairy herd of more than 100 cows. October 4, 1926, a new lease of the premises was executed by the parties for a "term beginning on the first day of December, 1926, and ending on the 30th day of November, 1927."

The complaint contains three counts. In the first it is alleged that the defendants evicted the plaintiff from 160 acres of the land to his damage in the sum of $5,000. In the second it is alleged that the defendants, "during the winter of 1926-27, proposed to plaintiff that said plaintiff and defendants should sell out together, that is get a buyer for all the land and personal property together, and in that way a better price could be secured for both the real and personal property than if the personal property were sold separate and apart from the real property, and as an inducement and as a consideration for a combined sale of said real and personal property the said defendants proposed to plaintiff that plaintiff plow up and seed 110 acres, and that they would furnish and pay for the seed in order that said dairy ranch would be in a better shape and condition for dairy purposes, and bring about a sale more easily, and also render easier a sale of the personal property, * * * and said defendants promised at said time and prior thereto promised plaintiff not to sell said real property unless a sale of plaintiff's personal property was made at the same time; that relying upon said promises of defendants said plaintiff did plow up 110 acres of said land and did seed the same to grass as requested by said defendants and all of said seeding was done in the months of March and April, 1927; * * * that without notifying or consulting plaintiff said defendants did on or about the first day of September, 1927, enter into an agreement for sale of said premises with one John L. Childs and * * * did then and there abandon all intention or attempt of endeavoring to make a combined sale of the personal property belonging to plaintiff and the real property belonging to defendants; * * * that said personal property could have been sold much more advantageously as a whole and in combination with the sale of said premises than if said personal property had to be sold and removed from said premises and that by reason of the failure of said defendants to carry out their said promise concerning a combined sale of said premises and said personal property as aforesaid, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $7,500." The third count is for the reasonable value of plowing and seeding said 110 acres of land, alleged to be the sum of $1,500.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff against all the defendants in the sum of $5,000, the respective amounts awarded on the several counts not being specified. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict and the defendants have appealed.

[1, 2] By an instrument dated October 5, 1927, the defendants leased the lands involved in the action to John L. Childs for "the term of four years from and after the first day of December, 1927," at the rental of $3,750 a year, payable semiannually in advance, with the option to purchase the land for the sum of $75,000, said option to "continue during the life of this lease," and the further option, "during the term of this lease only," to purchase "lots 9, 10, and 11" of the leased lands for $18,000. The evidence shows without conflict that the lease was not delivered to Childs until after the expiration of the plaintiff's term, but it is probable that the terms of the lease were agreed upon prior to its execution, for in the early part of September, 1927, Childs leased two parcels of about 80 acres each to Manuel Mellow and W. Ammons, respectively, and placed them in possession. Childs testified that he placed these men in possession with the plaintiff's consent; that early in July, 1927, he and the plaintiff came to an understanding that the former would endeavor to acquire the land from the defendants and that he and the plaintiff would cooperate in the sale thereof and divide the profits equally between them; that "it was understood between these people (defendants) and myself that I had nothing to do with that place until the first day of December," but that the plaintiff cooperated with him in placing Mellow and Ammons on the land. The plaintiff contradicted a large part of Childs' testimony, but there is no evidence tending to show that the defendants were in any manner instrumental in putting Mellow or Ammons in possession or in interfering with the plaintiff's possession or use of the lands. The defendants did not convey to Childs any part of or interest in the estate which they had theretofore conveyed to the plaintiff by their lease to him. Childs was as much a stranger to such interest as if he had received no conveyance from the defendants. If he and his grantees entered into possession prior to December 1, 1927, without the plaintiff's consent they were mere trespassers. The landlord's covenant of quiet enjoyment and possession of leased premises "is equivalent to a stipulation that the lessee shall not be rightfully disturbed in his possession during the term, not that he shall not be disturbed at all. The lessor is not responsible under the covenant for the acts of a mere trespasser, though the effect of the trespasser's acts may be to deprive the lessee of the benefits of the lease, the latter's remedy being against the trespasser, not against the lessor." 15 Cal. Jur. 635.

[3, 4] In support of the second count of the complaint the plaintiff testified that he received a letter from the defendant Pedrotti and another from the defendant Winfield Strain, neither of which letters was produced. On the ground that he was unable to find the letters the plaintiff testified in relation to their receipt and contents as follows: "I received a letter from Mr. Pedrotti sometime after the first of the year (1927). * * * He told me in the letter that he wanted me to send him price for anything I own there. He said he had a buyer. He wanted my creamery statement for 1926. So I sent him the creamery statement. * * * About a month after that I got a letter from Winfield Strain. He told me he got a letter from Mr. Pedrotti and he said the price is all right that I made on the cattle and that they be up inside of two weeks and buy what I had. * * * He told me to keep the place up in order to get better price, so they get better price for the sale of the place, they pay for the seeding and everything else that I do. * * * Well, I started in to seed and put the ranch in good shape so when they come up it be in shape; it would be seeded anyway and get better price for it. * * * Contents of the letter was they want to know when the cows was coming in and they was willing to pay for seeding and have me put the place in shape so we get better price for the sale; for the ranch and cattle. * * * I went to work and seeded about 100 acres. * * * I seed two fields with rye grass and another field with clover."

Another witness for the plaintiff testified that he saw and read a letter from Winfield Strain to the plaintiff in which Strain "wrote to him about going to keep up the place and he was going to fetch some parties up and buy him out, and the price was all right. * * * Went on to tell him to keep the place up; he had some buyers and was going to fetch them up. * * * He was going to buy him out and the price was all right." Both Strain and Pedrotti testified that they did not send the plaintiff any letter of the character described by him. There is no evidence to show that either William Strain or Pedrotti authorized Winfield Strain to make any agreement in their behalf. The defendants owned the land as tenants in common. "A tenant in common has no power to bind any of his cotenants by contract." 7 Cal. Jur. 358.

Taking the testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses as true, it is wholly insufficient to prove an agreement, even between the plaintiff and Winfield Strain, to sell the land and the personal property together, as alleged in the second count of the complaint. At most, such evidence merely shows that the parties had under consideration a prospect or possible opportunity of making such a sale. The evidence does not show that there was any agreement as to the price at which the land was to be sold or the terms of the proposed sale of either the land or the personal property. "It is well settled that no action will lie to enforce the performance of a contract, or to recover damages for its breach, unless it be complete and certain; and the rule applies as well to price as to subject-matter and parties." Talmadge v. Arrowhead R. Co., 101 Cal. 367, 371, 35 P. 1000, 1002. "An agreement that parties will, in the future, make such contract as they may then agree upon amounts to nothing. An agreement to enter into negotiations and agree upon the terms of a contract, if they can, cannot be made the basis of a cause of action." Dillingham v. Dahlgren, 52 Cal. App. 322, 330, 193 P. 832, 835.

[5] The evidence relating to the third count is conflicting, and it cannot be held as a matter of law that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover judgment in some amount from Winfield Strain for plowing and seeding a part of the land; but it cannot be ascertained from the record what sum, if any, the jury allowed therefor. There is no evidence tending to show that the other defendants are liable for such plowing and sowing.

The court erred in some of the instructions to the jury and in refusing to give some of the instructions requested by the defendants, but such errors are sufficiently indicated by what has already been said.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

LACOE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY, DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS et al. (Civ. 6775.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

Master and servant §363—Injuries received by farm employee while trimming trees held sustained while engaged in "household domestic service," and hence not compensable (Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act 1917).

Where husband and wife were employed on farm, wife to attend to housework and husband to perform other farm services, such as putting in crop, garden work, carpenter work, caring for horses and trimming trees, injury sustained by husband by falling out of tree which he was trimming held sustained while engaged in household domestic services within meaning of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831) and hence not compensable under section 70 (St. 1917, p. 877) and St. 1927, p. 1681.

Houser, J., dissenting.

Proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act by John Swanson, employee, opposed by R. D. Lacoe, employer. The Industrial Accident Commission of the Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, Department of Industrial Relations, granted an award, and employer applies for certiorari. Award annulled.

Sweet & Plank, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen and G. C. Faulkner, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. John Swanson presented to the Industrial Accident Commission his application for an award of compensation for disability resulting from an injury received by him while working as an employee of R. D. Lacoe. Compensation, having been allowed, the employer now seeks to have the award annulled.

The award should be sustained unless the evidence fails to show that the injury was received while rendering service in an employment coming within the scope of the compensatory provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 831). According to section 8(a) of this act, the definition of the word "employee" as used therein excludes "any person whose employment is both casual and not in the course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer"; and also excludes "any employee engaged in household domestic service, farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising." In George v. Industrial Accident Commission, 178 Cal. 733, 174 P. 653, the applicant George was employed as janitor and gardener at a school for girls which was conducted by the employer. The employee was injured while trimming an acacia tree adjacent to the school building. It was held that George's employment was dual in character, and that, in so far as he acted as a gardener, his work was horticultural and beyond the purview of the Compensation Act. No question relating to domestic service was included in that case.

Section 70 of the Compensation Act provides for a procedure whereby an employer and employee may by their joint election bring within the compensation provisions any excluded employment. The provisions of section 70 and of section 8(a), to which we have referred, were part of the Compensation Act as enacted in the year 1917 and have not been amended, except as those provisions are affected by the statute next herein mentioned. By statute enacted in the year 1927, a rule of presumption was created, with reference to all of the excluded employments hereinabove mentioned, other than "household domestic service." St. 1927, p. 1681. Section 1 of this act reads as follows: "Any employer and his employees engaged in farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural employments or in stock or poultry raising, not subject to the compensation provisions of the 'workmen's compensation, insurance and safety act of 1917,' as amended, shall, from and after the date this act takes effect, be conclusively presumed to have accepted the compensation provisions of said act and amendments thereto and to have included in their contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, a mutual agreement to accept said provisions, unless either such employer or employee shall, prior to the occurrence of any injury have given notice of rejection of said provisions of said act in the manner herein provided." The remaining sections refer to the manner of giving notice of rejection or of making withdrawal of such notice.

In the case at bar it does not appear that the employer and employee, or either of them, ever made any election of the kind referred to in section 70 of the Compensation Act or gave any notice of rejection in accordance with said act of 1927.

The evidence shows that Lacoe was the owner of a 30-acre tract of land in San Diego county. On this land there was a family residence, and at a short distance therefrom a small house for employees. He lived in San Diego and kept this country place for part time residence and recreation. Part of the land was used for agricultural purposes, the actual work being done by a neighboring farmer who worked the land on "shares." The house and garden were, therefore, in their use distinctly separate from the leased land. In May, 1928, Lacoe and his wife sold their house in the city and decided to move out to this ranch, but not remain there all of the time. They therefore planned "to put a man and his wife on the place to keep the place going and when we would come there it would be running, and the table run, and everything." It was under these circumstances that Swanson and his wife were employed, with the understanding that Mrs. Swanson would attend to the housework and that Swanson would perform other services. We are now concerned only with the nature of the employment in respect to Swanson. After he had been there a few days he received an injury by falling out of a tree into which he had climbed for the purpose of cutting off a limb of the tree. The location of the tree was about 150 feet from Lacoe's house. It was not claimed by the employee that he received any direct instruction to trim this tree or that he was doing this work with knowledge of the employer. His contention was that the work was within the scope of his employment, and that the nature of the employment, including this work, was such that the disability resulting from the injury is compensable. In the testimony of Swanson, in answer to a question as to the kind of arrangement under which he was working he said: "My duties were to do farm work, put in the crop when it was the season, and do garden work, and carpenter work which was specified, and that was what I had been doing mostly, carpenter work and trimming trees and taking care of horses * * * during the six days that I had worked I had been doing carpenter work mostly." Again: "Q. Your duties were to do all things necessary about the home of Mr. Lacoe, which was on this ranch, that were necessary for the care and upkeep of his place? Your wife doing some of the inside and you doing the work on the outside? Ans. I think so."

We think that the decision of this case depends upon the answer to one question. At the time of the accident in which Swanson was injured was he an employee "engaged in household domestic service?" We are of the opinion that he was so engaged. One may be engaged in employment pertaining to the household without being strictly a house servant. This particular question does not appear to have been answered in any of the decisions in this state. The cases mentioned in the brief for petitioner are in harmony with our view as above stated. The cases referred to by counsel for respondent commission do not meet the point or discuss the nature or limitations of household domestic service. In Catto v. Plant, 106 Conn. 236, 137 A. 764, the Supreme Court of Connecticut discussed some of the leading English and American cases bearing upon the definition of the term "domestic servant." The court then said (page 766 of 137 A.): "Without * * * attempting to formulate a definition which would be applicable to all cases, we think it may be said that ordinarily a domestic servant is one whose service is connected with the maintenance of the house and land connected with it and constituting the establishment of his employer in such a way that his work and duties, whether in or outside the house, have to do with the running of the establishment or estate in providing for and ministering to the wants and comforts of the members of his employer's household." The court further refers to an old English case in which it was held that a head gardener was a household servant. The Connecticut court further said: "Here plaintiff lived and worked in the domain of this country estate, and the services he performed were rendered in and for the household of the master of the domain and quite distinct, as it seems to us, from services rendered by an employee or laborer upon a farm or any other enterprise conducted apart from the household of the employer." In the case at bar, the employee was performing service pertaining to the maintenance of the household, or premises, constituting the family home; not service pertaining to the operation of the farm. He was injured while doing work of the household. We think that this was "household domestic service," within the meaning of those words as used in the Compensation Act.

The award is annulled.

I concur: YORK, J.

HOUSER, J. I dissent. I am not in accord with the conclusion that a man is a household domestic servant whose duties are "to do farm work, put in the crop (on 30 acres of land) * * * do garden work, and carpenter work, * * * trimming trees, and taking care of horses." That sort of employment would appear to be the common, every day work of the ordinary ranch hand on a comparatively small place.

On concededly substantial evidence adduced at the hearing, the commission found that the "applicant while employed * * * as a gardener * * * sustained injury arising out of and in the course of said employment. * * *" There was no finding that the employee was ever engaged in "household domestic service," as such.

In the case of George v. Industrial Accident Commission, 178 Cal. 733, 174 P. 653, 654, it was held that one might be employed in a dual capacity—that of janitor and that of gardener; that "in so far as he acted as a gardener his work was horticultural, * * *" and that "whether or not George [the employee] at the time of his injury, was engaged in horticultural labor was a question of fact to be determined by the commission. Its finding thereon, if supported by any rational view of the evidence, is beyond review here." To the same effect, as to the conclusiveness on this court of a finding of fact by the commission that in the instant case the employee was a gardener (and consequently engaged in horticultural work), see 27 Cal. Jur. 578, and cases there cited; also, note in the supplement to the same work, p. 1619.

By the provision of section 1 of the Statutes of 1927, p. 1681, "any employer and his employees engaged in * * * horticultural employments * * * shall * * * be conclusively presumed to have accepted the compensation provisions" of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. It would seem to follow that the applicant before the respondent commission was entitled to be compensated for the injury received by him.

103 Cal. App. 386

SUDDEN LUMBER CO. v. SINGER et al. ★
(Civ. 6892.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 24, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Mechanics' liens ⇨281(1)—Evidence supported court's finding that neither bondsman on building contractor's bond was good and sufficient surety (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

In action to foreclose materialman's lien, evidence held to support trial court's finding that bondsmen on building contractor's bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, were not good and sufficient sureties.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨279—In action to foreclose materialman's lien, burden was on plaintiff to prove bondsmen on contractor's bond were not sufficient sureties (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

In action to foreclose materialman's lien, burden rested on plaintiff to prove that bondsmen on building contractor's bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, were not sufficient sureties.

3. Appeal and error ⇨994(3)—Trial ⇨140(1)—Jury or trial court sitting as jury are exclusive judges of witness' credibility (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, jury or trial court sitting as jury are exclusive judges of credibility of witness.

4. Mechanics' liens ⇨229—To limit owner's liability to contract price, contractor's bond must conform to statutory requirement that sureties be good and sufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

In order to limit building owner's liability to contract price, contractor's bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, must, among other things, conform to statutory requirement that sureties be good and sufficient; otherwise it furnishes no protection to owner against liens for labor and material.

5. Mechanics' liens ⇨263(1)—In action to foreclose materialman's lien, bondsmen, though not good and sufficient sureties, were properly joined as defendants with contractor and owner (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

In action to foreclose materialman's lien, bondsmen, although they were not good and sufficient sureties as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, were nevertheless liable upon their contract and were properly joined as defendants with contractor and owner.

6. Mechanics' liens ⇨229—Entry of judgment against one of sureties on contractor's bond did not absolve owner's property from liability (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183).

Entry of judgment against one of sureties on building contractor's bond given under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, did not absolve property of owner from liability, where bondsmen were not good and sufficient sureties.

7. Appeal and error ⇨918(1)—Where there is conflict in affidavits supporting motion for leave to file amended and supplemental complaint, those in favor of prevailing party must be taken as true.

Where there is conflict in affidavits supporting motion for leave to file amended and supplemental complaint, those in favor of prevailing party must be taken as true, and facts stated therein must be considered as established on appeal.

8. Appeal and error ⇨1041(2)—In action to foreclose materialman's lien, granting permission to file amended and supplemental complaint alleging insufficiency of sureties, if error, held harmless.

In action to foreclose materialman's lien, granting of motion for leave to file second amended and supplemental complaint in which insufficiency of sureties was alleged, if error, held harmless, where evidence taken at trial showed that neither bondsman was at any time a good and sufficient surety.

9. Pleading ⇨236(6), 276—Leave to file second amended and supplemental complaint alleging insufficiency of sureties was addressed to court's discretion.

In action to foreclose materialman's lien, motion for leave to file second amended and supplemental complaint in which insufficiency of sureties was alleged was addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by the Sudden Lumber Company against F. M. Singer, Robert J. Walsh and others to foreclose a materialman's lien. From the judgment, Walsh appeals. Affirmed.

Goldman & Altman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Philip S. Ehrlich, of San Francisco (Albert A. Axelrod, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff, a materialman, furnished F. M. Singer, a contractor, with lumber to be used and which was used in the construction of a building on premises owned by defendant and appellant, Robert J. Walsh. The contractor having failed to pay for the lumber, the present action was brought against the owner of the premises to foreclose plaintiff's claim of lien thereon and for a personal judgment against the contractor and defendants Charles Gust and R. O. Ostrander, who were sureties upon a bond filed by the contractor. Defendants Singer and Ostrander were not served with summons and the case was tried against Walsh and Gust. Judgment was entered against Gust for $4,000, the value of the lumber, and $1.77, the expense of filing the claim of lien, and against Walsh for the foreclosure of the lien and sale of the premises. The latter has appealed from the judgment.

The complaint alleged that the bondsmen were not good or sufficient sureties at the time of the execution of the bond or thereafter. The bond, which was for $9,218, in addition to a condition for the performance by the contractor, was also, as provided by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, conditioned for the payment in full of the claims of all persons performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the work, and by its terms was made to inure to the benefit of all such persons. Appellant alleged, and the court found, that the contract price of the building was $18,435; that he had paid to the contractor, who had abandoned the work before completion, the sum of $11,553.75, and in addition the sum of $600 as architect's fees, with $2,136.08 to complete the building, the total payments thereon being $14,289.83; that claims of lien which, including that of plaintiff, aggregated $11,318.23, had been filed thereon, and there remained in his hands as the balance of the contract price the sum of $4,145.17.

Appellant denied that the bond was insufficient, and it was stipulated at the trial that if the court should find the bond to be sufficient under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover from appellant but 36.6 per cent. of his claim, namely, $1,464.

[1, 2] The court found that neither at the time the bond was executed nor at any time thereafter was either bondsman a good or sufficient surety.

As grounds for the appeal it is contended that the above finding is unsupported; that by suing the sureties and obtaining a judgment against one of them the plaintiff is estopped from asserting a claim against the property in excess of the contract price; and that an order by the trial court permitting the plaintiff to file a second amended and supplemental complaint was prejudicially erroneous.

Appellant testified that he had never seen Ostrander and that his first and only meeting with Gust was after the transaction in question; that before the bond was executed he inquired of the assistant cashier of a bank as to Gust's financial condition, and was told that the latter had equities in second mortgages which the bank controlled sufficient to cover his liability on the bond, and that the witness requested his architect to make inquiries regarding Ostrander and was informed by the architect "that he was positive that Ostrander had securities to the amount of $50,000 or $60,000." The witness further stated that Ostrander was at the time a contractor engaged in business near Antioch. According to Gust, who testified that he could not read English, he stated to the contractor before signing the bond that he had no money or property, further testifying in that connection, "I had lots of bills at the time." After stating in effect that he and Ostrander were together when the bond was signed, he testified: "I knew Mr. Ostrander. He worked for Mr. Singer at the time I knew him. I have not seen him since he signed the bond." The witness also stated: "At the time I executed the bond I had fourteen houses subject to mortgage. My equity in the property over the mortgages at that time was about $10,000. The holders of the first mortgages on the properties which I had at that time have since foreclosed. The only property which I have today is my home. It is worth $7,000. It is subject to a mortgage of $4,000. * * * It is homesteaded."

The testimony of the last witness leaves it doubtful whether the person referred to by the architect signed the bond. The circumstances shown strongly support the conclusion of the trial court that the bondsmen, and particularly defendant Gust, were at no time sufficient, and amply sustain the burden which in this respect, according to Tyler v. J. I. Mitrovich, etc., Co., 47 Cal. App. 59, 190 P. 208, rested upon the plaintiff.

[3] While, as urged by appellant, the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness may not be arbitrarily disregarded (Stewart v. Silva, 192 Cal. 405, 221 P. 191), nevertheless the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be overcome by the character of his testimony; and the jury, or the trial court sitting as a jury, are the exclusive judges of his credibility (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847). There was sufficient in connection with the testimony of the witness Gust to make the Code section peculiarly applicable and to justify the trial court in refusing to give full credit to all of his testimony.

[4] The bond provided in accordance with the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1183) that the persons for whose benefit it was given should have a right of action thereon in any suit brought to foreclose a lien provided for in chapter 2 of title IV of part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or in a separate suit. The purpose of requiring a bond to accompany the contract is to create an additional fund or security for the satisfaction of lien claimants (Hubbard v. Jurian, 35 Cal. App. 757, 170 P. 1093; Sunset Lumber Co. v. Smith, 91 Cal. App. 746, 267 P. 738; 17 Cal. Jur., Mechanics' Liens, § 46, p. 75), and also to limit the owner's liability to the contract price (Roystone Co. v. Darling, 171 Cal. 526, 154 P. 15); but to have the latter effect it must, among other things, conform to the statutory requirement that the sureties be good and sufficient (S. R. Frazee Co. v. Arnold, 46 Cal. App. 74, 188 P. 822); otherwise it furnishes no protection to the owner against liens for labor and material on the building (Roystone Co. v. Darling, supra).

[5, 6] It is claimed, however, that the plaintiff, having procured the entry of a judgment against one of the bondsmen, is thereby estopped from asserting the insufficiency of the bond as against the owner. While, as held in Tyler v. J. I. Mitrovich, etc., Co., supra, a party cannot denounce a contract as void and at the same time demand the enforcement of such of its provisions as are favorable to himself, here the bond was not found to be nor was it void, but the same was insufficient to afford protection to the owner. The bondsmen, notwithstanding that they were not good and sufficient sureties, were nevertheless liable upon their contract (Hammond Lumber Co. v. Willis, 171 Cal. 565, 153 P. 947); and were properly joined as defendants with the contractor and owner (Holden v. Mensinger, 175 Cal. 300, 304, 165 P. 950; Hillcrest Co. v. Schrier, 41 Cal. App. 624, 183 P. 239). The entry of judgment against one of them did not absolve the property of the owner from liability, and their lack of the statutory qualifications afforded sufficient ground for refusal to restrict plaintiff's recovery to the amount of the contract price. S. R. Frazee Co. v. Arnold, supra.

The action was commenced on January 28, 1927, and on May 16, 1927, the plaintiff filed his amended complaint. No attack was made in these pleadings upon the sufficiency of the sureties. Appellant answered on June 15, 1927, and on February 14, 1928, the plaintiff moved for leave to file a second amended and supplemental complaint in which the insufficiency of the sureties was alleged. The motion was granted. The appellant contends that the notice of motion was insufficient and that the order was an abuse of discretion. The affidavit in support of the motion alleged that appellant on numerous occasions after the action was filed stated that the sureties were worth the amount of the bond over and above their just debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution, and that plaintiff ascertained their insufficiency subsequent to the filing of his amended complaint. Appellant in reply denied making the statement alleged and averred that the original pleadings not having attacked the sufficiency of the sureties he had made no attempt during the year last past to ascertain their sufficiency, and that the whereabouts of Ostrander were unknown to appellant.

[7] Where there is a conflict in the affidavits, those in favor of the prevailing party must be taken as true and the facts stated therein must be considered as established (Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 P. 1001; Corgiat v. Realty Mortgage, etc., Corporation, 86 Cal. App. 37, 260 P. 573); and if the plaintiff was misled by the statements of appellant there was no abuse of discretion in granting leave to amend. Moreover, it sufficiently appears from the evidence taken at the trial that neither bondsman was at any time a good and sufficient surety, and that appellant was not justified in accepting him as such.

[8, 9] But it is contended that this evidence, not having been before the court when the motion was granted, cannot cure the error. Should error be conceded, it was not reversible, however, as the above evidence shows that appellant was not prejudiced thereby. Gill v. Southern Pacific Co., 174 Cal. 84, 161 P. 1153; Shull v. Crawford, 33 Cal. App. 36, 41, 164 P. 330; Batcher v. Hoepfner, 65 Cal. App. 385, 224 P. 117. The motion was addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and we cannot say that the order was an abuse of discretion.

The findings of the court are fully supported, and on an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, we are satisfied that no error has been shown which can reasonably be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

103 Cal. App. 253

BAYSIDE LAND CO. v. DOLLEY et al.*
(Civ. 40.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 18, 1930.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 19, 1930.

1. Certiorari ⇨70(6)—Record containing no formal return to alternative writ of review other than demurrer must be considered as adopting allegations of petition.

Where record on appeal from judgment directing writ of review to issue annulling assessment contains no formal return to the alternative writ other than a demurrer, it must be considered as adopting allegations of the petition as a return and as a part of judgment roll.

2. Certiorari ⇨28(2)—Writ of review can only be employed to review proceedings in judicial capacity beyond jurisdiction.

A writ of review can only be employed to review the proceedings of a court or other body acting in a judicial capacity beyond its jurisdiction.

3. Certiorari ⇨21—Trustees in determining protest to report and assessment for removing weeds acted in judicial capacity as respected right to writ of review (Weed Abatement Act).

Board of trustees hearing and acting on protest to report of street superintendent and his assessment of cost of removing weeds from lots, pursuant to resolution adopted under authority of Weed Abatement Act (St. 1915, p. 841), acted in a judicial capacity so as to authorize writ of review.

4. Constitutional law ☞290(7)—Municipal corporations ☞623(2)—Trustees had no power to cause removal of weeds or assess cost therefor on property, unless resolution contained particular description of property (Weed Abatement Act; Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13; Const. U. S. Amend. 14).

Board of trustees of city had no power or authority to cause weeds to be removed from lots or cost to be assessed on property unless resolution therefor adopted pursuant to authority of Weed Abatement Act (St. 1915, p. 841) contained particular description of property, in that any attempt to assess property without such notice would be in violation of Const. Cal. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law.

5. Municipal corporations ☞623(2)—Defect in mode of assessment against lots for removal of weeds could not be reached in proceedings for alternative writ of review (Weed Abatement Act).

Defect in mode of assessment against lots for removal of weeds pursuant to resolution adopted under authority of Weed Abatement Act (St. 1915, p. 841), by apportioning total cost of removal among total number of lots affected, could not be reached in proceeding for an alternative writ of review on ground board of trustees was without jurisdiction to confirm assessment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; James L. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Bayside Land Company against R. E. Dolley and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Burr A. Brown, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Nelson & Burns, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

MARKS, J. The appellant city of Seal Beach is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, situated within the county of Orange, state of California, and the other appellants composed its board of trustees, at all times material to this proceeding. Respondent is a corporation that owned about 700 lots within the city of Seal Beach, of which at least a large number were subjected to the assessment sought to be voided by the writ of review granted by the trial court herein. For convenience we will refer to the city of Seal Beach as the city, and the individual appellants as the board of trustees.

On April 7, 1927, the board of trustees passed a resolution whereby it instituted proceedings to abate noxious and dangerous weeds upon certain lots within the city, under an act of the Legislature of the state of California approved May 26, 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 841), which we will refer to as the Weed Abatement Act. The proceedings were taken to the point of receiving the report and assessment of the street superintendent by the board of trustees, without objection on the part of property owners. Respondent filed its protest to this report and assessment, which was overruled by the board of trustees, and the report and assessment were confirmed.

Respondent secured an alternative writ of review from the court below upon the ground that the board of trustees was without jurisdiction to confirm the assessment. Upon the return day fixed in the alternative writ appellants filed a general and special demurrer to the petition of respondent, which was overruled. Appellants declined to answer or make further return to the petition, and judgment was rendered against them directing a peremptory writ to issue annulling the assessment.

[1] The record before us consists of the petition, demurrer, order overruling the demurrer, judgment, order for transcript, and notice of appeal, besides affidavits of mailing. Where, as in this case, the record contains no formal return to the alternative writ, other than a demurrer, it must be considered as adopting the allegations of the petition as a return and as a part of the judgment roll. Stoner v. City of Los Angeles, 8 Cal. App. 607, 97 P. 692. The allegations of the petition, therefore, constitute the only record before us from which we may attempt to determine the jurisdiction of the board of trustees to make the order confirming the report and assessment of the street superintendent.

The Weed Abatement Act does not seem to have been construed by any of the Courts of Appeal of this state. A study of the act would indicate the following general steps necessary to legally levy an assessment to pay the cost of removing the weeds described in section 1 of the act: First, the board of trustees must, by resolution, declare such weeds to be a public nuisance, and shall describe the street, or streets, along which the work is to be done, by the name under which it, or they, are commonly known, and describe the property upon, or in front of, which the nuisance exists, by the lot and block number of the same according to the official map or the assessment map of such municipality. Second, after the passage of the resolution, the street superintendent shall cause to be posted a notice, in the form prescribed in the act, in front of the property on, or in front of, which such nuisance exists, at a distance of not more than 100 feet apart, and not less than three in all. The notice must give a time and place for the hearing of protests of property owners, and must be posted at least five days prior to such hearing. Third, at the time fixed, the legislative body must hear and consider all objections or protests, and shall allow or overrule any or all of the same. The act provides that the legislative body shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the proceedings at this point. Fourth, after the disposition of protests, if any, the legislative body of the municipality shall order the street superintendent to abate the nuisance, and he is authorized to enter upon private property so to do. Any property owner is given the right to remove the weeds at his own expense prior to the arrival of the superintendent of streets to do such work. This would seem to give the property owner an opportunity to escape an assessment on his property, if he so desired. Fifth, the street superintendent is required to keep an account of the cost of abating such nuisance on, or in front of, each separate lot or parcel of land where work is done, and shall render an itemized report in writing to the legislative body showing the cost of removing such weeds on, or in front of, or both, of each separate lot. A copy of such itemized report must be posted on or near the chamber door of the legislative body for at least three days prior to its submission to such body for confirmation, together with a notice of the time when it will be so submitted. The act does not provide who shall give such notice. Sixth, at the time fixed in the notice, any owner whose property is liable to be assessed may protest. The legislative body must hear and consider such protests, and may make such modifications thereof as may be deemed necessary, after which the report, or the report as modified, must be confirmed. The amount of the cost of the removal of the weeds upon, or in front of, the respective parcels of land, shall constitute a special assessment against, and a lien upon, each of such parcels, such assessment to be collected by the tax collector of the municipality at the same time and in the same manner as the ordinary municipal taxes. This summary of the Weed Abatement Act is of necessity very general, and is only particularized to such an extent as to enable us to consider the objections raised to the assessment in the case before us.

[2-4] A writ of review can only be employed to review the proceedings of a court or other body acting in a judicial capacity beyond its jurisdiction. In this case the writ is directed to the resolution of the board of trustees overruling the protests and confirming the report and assessment of the street superintendent. Under various local improvement acts of this state, similar proceedings before boards of supervisors and legislative bodies of municipalities have been held judicial actions and subject to review in proceedings such as the one before us. Federal Construction Co. v. Curd, 179 Cal. 489, 177 P. 469, 2 A. L. R. 1202; People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 P. 207; Wulzen v.

Board of Supervisors, 101 Cal. 15, 35 P. 353, 40 Am. St. Rep. 17; Cutting v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 151, 187 P. 19. We therefore hold that the board of trustees of the city of Seal Beach acted in a judicial capacity in hearing and acting upon the protest of respondent to the report of the street superintendent and his assessment of the cost of removing weeds from on or in front of respondent's lots. It appears from the petition that on April 7, 1927, the board of trustees passed the first resolution under the Weed Abatement Act. It is alleged that thereafter the street superintendent of the city caused to be posted a notice to destroy weeds, which notice failed to describe some 63 lots belonging to respondent from which the weeds were subsequently removed and which lots were assessed to pay the cost thereof. The Weed Abatement Act does not require the lots to be particularly described in the notice. They must be described in the resolution, and the notice must refer to the resolution for a particular description of the property. Of course, if the lots in question were not described in the resolution, the board of trustees would have no power or authority to cause the weeds to be removed or the cost to be assessed on the property. Such an act would exceed the jurisdiction of the board, as the property owner must have notice of the proceeding and the right to protest. Any attempt to assess property without such notice, where the property may be sold upon default of the payment of such assessment, would be in violation of article I, section 13, of the Constitution of California, and the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provide that no person shall be deprived of property without due process of law. Brookes v. City of Oakland, 160 Cal. 423, 117 P. 433; Peck v. Bernard, 12 Cal. App. 558, 108 P. 55. There is nothing in the record to show whether or not the resolution was in form to give such notice to the property owner. If such notice was not given, the assessment on these 63 lots must fail. We intend to express no opinion of the effect of such an omission, if such there was, upon the balance of the assessment.

The proceedings are further attacked upon the ground that the board of trustees failed to post a copy of the itemized report of the street superintendent on, or near the door of the council chamber, together with a notice of the time and place of the hearing of such report at least three days prior to the submission of the report to the board. The act does not impose upon the board of trustees the duty of posting the report or giving such notice. The report must be posted and the notice given prior to its being submitted to the board, which would indicate that the duty should be performed by some other authority, presumably the street superintendent, in whose possession the report would seem to remain until its submission to the board.

[5] Respondent attacked the proceeding upon the further ground of an alleged erroneous assessment of the property by the street superintendent. It is alleged that, instead of keeping an actual account of the cost of removing the weeds from in front of and on each parcel of ground, he took the total cost of removing the weeds from on and in front of all the lots, and divided this figure by the total number of lots affected reaching the result of $1.85 which sum he assessed against each lot. This mode of assessment is not contemplated by the act. Each lot should bear the cost of removing the weeds on and in front of it. It may be assumed here that the board of trustees should not have confirmed the assessment in the form submitted by the street superintendent. However, this defect cannot be reached in this proceeding. It is at most an erroneous judgment of the board of trustees, and is not a void act if jurisdiction of the proceedings were obtained by it. Larsen v. City and County of San Francisco, 182 Cal. 1, 186 P. 757; Hutchinson v. Coughlin, 42 Cal. App. 664, 184 P. 435; Barber v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 630. Respondent has other remedies to protect itself against such an assessment if the method of its levy is correctly set forth in the petition.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to take appropriate action in conformance herewith.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; BARNARD, J.

103 Cal. App. 169

McDONOUGH et al. v. WAXMAN et al.*
(Civ. 6838.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 15, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 13, 1930.

1. Guaranty ⚡27—Guarantor, generally, will not be held responsible for anything not within express terms of contract.

Guarantor, as a general rule, will not be held responsible for anything not within express terms of his contract, and his liability cannot be extended beyond those terms by implication.

2. Guaranty ⚡27—In determining meaning of contract of guaranty, same rules of construction as used in other contracts are to be employed.

In determining the meaning of language used in contract of guaranty, same rules of construction used in interpretation of other contracts are to be employed, and, like other contracts, they should be given a fair and reasonable interpretation, to ascertain true intent of parties.

3. Principal and surety ⚡175—Contract indemnifying surety against loss on bail bond included liability for loss from forfeiture of bond given in subsequent habeas corpus proceeding.

Contract of indemnity, for purpose of indemnifying surety on bail bond pending the hearing and determination of charge of having violated immigration laws, authorizing surety to furnish bail in a specified sum, or any other amount to which it shall be increased or reduced, held broad enough in its terms to include liability for loss suffered as a result of forfeiture of bond given in habeas corpus proceeding after surrender in exoneration of first bond executed therein.

4. Pleading ⚡46—Presence in caption of complaint inadvertently of words "a corporation" was of no importance.

Caption of complaint constitutes no part of statement of cause of action, and presence therein, inadvertently, of the words "a corporation," is of no importance, particularly where there was at no time a claim of corporate entity, nor were findings or judgment based on any such theory.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Peter P. McDonough and another, doing business under the name and style of McDonough Bros., against Charles C. Waxman and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Samuel D. Hamburg, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment rendered against them in an action to recover upon a contract of indemnity. The material facts are as follows:

One Morris Appleman had been or was about to be arrested by the federal authorities upon a charge of having violated the Immigration Laws (8 USCA § 101 et seq.), and pending the hearing and determination of the charge he was admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000. Plaintiffs, as agents for a surety company, were employed by defendants to furnish the bail, which they did, and Appleman was released from custody. The condition upon which plaintiffs furnished bail was that defendants enter into the contract of indemnity in question, the essential portions of which are hereinafter set forth. The charge against Appleman resulted in an order for his deportation, and habeas corpus proceedings were then instituted in his behalf to test the legal sufficiency of the charge and the validity of the deportation proceedings based thereon; but as a prerequisite to obtaining such a writ it was necessary for Appleman to surrender into the custody of the United States marshal, which he did, immediately following which he was again admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000, which plaintiffs again furnished. Pending the hearing of the latter proceeding Appleman disappeared, and as a consequence his bond was declared forfeited, and plaintiffs were required to pay the principal thereof to the government in conformity with the terms of the bond and the order of forfeiture.

[1, 2] The main contention defendants make in support of their appeal is that Appleman's surrender in exoneration of the first bond operated as a termination of the contract of indemnity, and that consequently they were not liable for the loss suffered by plaintiffs as a result of the forfeiture of the second bond. The general rule is that a guarantor will not be held responsible for anything not within the express terms of his contract, and that his liability cannot be extended beyond those terms by implication; but in this connection it is held that for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the language used in such a contract the same rules of construction used in the interpretation of other contracts are to be employed, and like other contracts they ought not to be construed with technical nicety, but should be given a fair and reasonable interpretation in order to ascertain the true intent of the parties. 13 Cal. Jur. 103.

[3] We agree with the trial court's conclusion that the contract in question, when construed in the light of the foregoing legal rules, is broad enough in its terms to include liability for the loss suffered by plaintiffs as a result of the forfeiture of the bond given in the habeas corpus proceeding. It reads in part as follows:

"Whereas, Morris Appleman, hereinafter called defendant, has been or is about to be arrested and is now or is about to be held in custody at ——— on a charge of Violation of Immigration Law, and having been admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000 by bond, or by deposit of $1,000 in cash; and whereas, I am desirous of having said defendant discharged from such custody and do hereby request McDonough Bros. of the city and county of San Francisco to give or cause to be given bail for the discharge of said defendant from such custody, either in said amount or in any other amount to which said bail shall be increased or reduced: Now, therefore, upon and in consideration of said McDonough Bros. giving or causing such bail to be given and thus procuring the discharge of said defendant from such custody I do hereby guarantee, undertake and promise * * * to hold and save said McDonough Bros., their heirs and assigns, free, clear, and harmless of and from and to indemnify them against any and all liability, loss, demands, claims, damages, forfeiture or loss of said bail," etc.

As will be observed from the foregoing recitals, at the time of the execution of the contract Appleman had been or was about to be arrested on a charge of violating the immigration laws, and the very purpose of the employment to furnish bail was to prevent his imprisonment during the period of time he was exercising whatever legal remedies were available to establish that said charge was without foundation in law or fact. Obviously the habeas corpus proceeding, being a method of inquiry into the legal sufficiency of the charge and of the order of deportation made pursuant thereto, constituted a part and in fact was a continuation of the attack Appleman was entitled to make against said charge in order to absolve himself therefrom. It will be noted, also, that more than one bond was contemplated because the contract by its terms authorized plaintiffs to furnish bail in the sum of $1,000, "or any other amount to which it shall be increased or reduced"; and it was not specified therein at what particular stage of the federal proceeding the bail was to be furnished, nor was defendants' liability restricted to loss which might be incurred by reason of the forfeiture of any particular bond.

Therefore, so far as the question of liability is concerned, it would seem to be immaterial whether the bond was given at one stage of the proceeding or another, so long as it served as bail to secure Appleman's release from imprisonment while pursuing a legal remedy to exculpate himself from the particular charge set forth in the contract of indemnity, namely, a violation of the immigration laws. And it is apparent that defendants themselves intended such to be the scope and effect of their contract, because evidence was adduced to show that prior to the execution of the contract they were fully informed that two bonds would doubtless be required, and that liability under their contract would continue "until the termination of the case"; and the attorney then representing Appleman explained to one of the defendants before he signed the contract that in resisting the charge habeas corpus proceedings would be resorted to, if necessary, in which event two bonds would be required. Moreover, evidence was introduced to the effect that prior to the surrender of Appleman in custody and the institution of the habeas corpus proceeding both defendants knew of the intention to take such action. Consequently, contrary to the claim made by defendants in that behalf, they were given an opportunity to object to such a move being made if they had so desired.

[4] The complaint alleged that plaintiffs "are now and have been at all of the times herein mentioned engaged in business in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, under the firm name and style of McDonough Bros.," and at the opening of the trial defendants stipulated that the foregoing allegation was true; but it appears that the caption of the complaint read as follows:

"Peter P. McDonough and Thomas McDonough, doing business under the name and style of McDonough Bros., a corporation, Plaintiffs." Defendants did not demur to the complaint, nor did they make any point regarding the caption in the trial court, but they now contend that the findings and judgment are unsupported by the evidence because no proof was offered to establish such corporate entity. The point is without merit, for the reason that the caption of the complaint constitutes no part of the statement of the cause of action, and it follows that the presence therein, inadvertently, of the words "a corporation" is of no importance. Moreover, at no time have plaintiffs claimed a corporate entity, nor are the findings or the judgment based upon any such theory.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 165

PEOPLE v. FREITHOFER. (Cr. 1891.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

1. Criminal law §193½—Verdict of guilty of second degree robbery was acquittal of first degree robbery (Pen. Code, § 211a).

By verdict finding defendant guilty of robbery in the second degree, the jury in effect acquitted him of first degree robbery, under Pen. Code, § 211a.

2. Criminal law §1175—Verdict of second degree robbery will not be reversed, because conviction should have been for first degree robbery (Pen. Code, § 211a).

Where defendant is charged with robbery, verdict of robbery in second degree will not be reversed, because conviction should have been for robbery in first degree under Pen. Code, § 211a.

3. Criminal law §1023(12), §1134(10)—Order denying probation for want of jurisdiction is not appealable, but reviewable on appeal from judgment.

Order denying probation on ground that court did not have jurisdiction to consider application therefor is not appealable, but may be reviewed on appeal from judgment.

4. Criminal law §1001—Circumstances of crime and defendant's character do not affect court's jurisdiction to hear and determine application for probation on its merits.

Where application for probation is filed by court's permission after conviction of second degree robbery, circumstances of crime and defendant's character go only to court's discretion in granting or denying probation, and do not deprive it of jurisdiction to hear and determine application on its merits.

5. Criminal law §1001—Principle that all concerned in commission of felony are principals does not affect court's jurisdiction to hear application for probation (Pen. Code, § 971).

Principle that all concerned in commission of felony shall be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals (Pen. Code, § 971) does not affect court's jurisdiction to hear and determine application for probation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. T. Aggeler, Judge.

Edward Freithofer was convicted of robbery in the second degree, and he appeals. Appeal from order denying probation dismissed, order denying motion for new trial affirmed, and judgment reversed, with directions.

Wm. Christensen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem. The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

This is an appeal from the judgment imposed upon appellant following his conviction of the crime of robbery in the second degree and from the order of the trial court denying his application for probation for the reason, as stated by the trial judge at the time, that the court did not have jurisdiction to consider such application.

Appellant does not seek a reversal of his conviction, but does ask that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court for consideration of the application for probation. Appellant's codefendant entered a plea of guilty. Appellant's trial was by jury, and by its verdict said jury found appellant guilty of robbery in the second degree.

[1, 2] Robbery perpetrated by torture or by a person being armed with a dangerous or deadly weapon is robbery in the first degree. All other kinds of robbery are of the second degree. Pen. Code, § 211a. The robbery of the second degree, for which appellant stands convicted, is a crime wherein the use or possession of a dangerous or deadly weapon is specifically excluded. By its verdict, finding defendant guilty of robbery in the second degree, the jury in effect acquitted defendant of robbery of the first degree. "Where a defendant is charged with the crime of robbery, a verdict of robbery in the second degree will not be reversed because, under section 211a of the Penal Code, the conviction should have been for robbery in the first degree." People v. De Verre, 68 Cal. App. 742, 230 P. 197; People v. North, 81 Cal. App. 113, 252 P. 1063; People v. Hudson, 92 Cal. App. 593, 268 P. 687. After the verdict was recorded the judge, then presiding, permitted an application for probation to be filed. The matter of probation and sentence came on for hearing before another judge of said court, and in disposing of said matter of probation the latter judge said in part: "The record here shows that you had a codefendant by the name of John Lichtenschul. * * * It appears, from the evidence in the case and the probation officer's report, that the man who held the gun was not this defendant, but the codefendant, John Lichtenschul. * * * The court imputes the use of a deadly weapon to this defendant, because the two were there, both engaged in the perpetration of the robbery. * * * For the reasons stated, that the court was without jurisdiction to grant probation in the case, probation is denied." The court ordered appellant committed to the state prison at San Quentin for the period prescribed by law. Thereupon defendant appealed in open court from the order denying probation on the ground stated and from the judgment.

[3] The order denying probation on the ground that the court did not have jurisdiction to consider an application for probation in this case is not appealable and the attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed. People v. Jones, 87 Cal. App. 482, 262 P. 361; Pen. Code, § 1237. The action of the trial court in denying probation for lack of jurisdiction as stated may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment. People v. Jones, supra.

[4, 5] We are of the opinion that the court erred in disclaiming jurisdiction to hear and pass upon the pending application for probation upon its merit. It is true that the court may take into consideration, in exercising its discretion in the matter of probation, all of the facts and circumstances of the crime and of the character and life of the defendant, irrespective of whether same be disclosed by the evidence in the case, or by other proper means, as, for instance, the probation officer's report. Where, however, application for probation has been filed by permission of court after conviction of defendant of robbery of the second degree, these facts and circumstances can go only to the matter of the discretion of the court in granting or denying probation, and do not deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the application upon its merits. To hold otherwise would nullify the force and effect of the verdict of the jury. The principle of law that all concerned in the commission of a felony are to be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals (section 971, Pen. Code) does not affect the matter of jurisdiction involved herein.

The clerk's transcript contains a copy of the minutes of the court reciting an appeal from the court's order denying a motion for a new trial. Appellant, in his opening brief, concedes that no new trial is necessary for the relief now asked for by him.

The appeal from the order denying probation for lack of jurisdiction is dismissed. The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed. The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to rearraign defendant for judgment, and thereupon and in accordance with law to hear and determine on its merits the application of defendant for probation, and thereafter to proceed in the premises as required by law.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

103 Cal. App. 249
PEOPLE v. VALENTI. (Cr. 1892.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 17, 1930.

1. Criminal law ☞1153(2)—Appellate court cannot declare child over 10 years of age incompetent to testify in murder prosecution (Code Civ. Proc. § 1880; Pen. Code, § 1321).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, made applicable in determining competency of witnesses in criminal cases by virtue of Pen. Code, § 1321, appellate court is without right to declare that a child over the age of 10 years is incompetent to testify in murder prosecution.

2. Witnesses ☞40(2)—Competency of child as witness, even though under 10 years of age, is peculiarly for discretion of trial court.

Competency of child as witness in criminal case, even though under 10 years of age, is question whose determination rests peculiarly in discretion of trial court.

3. Criminal law ☞517(4)—Corpus delicti held sufficiently proven to authorize admission of statements made by defendant.

Evidence in prosecution for murder held to sufficiently prove corpus delicti so as to authorize the admission in evidence of statements made by defendant.

4. Homicide ☞253(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction for first-degree murder.

Evidence in prosecution for murder held sufficient to sustain conviction for murder in the first degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Marshall F. McComb, Judge.

Josephine Valenti was convicted of murder in the first degree, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Christensen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprisonment.

ment. She appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

There are three reasons assigned by appellant why the judgment should be reversed. They are: (1) That the court erred in permitting Esther Garcia, 10 years old, to testify over the objection of the defense that she was incompetent; (2) that the corpus delicti was not sufficiently proven to warrant the admission in evidence of certain admissions and declarations of defendant; (3) that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict.

[1, 2] A Spanish girl 10 years of age was called to the stand and questioned at considerable length concerning her understanding of the nature of the oath and the consequence attending the giving of false testimony. The trial judge finally determined that she was competent. And we are asked by appellant to declare this ruling erroneous, on the ground that some of the answers of the witness were conflicting, which counsel argues demonstrates her incompetency to receive and relate just impressions of the facts respecting which she was asked to testify, or to understand the sanctity of an oath. There is very little to be said. The testimony of the witness stands without contradiction that she was 10 years of age, instead of under 10 years. Section 1321 of the Penal Code applies the same test to witnesses in criminal cases as in civil. By section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is said that children under 10 years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined shall not testify. Even though we were in as favorable a position to determine her ability to testify as was the trial judge, who had the opportunity of observing her manner while testifying and of fully weighing the difference between her testimony while attempting to speak English and her answers given through an interpreter, we would be without the right to declare that she was incompetent. However, we deem it proper to quote from People v. Dunlop, 27 Cal. App. 460, 150 P. 389, 391, as follows: "The question * * * is so far and peculiarly one whose determination rests in the discretion of the trial court that, in most cases, it would hardly be one which could be reviewed," and to say that there does not appear here that abuse of discretion which would warrant our interference, even though the child were under 10.

[3] There is no merit in appellant's contention that the corpus delicti was not sufficiently proven to authorize the admission in evidence of statements made by the appellant. It was proved beyond question that the eight months old child of appellant was burned to death while in a baby buggy outside the house in the yard on July 8, 1929.

Testimony was introduced that there was nothing in the buggy except the child's bottle and a blanket; that appellant had previously taken out an insurance policy on the child in the sum of $325; that appellant went to see the child a few minutes before the fire and upon returning to the place where she and her mother-in-law had been sitting informed the latter that the child was asleep; that shortly before the buggy was seen in flames appellant lit a match and threw the box from which it was taken in the vicinity of the garage which was about 12 feet from the buggy; that there had been no fire in an oven situated in the yard for some time prior to the tragedy; that no fire from which the buggy might have been ignited was found in the neighborhood; and that there was no wiring or other agency to which the fire might have been attributed. The evidence thus introduced complied fully with the rule announced, after a review of the authorities in this state, by the Supreme Court in People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 245 P. 426, 431, as follows: "It may finally be said that the authorities are unanimous on the proposition that the corpus delicti is not required to be established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt before the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of a defendant may be received in evidence—prima facie proof of the corpus delicti being sufficient for that purpose. And, with the exception of People v. Tapia [131 Cal. 647, 63 P. 1001], supra, and People v. Wagner [29 Cal. App. 363, 155 P. 649], supra, the rule is likewise unanimously declared that it is not necessary that the jury, in resolving the question of the guilt or innocence of a defendant upon all the evidence in the case, should, before considering for any purpose the extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of a defendant, be first satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the corpus delicti has been established by evidence aliunde." Or to sum up the evidence: The death was demonstrated beyond doubt and prima facie the criminal agency was established by proving the nonexistence of any cause for the fire other than the lighted match in the hands of the appellant very near the scene of the incineration. And additionally, the unusual circumstance of insuring the child's life by a mother in the poor circumstances admittedly endured by the appellant lends weight to the inference proper to be drawn from the other circumstances.

[4] Sufficient has been said already to indicate that the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict. However, testimony was also introduced establishing that the appellant and the child's father were not united in wedlock until approximately four months after the baby was born, and then, as she puts it, "she had to force her husband to marry her." The mother-in-law of appellant testified that the latter frequently said "she did not want the baby," and that on several occasions she stated she wanted to put it in a home. The appellant also stated, according to one of the witnesses, that she and her husband "had had some argument that morning regarding some money for the baby's milk, that he had refused to pay the milk bill and that she was ashamed to meet the milkman and tell him no, that she didn't have any money. She said she had asked her husband that morning for some money and he had refused her and she said" that she had left her husband on a couple of occasions once for a day and another time for about a week. There was considerable testimony all tending to indicate that the appellant did not entertain a motherly affection for her child, but was disturbed and worried over its presence. There was sufficient to warrant the determination arrived at by the jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J., BURNELL, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 82

PEOPLE v. STEVENSON. (Cr. 1859, 3327).★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 22, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 6, 1930.

1. Embezzlement ⇐2—False pretenses ⇐2—Larceny ⇐2—Under statutory amendments, larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money by false pretenses are merged into crime of theft (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046; St. 1927, p. 1047).

Effect of amendment St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1047, and particularly that of Pen. Code, § 484, which contains definition of "theft," is that former crimes of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining property by false pretenses are merged into one crime of theft; the change of name being one of form and not of substance.

2. Embezzlement ⇐2—Defendant committing offense before amendment making defendant's act grand theft instead of embezzlement could be prosecuted for grand theft (St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1047).

Defendant committing offense before St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1047, making defendant's act grand theft instead of embezzlement as that term was used prior to amendment, were enacted, could be prosecuted for grand theft, since punishment and offense were same and change was procedural one which did not impair substantial right of defendant.

3. Indictment and information ⇐56—Change in law, making unnecessary words "willfully" and "feloniously," in charging grand theft, did not impair substantial right of defendant (St. 1927, p. 1043).

Change in law under St. 1927, p. 1043, doing away with necessity of alleging more than "that defendant unlawfully took property of another" and making unnecessary the words "willfully" and "feloniously," as applied to charge of grand theft committed prior to such amendment, held procedural matter which in no way impaired substantial rights of defendant.

4. Constitutional law ⇐199—Statutory amendments substituting term "theft" for words "larceny," "embezzlement," and "obtaining property by false pretenses," and providing simplified form of pleading, held not void as ex post facto laws (Pen. Code, § 489, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1047; Pen. Code, § 514; St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1047).

St. 1927, pp. 1046, 1047, substituting term "theft" for the words "larceny," "embezzlement," and "obtaining property by false pretenses," and providing simplified form of pleading, held not void under state and federal constitutional provisions as ex post facto laws, since under Pen. Code, § 489, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1047, punishment for defendant's act, now styled "grand theft," is identical with that annexed to same offense when called "embezzlement" under Pen. Code, § 514, and it does not alter legal rules of evidence and receive less or different testimony than law required at time of commission of offense; these being tests of an ex post facto law.

5. Criminal law ⇐1036(2)—Objection transcript was improperly used for impeaching testimony could not be made for first time on appeal.

Objection that transcript was improperly used for purpose of impeaching testimony of state's own witnesses could not be urged for first time on appeal.

6. Criminal law ⇐627½—Refusal to order district attorney to permit defendant's counsel to use transcript of testimony before grand jury of which prosecution made use when examining witnesses held error (Pen. Code, § 1102; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1854, 2054).

In prosecution for theft, court's refusal to order district attorney to permit defendant's counsel to inspect and use transcript of testimony before grand jury of which prosecution had made use during its examination of certain witnesses held error, since rules of evidence in criminal cases are, generally speaking, same as those in civil cases under Pen. Code, § 1102, and Code Civ. Proc. § 2054, provides writing shown to witness may be inspected by opposite party, and section 1854 provides when part of writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

7. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)—Where district attorney used transcript without permitting inspection by defendant, people cannot invoke constitutional provisions placing burden on appellant to show prejudicial error (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In prosecution for theft, where district attorney used transcript of testimony before grand jury during its examination of certain witnesses but refused to permit inspection of transcript by defendant, and court refused to order district attorney to permit defendant's counsel to inspect and use transcript, people could not invoke provisions of Const. art. 6, § 4½, to effect that burden is on appellant to show prejudicial error, since the only way in which prejudicial error could be shown was by inspection of transcript and this right had been denied defendant.

8. Criminal law §1186(4)—Constitutional provision placing burden on appellant to show prejudicial error does not contemplate situation, where party was denied opportunity to determine prejudicial injury (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Const. art. 6, § 4½, to effect that burden is on appellant to show prejudicial error, does not contemplate situation where complaining party without fault has been denied an opportunity to determine whether or not he has been prejudicially injured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

William J. Stevenson was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed.

John F. Murphy and Anderson & Sheahan, all of Los Angeles (W. H. Anderson, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Appellant was charged by information filed April 24, 1929, with the crime of grand theft. He was tried by the court sitting without a jury, trial by jury having been waived by appellant, his counsel, and the district attorney, and was found guilty on one of the two counts of the information and not guilty on the other. A motion for new trial was made and denied.

The first count, on which appellant was convicted and sentenced, was as follows: "The said William J. Stevenson is accused by the District Attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, State of California, by this information of the crime of Grand Theft, a felony, committed as follows: That the said William J. Stevenson, on or about the 29th day of April, 1927, at and in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, did unlawfully take away thirty-five (35) Metropolitan Mortgage Company Collateral Trust Gold Bonds of the total value of Thirty-one Thousand, Six Hundred Sixty-six and sixty-seven hundredths ($31,666.67) Dollars, lawful money of the United States, the personal property of one E. Bailey Webb." One of the grounds urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment is that no crime is charged against the defendant in the count of the information on which he was found guilty, since at the time of the commission of the acts which resulted in his prosecution no such crime as "Grand Theft" was known to our law; the amendments to certain sections of the Penal Code which went into effect July 29, 1927, for the first time defining and, as appellant contends, creating this offense.

[1, 2] Prior to the Code amendments of 1927, certain acts were declared unlawful which were committed with the object and purpose of wrongfully acquiring the money or other property of others. Depending on the method used in such wrongful acquisition, these acts were given certain names—as larceny, embezzlement, obtaining property by false pretenses, etc. The record in the case before us discloses that there was sufficient evidence to have supported a conviction for that method of such wrongful acquisition which was formerly denominated "embezzlement." In 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1046), the Legislature, by amending several sections of the Penal Code, abandoned these various names as applied to the different forms of wrongful acquisition of property and adopted the one named "theft" as the common designation of all of them. At the same session a new section (490a) was added to the Code (St. 1927, p. 1047), providing that, "Wherever any law or statute of this state refers to or mentions larceny, embezzlement, or stealing, said law or statute shall hereafter be read and interpreted as if the word 'theft' were substituted therefor." The effect of these amendments, and particularly that of section 484 (St. 1927, p. 1046), which contains the definition of theft, "is that the former crimes of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining property by false pretenses are merged into the one crime of theft." People v. Plum, 88 Cal. App. 575, 263 P. 862, 265 P. 322. "The change of name is one of form and not of substance." People v. Giron [Cal. App.] 270 P. 462. "Nor can it be successfully argued that, because the offense was committed prior to the amendment of section 484 of the Penal Code that appellant could not be prosecuted for grand theft instead of embezzlement as that term was used prior to the amendment. The punishment and the offense are the same. The change is a procedural one which in no way impairs a substantial right of the defendant" (People v. Dempster [Cal. App.] 274 P. 592, 594).

That the 1927 amendments effected merely a change in nomenclature is the basis of the decisions in People v. Giron, supra, and in People v. Jordan, 92 Cal. App. 543, 268 P. 373, 374. In the first of these cases the defendant, who was charged with burglary by entering certain premises "with the intent then and there and therein to commit the crime of larceny," contended that the information failed to state a public offense for the reason that since the amendments of 1927 there is no longer any crime known as larceny in this state, and that since the word "larceny" did not describe any known offense its presence in the information should be disregarded, which would leave merely a charge of unlawful entry upon the premises of another—"in other words, a mere trespass, but not any crime punishable under laws of this state." This contention this court found to be without merit. In the second case the situation was analogous to that in the case before us. The information, drawn in conformity with section 952 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1043), charged the defendant with grand theft in each of its five counts. Four of the counts charged the commission of the offense at a date prior to the going into effect of the 1927 amendments. Passing upon a contention similar to that urged by appellant here, the court noted that the facts proved sufficiently established the commission by the defendant of the crime formerly known as obtaining property by false pretenses and quoted the rule that: "If an act is criminal and punishable when committed, and a statute is subsequently enacted also making it criminal and punishable, but giving the crime a designation not before given to it, the situation of the accused is not altered to his disadvantage, and hence it cannot be said that there has been any ex post facto legislation, nor does the new or amendatory statute obliterate the pre-existing law so that a conviction and punishment after its enactment and the consequent repeal of the former statute can be regarded as a conviction and punishment of an act not criminal when committed."

[3] Appellant in the instant case takes a position almost identical to that of the appellant in People v. Giron, supra, urging that since at the time of the alleged offense there was no such crime as theft known to the law, the charge of commission of grand theft must be eliminated from consideration of the information, leaving only the statement, "That the said William J. Stevenson, on or about the 29th day of April, 1927, * * * did unlawfully take away" certain personal property of one Webb, and that it therefore contains "no charge of the commission of any conceivable crime." This contention is devoid of merit. As far as the use of the term "grand theft" is concerned, no right of the defendant was, as the authorities above referred to hold, in any way prejudiced by substituting it for the word "embezzlement" as descriptive of the acts for the commission of which the defendant was tried and of which the evidence showed him guilty; so far as the failure to employ the words "wilfully" and "feloniously," or to describe the manner in which the offense was committed is concerned, section 952 of the Penal Code, as likewise amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1043), did away with the necessity of alleging more than "that the defendant unlawfully took the property of another." This change in the law, relating to a matter of pleading, is also "a procedural one which in no way impairs a substantial right of the defendant." People v. Dempster, supra.

[4] Appellant's contention really amounts to a charge that as to him the amendments of Cal.Rep. 284-286 P.—7

1927, substituting the term "theft" for the words "larceny," "embezzlement," and "obtaining property by false pretenses," and providing a simplified form of pleading, are ex post facto laws and therefore void under state and federal constitutional provisions. But this position is entirely untenable for the reason that whether taken as a whole or singly, in so far as they affect appellant's case, these amendments do not nor does any one of them contain any of the elements the presence of which in a statute brings it within the definition of an ex post facto law. The law as amended does not "make an action, done before the passing of the law and which was innocent when done, criminal." The fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been entrusted has always been criminal in this state. It does not "aggravate the crime or make it greater than it was when committed," nor does it "change the punishment and inflict a greater punishment than was annexed to the crime when committed," for under section 489 of the Penal Code as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1047) the punishment for appellant's act, now styled "grand theft," is identical with that annexed to the same offense when called "embezzlement." Pen. Code, § 514. Neither does it "alter the legal rules of evidence, and receive less, or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense * * * to convict the offender." These are the tests of an ex post facto law as stated in Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 390, 1 L. Ed. 648; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 S. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506; People v. Edenburg, 88 Cal. App. 558, 263 P. 857; and many other cases. If we may substitute the word "embezzlement" for the words "obtaining property by false pretenses," this case falls squarely within the ruling in People v. Jordan, supra, from which we again quote: "If under the facts alleged the defendant could have been found guilty of a crime which would have carried a greater or different penalty, there might be something in the contention of counsel for the appellant. * * * In the given case the law as amended and under which the indictments were drawn does not alter the legal rules of evidence in the case at bar. * * * There is nothing in the law as amended and objected to under which the present proceeding is had that in any way aggravates the particular crime or crimes herein charged, or in any way makes it any greater crime than it was under the law as it stood at the time when it was committed. * * * The evidence shows that the facts proved against appellant were those establishing the commission of the crime heretofore known as the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses. Furthermore, the law as amended does not change the punishment for the particular crime herein charged, and does not in any way provide for the infliction of any greater punishment than was annexed to the particular crime charged when the crime was committed. * * * The information, although drawn in conformity with the law as amended, did not in any way hinder defendant in the preparation of his defense as long as the facts constituting the substance of the offense charged were fully given therein."

[5] Appellant's next point is that the court erred in refusing to order the district attorney to permit his counsel to inspect and use a transcript of testimony before the grand jury, of which the prosecution had made use during its examination of certain witnesses. The transcript in question was of evidence received by the grand jury during investigation by that body of the charge against appellant which eventually resulted in the filing of the information against him by the district attorney. No indictment was returned by the grand jury, however. While appellant now insists that this transcript was improperly used for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of the state's own witnesses, no objection was made at the trial to such or any use of it, and, of course, this objection may not for the first time be urged on appeal. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 P. 75.

[6] Appellant did, however, demand that he be accorded an opportunity to examine the transcript, and when this demand was refused by the district attorney the court was requested to order the latter to permit such examination. This the court refused to do, saying: "That is a matter that will have to be decided with them (the deputy district attorneys conducting the case for the people); the court has no authority to order them to give you a transcript or a copy of it." This ruling was clearly erroneous. The district attorney had exhibited portions of the transcript to several of the people's witnesses and also to the defendant himself during his cross-examination, and had questioned them concerning statements shown therein to have been made by them at the grand jury investigation, and had read excerpts from the testimony in the transcript into the record. Both the law and common fairness to the defendant—and the former should always include the latter—required that the defendant be accorded an opportunity to examine and, if he was so advised, to make use of the document as to which the state had examined these witnesses. The rules of evidence in criminal cases are, generally speaking, the same as those in civil cases (section 1102, Pen. Code), and it is provided by section 2054 of the Code of Civil Procedure that, "Whenever a writing is shown to a witness, it may be inspected by the opposite party, and no question must be put to the witness concerning a writing until it has been so shown to him." Section 1854 of the same Code is as follows: "When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; * * * and when a detached act, declaration, conversation or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation, or writing, which is necessary to make it understood, may also be given in evidence." When portions of the transcript in the instant case were read into evidence in connection with the testimony of witnesses such portions were "given in evidence" and were before the court as the trier of facts. The only way in which "the whole on the same subject" might be "inquired into" by the defendant was through an examination of the writing—the transcript—from which such excerpts were read. Were the rule otherwise it might easily be possible for the party having such document in his possession to select, call the witness' attention to and read before the court or jury portions of the testimony at the former hearing which seemingly contradicted the testimony of the witness given in the pending proceeding, without the adverse party having any opportunity to discover other statements in the transcript which might explain the apparent discrepancy.

In Hobart v. Tyrrell, 68 Cal. 12, 8 P. 525, it was held that when a witness for one party has read an extract from testimony given by him in a previous judicial proceeding it is error to refuse the adverse party the right to introduce the whole of such testimony. The precise question involved here received very thorough consideration in Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 P. 641. That was an action for damages for a battery committed on the plaintiff by the defendant, and in the course of the trial the former called as a witness a justice of the peace for the purpose of identifying the record in a criminal action against the same defendant involving the same battery, and introduced the complaint and the docket of the justice showing that the defendant had entered a plea of guilty. We quote from the opinion the following excerpts: "Defendant sought, by cross-examination of the justice and by his own testimony, to prove the entire statement made to the justice at the time defendant pleaded guilty concerning such plea, and the reasons why defendant made it. In other words, defendant sought by several questions to prove the entire statement in connection with the oral plea, as made to the justice at the time, and entered in his docket. The court sustained the objections of plaintiff to each of the questions by which it was sought to elicit the full statement. In this the court erred. * * * But where a defendant has pleaded guilty in a criminal case, the plea and judgment are received in evidence as an admission, but not as conclusive. 'It is therefore to be treated according to the principles governing admissions, to which class of evidence it properly belongs.' 1 Greenleaf on Evid. (16th Ed.) § 527a. If an admission is testified to by a witness against a party, such party has the right, in cross-examination, to bring out the whole of what was said in direct connection with, and pertaining to, the admission. In this case the plaintiff was, in effect, allowed to prove that defendant said or admitted that he was guilty of an assault and battery upon plaintiff. This admission may have turned the scale, and caused the jury to disregard all the defendant's testimony. The plaintiff was allowed to put in evidence the part of the conversation or declaration to the justice which in law amounted to an admission. The defendant was not allowed to show that he stated other facts at the time which showed that it was not an unqualified admission. The statement of defendant in the form of an admission to the justice was allowed for the purpose of corroborating the evidence of plaintiff. The statement of defendant, if such statement was made, that plaintiff struck the first blow, was not allowed to go to the jury. It is certainly evident that this was receiving evidence only on one side of the controversy. The plaintiff was not bound to offer in evidence the admission made before the justice, but, having done so, the defendant was entitled to the whole of the declaration or admission. The fact that the justice wrote down part of it in his docket makes no difference. It was, after being written in the docket by the justice, but an oral admission of defendant. The entry by the justice was only the conclusion or opinion of the justice as to the effect of what defendant said. The question is, did the defendant, in words, admit his guilt before the justice? If he did, what were the words, and what did he say? When a part of a declaration or conversation is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other." In Freel v. Market Street Cable Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 40, 31 P. 730, 731, a written statement made by an employee of the defendant corporation was in the courtroom during the trial and in the possession of counsel for the defendant. The plaintiff demanded it for the purposes of cross-examination, counsel for the defendant "denied the right of counsel to demand his private papers," and the court ordered him to hand it over to the plaintiff's attorneys. One of the errors assigned by the defendant on its appeal from the judgment rendered against it was this ruling. In upholding it the Supreme Court said: "This statement was in the possession of defendant's counsel upon the trial, and, indeed, was lying upon the desk before him when the demand in question was made. The plaintiff could not, in the nature of things, know the contents of this paper. It is not claimed that she had ever seen it, nor had it ever been in her possession. It was produced for the first time by defendant's counsel. To sanction the rule claimed by the defendant in this case would enable a litigant to suppress adverse evidence of the most important character." Among other cases which lend support to the views here expressed are: Granite Gold Mining Co. v. Maginness, 118 Cal. 131, 50 P. 269; McGraw v. Friend & Terry Lumber Co., 133 Cal. 589, 65 P. 1051, and Souza v. Joseph, 22 Cal. App. 179, 133 P. 981.

As opposed to these authorities, the respondent cites People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 P. 965, in which it was held that the trial court properly refused to order the district attorney to produce a statement made by a witness for the prosecution prior to the trial. This statement, made at police headquarters and taken in shorthand by a stenographer and afterwards written out in longhand, was unsigned, and "there was nothing to show that the witness had ever read the statement or seen it, or that he was aware of its contents." While it was in the possession of the district attorney, he had made no use of it by questioning the witness as to statements claimed to have been made by him during the examination at the police station nor had he read any of it into the record or in the presence of the jury. An entirely different case is presented here, where witnesses were questioned as to testimony given by them before the grand jury as perpetuated in the transcript in question and where such portions as the prosecutor desired to have before the court were read by him from it.

We cannot say that the error in refusing to permit defendant's counsel to inspect the transcript was of an unprejudicial character, since the transcript might have contained other statements by the witnesses a portion of whose testimony contained therein was read which would have thrown an entirely different light upon the case from that diffused by the fragmentary portions selected and read by the district attorney.

As the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for another trial because of the error just discussed, no useful purpose would be served by a discussion of the other rulings as to matters of evidence complained of by appellant and which, in our opinion, are not apt to arise on the retrial.

Judgment and order reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank
Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition in the foregoing cause, we deem it proper to add:

[7, 8] Where a transcript is made under the circumstances here shown and used by the district attorney in the manner related by the decision, and its contents are denied inspection by the defendant, it comes in poor grace for the people to invoke the provisions of article 6, § 4½, of the Constitution, to the effect that the burden is upon the appellant to show prejudicial error. The only way in which prejudicial error could possibly be shown is by an inspection of said transcript, and this right has been denied him. It was not intended that said constitutional provisions should be applied in such a case. To so apply them it would require a showing on the part of the defendant which is rendered impossible by the act of his adversary. The constitutional provisions impose the burden of showing prejudice or injury by a ruling which is within the power of the complaining party to present. It does not contemplate a situation where such party without fault has been denied an opportunity to determine whether or not he has been prejudicially injured. We do not wish to be understood as relaxing in the slightest degree the effect of the language of the Constitution that the error complained of must affirmatively appear to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice to authorize the reversal of a judgment. We do hold, however, that a complaining party should have an opportunity to show injury.

=====

103 Cal. App. 302

STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA v. HULL.
(Civ. 6764.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

1. Attorney and client $\S$ 53(1)—Presumption exists that examining board and court admitting attorney to practice had no knowledge concerning conviction in foreign state, absent contrary showing (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 15).

Absent claim or evidence to contrary, presumption exists that board of examiners and court admitting attorney to practice were wholly without knowledge or information concerning indictment and conviction in foreign state of crime, involving moral turpitude, since, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1963, subd. 15, presumption arises that official duties have been regularly performed.

2. Attorney and client $\S$ 40—Where attorney applying for admission withheld fact of conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, order admitting him to practice was vacated.

Where attorney from foreign state, petitioning for admission to bar, withheld fact from board of examiners and court that he had been convicted of offense under Rev. St. U. S. $\S$ 5209 (12 USCA $\S$ 592), which involved moral turpitude, order admitting attorney to practice was vacated and license revoked, since attorney had no right to decide for himself question which necessarily would have important bearing on inquiry to be made in connection with application.

Application by the State Bar of California for revocation of an order admitting Theodore Torrey Hull to practice law. Order vacated, and license revoked.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Alfred L. Armstrong, Fred Aberle, Jr., Lorin Andrews, Vernon Bettin, Leonard M. Comegys, Clive W. Johnson, Laurence B. Martin, C. Fletcher Quillian, Victor H. Koenig, Paul Schwab, Steadman G. Smith, and Carl Yokum, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In the year 1915 respondent Hull obtained from the Supreme Court of Indiana an order admitting him to practice law in that state. Said order has never been vacated or set aside. In the year 1920, and while respondent was practicing law in the state of Indiana, an indictment was found and returned in the District Court of the United States for the District of Indiana, against respondent Hull and one Heldt, an officer of a bank at Evansville. In the indictment it was charged that Heldt, as assistant cashier of the bank, fraudulently and feloniously, and with intent to injure the bank, willfully misapplied certain funds and credits of the bank for the use and benefit of Hull. It was further charged that Hull did fraudulently and feloniously aid and abet said Heldt in commission of the crime, the circumstances whereof are fully set forth in the indictment. Both defendants were convicted, and respondent Hull was sentenced to serve a term of 18 months in the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth.

After having served his term, respondent came to California, and on June 21, 1923, filed in this court his application to be admitted to practice law in all the courts of this state. In connection with said application he made an affidavit which contained the following statement: "That affiant has never been charged before any court with crime amounting to either felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude." This application was in due course referred to the State Board of Bar Examiners for examination as to the applicant's moral and other qualifications. The board appointed Mr. John E. Biby, an attorney at law in Los Angeles, to examine and report. After Mr. Biby had made his examination, which included an oral interview with the applicant, a favorable report was filed; whereupon the Board of Examiners made a favorable report to this court and the applicant obtained the order admitting him to practice in this state. The applicant did not at any time give information to Mr. Biby or the Board of Examiners of this state in any way concerning or relating to the above-mentioned indictment and conviction.

All the foregoing facts are set forth in the petition herein and are not denied in the answer filed by respondent. The petition further alleges that, in the course of his examination by Mr. Biby, respondent with intent and purpose to deceive stated to Mr. Biby that he had never been charged with any conduct involving moral turpitude, never been arrested for any cause, and that there was nothing adversely affecting his character at any time, which would have disclosed anything bearing upon his application for admission to practice in this state. The petition further alleges that respondent intentionally and fraudulently concealed the fact that during 14 months of the time that he represented to Mr. Biby that he had been in continuous and active practice of the law in Evansville he was confined in the penitentiary.

[1, 2] The answer filed by respondent denies that he stated to Mr. Biby that he had been continuously in the practice of law in Evansville for the stated period, and denies that he fraudulently or with intent to deceive stated positively, or at all, that he had never been charged with any conduct involving moral turpitude, nor had he ever been arrested for any cause, except the respondent did state to Mr. Biby that he had never been charged with any crime or felony involving moral turpitude. Respondent says he had fully satisfied himself and fully believed that the charge against him and the ensuing judgment, did not involve moral turpitude on his part, and did not come within the province of the examination by Mr. Biby and therefore did not inform said Mr. Biby of his conviction; that in not informing Mr. Biby as to said fact he was innocent of any thought of wrongdoing, or any desire to misrepresent any facts before this court or said Biby. On the ground of want of knowledge as to whether or not in making its order admitting him to practice this court was in entire ignorance of his conviction, respondent denies the same. There is a similar denial in relation to the State Board of Bar Examiners in its favorable recommendation made to this court and in relation to the recommendation made by Mr. Biby. There is an affirmative defense in which respondent asserts that he did not volunteer information about said adverse facts, for the reason that said charge and conviction did not involve moral turpitude on his part, and that he was not under any duty to disclose said facts. He alleges he possesses all the qualifications at the present time to authorize his admittance to the practice of law, and in fact had these qualifications at the time he was admitted to practice by this court, and asks that he be permitted to present testimony to establish those facts.

It will be noted that respondent does not allege or offer to prove that the Board of Examiners, in making its favorable recommendation, or this court in making its admission, had any knowledge of the indictment or conviction. If the court or the Board of Examiners had had any such knowledge or information it would have been their duty to examine further concerning those matters in order to determine whether, notwithstanding said indictment and conviction, the applicant was entitled to be admitted to practice his profession in this state. Upon the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15) it must be assumed, in the absence of any claim or evidence to the contrary, that the Board of Examiners and the court were wholly without knowledge or information concerning said indictment or conviction. It is too plain for argument that the charges upon which respondent was convicted involved moral turpitude. While the offense is, in section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (12 USCA § 592), described as a misdemeanor, that description is supplemented by section 335 of the federal Penal Code of 1909 (18 USCA § 541), where it is provided that all offenses which may be punished by death or imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, shall be deemed felonies.

The nature of the charges upon which respondent had been convicted were such that he had no right to withhold the facts from the court in connection with his application for admission to practice law. He had no right to decide for himself a question which necessarily would have an important bearing upon the inquiries to be made by the court in connection with his application. The situation presented by this defense is similar to that existing in In re Mash, 28 Cal. App. 692, 697, 153 P. 961, 963, where the First District Court of Appeal said: "In other words, having convinced himself that he was innocent of the charges previously preferred against him, he concluded that, even if the court had been informed thereof, it would have treated them as matters of little or no moment. If we were to concede the sufficiency of such a defense, we would practically oust ourselves of jurisdiction to pass on the moral character of an applicant to practice law. Regardless of whether the charges previously preferred against the respondent were well or ill founded, we hold that it was his duty to reveal to this court the fact that they had been preferred and prosecuted and had resulted in his conviction and disbarment. His failure to do so cannot be regarded as other than a willful deception which requires this court, if it is to give effect to that provision of the law permitting only persons of good moral character to be licensed to practice law in the courts of the state, and to maintain the dignity and degency of its bar, to revoke the license previously granted to him."

Petitioner has demurred to the answer and has moved for judgment on the pleadings. The demurrer is sustained and the motion is granted. It is ordered that the license to practice law in this state heretofore granted by this court to the said Theodore Torrey Hull (also named in the record as Theodore T. Hull) be and the same is hereby revoked and canceled, and that respondent's name be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors at law in this state.

We concur: HOUSER, J.; YORK, J.

=====

103 Cal. App. 360

ANDREWS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 6822.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

1. Contempt ⚭21—Disobedience of order made without or in excess of jurisdiction cannot be punished as "contempt."

A court cannot punish as a "contempt" the disobedience of an order made without or in excess of jurisdiction; disobedience of void order not constituting contempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Contempt.]

2. Divorce ⚭269(2)—Court cannot acquire jurisdiction to punish for contempt for disobedience of nonexistent order for payment of alimony; interlocutory judgment containing no such order.

Where interlocutory judgment of divorce contained no order for payment of alimony, the court rendering the judgment cannot acquire jurisdiction to punish for contempt disobedience of alleged order which in fact does not exist, and any such adjudication of contempt is nullity.

3. Prohibition ⚭3(1)—Existence of plain, speedy, and adequate remedy precluding resort to prohibition depends upon circumstances.

Whether there is plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law precluding resort to prohibition depends upon circumstances of particular case.

4. Prohibition ⚭3(3)—Absent remedy by appeal, petitioner held entitled to prohibition to restrain superior court from punishing him for contempt in refusal to pay alimony; no valid order for such payment having been made (Code Civ. Proc. § 1222).

There being no right of appeal from adjudication of contempt of court, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1222, and, previous adjudication of court in proceedings to punish petitioner for contempt in violating nonexistent alimony order being indicative of court's intention to punish for contempt unless alimony was paid, petitioner was entitled to prohibition to restrain contempt proceeding in excess of court's jurisdiction as against objection that he had plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in ordinary course of law and should not be permitted to anticipate adverse rulings in contempt proceedings.

Original prohibition by Dell Andrews against the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County and others. On demurrer to the alternative writ. Demurrer overruled, and peremptory writ ordered to issue.

J. C. Landry and J. K. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Pritchard, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem. Upon the filing of the petition for writ of prohibition, an alternative writ of prohibition was issued. Respondents made return by general demurrer to the petition, and the matter was submitted upon briefs, which have been filed.

On September 26, 1927, during the then pendency of an action for divorce, Edith E. Andrews and Dell Andrews entered into a property settlement which included a provision for payment of $200 per month by Dell Andrews to Edith E. Andrews. On March 1, 1928, said parties resumed full marital relations and continued thereafter to live together as husband and wife until April 20, 1928, when they again separated. This divorce action was dismissed by plaintiff on June 21, 1928, and upon the same day she commenced a new action for divorce against said Dell Andrews. Process therein was duly served, and defendant failed to appear. On July 19, 1928, the case was heard as a default matter and the interlocutory judgment was duly entered July 26, 1928. The complaint is in the usual form of a complaint for divorce on the ground of cruelty, and contains no allegation concerning property, earning ability, or other facts as a basis for an award of alimony, other than the allegation "that there is no community property," and, in relation to the charge of acts of cruelty, "that during the past year defendant, although well able financially so to do, has refused and neglected to pay the ordinary household bills of plaintiff and defendant, thus causing plaintiff to suffer great and grievous mental anguish and humiliation." By the prayer of the complaint, plaintiff prayed judgment that she be granted a decree of divorce, that she be awarded the control and custody of the minor child of plaintiff and defendant, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and just.

The interlocutory judgment contained a finding that all of the allegations of the complaint are true and is in the usual form, except for the following provision contained therein: "It is further adjudged that that certain property settlement heretofore entered into between plaintiff and defendant, and providing for payments to the plaintiff in the sum of two hundred ($200.00) dollars per month and on file in this case, be, and the same is hereby, made a part and portion of this interlocutory judgment."

On November 1, 1928, an order to show cause was issued by said superior court requiring defendant to appear on November 21, 1928, and show cause why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court for failure to make the payments of $200 per month as specified in the interlocutory judgment. On November 21, 1928, defendant gave notice of motion to modify the interlocutory judgment by striking therefrom the above quoted portion thereof. This motion was denied without prejudice on December 4, 1928. On December 12, 1928, defendant moved for a rehearing on said motion, and on said date said motion was denied without prejudice to motion to set aside default and judgment.

On December 20, 1928, the order to show cause in re contempt, continued from November 21, 1928, came on for hearing, and the court ordered defendant "to pay $100.00 per week to plaintiff until all alimony was paid up."

Apparently nothing further transpired of record in the case until June 18, 1929, when the court issued an order requiring defendant to show cause, on July 2, 1929, why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court for failing to make the payments required by court order of December 20, 1928. On July 2, 1929, defendant was adjudged in contempt of court and sentenced to confinement in jail for three days; thereupon sentence was suspended on condition that defendant "keep up the payments."

On July 29, 1929, defendant moved the court for a final judgment of divorce, with said reference to property settlement omitted therefrom. This motion was denied. On July 29, 1929, an order was issued by the court requiring defendant to show cause, on August 7, 1929, why he should not be adjudged in contempt of court for disobeying the order of December 20, 1928.

On August 5, 1929, petitioner filed in this court his petition for writ of prohibition to arrest said contempt proceeding.

Before proceeding further, it is necessary to determine the legal effect or force of that part of the interlocutory judgment complained of. A close study thereof shows only that a property settlement is made a part and portion of the judgment. The phrases, "heretofore entered into between plaintiff and defendant," "and providing for payments to plaintiff of two hundred ($200.00) dollars per month," and "and on file in this case," clearly are matters only of identification of a certain property settlement, and in no wise state any order for the payment of any sum. The interlocutory judgment contains no order, decree, or judgment for the payment of any sum. This determination makes it unnecessary to discuss at length the contentions and citations by petitioner that the judgment is void in so far as it attempts to require the payment of alimony, for the alleged reason that the matter of alimony is without the issues of the case and beyond the prayer of plaintiff's complaint.

[1, 2] Respondents argue that, since the petitioner is not now cited for contempt for his failure to obey the interlocutory judgment, but is cited for his contempt in failing to obey the order of December 20, 1928, the petition for writ of prohibition should be denied for the reason that the judge on December 20, 1928, had jurisdiction to decide wrongly as well as correctly, that said judge had jurisdiction to make his order interpreting what was meant by the interlocutory judgment, and, having done so, entered his order accordingly. Respondents further argue that nothing has been shown by the petition that in the present contempt proceeding the superior court has not taken proper procedure to complete jurisdiction of the person of the defendant and the subject of the contempt proceeding. To these arguments petitioner replies that there can be no breach, and there can be no contempt without a corresponding and antecedent order to pay, and that the order of December 20, 1928, is a nullity because it is founded upon the interlocutory judgment, and said judgment contains no order to pay. Neither respondents nor petitioner cite any authorities in connection with said last above stated arguments. The case of Pennell v. Superior Court, 87 Cal. App. 375, 262 P. 48, is not directly in point, but a statement of that case may add some light to the question before us. In the Pennell Case, the superior court, in an action for divorce, made an order or judgment for the payment of attorney's fees by the husband directly to the attorney for the wife. Said husband failed to make payment, and was cited for contempt. On the hearing he objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the order was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court and wholly void on its face. The objection was overruled, said husband was adjudged in contempt, and the matter of imposing sentence was postponed. In the interim between the hearing and the date set for sentence said husband applied for a writ of prohibition, and the District Court of Appeal granted the writ and held that said judgment to pay, being a judgment in favor of a person not a party to the suit, was irregular and void, and that the court was without jurisdiction to punish the husband for contempt for failure to obey such void judgment or order. Said court therein held that, where contempt proceedings have been instituted, and it is manifest from previous orders or decisions of the court that it will proceed, notwithstanding the lack of jurisdiction, the trial proceedings will be stayed by writ of prohibition. A court cannot punish as a contempt the disobedience of an order made without or in excess of jurisdiction. 5 Cal. Jur. 918, and cases therein cited. Disobedience to a void order does not constitute contempt. 5 Cal. Jur. 919; Maier v. Luce, 61 Cal. App. 552, 558, 215 P. 399; Pennell v. Superior Court, supra. Surely, if the foregoing is true as to a void order, then where, as in this case, there is in fact no order for payment, the court cannot acquire jurisdiction to punish for contempt for disobedience of an alleged order (which in fact does not exist), and any such adjudication of contempt is a nullity.

In the case of Tripp v. Superior Court, 61 Cal. App. 64, 214 P. 252, the court, after setting forth the property settlement in full in the interlocutory judgment, ordered in said judgment "that said plaintiff shall take all of the community property as set forth in said property settlement and agreement as aforesaid." Therefore that case is not authority for the contention that a mere incorporation by reference of a property settlement (not set forth in any pleading) in an interlocutory judgment of divorce is equivalent to a direct order for payment in accordance with such property settlement.

[3, 4] The petition states that said superior court "has threatened and does now threaten to enforce that portion of the interlocutory judgment of divorce referring to a property settlement or alimony, and the subsequent orders based thereon of the 20th day of December, 1928, the 2d day of July, 1929, and the 29th day of July, 1929, and unless prohibited from so doing will on August 7, 1929, deprive your petitioner of his liberty and property without due process of law," and "that petitioner has no plain, speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." Whether or not there is a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. Consolidated, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 92, 96, 207 P. 552. If this were the first order to show cause in re contempt in the entire case, we might feel required to give merit to respondents' contention that it is entirely possible that, if petitioner allows the contempt proceeding to come up for hearing, the respondent court will agree entirely with the petitioner "that that part of the interlocutory judgment complained of is improper and that the order of December 20, 1928, is likewise improper." Respondents further contend that a proceeding for a writ of prohibition should not be employed to anticipate the ruling of an inferior court. Van Hoosear v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 228, 207 P. 903; County of Sutter v. Superior Court, 188 Cal. 292, 204 P. 849; Athearn v. Nicol, 187 Cal. 86; Preston v. Superior Court, 184 Cal. 658, 195 P. 916. We think that the order of December 20, 1928; the adjudication of contempt and order of July 2, 1929, and the issuance of the order to show cause on July 29, 1929, by respondent court clearly indicated otherwise than as respondents contend, and these prior matters show that petitioner is justified in his belief that, if the order to show cause is permitted to be heard in the superior court, he will again be adjudged in contempt and punished accordingly. From such adjudication of contempt of court, if made, there is no right of appeal. Code Civ. Proc., § 1222. Hence from all of the facts we conclude that petitioner has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and that the demurrer should be overruled and the peremptory writ of prohibition should be issued.

The demurrer is overruled, and the peremptory writ will issue in accordance with the foregoing decision.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

103 Cal. App. 188

BERNING et ux. v. COLODNY & COLODNY et al. (Civ. 7110.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Judgment ⇨397—Court acquiring jurisdiction to vacate judgment, may enter judgment irrespective of prayer of moving party (Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

Court having acquired jurisdiction to pass on motion of defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, to vacate judgment for plaintiffs in action for damages for deceit, may grant motion to set aside judgment, amend conclusions of law by giving defendants credit due them on purchase price of land, and enter judgment in favor of plaintiffs for certain amount, irrespective of prayer of moving party.

2. Action ⇨27(1)—Cause of action arising from breach of promise is "ex contractu," and, if from breach of duty under contract, it is "ex delicto."

If a cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is "ex contractu," and, if it arises from breach of duty growing out of contract, it is "ex delicto," and tort or trespass is none the less such because it incidentally involves breach of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Ex Contractu; First, Second, and Third Series, Action Ex Delicto.]

3. Pleading ⚡49—In determining whether pleading states cause of action ex contractu or ex delicto, it is construed as whole, and special consideration given leading allegations.

In determining whether pleading is intended to state cause of action ex contractu or ex delicto, it should be construed according to its full scope and effect rather than according to single sentence or expression contained therein, and special consideration should be given to the leading allegations.

4. Fraud ⚡59(2)—Difference between purchase price of land and cost of improvements and their worth if false representations were true held proper measure of compensatory damages for vendor's deceit.

Award to purchasers suing for damages for deceit in executory contract for sale of land as compensatory damages, being difference between purchase price of land and cost of improvements and what they would have been worth if false representations of vendor had been true, held proper measure of damages.

5. Fraud ⚡47—Complaint alleging defendants fraudulently sold plaintiffs land representing improvements would be made and land had water right stated cause of action in tort, warranting exemplary damages (Civ. Code, § 3294).

Complaint alleging that defendants practiced deceit on plaintiffs in inducing them to purchase property on false representations as to character of improvements that were to be placed on tract of land by defendants, and also false representations that land had water right, held to state cause of action in tort, sustaining award of exemplary damages under Civ. Code, § 3294.

6. Appeal and error ⚡907(2)—In absence of evidence, appellate court must take findings as true.

In absence of evidence before Court of Appeal, findings must be taken as true.

7. Evidence ⚡434(11)—Contract providing no representations not set out shall bind vendor did not preclude inquiry into vendor's fraud under circumstances (Civ. Code, §§ 1565–1568, 1708–1710).

Cause in contract for sale of land, to effect that no representations, inducement of agreements made by any one not specifically set out therein, shall be binding against seller, held not to preclude inquiry into vendor's fraud, where contract had its inception in fraud, and trial court found written agreement did not contain all of representations, terms, inducements, or conditions, existing between parties when agreement was made, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1565–1568, 1708–1710, relating to consent of parties to contract and deceit as grounds for damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by Henry Berning and wife against Colodny & Colodny, a copartnership, and others. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles G. Young and Charles P. Johnson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The plaintiffs brought this action to recover damages for deceit alleged to have been practiced upon them by the defendants in the matter of an executory contract for the sale of land. The court awarded the plaintiffs the sum of $200 compensatory damages and $500 exemplary damages, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiffs in the sum of $700. In due time the defendants made a motion under the provisions of section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate said judgment, amend the conclusions of law on the ground that they were not consistent with nor supported by the findings of fact, and, as amended, to enter a judgment in favor of the defendants. The court granted the motion to set aside the judgment, amended its conclusions of law by giving defendants a credit of $300 due them on the purchase price of the land, and entered a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in the sum of $400. The defendants appeal therefrom.

[1] It is contended by appellants that, in deciding a motion made in conformity with section 663, supra, the court's power is limited to either granting or denying the motion; that is, the court must either grant or deny the motion in toto. No authorities are cited in support of the claim, but, upon principle, it is clear that the court, having acquired jurisdiction to entertain and pass on the motion, may enter such order and judgment within the limits of the Code section as may be just, irrespective of the prayer of the moving party.

It is also contended that the amendment of the conclusions of law was in reality an amendment of the findings of fact. The complaint alleges that there was still due the defendants on the contract of purchase the sum of $300. This is not denied by the answer, but, notwithstanding this state of the pleadings, the court, in its finding No. 3, found the allegation to be true.

We are satisfied that neither of the points thus presented are sound.

The court awarded plaintiffs $500 exemplary damages. Appellants contend that this is an action upon contract, and therefore will not sustain such an award. Section 3294 of the Civil Code provides: "In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages, may recover damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant." In 8 California Jurisprudence, § 113, p. 872, it is said: "The rule as to damages in actions upon contract is the same whether the breach be by mistake, pure accident or inability to perform it, or whether it be willful and malicious; the motives of the party breaking the contract are not to be inquired into." Where, however, the action is not on the contract, but is based on the fraud by which it was induced, the fact that the contract fixes the compensation does not prevent recovery of exemplary damages."

In Gorman v. S. P. Company, 97 Cal. 1, 31 P. 1112, 33 Am. St. Rep. 157, it is held that the wrongful expulsion of a passenger from a railroad train on the theory that the fare had not been paid, if accompanied by undue violence and insult, is an action in tort and exemplary damages may be awarded.

In Lyles v. Perrin, 119 Cal. 264, 51 P. 332, it is held that, in an action for damages growing out of a wrongful transfer by the defendant of a water right, after he had sold it to plaintiff, but before the latter had recorded his deed, is not an action upon contract but a tort, and in such a case, in addition to compensatory damages, punitive damages are allowable.

In 12 American and English Encyclopedia of Law, p. 20, it is said: "Where a breach of contract also amounts to a tort, there may be recovery of exemplary damages upon proper allegations."

In Jones et ux. v. Kelly (Cal. Sup.) 280 P. 942, it is held that, whether a pleading is intended to state a cause of action ex contractu or ex delicto, it should be construed according to the full scope and effect rather than according to a single sentence or clause contained therein, and special consideration should be given to the prominent and leading allegations. If the cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is ex contractu, but, if it arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is ex delicto, and a tort and trespass is none the less such because it incidentally involves a breach of contract. The law imposes the obligation that every person is bound without contract to abstain from injuring the person or property of another, or infringing upon any of his rights, and this duty is independent of any contract and attaches over and above the terms thereof.

In the case last cited, the defendants leased real property together with a water right; the defendants agreeing to maintain said water right. The plaintiffs entered into the possession thereof, and, while in possession under said lease, the defendants entered upon said property and willfully, maliciously, and malevolently destroyed the water right. It was held by the court that the acts amounted to a breach of the contract, as well as a tort, and plaintiff was entitled to waive the breach and sue in tort.

[2, 3] From these decisions we are of the opinion that the rules applicable to this character of actions are as follows: If a cause of action arises from a breach of promise, the action is ex contractu; if it arises from a breach of duty growing out of the contract, it is ex delicto, and a tort or trespass is none the less such because it incidentally involves a breach of contract. In determining whether a pleading is intended to state a cause of action ex contractu or ex delicto, it should be construed according to its full scope and effect rather than according to a single sentence or expression contained therein, and special consideration should be given to the prominent and leading allegations.

In the light of these settled principles of law, it becomes necessary to examine the complaint in the instant case to determine the nature of the action. It alleges that the defendants are copartners; that on January 3, 1925, the said defendants with the intent of deceiving and defrauding the plaintiffs, represented to them that defendants were subdividing a certain tract of land in Los Angeles county, known as Independence Acres; that defendants had developed sufficient water on said premises with which to provide all the tenants or all the owners of said tract with sufficient water to irrigate the crops raised by the plaintiffs and sufficient water with which to water all chickens or other live stock which plaintiffs desired to raise or maintain on said premises; that at said time and place, with the intention of deceiving plaintiffs, the defendants fraudulently represented to them that said land would be provided with streets which would be graveled within six months from that date, and in addition thereto defendants had made arrangements to supply the said tract of land and plaintiffs with electricity for light and power purposes; that lot 5 of block 9 of said tract was worth $500, and would be worth a much greater sum as soon as the streets were put in and graveled and as soon as the electricity was wired to said property; that the defendants knew at the time said representations were made that they were false, fraudulent, and untrue; that they were made by them with the intention and purpose of deceiving the plaintiffs into buying said land; that, believing and relying upon said false representations, the plaintiffs on January 3, 1925, entered into a written contract for the purchase of said lot for the sum of $500, and by virtue thereof entered into the possession of said lot on March 25, 1929, and have paid on the purchase price the sum of $200, and there is still due the defendants the balance of $300.

It is further alleged that, believing and relying upon said false statements, and before discovering their falsity, plaintiffs expended $2,675 in the construction of a dwelling house, garage, and chicken house upon said lot, and in addition thereto plaintiffs purchased chickens at a cost of $1,073 and maintained said chickens on said premises until the 15th day of July, 1925, at which time the plaintiffs discovered that said statements made by defendants were wholly false and fraudulent, that the defendants had not developed sufficient water for the tenants upon said premises, that the defendants had refused to furnish the plaintiffs with any water whatsoever upon the premises, and had no intention of graveling the streets or furnishing electricity for light or power, and plaintiffs were forced to sell said chickens at a loss of $373; that, prior to the discovery that said representations were fraudulent, plaintiffs also expended $100 in planting crops. It is then alleged that the value of the lot is $200, and that defendants falsely asserted it to be of the value of $500. It is further alleged that, if said representations had been true, said lot would have been worth $500 or more. The last paragraph of the complaint alleges that the lot cost plaintiffs $200 in money; there is still due the defendants $300 on the purchase price; $2,675 expended for permanent improvement; $373 in loss on sale of chickens; $100 expended in planting crops that did not mature—a total of $3,648—that such expenditures would not have been made except for said false and fraudulent statements, and, if said statements had been true, the property would have been worth $4,000, but instead thereof its value was $1,500, and plaintiffs were damaged in the sum of $2,500 actual damages and $5,000 exemplary damages.

The court found against the plaintiffs on some of the allegations of actual damages. One of said findings held that the lot was of the value of $500, but did find that, if said false and fraudulent statements had been true, the said real estate and improvements thereon would have been worth not less than $200 more than the purchase price. The court awarded the plaintiffs $.200 compensatory damages, being the difference between the purchase price of the land and cost of the improvements and what they would have been worth if the false and fraudulent representations had been true.

[4, 5] We are of the opinion that this is the proper measure of the damage. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 P. 1011; Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 P. 729. We are also of the opinion that the action is based upon the deceit practiced upon the plaintiffs in inducing them to purchase the property upon the false representations as to the character of the improvements that were to be placed upon the tract of land by the defendants, and also the false representations that the land had a water right. The case falls within the rules promulgated in Jones et ux. v. Kelly, supra. Having reached the conclusion that the action is in tort, the findings are in accordance with the pleadings.

The contract contains the following clause: "No representations, inducement of agreements made by any one not specifically set out herein shall be binding against the seller."

[6, 7] Counsel for appellants say that they do not find any decisions concerning a clause such as this, but they see no reason why full weight and effect should not be given to it. The contract in the case at bar had its inception in fraud, and no doubt the clause quoted was placed there by the perpetrators of the fraud for the very purpose of preventing inquiry; furthermore the action is not upon the contract, but upon the fraud used to induce the plaintiffs to enter into the contract. The trial court also found that the written agreement did not contain all of the representations, terms, inducements, or conditions existing between the parties when the agreement was made. The evidence is not before us, so that the findings must be taken as true. We believe that the point is without merit. Sections 1565, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1708, 1709 and 1710, Civ. Code.

No good cause has been shown for disturbing the judgment, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J

ROGERS v. INTERSTATE TRANSIT CO.★
(Civ. 3946.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(12,44)—Evidence that stage occupied center of road, and, when plaintiff's car succeeded in passing, accelerated its speed and struck plaintiff's car from behind, held to sustain verdict for plaintiff on issues of negligence and contributory negligence (California Vehicle Act, § 126).

Evidence that stage occupied center of the road and refused to permit plaintiff's automobile to pass on left after repeated signals, in violation of California Vehicle Act, § 126 (St. 1923, p. 558), and that, after plaintiff's automobile had succeeded in passing, it was struck from rear by stage which had accelerated its rate of speed, held to sustain verdict for plaintiff on issues of negligence and contributory negligence.

2. Damages ⇨132(9)—$20,000 for automobile collision injuries, plaintiff's left foot being amputated, held not excessive.

Award of $20,000 for injuries in automobile collision, resulting in plaintiff's left foot being nearly torn off, necessitating amputation above ankle and the wearing of cork foot and limb, held not excessive.

3. Automobiles ⇨246(48)—Instructions predicated negligence on bus driver's failure to give way to permit overtaking car to pass, if bus driver saw or heard or, by exercise of ordinary care could have seen or heard, plaintiff's attempt to pass, held not inapplicable to facts.

Instruction that defendant was liable for injuries to plaintiff, if plaintiff, while driving at lawful rate of speed, signaled his desire to pass bus, and if driver of bus heard, or by exercise of ordinary care could have heard, such signal, or if bus driver saw, or by exercise of ordinary care could have seen, that plaintiff's car was about to overtake bus, and if bus driver's negligence in that respect was proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, held not erroneous as inapplicable to facts of case.

4. Automobiles ⇨172(5)—Driver of motor vehicle refusing to move over to permit overtaking vehicle to pass is negligent, if in ordinary care he should have seen or heard overtaking vehicle (California Vehicle Act, § 126).

Driver of motor vehicle failing to comply with California Motor Vehicle Act, § 126 (St. 1923, p. 558), by moving over to right to permit overtaking vehicle to pass, is guilty of negligence if he in the exercise of ordinary care should have heard signals or should have seen overtaking vehicle.

5. Automobiles ⇨246(48)—Trial ⇨256(10)—Instruction that bus driver must give way to overtaking vehicle held not misleading as omitting qualification that he may safely do so, in view of evidence; no such qualification being requested (California Vehicle Act, § 126).

Instruction as to duty of bus driver to give way to overtaking vehicle under California Motor Vehicle Act, § 126 (St. 1923, p. 558), held not misleading as not including the provision that driver must give way only when he may safely do so; no such qualification being requested by either party, and the evidence showing ample room for both machines to pass on the highway.

6. Automobiles ⇨245(60)—Whether bus driver's failure to give way to overtaking vehicle was proximate cause of collision held for jury (California Vehicle Act, § 126).

Whether bus driver's failure to give way to plaintiff's overtaking vehicle, as required by California Vehicle Act, § 126 (St. 1923, p. 558), was proximate cause of collision between bus and plaintiff's vehicle, held question for jury.

7. Automobiles ⇨246(48)—Instruction as to statutory requirement of rear vision mirror held proper in collision case, where bus driver testified he did not know plaintiff was attempting to pass (California Vehicle Act, § 97).

In an action for injuries by collision of vehicle driven by plaintiff with defendant's bus, instruction as to presence of mirror in all vehicles in language of California Vehicle Act, § 97 (St. 1923, p. 546), was proper, in view of bus driver's testimony that he did not know that plaintiff was trying to pass his stage.

8. Automobiles ⇨246(11)—In action for injuries by collision with defendant's bus, refusal to instruct as to carrier's duty to exercise utmost care for safety of passengers was not error (Civ. Code, § 2100).

In an action for injuries by collision of plaintiff's vehicle with defendant's bus, refusal to instruct jury as to defendant's duty as carrier of passengers to exercise utmost care and diligence for safety of passengers, in view of Civ. Code, § 2100, was not error, there being no rule of law that will justify carrier of passengers by motor vehicle in failing to exercise ordinary care and obey the ordinary traffic rules for the protection of other travelers.

9. Trial ⇨234(7)—Instructions as to burden of proof held not erroneous or misleading.

Instruction as to burden of proof urging jury to reconcile apparent contradictions where possible, and, in case the evidence is equally balanced in weight, directing a verdict against the party on whom rests the burden of proof, held not erroneous or misleading.

10. Automobiles ⇨246(26)—Instruction in automobile collision case that plaintiff presumably took ordinary care of his own concerns was not erroneous (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4; § 1957).

In automobile collision case instruction that the law presumes that plaintiff took ordinary care of his own concerns was not erroneous in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, affirming such presumptions, and section 1957, declaring such presumptions to be evidence, such presumption being disputable and the question whether it had been rebutted being a problem for the jury.

11. Negligence ⇨136(12)—Whether disputable presumption that plaintiff exercised ordinary care was rebutted by other evidence is jury question (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, and § 1957).

Whether the presumption that plaintiff exercised due care under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, and section 1957 was rebutted by other evidence is a question for the jury.

12. Negligence ⇨83—"Last clear chance doctrine" defined.

The doctrine of last clear chance applies when one is in imminent peril, but, in the exercise of ordinary care, is ignorant of the danger, or, knowing of the danger, is unable to extricate himself, and, on the contrary, the accused is aware of the danger, and by ordinary care may avoid injuring him, but fails to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Last Clear Chance.]

13. Automobiles ⇨246(58)—Instruction on last clear chance doctrine held applicable to evidence that bus struck overtaking automobile in rear.

Instructions on last clear chance doctrine held not inapplicable to collision case in which evidence tended to support plaintiff's theory that bus failed to give way to permit him to pass after repeated signals, and then, after he had succeeded in passing, bus accelerated speed and struck the rear of his car.

14. Trial ☞295(6)—Technical defects of last clear chance instruction held not reversible error in view of instruction as a whole.

Technical defects of instruction under last clear chance doctrine in omitting to state that defendant was able to avoid accident held not reversible error; such element being necessarily inferable from other language of instruction.

15. Trial ☞133(6)—Argument of counsel, if containing misstatements of facts and law, held not prejudicial misconduct, in view of court's instructions and caution to jury.

Theoretical argument of counsel, if objectionable as misstatements of facts and law, held not prejudicial misconduct, in view of court's instructions that statements of counsel are not evidence, and, unless borne out by evidence or instructions, are to be disregarded, and in view of jury findings under instructions clearly and specifically defining issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by Norman Rogers against the Interstate Transit Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, and Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco (George Allan Smith, of Monterey, of counsel), for appellant.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for injuries sustained in an automobile collision.

At 1 o'clock p. m. on March 11, 1927, the defendant's auto stage was being driven southerly along a straight stretch of level highway in Shasta county between Anderson and Cottonwood. It was occupying more than half of the concrete portion of the roadway, and was traveling about 35 miles an hour. The plaintiff, who was an able-bodied man 30 years of age, and who had been employed by Mr. A. J. Loggie for 8 years as his auto mechanic and chauffeur, was driving his employer's Packard limousine in the same direction. The owner of the Packard with a companion occupied the rear seat. The concrete pavement was 15 feet wide with a 5-foot graveled shoulder sloping down to a shallow ditch on either side. At a point about 1 mile from Cottonwood the Packard car overtook the stage, and undertook to pass it on the proper side. The highway was unobstructed. No other machines were in sight. Several times the horn of the Packard was blown, and the plaintiff attempted to pass the stage, which failed to yield any portion of its position on the highway. Finally the plaintiff drove to the extreme left side of the roadway with about half of the machine traveling upon the graveled shoulder, and repeatedly sounded the horn as a warning in passing the stage. As the Packard reached a point opposite the front of the stage, the latter appeared to increase its speed. The Packard, however, succeeded in passing the stage, and for a considerable distance continued to keep its position on the extreme left side of the roadway. The defendant testified in this regard: "I never attempted to turn in (front of the stage) at all. I kept going at the same rate of speed I was going while I was passing it." On redirect examination he said: "I turned slightly on the pavement, following the left side, driving straight ahead." The machines were running about 35 miles an hour.

There is a serious conflict of evidence as to just how the accident occurred. The appellant contends that the plaintiff cut in front of the stage, hooking his rear right fender over the left end of the stage bumper, and thus diverted the course of the Packard from the highway into the ditch upon the right. There is, however, ample testimony to support the plaintiff's theory that, after he had passed the stage and was proceeding along his proper side of the highway, the stage increased its speed and struck the Packard. The left angle of the stage bumper hit the rear right fender of the Packard, back of the wheel. The impact crumpled the mud guard, and shoved the rear end of the car violently to the left. The plaintiff lost control of the machine, and it pitched diagonally across the highway in front of the stage into a telephone pole on the right side of the highway, cutting down the pole, upsetting and wrecking the Packard, and hurling the plaintiff from the car to the ground. The plaintiff's left foot, which was caught between the clutch pedal and the brake lever, was nearly torn off. He was taken to the hospital at Cottonwood, where his foot was amputated above the ankle. He is now forced to wear a cork foot and limb, to his great inconvenience, discomfort, and humiliation. The jury rendered a verdict in his favor for the sum of $20,000. A judgment was duly entered for this amount, from which an appeal was perfected.

The appellant asserts that: (1) The judgment is not supported by the evidence; (2) the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; (3) the court erred in giving and refusing certain instructions; and (4) the amount of the judgment was excessive.

There is substantial evidence to support the judgment. Three witnesses testified to substantially the foregoing statement of facts.

The appellant contends that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cut in ahead of the stage, and that in so doing the right rear fender of the Packard hooked over the left end of the front bumper of the stage, and caused the Packard to be shunted to the right diagonally across the highway in front of the stage. The implied finding of the jury that this was not true finds ample support in the evidence. A physical inspection of the fender in question discloses no evidence that the bumper was drawn out by such a forcible pull as would have resulted under such circumstances. On the contrary, it appears reasonable to conclude that the fender may have been indented by a severe blow from the bumper of the stage. This accords with other corroborating testimony. It is possible the indentation in the Packard fender may have been caused by its cutting in and striking the stage bumper. Either theory of the cause of the accident is reasonably possible. We are therefore bound by the findings of the jury in this regard.

The portion of the highway upon which the stage was traveling at the time of the accident is material in determining the question of defendant's negligence. Mr. Purdy testified in this regard: "The stage was right over, I would say, in the middle of the highway." On cross-examination he said: "I would say that there was probably five feet between the stage and gravel (on the left side). * * * I looked out and saw that we cleared the stage and were by the stage, and all at once this (stage) hit us."

Mr. Loggie testified regarding the same subject: "I would say that (the stage) had at least two-thirds of the pavement." The portion of the highway upon which the Packard traveled after it succeeded in passing the stage is also important in determining whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Reading the record as a whole, it seems improbable that the Packard passed to the right of the central line of the highway prior to the occurrence of the collision. At least there is ample testimony to support the theory that it did not do so, and upon the contrary that the stage continued to travel with a portion of the vehicle upon the wrong side of the highway.

Regarding the relative positions in which these two machines traveled upon the highway and the circumstances incident to the accident, Mr. Loggie testified: "We had two wheels on the gravel and two wheels on the right side of our car on the pavement. * * * We passed the whole stage. * * * As our car got up toward the front of the stage the stage seemed to me to speed up as though they didn't want us to go by. * * * Q. When the Packard (had) passed it * * * you say the stage struck the Packard in the rear?

A. Yes, sir. * * * The Packard had an impact and swerved to the right."

Mr. Purdy also testified: "The stage was right over, I would say in the middle of the highway. * * * Rogers pulled over on the dirt, with two wheels on the dirt and two wheels on the pavement, running close to the stage. * * * The stage seemed to speed up after we got right up * * * (to the) front of it. * * * I was sitting where I could see the whole proposition. * * * What I presume happened (was that) the stage driver attempted to go by. * * * This stage hit us in the rear of our car. * * * The minute it did the (Packard) car turned right straight across the road and over it went." The plaintiff testified: "I was following the stage for quite a ways there and we came to this straightaway and I blew my horn to pass the stage and he wouldn't move over to give me my half of the pavement, so there were good shoulders there and a straight road and no cars coming, so I attempted (to pass the stage). * * * I got up opposite the driver. He saw that I was passing him and he speeded up, so I speeded up then and got ahead of him, got in the clear and all of a sudden something seemed to push my car straight across the road in front of the stage and I had no control over it at all. * * * Q. Did they move over to the right to allow you to pass? A. No. * * * Q. You say that when the Packard passed the stage you felt as if there was a force turning your car to the right? A. Yes. * * * I know it wasn't hooked over or (on) the bumper (of the stage), or the fender would have been straightened out. * * * Q. After you passed the stage did the Packard stay on the left-hand side of the pavement? A. Yes, I never attempted to turn in at all. * * * I kept going at the same rate of speed that I was going while I was passing it."

[1] The foregoing testimony sustains the implied finding of the jury that the stage driver was guilty of negligence in violating the provisions of section 126 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 558), which proximately caused the accident. It is apparent that, if the stage was traveling with a portion of the vehicle on the left side of the concrete without changing its course after the Packard succeeded in passing it, and that its speed was then accelerated so that it overtook the Packard traveling on its proper side of the highway, and struck the fender with such force as to divert the course of the Packard, hurl it into the ditch, and cause the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, this conduct on the part of the stage driver would amount to actionable negligence and render the defendant liable for damages which resulted therefrom. The evidence will sustain this theory of the accident.

For the foregoing reasons, the evidence will also support the implied finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[2] Considering the pain, the discomfort, inconvenience, and humiliation on account of the loss of plaintiff's foot and the consequent necessity of going through life with an artificial limb, we are of the opinion that the amount of the judgment was not excessive.

[3] The appellant challenges the following instruction which was given to the jury at the request of the plaintiff as erroneous:

"It was the duty of both parties at all times to operate their machines with ordinary care and with due regard to other traffic upon the road; if the plaintiff, while driving at a lawful rate of speed, gave a signal of his desire to pass defendant's bus, and if the driver of defendant's bus heard, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have heard said signal, or if the driver of defendant's bus saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen that the car driven by the plaintiff was about to overtake his bus, then it was his duty to give way to the right in favor of said overtaking vehicle, and not to increase his speed until completely passed by the car driven by plaintiff, and also to exercise reasonable care not to injure the plaintiff; and if defendant was negligent in that respect and such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries and the plaintiff was not negligent, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover."

It is asserted this instruction is inapplicable to the facts of the present case; that upon the authority of City of Sacramento v. Hunger, 79 Cal. App. 234, 249 P. 223, the defendant is not liable for failure to give way to his right in favor of a passing vehicle, unless he has actual knowledge of the desire and effort on the part of the overtaking vehicle to pass, and that the defendant's failure in this regard was in no way the proximate cause of the accident.

[4] This instruction is not erroneous. If by the exercise of reasonable care the driver of a vehicle should see or hear the approach of an overtaking machine which lawfully undertakes to pass, the driver of the former vehicle would be just as guilty of negligence which resulted in his failure to comply with the provisions of section 126 of the California Vehicle Act as though he actually saw or heard the approaching machine and deliberately failed to comply with the law. One may not shut his eyes or close his ears to the dangers of traffic on a public highway and thus excuse the result of carelessness or inattention. The dangers attending the use of motor vehicles on a public highway demand constant vigil, great caution, and the alert exercise of one's senses of sight and hearing. In the present case it appears that the driver of the stage had actual knowledge of the presence and desire of the plaintiff to pass his vehicle, at least when the Packard reached a point opposite the driver of the stage. Yet the stage driver, instead of complying with the statute, then increased his speed, and evidently attempted to prevent the Packard from passing.

[5, 6] It is claimed the foregoing instruction is defective and misleading, for the reason that it does not include the provision that the driver of a vehicle must give way to a passing vehicle only when he may safely do so, and that this exception to the general rule was a necessary element under the circumstances of the present case, since there was a culvert and concrete railings bordering the roadway, a distance of 20 feet on either side, near where the accident occurred, which increased the danger of turning out for the Packard to pass.

It was not error to omit this qualification. It was not requested by either party. The evidence shows there was a clear space of 20 feet on the highway between these railings. This was ample room for the machines to pass. Moreover, the culvert was not reached until after the Packard had passed the stage. The plaintiff testified in this regard: "I was passing the stage before we got to the viaduct and just before we went over the viaduct I was in the clear. * * * Q. How far did you travel after that before the stage came in contact with you? A. Well, I should judge about 100 to 150 feet the other side of the viaduct." It was 185 feet from the culvert to the telephone pole which wrecked the Packard machine. Moreover, the jury was charged that all persons must drive a motor vehicle on the public highway with "due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway," and that a judgment could not be rendered against the defendant, unless its negligence was the proximate cause of the accident. Fairly construed in the light of the evidence, this challenged instruction must be understood to mean that it was not only unlawful for the driver of a vehicle on a public highway to fail or refuse to permit another machine operating lawfully to pass upon the giving of proper signals for that purpose, but also that it was equally unlawful for the driver of the first vehicle to increase its speed until the passing vehicle was completely and safely by. Two distinct offenses are included in this section of the statute. Either may become the basis of an action for damages, provided its violation becomes the proximate cause of the injuries sustained. In the present case it was the violation of the latter portion of this section which caused the accident. The defendant's failure to give way to the right and upon the contrary holding the position of the stage which was traveling partially on the left side of the pavement while he increased the speed of the stage so as to cause a collision with the Packard car would clearly be a violation of the statute which would create a liability for damages resulting therefrom. It was solely the province of the jury to determine whether the conduct of the driver of the stage was the proximate cause of the accident. There is nothing in the case of City of Sacramento v. Hunger, supra, in conflict with the foregoing statement of the law.

[7] An instruction was given regarding the presence of a mirror in all vehicles which are operated upon the highway. It was given to the jury in the language of section 97 of the California Vehicle Act, and was applicable to the facts of this case, since the stage driver asserted he did not know the plaintiff was trying to pass the stage. The requirement that all machines be equipped with a mirror is for the purpose of imparting knowledge to the driver of the condition of the traffic in the rear of his machine. This instruction was not erroneous.

[8] The appellant also charges error in refusing to instruct the jury pursuant to section 2100 of the Civil Code that the defendant as a carrier of passengers for hire was required to exercise the utmost care and diligence for the safety of its passengers. It is claimed this statute should be considered in determining whether the driver of the stage was negligent in failing to turn out for the Packard to pass. This refusal was not error. We are unable to see the application of this principle to the facts of the present case. A carrier of passengers for hire may not be permitted to plead extraordinary care due to one class of persons as a defense to a charge of a lack of ordinary care which is due to another class. The utmost care for the safety of the passengers of a common carrier will not justify a lack of ordinary care toward others. Nor will it justify the violation of a statute governing the uniform operation of all motor vehicles on the public highway. The highway was level, straight, unobstructed by traffic, and 25 feet in width, including the gravel shoulders, which were in good condition and safe to travel upon. There was ample room for the stage to travel on its proper side of the highway without danger to its passengers. This instruction was therefore inapplicable.

[9] Plaintiff's instruction regarding the burden of proof, when taken as a whole, is not erroneous or misleading. The appellant complains of the first paragraph thereof, which reads: "If the evidence is contradictory, your decision must be in accordance with the preponderance thereof." This instruction continues by charging the jury that the apparent contradictions in the evidence should be reconciled, if possible, and concludes by saying: "When the evidence * * * is so equally balanced in weight * * * that the scales of proof hang even, your verdict should be against the party upon whom rests the burden of proof." The jury was also correctly charged that the affirmative allegations of negligence in this case were made by the plaintiff, who must therefore assume the burden of proof.

[10, 11] It is insisted that it was error to instruct the jury as follows: "The burden is upon the defendant to prove the negligence of plaintiff by a preponderance of the evidence, and in considering the evidence upon this point you will keep in mind that the law presumes that plaintiff, at the time in question here, took ordinary care of his own concerns." This amounted to a charge to the effect that the jury could take into consideration with all the other evidence adduced, in determining whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, the presumption created by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns." This is held by statute to be a disputable presumption. Presumptions are declared by section 1957 of the same Code to be evidence. This presumption is therefore entitled to be weighed and considered by the jury, together with all other evidence upon the subject in determining that issue. The question as to whether this presumption has been rebutted by other evidence is a problem for the jury to determine. Davis v. Tanner, 88 Cal. App. 67, 262 P. 1106; Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 25, 204 P. 393. This instruction was therefore not erroneous. This construction is statutory. We are cited to no case where similar statutes have been otherwise construed. Weighed against actual testimony which is adduced upon the same subject, disputable presumptions are of slight value. Since our statute makes all presumptions evidence, it would be inconsistent to hold that it could be considered as such only in the absence of all other evidence.

[12] The only instruction offered on the doctrine of the last clear chance to avoid an accident is assailed as inapplicable to the facts of this case and as erroneous, for the reason that two necessary elements are omitted from the hypothesis of the charge, to wit, that the plaintiff was unable to extricate himself from the peril, and, upon the contrary, that the defendant was aware of plaintiff's danger; that he was able to prevent the accident, and failed to do so. This instruction reads:

"As the court has already stated, the claim is made by defendant that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The court instructs you that although it appears to you that the contributory negligence of plaintiff was one of the proximate causes of his injuries, yet if the defendant's agent having charge of the stage, perceived that the plaintiff, by his own negligence, had placed himself in a position of peril from which he probably could not escape, and if perceiving plaintiff's perilous condition (he) failed to exercise orordinary care and prudence to avoid injuring the plaintiff and such neglect was also a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, he is entitled to recover."

The doctrine of the last clear chance applies when one is in imminent peril, but in the exercise of ordinary care is ignorant of the danger (Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, 553, 250 P. 565), or, knowing of the danger, is unable to extricate himself, and, upon the contrary, the accused is aware of the danger to the complainant and by the use of ordinary care may avoid injuring him, but fails to do so (Basham v. Southern Pacific Co., 176 Cal. 320, 168 P. 359; Chappell v. San Diego & A. Ry. Co., 201 Cal. 560, 258 P. 73).

[13, 14] On plaintiff's theory of the cause of the accident in the present case, the doctrine of the last clear chance does apply. Traveling on his proper side of the highway at the same rate of speed employed in passing the stage, the plaintiff was proceeding on his way ignorant of his danger, and with no reason to suppose the driver of the stage would retain his position partly over on the left side of the pavement and increase his speed so as to overtake and collide with the Packard car. Upon the contrary, the evidence seems conclusive of the fact that the stage driver must have known of the presence and the danger of the plaintiff who had just passed and was driving the Packard directly ahead of the stage. The driver of the stage certainly should have seen the Packard, and could have so regulated the speed or diverted the course of his machine as to avoid the collision. The stage driver excused this failure by testifying he did not see the Packard in time to prevent the accident. Discussing this same claim of ignorance of the peril on the part of the accused tort-feasor in a similar case, the court says in Hoy v. Tornich, supra, in effect that the jury was not bound to accept the defendant's statement as true, but had a right to decide from all the facts of the case whether he actually had knowledge of the complainant's predicament and danger, or not. The instruction does state that the plaintiff was "in a position of peril from which he probably could not escape." This was apparently true, for he did not realize his peril, and was therefore not likely to attempt to escape from an unknown danger. The instruction is technically defective in omitting to specifically state that the defendant was able to avoid the accident. This necessary element is, however, inferred by the language employed as follows: "Perceiving plaintiff's perilous condition (he) failed to exercise ordinary care and prudence to avoid injuring the plaintiff." It can scarcely be reasonably argued upon the facts of this case that the stage driver did not have the ability to prevent the collision. The speed and location of the stage were within the control of the driver. The jury must have understood from the language used that his ability to avoid the accident was a condition upon which his liability depended. Thompson on Trials, § 2431, is authority for the declaration that instructions which are merely faulty or technically inaccurate will not require the reversal of a judgment, unless the defects are serious enough to have misled the jury and to have caused a miscarriage of justice. We are of the opinion the defect of this instruction is not reversible error.

Other instructions are complained of. Although some defects exist, the faults do not seem serious. The jury was very fully and, we think, fairly instructed. Upon an examination of the entire charge, we are of the opinion that it contains no reversible error.

[15] Finally, the appellant assigns as prejudicial misconduct certain alleged misstatements of facts and law made by plaintiff's attorney in the course of his argument to the jury. The substance of this objectionable argument was to the effect that the defendant claimed that, because the stage company had a schedule requiring it, and that the stage was actually traveling 35 miles an hour, it was not compelled by law to turn out for a passing machine, since the statute required one to give way for a passing machine only when it was traveling "at a lawful rate of speed." There was some evidence that the stage was traveling 37 miles an hour. The jury was specifically instructed that, if they found that the plaintiff was exceeding 35 miles an hour, he could not recover. It was also instructed that, if the stage was traveling 35 miles an hour, it was unlawful for the driver of the Packard to attempt to pass it. The finding of the jury was favorable to the plaintiff on these issues. This objectionable language appears to have been mere theoretical argument. Conceding that the statements were the result of excessive zeal and were unwarranted, upon objection on the part of the defendant, the court promptly charged the jury that "any statement of counsel is not evidence in the case and that unless such statements are borne out by the evidence or by the instructions of the court * * * they are to be disregarded." We are of the opinion that the argument of counsel does not amount to misconduct, and that it was not prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

CYPRESS LAWN CEMETERY ASS'N v.
CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRAN-CISCO. (Civ. 6873.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 13, 1930.

- 1. Constitutional law ⇨14—Where language of constitutional provision is plain, meaning thereof must be gathered solely from language used, giving words their ordinary meaning.

If language of constitutional provision is plain and unambiguous, meaning and intent thereof must be gathered from the language used alone, giving words meaning which they bear in ordinary use.

- 2. Constitutional law ⇨14—Words repeatedly used in Constitution will generally bear same meaning.

A word repeatedly used in a Constitution will bear the same meaning throughout the instrument, unless it is apparent that another meaning was intended.

- 3. Taxation ⇨251—Cemetery association seeking to have property declared free from taxation had burden to prove facts bringing property within limitation and outside exception of applicable constitutional provision (Const. art. 13, § 1b).

Constitutional provisions exempting private property from taxation are strictly construed, and grants of exemptions will not be allowed unless intention to do so was expressed in direct terms or is fairly inferable, and therefore cemetery association seeking to compel exemption of its property had burden to plead sufficient facts to bring its property within the limitation and outside the exception of Const. art. 13, § 1b, providing that property used or held exclusively for burial purposes or for care, maintenance, or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation.

- 4. Taxation ⇨245—Hotel purchased by cemetery association, income from which was used exclusively for improvement and preservation of cemetery, held not exempt from taxation; "use;" "held;" "care" (Civ. Code, §§ 610, 611, 616, 617; Const. art. 13, § 1b).

Hotel purchased by cemetery association pursuant to Civ. Code, §§ 616 and 617, with money held in trust for improvement of cemetery under requirements of sections 610 and 611, income from which hotel was used exclusively for improvement and preservation of cemetery, held not exempt from taxation under Const. art. 13, § 1b, providing that all property used or held exclusively for burial purposes or for care, maintenance, or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation, in view of section 1, since the hotel itself was not used for the care, maintenance, and upkeep of the cemetery, but only the income, and the hotel was used and owned for profit; "use" meaning to employ, to put to a purpose, while "held" as used in statute means own, and "care" may mean safe-keeping, preservation, and security.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Care; Held; Use; Used.]

- 5. Taxation ⇨245—That investment of cemetery funds was limited in part to tax exempt bonds and mortgages did not require exemption from taxation of real property holdings (Civ. Code, §§ 608–617; Const. art. 13, § 1b).

That investment of funds of cemetery association incorporated under Civ. Code, §§ 608–617, was limited to government bonds, first mortgages, and centrally located income-producing real estate, and that first two classes of investment are tax exempt, did not make third class exempt under Const. art. 13, § 1b, relative to exemption of cemetery property from taxation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Suit by the Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Brittain & Weise, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, amici curiae.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. This appeal from a judgment, rendered after the overruling of a general demurrer, presents for decision the single legal question as to whether or not the properties described in the complaint are, under its allegations, exempt from taxation by the provisions of article 13, section 1b of the state Constitution.

The complaint alleges that the defendant was and is a municipal corporation; that the plaintiff was and is a cemetery association incorporated under sections 608 to 617, both inclusive, of the Civil Code, and has been and is maintaining a cemetery in the county of San Mateo wherein it has sold and granted the perpetual right of burial to many thousands of persons and the bodies of many thousands of human dead have been buried; that said plaintiff has received a surplus from the sale of lots which under sections 610 and 611 of the Civil Code can only be used for the improvement, embellishment, and preservation of said cemetery and not for dividends; that said plaintiff, under section 616 of the same Code, has received trust moneys, and under section 617 has contracted for the perpetual care of certain lots in said cemetery for which it holds trust moneys; that at the time of the assessment it was the owner, by the investment of such trust moneys in accordance with said sections 616 and 617, of land, improved with a hotel then operated by it for peculiar reasons set forth, located in the city of San Francisco; that "said cemetery is used and held exclusively for the burial or other disposition of the human dead and the said trust funds with the proceeds thereof, and the entire net proceeds and income from the whole of said trust fund is used exclusively for the care, maintenance and upkeep of said cemetery and the care of said dead; and, no part of said trust fund, nor of the proceeds or income thereof ever has been, or lawfully can be used or held for profit of said plaintiff, or its members." Then, appropriately, the taking of the various steps required by law for the assessment and levying of taxes against such property and the payment of such taxes under protest is alleged. Plaintiff seeks recovery of the amount of such taxes so paid under protest and their cancellation.

The constitutional provision here involved and decisive of the present dispute reads as follows: "All property used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead or for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property or such dead, except as used or held for profit, shall be free from taxation and local assessment."

Subject to the exception, this provision exempts from taxation and local assessment two kinds of property, classified on the basis of its use, but without consideration of the status or character of its owner or possessor, to wit: (1) That "used or held exclusively for the burial or other permanent deposit of the human dead"; and (2) that "used or held exclusively * * * for the care, maintenance or upkeep of such property" (i. e., the first class) "or such dead" (i. e., human dead so deposited or buried). The exception "except as used or held for profit" qualifies the phrase "all property" and therefore restricts or limits both classes of property. We are here concerned only with the second class as affected by the exception.

[1, 2] If the language of this provision is plain and unambiguous, that language is mandatory and its meaning and intent is solely to be gathered therefrom, without consideration of the argument in favor of its adoption, or the mischiefs arising from the administration of pre-existing laws or the public policy towards the institution involved. San Francisco v. McGovern, 28 Cal. App. 491, 152 P. 980. The words employed must be given the meaning which they bear in ordinary use. Shay v. Roth, 64 Cal. App. 314, 221 P. 967. A word repeatedly used in a constitution will bear the same meaning throughout the instrument, unless it is apparent that another meaning was intended. Miller v. Dunn, 72 Cal. 462, 14 P. 27, 1 Am. St. Rep. 67. Section 1 of article 13 declares what is to be included in the word "property." The phrase "exclusively used" appeared, prior to the adoption of section 1b, in section 1, relative to the exemption of public schools, in section 1½, relative to exemption of churches (see Havens v. County of Alameda, 30 Cal. App. 206, 157 P. 821), and in section 14a, relative to the taxation of public utilities (see Lake Tahoe Ry., etc., Co. v. Roberts, 163 Cal. 551, 143 P. 786, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 1196; Southern Pacific Co. v. Richardson, 181 Cal. 280, 184 P. 3). The frequency of the occurrence of the verb "use" in the same article shows that it has a definite, fixed, and well-understood meaning. "The verb 'to use' means to employ; to put to a purpose; to employ for the attainment of some purpose or end; to avail one's self of. 39 Cyc. 846." Whitaker v. Regents etc., 39 Cal. App. 111, 115, 178 P. 308, 310. Webster defines "hold" as "to own or possess." See, also, 29 C. J. 758. "The statute exempting property of the board has exempted 'all property, real or personal, held by the board of education.' The word 'held,' as used in the statute, means owned. State v. South Penn. Oil Co., 42 W. Va. 80, 24 S. E. 688." Wey v. Salt Lake City, 35 Utah, 504, 508, 101 P. 381, 382.

According to Webster, "care" means "charge, oversight or management." Of the same word, 9 C. J. 1286, says: "As a noun, a relative term and a broad comprehension, meaning responsibility, charge or oversight; watchful regard and attention. The term may mean also safekeeping, preservation and security. Furthermore, it has been used synonymously with custody, diligence, maintenance, possession and protection." Webster defines "maintenance" as "support" or "sustenance," and "upkeep" as "maintenance" or "repair." "Maintenance" has been defined as meaning "the act of maintaining, keeping up, * * * preservation, subsistence, supply of necessities and conveniences." 38 C. J. 338. "Now, the operation of a business or property includes payment for labor and materials which go into the actual operation thereof, while maintenance means the upkeep or preserving the condition of the property to be operated. * * *" San Francisco & P. S. S. Co. v. Scott (D. C.) 253 F. 854, 855.

"Profit" is defined by Webster as "the excess of income over expenditure" and as synonymous with "benefit." "The word 'profits' signifies an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances. * * * The 'rents and profits' of an estate; the 'income' or 'net income' of it,—are all equivalent expressions. Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. [5 Greenl.] 202; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 420 [58 Am. Dec. 714]. * * * In People v. Board Supr's Niagara Co., 4 Hill [N. Y.] 20, Bronson, J., said: 'It is undoubtedly true that "profits" and "income" are sometimes used as synonymous terms; but, strictly speaking, "income" means that which comes in or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures: while "profits" generally means the gain which is made upon any business or investment, when both receipts and payments are taken into the account." People v. Saving Union, 72 Cal. 199, 202, 13 P. 498, 499. See, also, Bates v. Porter, 74 Cal. 224, 15 P. 732; Cuneo v. Giannini, 40 Cal. App. 348, 180 P. 633. The term "profit" has a larger meaning than "dividends" and covers benefits of any kind, excess of value over cost, acquisition beyond expenditure, gain, or advance. Simcoke v. Sayre, 148 Iowa, 132, 126 N. W. 816. "Profits" and "dividends" are not necessarily synonymous terms. City of Allegheny v. Pittsburgh, A. & M. P. R. Co., 179 Pa. 414, 36 A. 161." Boothe v. Summit Coal Min. Co., 55 Wash. 167, 104 P. 207, 212, 19 Ann. Cas. 1255. Since the determinative words in the above-quoted constitutional provision are in frequent, common, and everyday use and have definite, fixed, and unambiguous meanings, readily understood by the voter of ordinary intelligence, it is apparent that the provision means just what it says and needs no interpretation by use of extrinsic aids. Paraphrasing the section, by substituting definitions for original words, it reads as follows: All moneys and things, real, personal, and mixed, employed or owned, not for income, but solely for the oversight, preservation or repair of the burial places, is exempt from taxation. The grouping of the various words creates no ambiguity when so read.

[3, 4] It is apparent from a reading of the section that property to be exempt must possess two characteristics, i. e., it must fall within the limitation that it be used or held exclusively for the care, maintenance or upkeep of burial grounds, and it must also fall without the exception that it be used or held for profit. Since constitutional provisions exempting private property from taxation are strictly construed, and grants of exemptions cannot be allowed unless the intention to do so is expressed in direct terms or is fairly inferable from the language of the provision, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to plead sufficient facts to bring its property within the limitation and without the exception. 24 Cal. Jur. 89. The complaint alleges that plaintiff's hotel is "centrally located income producing improved real estate" in the city and county of San Francisco, purchased, pursuant to sections 616 and 617 of the Civil Code, with moneys held in trust, in accordance with said sections, for the improvement of its cemetery, located in San Mateo county. While due attention has been given to adjudications from other states, construing similar laws, cited by respective counsel and obtained by research, no material assistance in solving the present question is thereby gained because of the different wording of such laws (Hallidie v. Enginger, 175 Cal. 505, 166 P. 1), and so no discussion of those cases will be here given.

Obviously, since there is no physical connection between the hotel and the cemetery, located in different counties, it cannot be said that the direct and primary use or ownership of the hotel is exclusively for the care, maintenance or upkeep of the cemetery. But plaintiff urges that, since the income from the hotel is so used, the hotel itself is therefore so used and owned. Stated another way, plaintiff admits that the corpus of the trust is not directly so used or owned, but contends that, since the income derived from the corpus is so applied, such income is exempt and can pass its exemption back to its corpus. However, such reasoning inserts in the provision language not there present, for the exemption is given to the property itself without consideration as to whether it is income producing or as to the disposition of such income. Had it been the intention to grant the exemption upon the basis of the use of the income from the property rather than upon the use of the property itself, such intention would have been directly and positively expressed.

[5] Plaintiff further argues that since a cemetery's investment is limited by such sections of the Civil Code to (1) government bonds, (2) first mortgages, and (3) centrally located income producing real estate, and the first two classes of investment are exempt, it must have been the intention to extend this exemption to the third class. Three answers readily occur to meet this argument, to wit: (1) There being no ambiguity, questions of policy cannot be considered; (2) the exemptions of the first two classes are granted to them and not to their owners; and (3) a constitutional provision as to taxation cannot be construed with reference to a statute regulating investment of trust funds by cemeteries. The mere fact that the disposition of the income is beneficial to the burial grounds, which are exempt, does not extend that exemption through the income back to the property, from which the income is derived. Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 149.

The complaint, in order to negative that the property falls within the exception, further alleges that the income from the hotel cannot be used or held for the benefit of the plaintiff corporation or its members. From the foregoing definitions of the word "profit" it is seen that it is here used as synonymous with "income" and not "dividends." Restriction upon the use to which plaintiff, as trustee, can put such income under such sections of the Civil Code, does not make such income, so far as the use and ownership of the hotel is concerned, any less a profit. Since it is alleged that an income is derived from the hotel, it is apparent that the hotel itself is used and owned for profit. The exception denies exemption, if profit is received from the property, and does not limit itself to such profit, by which the owner may benefit. Were consideration given to policy, it might well be doubted whether it was intended to give such broad exemption, which, in practice, by exempting considerable holdings of developed business property, would increase the burden on property not exempted.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed with instructions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend the complaint and thereupon render judgment in favor of the defendant.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

MT. OLIVET CEMETERY ASSOCIATION (a Corporation), Plaintiff and Respondent, v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO (a Municipal Corporation), Defendant and Appellant. (Civ. 6874.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1930.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Brittain & Weise, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, as amici curiæ.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. The facts involved in this appeal differ from those involved in the case of Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. City and County of San Francisco, Defendant and Appellant (No. 6873), this day decided (Cal. App.) 284 P. 506, only as to the party plaintiff and the property owned by it. For the reasons stated in that decision, judgment is reversed with the same instructions to the trial court.

We concur: KNIGHT, Acting P. J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 315

Ex parte HUBER. (Cr. 1111.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

1. Criminal law §564(4)—Reviewing court could not take judicial notice of location of ranch where alleged offense was committed.

Where nothing in testimony taken before magistrate on preliminary hearing showed location of ranch on which alleged offense of taking bathtub was committed, reviewing court could not take judicial notice of location of ranch.

2. Habeas corpus §27—Petitioner held entitled to habeas corpus where testimony before magistrate did not show where offense was committed (Pen. Code, §§ 777, 811, 827, 828, 1487).

Where there was nothing in testimony taken before magistrate showing where alleged offense of taking bathtub was committed, petitioner held entitled to writ of habeas corpus under Pen. Code, § 1487; facts being insufficient to show that magistrate had jurisdiction under sections 777, 811, 827, 828.

Application for writ of habeas corpus by John Huber to be directed to the Sheriff of Calaveras County to secure the release of petitioner from custody. Writ granted.

Joseph R. Huberty, of San Andreas, for petitioner.

Virgil M. Airola, of San Andreas, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. On the 9th day of December, 1929, the above-named petitioner was bound over to appear before the superior court of the county of Calaveras to answer a charge of burglary, and prosecutes this application to be discharged on the various grounds set out in section 1487 of the Penal Code, and particularly on the seventh subdivision thereof, that the defendant was held to answer without reasonable or probable cause. Upon this application it is urged that the hearing before the magistrate must establish the following, to wit: (1) That a crime has been committed; (2) that it has been committed within the county over which the committing magistrate has jurisdiction; (3) that there is reasonable and probable cause to believe that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged.

[1] Section 777 of the Penal Code specifies that the jurisdiction is vested in the courts of the county where the offense was committed. Section 811 of the Penal Code reads as follows: "When an information is laid before a magistrate of the commission of a public offense, triable within the county, he must examine on oath the informant or prosecutor, and any witnesses he may produce, and take their depositions in writing, and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them," then that a warrant shall be issued and a preliminary examination held. Sections 827 and 828 of the same Code provide the procedure when the offense is triable in some other county. While it was strongly urged upon the hearing of this application that the magistrate's jurisdiction was not limited to the jurisdiction of the same officer when acting as a justice of the peace, it does appear from section 811, supra, that jurisdiction is limited to the county, and this is true as applied to the instant case, unless the recent amendments to the Codes relative to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace impose a further limitation, which we need not here consider by reason of what is hereafter stated. There is nothing in the testimony taken before the magistrate in this case, and which is before us upon the transcript presented with the petitioner's application, showing where the alleged offense was committed. All that the testimony shows is that a certain bathtub was taken from a house situate on Mitchell's ranch south of Copperopolis. In addition to this, the petitioner strongly urges that there is nothing in the transcript from which it can be either reasonably or otherwise inferred that the defendant probably participated in the taking of such bathtub. Whether this is true or not is immaterial, by reason of the fact that there is nothing in the record warranting the committing magistrate in holding the petitioner to appear for trial before the superior court of Calaveras county. The Mitchell ranch, south of Copperopolis, may be in Calaveras county, but we cannot take judicial notice of where the Mitchell ranch is located.

[2] In the case of Ex parte Cook, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 969, 39 P. 16, it is directly held that a magistrate in one county has no jurisdiction to issue a commitment for an offense committed in another county. In that case it was a justice of the peace acting as a committing magistrate.

Again, in the matter of the Application of Hartwell, 128 Cal. App. 627, 153 P. 730, 731, this court had before it an application for discharge, in which the same question was presented. In the opinion in that case we find the following: "The evidence was that he 'held up' the Plumbago mill, but there is no evidence that this mill belonged to the Croesus Gold Mining & Milling Company, nor is this mill shown by the evidence to be in Sierra county; the only evidence being that it is about three miles from Alleghany, which latter place is in Sierra county." While it does not appear that the petitioner was discharged in that case for this defect alone in the testimony, it would seem that the court had this defect in mind; otherwise the above language would not have been used.

The case of State of North Carolina v. Jones, 113 N. C. 669, 18 S. E. 249, 22 L. R. A. 678, relied upon by the respondent, is not an authority contrary to the cases just cited. In the Jones Case, it appears that the petitioner relied solely upon the mittimus, which is a similar instrument to the commitment in the instant case. It was there held that, the mittimus appearing regular upon its face, and the petitioner declining to present anything more, the writ of habeas corpus should be denied.

Nor is the case of People v. More, 68 Cal. 500, 9 P. 461, in conflict with the Cook and Hartwell Cases. In the More Case, the proceeding was before the court upon motion to set aside the information, and not upon habeas corpus, and it was there held that the question of jurisdiction should be raised under the plea of "not guilty," while under section 1487 of the Penal Code, upon habeas corpus, it is provided that the question of jurisdiction may be considered, and, if it is found that the magistrate has exceeded his jurisdiction, the petitioner may be discharged.

In view of what we have stated, it is unnecessary to consider the contention of the petitioner that the testimony fails to show any reasonable or probable cause that he committed the offense charged, irrespective of the county in which it may have been committed.

The writ of habeas corpus applied for is hereby granted, and the petitioner discharged from the custody of the sheriff of Calaveras county.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 234

GILL et al. v. JOHNSON, State Treasurer.
(Civ. 269.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California. Jan. 16, 1930.

1. States $\S$ 191(1)—Absent statutory authority, citizen cannot bring suit against state, and state, if permitting such suit, may prescribe terms and conditions thereof.

In absence of statutory authority, citizen cannot maintain suit against state, and state, in permitting such suits, may prescribe terms and conditions under which and manner in which, they may be conducted.

2. States $\S$ 191(1)—Statutes permitting suits against state must be strictly construed.

Statutes permitting suits against state must be strictly construed.

3. States $\S$ 191(1)—General statute authorizing suits against state and regulating procedure therein held to authorize only suits coming within its provisions (St. 1893, p. 57).

St. 1893, p. 57, authorizing suits against state and regulating procedure therein, held not to authorize bringing of any possible suit, but only those coming within its provisions.

4. States $\S$ 200—Statute authorizing change of venue in suit against state to Sacramento county applies only to suits filed under authority of act authorizing such suits (St. 1893, p. 57, $\S$ 1, 4).

St. 1893, p. 57, $\S$ 4, providing for change of venue to Sacramento county in suits against state, held applicable only to suits filed under authority of section 1 providing that any person having claim against state on contract or for negligence not allowed by state board of examiners may bring suit thereon in any court of proper jurisdiction; suit authorized being general claim against state in which recovery is sought from public funds in state treasury, and not special suit seeking recovery out of particular fund created for specific purpose.

5. States $\S$ 200—Action against state treasurer to recover part of assurance fund under Torrens Law held not controlled by venue provisions of general statute, authorizing suits against state (Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2; St. 1893, p. 57, $\S$ 4; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1858).

Action against state treasurer to recover part of assurance fund under Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2 (St. 1915, p. 1932, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8589), authorizing suit in superior court of county in which land or part thereof is situated held not controlled by St. 1893, p. 57, $\S$ 4, providing for change of venue to Sacramento county in suit against state, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1858, requiring statute to be so construed, if possible, as to give effect to all its provisions.

6. States $\S$ 200—Action to recover part of Torrens assurance fund held not within statute requiring action for money damages to land to be tried where defendants reside (Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395).

Action against state treasurer to recover part of assurance fund under Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2 (St. 1915, p. 1932, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8589), authorizing action in county where land or part thereof is situated, held not within Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395, requiring action for money damages and not for recovery of land itself, to be tried in county where defendants reside.

7. States $\S$ 200—Provisions of Torrens Law regulating procedure in actions against assurance fund, when conflicting with other general statutory venue provisions, control (Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2; St. 1893, p. 57; Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395).

Provisions of Torrens Land Title Act, $\S$ 105, subd. 2 (St. 1915, p. 1932, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8589), authorizing suits to recover part of assurance fund to be brought in county where land or part thereof is situated, when in conflict with venue provisions of St. 1893, p. 57, authorizing suits against the state or Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 395, are controlling in respect to matters of procedure, since provisions of special act control those of general.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Action by Edwin Gill and another against C. G. Johnson, as treasurer of the State of California. From an order denying motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie and Louis G. Campbell, Deputy Attys. Gen., for appellant.

Barker & Keithly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an action brought under the provisions of the so-called Torrens Land Title Act. St. 1915, p. 1932; Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, Act 8589, pp. 3611 to 3644. For the sake of brevity, this law will be hereinafter referred to as the Torrens Law. Subdivision 2 of section 105 of this act reads in part as follows:

"Any person who, without fraud or negligence on his part, is deprived of any interest or estate in land through the operation of any provision of this act or by reason of the fraud, forgery, negligence, omission, mistake or misfeasance of any person, and who is precluded from recovering such interest or estate, may commence an action in the superior court of the county in which the land or a part thereof is situated, to recover not over the fair market value of the interest or estate of which he has been so deprived." (Italics ours.)

The real property which forms the basis of this action is located in Imperial county, and the complaint was filed in the superior court of that county. The plaintiffs reside in that county, but the defendant is the state treasurer, in his official capacity. The defendant filed in the superior court of Imperial county a motion for change of place of trial, a demand for change of venue, an affidavit of merits, and an affidavit of residence. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a change of venue.

Appellant's first contention is that this is a suit against the state, that it is based upon an implied contract, and that therefore the provisions of the act to authorize suits against the state, and regulating the procedure therein (St. 1893, p. 57), are controlling here. The material portions of the act of 1893 are as follows:

"1. All persons who have, or shall hereafter have, claims on contract or for negligence against the state not allowed by the state board of examiners, are hereby authorized, on the terms and conditions herein contained, to bring suit thereon against the state in any of the courts of this state of competent jurisdiction, and prosecute the same to final judgment. The rules of practice in civil cases shall apply to such suits, except as herein otherwise provided."

"4. Service of summons in such suits shall be made on the Governor and Attorney General. It shall be the duty of the Attorney General to defend all such suits; and upon his written demand, made at or before the time of answering, the place of trial of any such suit must be changed to the county of Sacramento." (Italics ours.)

The Torrens Law provides that a suit of this nature shall be brought against the state treasurer, in his official capacity; that, whenever land is registered under the terms of the law, a percentage of the value thereof shall be paid to the state treasurer and held by him in a separate fund, "as and for an assurance fund"; that, where judgment is rendered against the treasurer alone, the order of the court shall constitute the warrant, and the state controller shall audit and certify the amount of such claim in the same manner as other claims against the state are audited, and the state treasurer shall thereupon pay the claim out of the assurance fund. It is also provided that the Attorney General shall defend the state treasurer in all actions brought under the provisions of the act. It is argued that in view of these provisions, such an action is one against the state; that under the terms of the act, the state is, in effect, the guarantor of the title; and that a suit seeking recovery from the particular fund established by the act is, in effect, a suit against the state.

It is also urged that the action is one based upon an implied contract. As authority for this, appellant cites the following cases: McCord v. Slavin, 143 Cal. 325, 76 P. 1104; Miller & Lux v. Batz, 131 Cal. 402, 63 P. 680; Miller & Lux v. Batz, 142 Cal. 447, 76 P. 42; San Luis Obispo County v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 73 P. 174, 177. In this last case, in commenting on the provisions of the act of 1893, the court said: "There might be strong reasons in favor of the proposition that the Legislature, in referring to 'claims on contract,' meant real contracts, not fictitious ones."

[1-4] However, if we assume for the purposes of this case, that this is an action on contract, and that it may be considered to be a suit against the state, it does not follow that the provisions of the act of 1893 must, or do, control. In the absence of statutory authority, a citizen may not maintain a suit against the state. It is equally true that the state, in permitting such suits, may prescribe the terms and conditions under which, and the manner in which, they may be conducted. And statutes permitting suits against the state must be strictly construed. Miller v. Pillsbury, 164 Cal. 199, 128 P. 327, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 886. The act of 1893 is a general statute authorizing suits against the state, and regulating the procedure therein. But it does not authorize the bringing of any possible suit, but only those coming within its provisions. Section 4 of the act, upon which appellant here relies, specifically states that the place of trial of any "such suit" shall, on demand of the Attorney General be changed to the county of Sacramento. "Such suit" refers to those filed under authority of section 1 of the act. This section provides that any person who has a claim against the state, on contract or for negligence, "not allowed by the state board of examiners," may bring suit thereon in any court of proper jurisdiction in the state.

It would seem reasonable that the kind of claim contemplated by this act is a general claim against the state, in which recovery is sought out of public funds in the state treasury and not a special suit of this nature, seeking recovery out of a particular fund created for a specific purpose. In any event, a plaintiff in an action brought under authority of that statute, would have to show that his claim was not allowed by the state board of examiners. Nothing appears in this act to show that section 4 thereof is intended to apply to any suits permitted against the state, other than those coming within the provision of that act itself. And nothing appears therein, purporting to make that act exclusive, or providing that it shall be the only way in which an action against the state, or an official thereof, may be allowed. The Legislature, or the people, could authorize a suit against the state, and regulate the procedure therein, in a class of cases not contemplated by the act of 1893, and not provided for therein. This they have done in this particular case, in the Torrens Law.

[5] The Torrens Law not only provides a machinery for registering land titles, but it provides for a fund to be built up in the hands of the state treasurer, "as and for an assurance fund," for the protection of those availing themselves of the use of the law. And, in authorizing such a suit, in a proper case, against the state treasurer, it provides that this suit may be commenced in the superior court of the county where the land is situated, and, further, that "such court" shall have jurisdiction to render judgment. It also provides that the order of "such court" shall constitute a warrant, which shall be audited and certified by the state controller, and paid by the state treasurer out of the assurance fund.

The authority to bring this action is given in the Torrens Law, and does not depend upon the act of 1893. There are a number of differences in the procedure provided for in this act, which show it was not intended that the act of 1893 should apply to the action authorized by the act here involved. Under the former, judgment is against the state, while under the latter it is against the state treasurer, but payable only out of the special fund created by this act. Under the former, there is a limitation of two years, and under the latter one of four years. Under the former, summons must be served on the Governor and the Attorney General, and, under the latter, summons is served on the state treasurer. Under the former, only claims not allowed by the state board of examiners may be prosecuted, while under the latter no authority, other than the superior court passes upon the claims, prior to judgment. Under the former, suits may be filed in any county in the state, but must be removed to Sacramento county, on the request of the Attorney General; while under the latter, it is specifically provided that suits may be filed in the county where the land is situated, and no provision is made for their removal, at the request of the Attorney General, or otherwise. On the other hand, the act specifically confers jurisdiction on the court in which the suit is filed, and authorizes that court to enter judgment, making its order a warrant, payable out of the special fund created by the act. In our opinion the provisions of the act of 1893 do not control in this action, but the Torrens Law creates a special venue in the superior court of the county where the land is situated, which is not subject to change upon demand of the Attorney General.

It is elementary that a statute should, if possible, be so construed as to give effect to all of its provisions. Code Civ. Proc. § 1858. The provision in the Torrens Law that the party aggrieved may commence an action in the county where the land is situated, would be an idle provision, if the right of removal given to the Attorney General in the act of 1893 is to govern, for even under that act, an action therein permitted, may be brought in any county in the state. The inclusion of such a provision in the Torrens Law indicates that something more is meant than the giving of a right already provided for in another law. And this interpretation is strengthened by the inclusion in the act of the specific provisions giving jurisdiction and the power to enter judgment, above referred to.

That the place of trial of such an action as is here involved should be in the county where the land is situated, is supported also by reason and logic. Appellant says in his brief: "The reason exclusive jurisdiction is placed by the law in the court of a county in which property is situated until title is registered is the same as that for exclusive jurisdiction in land title matters under section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That reason is that the action is in rem and an action in rem from the very nature of it should be in the county that is the locus of the rem. The thing is there, the title papers are there, and hence the action should be there."

While the instant case is not an action in rem, it is one based upon an interest in real property, and certain transactions connected therewith. The thing is in the county where the action was brought; the title papers are there; the original record and files in the registration proceeding are there; the files and records in the office of the registrar are there; whatever may have occurred as a foundation for the claim has arisen there; and "hence the action should be there." In addition, it may be observed that no state funds are in jeopardy, and the interests of the state are not affected by the action.

[6] Appellant further contends that this is an action for money damages and not for the recovery of the land itself, and, therefore, under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it should be tried in the county where the defendant resides. Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been held not to govern, where a suit is authorized to be filed against a corporation in the place where the action arose, although the legal domicile of the corporation is elsewhere. Trezevant v. Strong Co., 102 Cal. 47, 36 P. 395; Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Packwood C. Co., 50 Cal. App. 302, 195 P. 284; McFarland v. Martin, 144 Cal. 771, 78 P. 239. The same principle applies in this case. The Torrens Law gives the right to commence the action in the superior court of the county where the land is situated, and gives that court jurisdiction to render judgment, and the place of trial may be changed only for some sufficient reason, other than the residence of the defendant.

[7] The Torrens Law is a special act, setting up a comprehensive plan, for a specific purpose. If the act of 1893, and section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be deemed to be in conflict in any particular with the Torrens Law, in respect to matters of procedure, under the general rules of construction, the provision of the special act control those of the general. People v. Pacific Implement Co., 130 Cal. 442, 62 P. 739; McNeil v. Kingsbury, 190 Cal. 406, 213 P. 50; Riley v. Forbes, 193 Cal. 740, 227 P. 768.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that even though this be construed an action on contract, and regardless of whether or not it is, in effect, a suit against the state, it is neither the sort of action contemplated by the act of 1893, nor one that is governed by section 4 of that act.

No sufficient reason being shown why the action should not remain in the court in which it was filed, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 221

PEOPLE'S DITCH CO. et al. v. FOOTHILL IRRIGATION DIST. et al. (Civ. 201.)★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 17, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨66—Appeal will lie only from final, but not from interlocutory, judgment, except when specially permitted by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, appeal will lie only from final, but not from interlocutory, judgment, except when specially permitted by statute.

2. Appeal and error ⇨77(1)—Judgment in action involving water rights, denying relief and reserving jurisdiction on proper showing to protect plaintiffs' water rights, held appealable as final judgment.

In action to restrain interference with water rights, judgment refusing injunction and denying plaintiffs relief in premises, but reserving power and jurisdiction on plaintiffs making proper showing in future to grant such relief as may be necessary to protect plaintiffs' water rights against interference by defendants, held a final judgment from which an appeal would lie.

3. Injunction ⇨158—Injunction pendente lite remains in force only until rendition of final judgment.

Injunction pendente lite remains in force only until rendition of final judgment, since, when granted, it is provisional remedy that is merged in perpetual injunction, and thereupon ceases to have any force or effect.

4. Appeal and error ⇨790(3)—Appeal from order denying injunction pendente lite was dismissed, where final judgment had been entered determining all issues presented and denying permanent injunction.

In action involving determination of water rights, plaintiffs' appeal from order denying preliminary injunction was dismissed, where final judgment had been entered determining all issues presented and denying permanent injunction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by the People's Ditch Company and others against the Foothill Irrigation District and others. From an order denying an application for a preliminary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Appeal dismissed.

H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, and W. R. Bailey, of Visalia, for appellants.

Sidney J. W. Sharp, of Hanford, Guy Knupp, of Porterville, R. C. Leit, and A. E. Chandler, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MARKS, J. On July 2, 1928, appellants filed this action in the court below, seeking, among other things, to restrain respondents, and particularly the Foothill irrigation district, from taking, appropriating, or diverting from the Kings river any of the waters thereof, and, further, to restrain respondents from drilling wells upon a tract of land known as the Conejo Well Field, and from pumping and removing from a designated tract of land any of the underground water underlying the same for transportation or use off of said tract, or from lessening or diminishing in any manner the underground body of water beneath or adjacent to the channel of Kings river or beneath or adjacent to the ditches, canals, or lands of appellants or their stockholders, upstream from the head of the canal of the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company.

On July 2, 1928, an order to show cause was issued, directed to respondents, in which they were required to show cause why they should not be "enjoined and restrained, pending the trial and final determination of this action, from taking, appropriating or diverting from said Kings river any of the water thereof, or from pumping or removing from the tract of land described in paragraph IX of the second cause of action of said plaintiffs' complaint any of the underground water underlying the same, for transportation from or use of said tract, or from lessening or diminishing in any manner the underground body of water beneath or adjacent to the channel of said Kings river, above and upstream from the head of the canal of the plaintiff Lemoore Canal and Irrigation Company, as described in said complaint, or beneath or adjacent to any of the ditches or canals of any of said plaintiffs, or beneath the lands of the respective stockholders of the said plaintiffs, or from lessening and diminishing in any manner the quantity of water flowing or to flow in said Kings river, above and upstream from the head of the canal of the plaintiff Lemoore Canal and Irrigation Company, as described in plaintiffs' complaint, or from lessening and diminishing in any manner the quantity of water flowing or to flow in the respective canals or ditches of said respective plaintiffs." The motion for the injunction pendente lite was denied on October 19, 1928, after a full hearing thereon, and appellants took this appeal to the Supreme Court from such order, and which appeal has been transferred to this court.

A trial of the action on its merits was had in the superior court of Kings county, which was concluded on April 3, 1929; findings of facts and conclusions of law were filed on August 26, 1929; and judgment was rendered in favor of defendants below and respondents here on the same date. An appeal from this judgment was also taken.

[1] Respondents in the case under consideration are moving to dismiss the appeal from the order denying the injunction pendente lite upon the ground that the issues in this appeal have become moot, for the reason that the action has been tried and determined upon its merits, and a judgment entered after trial denying an injunction to appellants. Appellants are resisting the motion to dismiss upon the ground that the trial court attempted to reserve to itself the right to make such further order as may be necessary to protect the rights of appellants in the event that the pumping operations of respondents should deprive appellants of any water to which they were entitled. If we should agree with appellants, we would have to conclude that the judgment was not final, but interlocutory only. Appellants did not take this view of the case when they took an appeal from the judgment, because an appeal will lie from a final, but not from an interlocutory, judgment (section 963, Code Civ. Proc.; Pomper v. Superior Court, 191 Cal. 494, 216 P. 577), except when specially permitted by statute.

[2] The findings of fact and conclusions of law are very full and complete. The wells proposed by respondents were not drilled at the time of the trial, and the court found that it could not determine from the evidence that the completion of the wells and pumping water therefrom would in any way interfere with or lessen the water to which appellants asserted a prior right. The effect of this portion of the findings and judgment was holding by the court below that the alleged injury to appellants was not proven. The court further found and adjudged that the respondents were entitled to drill their wells in the Conejo Well fields, pump water therefrom, and conduct it to, and use it on, the lands within their districts. The injunction sought by the appellants was denied. This portion of the judgment is conclusive, and determined the rights of the parties under the facts existing at the time of the trial. The court continued in its judgment as follows: "Provided, however, that such right of said defendants, or either or any of them is and shall be without prejudice to the right of the plaintiffs in this action, or either of them, to file such action or to take such proceedings as to them shall seem necessary in this action, in the event that the pumping and carrying away of said waters from said tract of land shall result in injury or damage to said plaintiffs, and the court reserves to itself the power and jurisdiction, upon a showing made herein by plaintiffs, or any of them, after reasonable notice to defendants, to find and determine the facts as to the result of such operations as may be conducted in said Well field, together with the right to grant to plaintiffs such relief by way of injunction as may be necessary to fully protect the water rights of plaintiffs against interference, damage or invasion by defendants by their said operations." Under this portion of the judgment appellants seek to defeat respondents' motion to dismiss this appeal.

It is not easy to see how we can escape the conclusion that the judgment rendered was final. It determined all of the issues raised by the pleadings under the facts as they then existed which gives it the characteristics of a final judgment. Zappettini v. Buckles, 167 Cal. 27, 138 P. 696; Gianelli v. Briscoe, 40 Cal. App. 532, 181 P. 105; Howe v. Key System Transit Co., 198 Cal. 525, 246 P. 39. The proviso contained in the judgment which we have quoted seems to have been inserted out of an abundance of caution, so that the judgment might not be pleaded in bar of a future action should the pumping operations, when commenced, actually interfere with the water belonging to appellants. Should such a condition arise in the future after the wells were drilled, appellants could bring an appropriate action to protect their rights. Such an action would of necessity be based on the conditions then existing, and they should not be hampered by the judgment in this case in protecting their ownership of the water. We do not believe that this proviso affects the finality of the judgment rendered, and that its only result is to protect appellants in future litigation should such arise. The judgment already rendered is based on a complaint which alleges a future or expected injury. Any future proceeding would have to be based upon allegations of actual and existing damage, which would in all probability require the filing of a new complaint in another action, as it would be based on facts and conditions arising after the trial of the present case.

It appears from the record before us that the hearing on the motion for an injunction pendente lite was most carefully conducted by counsel for both sides, and that the trial judge was fully informed on all phases of the issues presented. The record consists of many hundred pages of transcript. If the findings and judgment are any indication of the record made at the trial of the case, every question presented at the first hearing was again presented at the trial. The court below reached the same conclusions at both hearings.

[3, 4] It is well settled that an injunction pendente lite remains in force only until rendition of the final judgment in the case. When granted, it is a provisional remedy that is merged in a perpetual injunction, and thereupon the injunction pendente lite ceases to have any force or effect. Doudell v. Shoo, 159 Cal. 448, 114 P. 579; Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301; Harris v. McGregor, 29 Cal. 125. "An injunction by order is a provisional remedy, and temporary in its character. It assumes a pending litigation in which all questions are to be settled by a judgment, and operates only until that judgment is rendered. If by that a permanent injunction is granted the temporary one is of course ended, and equally so if a permanent injunction is * * * denied." Jackson v. Bunnell, 113 N. Y. 220, 21 N. E. 79, 80.

The case of Sheward v. Citizens' Water Co., 90 Cal. 635, 27 P. 439, 440, presents a somewhat similar state of facts to the one we are considering. In this case the plaintiff secured an injunction pendente lite, and at the trial was given a permanent injunction against the defendant. The Supreme Court uses the following language: "On the 8th of November, 1890, the defendant appealed from the judgment, and on the 19th of November, 1890, from the order of injunction. The plaintiff has moved to dismiss the latter appeal upon the ground that, the final judgment awarding the plaintiff a perpetual injunction having been entered before such appeal was taken, no appeal could thereafter be taken from the order. The order of injunction made October 20, 1890, was a provisional remedy, which by its terms was limited 'until further order in the premises.' Upon the entry of the final decree this provisional remedy was merged in the perpetual injunction thereby granted to the plaintiff, and ceased to have any operative effect upon the defendant. Its functions having thus terminated, there was thereafter no existing 'order' granting an injunction from which an appeal could be taken. Webber v. Wilcox, 45 Cal. 301; Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 611, 22 P. 327; Gardner v. Gardner, 87 N. Y. 14; Jackson v. Bunnell, 113 N. Y. 220, 21 N. E. 79. It follows that the motion to dismiss the appeal from the provisional order of injunction must be granted."

For the reasons and upon the authorities hereinbefore cited, respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denying an injunction pendente lite is granted, and such appeal is dismissed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; BARNARD, J.

103 Cal. App. 318

PEOPLE v. DAVIS. (Cr. 14.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

Criminal law §1071—Failure to file and present application stating grounds of appeal and portions of reporter's notes to be transcribed required dismissing appeal (Rules of Judicial Council for Supreme and District Courts of Appeal, adopted June 1, 1928, rule 2, subd. 7).

Failure of defendant, on appeal from conviction, to file with clerk and present to trial court, within five days after notice of appeal, application stating grounds of appeal and points on which he relied, and designating portions of notes which should be transcribed, as required by Rules of Judicial Council for Supreme and District Courts of Appeal, adopted June 1, 1928, rule 2, subd. 7, held to require dismissal of appeal, where rules had been in force for 17 months prior to time of filing notice of appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Eugene Davis was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Appeal dismissed.

J. C. C. Russell, of Hanford, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MARKS, J. Appellant was convicted of the crime of grand theft and sentenced to serve the term prescribed by law in the state penitentiary at Folsom. He appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion for new trial, but failed to file with the clerk and present to the trial court the application required under subdivision 7, rule 2, of the Rules of the Judicial Council for Supreme and District Courts of Appeal, adopted June 1, 1928. Judgment was pronounced on defendant on October 28, 1929. An oral notice of appeal was given by him the same day, which was followed by a written notice of appeal filed on November 1, 1929. On the same day he filed a written request for a transcript.

The Attorney General has moved for a dismissal of the appeal because of appellant's failure to conform to the requirements of subdivision 7 of said rule 2, which reads as follows: "Upon an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of conviction or from an order denying his motion for a new trial, or from an order made after judgment, or upon an appeal by the people from an order granting a new trial, or from an order setting aside an indictment, information or accusation, or from an order made after judgment, the appellant must, within five days after giving notice of appeal, file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court, stating in general terms the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which the appellant relies, and designate what portions of the phonographic reporter's notes it will be necessary to have transcribed to fairly present the points relied upon. If such application is not filed within said time, the appeal shall be dismissed; provided, that the appeal shall not be dismissed for any defect in the statement of such grounds or points which does not affect the substantial rights of the respondent. The court shall, within two days after the filing of such application make an order directing the phonographic reporter who reported the case to transcribe such portions of his notes as in the opinion of the court may be necessary to fairly and fully present the points relied upon by the appellant. If the court fails to make the order within two days after the application is filed, the notes requested in the application shall be transcribed without such order. The phonographic reporter shall, within twenty days after the filing of such application, file with the clerk an original transcription and three clearly legible copies of the portions of the notes so required to be transcribed, excluding therefrom all statements and opinions of the court not constituting rulings and all arguments of counsel, unless such statements, opinions or arguments were objected to or assigned as error or misconduct at the time they were made. Whenever such statements, opinions or arguments were made in response to any statement made by or on behalf of the defendant, such latter statement shall also be transcribed. Such transcript shall be typewritten on opaque paper and prepared in the manner and form required by section 2 of rule 7. Said reporter shall append to the original and to each copy an original affidavit that it is correct."

In the cases of People v. McClellan, 88 Cal. App. 415, 263 P. 841; People v. Pierce, 89 Cal. App. 290, 264 P. 519, and People v. Pietri, 90 Cal. App. 69, 265 P. 508, the appeals were all dismissed because of the failure of the respective appellants to present applications to the trial court stating in general terms the grounds of appeal and the points upon which the appellants relied. In each of these cases petitions to have them heard in the Supreme Court, after judgment in the District Courts of Appeal, were denied.

In the case of People v. Bryant, 278 P. 1025, the Supreme Court held that an appeal taken subsequent to the repeal of section 1247 of the Penal Code, and before the adoption of the rules for the Supreme and District Courts of Appeal by the Judicial Council, should be heard on its merits, because the legislation on the subject was of recent date and of such a character and in such form as might easily mislead members of the bar.

The case before us is easily distinguished from the case of People v. Bryant. The rules of the Judicial Council had been in force for 17 months prior to the time of the filing the notice of appeal in this case. Further, in appellant's written request for a transcript, he twice referred to "rule 2 of Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal of the State of California," showing that he had knowledge of this rule. He should have had its requirements in mind in preparing his appeal.

Upon the circumstances of this case, we feel it incumbent upon us to follow the mandate of the rule in question. The motion of the Attorney General is therefore granted, and the appeal dismissed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; BARNARD, J.

103 Cal. App. 347

CHRISTMAN v. GUARANTY MORTGAGE CO. OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 6606.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

1. Brokers $\S$ 82(1)—Complaint in action for compensation for sale of realty, which failed to allege that broker was duly licensed, held defective (St. 1919, p. 1259, $\S$ 20).

In an action to recover compensation for sale or exchange of real estate, complaint which failed to state that individual acting as broker was duly licensed, as prescribed by St. 1919, p. 1259, $\S$ 20, held defective.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1039(13)—Failure to allege that broker was licensed held not ground for reversal, where fact was matter of public record and was proved without objection.

In action to recover compensation for sale of realty that complaint failed to allege that broker was licensed, as required by St. 1919, p. 1259, $\S$ 20, held not ground for reversal, where fact which complaint failed to allege was matter of public record, and was proved at trial without objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by M. Christman against the Guaranty Mortgage Company of California. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Donald Scott and Rudolph J. Scholz, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rothchild & Golden, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover on a promissory note executed by defendant corporation to Jack Baltor and by him assigned to the plaintiff. As a defense to the action defendant alleged that the amount of the note was the compensation which it agreed to pay Baltor, a real estate broker, for his services in an exchange of certain real estate; that the complaint failed to allege that Baltor was a duly licensed broker at the time the cause of action arose, and consequently, under the provisions of section 20 of the Real Estate Brokers' Act (Stats. 1919, p. 1252), the action could not be maintained.

The case was tried, and the proofs show that Baltor, for an agreed commission represented by the note, and pursuant to a written authorization, exchanged certain real estate owned by defendant, and also that, when the exchange was made and the cause of action arose, he was a duly licensed real estate broker. The court found accordingly and a judgment was entered for the plaintiff, from which the defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] In an action to recover compensation for the sale or exchange of real estate, a complaint which fails to allege that the person acting as a broker in the transaction was duly licensed as prescribed by section 20 of the act is defective. Beebe v. Kistler, 52 Cal. App. 494, 199 P. 537; Wise v. Radis, 74 Cal. App. 765, 242 P. 90. Where, however, as was the case here, the fact which the complaint failed to allege was a matter of public record, was proved without objection at the trial, and it is manifest that the defendant was not misled by the defective pleading, the case is within the constitutional inhibition that no judgment shall be set aside for any error as to any matter of pleading unless, after an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Baker v. Miller, 190 Cal. 263, 212 P. 11. The evidence shows beyond dispute all the facts necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover, and the defect complained of furnishes no ground for the conclusion that the result was a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

103 Cal. App. 380

Ex parte REID. (Cr. 18.)★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District.
California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1930.

1. Automobiles Ⓒ353—In order to constitute killing of pedestrian manslaughter, burden was on people to show act was result of motorist's negligence.

In order to constitute killing of pedestrian on highway manslaughter, burden was on people to show that act was result of automobile driver's negligence, since doctrine of res ipsa loquitur did not apply.

2. Automobiles Ⓒ355(8)—Circumstances held to warrant commitment of motorist striking pedestrian and failing to stop to render assistance.

Where license number corresponding with one missing from defendant's automobile and broken glass corresponding with glass of headlights of defendant's automobile were found at scene of accident, and shortly after accident defendant drove his automobile into garage showing condition referred to, such circumstances unexplained, with others, were sufficient to establish probable cause for finding automobile striking pedestrian was being driven by defendant, and that he failed to stop to render assistance after tragedy and were sufficient to show probable cause for order of commitment for failure to stop and render assistance to injured party.

Application by James A. Reid for writ of habeas corpus under which applicant seeks discharge from commitment of examining magistrate under a complaint charging defendant with manslaughter, and failure to stop and render assistance after an automobile accident. Discharge denied.

B. M. Benson, of Fresno, for petitioner.

Ray B. Carter, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Fresno, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. The defendant in the above-entitled matter seeks discharge, under a writ of habeas corpus, from a commitment of the examining magistrate on preliminary examination in the justice's court of the third township of the county of Fresno, under a complaint charging defendant with manslaughter, and failure to stop and render assistance after an automobile accident.

It is the claim of petitioner that the evidence introduced on the preliminary hearing is insufficient to show probable cause for the order of commitment.

The transcript of the evidence taken on the examination is before us. It sufficiently appears that one Clarence Linstrum was, on the night of November 18, 1929, killed by being run into by an automobile. He was apparently walking in a westerly direction on Tulare avenue, a highway near the city of Fresno. There were no eyewitnesses of the tragedy, and the connection of the defendant therewith rests wholly upon circumstantial evidence.

[1] We think, however, the evidence is sufficient to show probable cause for a finding that the deceased was struck and killed by an automobile driven by the defendant. There is, however, nothing to support the conclusion that the accident was occasioned by the criminal negligence of the driver. The automobile was being driven in its legitimate operation on the highway. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply, and, in order to constitute the killing of Mr. Linstrum manslaughter, the burden is on the people to show that the act was the result of the driver's negligence. If the only basis for the commitment was the charge of manslaughter, we might be justified in holding that the proof was insufficient to establish probable cause. The order of commitment, however, is based upon the further complaint that after the accident the driver of the car failed to stop and render assistance. The evidence in the record sustains the proposition that this was the fact, and, if the identity of the defendant as the driver of the car is sufficiently shown, the commitment must be sustained on the charge of failing to stop and render assistance.

The evidence indicates that the deceased was walking along the highway after dark, in a westerly direction; that the car which ran into him approached him from behind. The body was found on the southerly or left-hand side of the pavement. It does not appear, however, just the location of the parties when the impact occurred, and it cannot therefore be inferred that the automobile was being driven on the wrong side of the street.

[2] The identity of the car, however, is sufficiently established by the finding at the scene of the accident a license number corresponding with one missing from defendant's automobile, and from broken glass corresponding with the glass of headlights of defendant's automobile, and the fact that shortly after the accident the defendant drove his car into a garage in Fresno, showing the condition just referred to. It also appears that the radiator was mashed in and had been leaking at the scene of the accident. There was evidence on the pavement of rusty water dripping westerly from the scene of the accident, accumulating in a pool where the car had apparently been slacked up, and then continuing on in the direction of Fresno. There also appears in evidence the statement of the defendant that he had been driving the car in the country to the east of Fresno that evening, and that it had not been in the possession of any other person. He denied, however, that he had been driving on Tulare avenue, but stated that he came into Fresno on Blackstone avenue. The circumstances, however, unexplained, are sufficient to establish probable cause for finding that the death car was being driven by defendant and that he failed to stop to render assistance after the tragedy. The body was found lying near a ranch house, where notice would naturally have been given to the people residing there, had there been any attempt to render assistance.

For the reasons stated the discharge of defendant is denied.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 241

PETERSEN v. KLITGAARD et al.
(Civ. 7079.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 17, 1930.

Appeal and error ⇐418—Notice of appeal from judgment for plaintiff did not operate as appeal from judgment for other defendant sued as joint tort-feasor.

Notice of appeal by defendant in action for negligence, to effect that appeal was taken from judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant and from the whole of such judgment, referred solely to judgment against such defendant, and did not operate as an appeal from judgment in favor of other defendant sued as a joint tort-feasor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Henry Petersen against C. F. Klitgaard and the Naknek Packing Company. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant last named and in favor of defendant first named, and defendant last named appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

F. V. Keesling and C. A. S. Frost, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for respondent Petersen.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco, for respondent Klitgaard.

TYLER, P. J. Motion to dismiss appeal. The action was one for negligence brought against defendant and respondent C. F. Klitgaard and defendant and appellant Naknek Packing Company as joint tort-feasors. A verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Naknek Packing Company for the sum of $15,000 and in favor of defendant C. F. Klitgaard and against plaintiff.

Defendant and respondent Klitgaard moves to dismiss the appeal as to him on the ground that a joint tort-feasor against whom a judgment is taken cannot raise the point on his appeal that the judgment from which the appeal is taken exonerates the other joint tort-feasors, citing Blackwell v. Am. Film Co., 189 Cal. 689, 209 P. 999; Sickles v. Mt. Whitney Power & Elec. Co., 177 Cal. 278, 170 P. 599. It is unnecessary to discuss this question, as reference to the notice of appeal shows that no appeal has been taken from the judgment in favor of Klitgaard. The notice of appeal reads, in substance, as follows: "You and each of you are hereby notified that Naknek Packing Company, a corporation, defendant in the above-entitled action, hereby appeals to the Supreme Court of the State of California, from the judgment made, given and entered in the above-entitled action in the above-named Superior Court on the 27th day of November, 1928, in favor of said plaintiff, and against said defendant, Naknek Packing Company, for the sum of $15,000.00, together with plaintiff's costs amounting to $227.00 and from the whole of said judgment."

By reference to the notice of appeal it will be seen that the phrase "and from the whole of said judgment" contained in the notice refers solely to the judgment against the appellant Naknek Packing Company. There are two judgments in the case, one in favor of the plaintiff and against the packing company and the other in favor of Klitgaard and against plaintiff. Nothing whatever is said in the notice of appeal as to the judgment in favor of Klitgaard. No appeal having been taken from the latter judgment, there is nothing to dismiss.

The motion is therefore denied.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 326

VARNI v. ANGLO-AMERICAN LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 6973.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 22, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Findings of fact as to terms of contract and value of services based on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed.

Trial court's findings of fact, as to terms of contract and reasonable value of plaintiff's services, based on conflicting evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Corporations ⇨1—Where corporation was but instrumentality for transaction of business of individual defendants, evidence sustaining judgment against corporation will sustain judgment against such individuals.

Where evidence shows that defendant corporation was but instrumentality for transaction of business of individual defendants, such defendants are held to same rules of accountability as corporation, and evidence sustaining judgments against corporation will sustain judgment against individual defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Edward J. Varni against the Anglo-American Land Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

B. S. Gregory, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Melvyn I. Cronin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover for services alleged to have been performed by plaintiff's assignor at the request of the defendants. The court found for the plaintiff. The defendants have appealed from the judgment, and contend that the findings are not supported by the evidence.

The evidence shows without dispute that the corporation defendant was controlled by the individual defendants, who are its officers, and that the title to certain real property, upon which was situated a dwelling house, stood in its name. According to the testimony of A. W. Wronski, plaintiff's assignor, who was by trade a decorator, he applied to defendants for employment. He was told that the house mentioned was to be remodeled, and it was then suggested that he purchase the property for $32,000, subject to certain incumbrances thereon. This offer he declined, but after some negotiations it was agreed that he should superintend the work to be done at a daily wage of $10; that his wages should be retained by defendants until he decided whether he would purchase the property, in which event they were to be applied on the purchase price. When the work of remodeling, with the exception of the installment of the electric fixtures, was finished he decided not to purchase and demanded his wages. His claim was admitted, and he was then offered certain lots in payment, which he refused. The defendants denied that they promised to pay for the work as alleged, but asserted that Wronski agreed to purchase the property; that the expense of remodeling was to be advanced by them and charged to Wronski, whose work in that connection was done on his own account and not otherwise. Defendants further testified in effect that they were ready, willing, and able to convey as agreed, but that Wronski refused to complete the deal. The latter's testimony as to his agreement with the defendants, the admission that his claim for wages was correct, and the offer to convey certain lots in payment was corroborated by other witnesses.

[1] The court impliedly found that the contract was as testified to by Wronski, and it was also found that the agreed and reasonable value of his services was $10 per day, aggregating the sum of $1,770. The testimony which the court believed was sufficient to support these findings, and, the evidence being conflicting, the findings cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[2] Defendants insist that the evidence does not sustain the judgment against the individual defendants. It sufficiently shows that the corporation was but an instrumentality for the transaction of the business of these defendants. Under such circumstances they are held to the same rules of accountability as the corporation. Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 P. 673; Williamson v. Marshall, 54 Cal. App. 24, 200 P. 1058; Campbell v. Hanford, 67 Cal. App. 155, 227 P. 234.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

The second amended complaint and amendment thereto, together with demurrers, were as follows:

Amended Complaint for Accounting and Restitution as Trustees.

The plaintiff complains of the defendants, and alleges as follows:

I. Plaintiff is a resident of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California and a tax-payer on real estate therein, duly and regularly assessed to him, and that the defendant, Thomas F. Boyle, is the duly elected, qualified and acting Auditor of said City and County of San Francisco, and that the defendant, Ralph McLeran, is one of the duly elected, qualified and acting Supervisors of said City and County of San Francisco, and also is the duly appointed, qualified and acting Mayor of said City and County of San Francisco, in the absence of the regularly elected, qualified and acting Mayor, during all the time mentioned herein, and both were Trustees of said City and County of San Francisco, and of the money and property of said City and County.

II. That the City Charter of said City and County (Secs. 3, 4, 5, Chap. II of Article IV) provides that the Treasurer shall not pay any money, except upon demand approved by the Auditor, and such demands must show the number, date, amount, name of the original holder, on what account allowed, against what appropriation drawn, out of what fund payable, and if previously approved or allowed, by what officer, department or Board it has been so approved or allowed, and prohibits the said Auditor approving, or delivering with his approval, any demand unless it has been allowed by every officer, Board, department and committee required to act thereon.

That said Charter (Sec. 7, Chap. III, Art. IV), further provides that "said Auditor shall not approve any demand, unless the money is legally due, and its payment authorized by law, and payable out of some appropriation and fund specifically and lawfully provided therefor", and that said demand must "specify each special item, date, and amount composing it, and refer by Chapter and Section to the provisions of this Charter authorizing the same."

That said Charter of said City and County further provides (Sec. 6, Chap. III, Article IV), that "No demand shall be paid by the Treasurer, unless it specify each several item, date and amount composing it, and refer by title, date and section to the law, or ordinance or provision of this Charter authorizing the same * * * and must upon its face appear to have been expressly made payable out of the funds to be charged therewith."

Section 11 of Article XVI of said Charter provides that "Every officer who shall approve, allow, or pay any demand on the treasury not authorized by law, ordinance, or this Charter, shall be liable to the City and County individually and on his official bond for the amount of the demand so illegally approved, allowed, or paid."

III. That said Charter further provides (Secs. 6, 7, Chap. I, Art. III), that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury unless in consequence of appropriations made by the Supervisors and upon warrants duly drawn thereon by the Auditor, and no warrant shall be drawn except upon an unexhausted specific appropriation, and that such specific appropriations must be made by the Board of Supervisors before the first Monday of June, in each year.

IV. That during all the times herein mentioned and for more than four years last past, said McLeran, Rolph, Dailey, Searles and Eckart mentioned herein have been officers of said City and County of San Francisco, and did continue to be until January 1st, 1926, said McLeran as a member of the Board of Supervisors, said Rolph as Mayor, said Dailey as an Assistant City Attorney, said Searles as an Attorney of the Board of Public Works, and said Eckart as an Assistant City Engineer; and said Charter provides that their salaries shall be in full for all services and claims against said City and County.

V. There was presented to said Auditor of said City and County, for his approval as such Auditor for payment by said Treasurer out of the funds of said City and County of San Francisco, demand No. 1113, dated November 9, 1925, drawn in favor of said defendant, Ralph McLeran, for the sum of Three Thousand Four Hundred and Sixty-nine Dollars and Thirty-seven Cents ($3,469.37), "for the payment of expenses of James Rolph, Jr., Mayor of said City and County, Attorney J. Dailey, Attorney R. Searles, and Assistant City Engineer N. Eckart, incurred on their trip to Washington, D. C., and return, covering a period of six weeks, in connection with Hetch-Hetchy Water and Power Matters" and that it is "to be paid out of the 'Hetch-Hetchy Construction Fund,'" and these are the only matters alleged on the face of said demand, and therefore do not comply with the said provisions of said Charter.

VI. That said demand cannot be lawfully approved by said Auditor, or lawfully paid by said Treasurer, because of the following decisive objections thereto:

1. Because of the said defects on the face of the demand.

2. If the said "expense, price or consideration" is payable from the Treasury of the said City and County, then Sections 5 and 6 of Article XVI of said Charter prohibits the payment of this demand, in that a Supervisor, and officers and employees of said City and County have become directly and indirectly interested in the performance of the contract, work, business, expense, price and consideration embraced in said demand, and said interest was acquired during the time for which they were elected and appointed to said offices and employment, and the said interest and the acquisition of said interest did not devolve upon them, or any of them, by law.

3. That said demand does not specify any law, or ordinance, or provision of the City Charter, by title, date, section, or otherwise, authorizing the approval or payment of said demand; nor upon its face does it appear that it was expressly made payable out of the Hetch-Hetchy Construction Fund.

4. That the said claim is barred under Section 1, of Chapter IV of Article III of said Charter, in that "if valid, it accrued and was due and payable in June, 1925, and must be presented within one month thereafter," and it was not presented until November 9, 1925, more than six months thereafter.

5. That the said Supervisor, McLeran, and the other officers and employees mentioned in said claim, have neglected and refused to comply with the provisions of said Charter and Laws regulating their duties toward public ownership and operation of public utilities, as is hereinafter more specifically set forth, and have also absented themselves without legal cause, from the duties of their offices during the said six weeks in Washington, D. C.

6. That payment from said funds for the board, lodging and travelling expenses of said officials in addition to their salaries cannot lawfully be done, as it is not for a municipal use, or for municipal purposes, and is entirely different from furnishing board, lodging and travelling expenses as a part, or all, compensation for services rendered, and is an increase of the said salaries of said persons.

7. That said demand is an attempt by said Ralph McLeran to reimburse himself and these other persons, for moneys which they paid out for their own personal travelling expenses during said trip to and from Washington, D. C., and not on any business of or for the said City and County of San Francisco, and that said defendant, Ralph McLeran, as such Supervisor, sat in with the said Board of Supervisors as a member, when the payment of said claim was so voted and ordered by the said Board of Supervisors.

8. That no appropriation whatever was ever made of any fund whatever out of which to pay said claim, or any part thereof, and the money in the "Hetch-Hetchy Construction Fund" is expended entirely under the supervision of the Board of Public Works, and that there never was any contract for said board, lodging, travelling expenses, or items, constituting such demands, and that the expenditure of such money by defendants was no part of the official duties of said officers.

9. That said money cannot be paid out of the "Hetch-Hetchy Construction Fund," as the money in said fund comes entirely from the sale of an issue of bonds voted by the people of San Francisco, for the construction of Hetch-Hetchy Project, and such construction is not yet fully accomplished, and Section 10 of Article XII of said City Charter expressly provides that the proceeds of such sale "shall be applied exclusively to the purposes and objects mentioned in the ordinance authorizing such issue, until such objects are fully accomplished," and that all surplus earnings from the operation of such utility must first be applied to the payment of interest and sinking funds for the redemption of said bonds" and there is not, and has not been, any word or words in said ordinance, mentioning, or including any of such items of said demand, and there has not been any, and there is no surplus earnings from the operation of said utility. And that Section 16 of said Article XII, also minutely specifies what disposition shall be made of the earnings of all public utilities, and said demand does not come within any of said specifications.

VII. The Charter of said City and County of San Francisco has declared it to be the purpose and intention of the people of said City and County, that its public utilities shall be gradually acquired and ultimately owned by said City and County, and also that said City and County shall operate all such public utilities, and for several years past the said City and County has been in the actual construction and operation of such public utilities, among which is the collecting and bringing water, and the making and bringing of electric and other power from certain parts of California into said City and County of San Francisco, for the use and benefit of said City and County, and its inhabitants, and for that purpose said City and County obtained from the Government of the United States of America a grant of certain territory and properties commonly known as the "Hetch-Hetchy Grant" and "Hetch-Hetchy Project" which was accepted by said City and County of San Francisco, as Trustee, to carry out the purposes expressed in said grant by the Act of Congress of the United States among which purposes was that said grant, and the results and products thereof should not be sold in any way for any private purpose, or to any private corporation but was for the exclusive use and benefit of said City and County, and its inhabitants and that said City and County alone should distribute such benefits; and that in carrying out said purposes said City and County raised by the sale of bonds of said City and County, more than Forty-five Million Dollars ($45,000,000.00) and has expended about $45,000,000.00 thereof in constructing various reservoirs and power plants and other works to carry out said purposes, which various constructed units are called the "Hetch-Hetchy Project."

Said provisions of said Charter specifically provide that any official, employee, servant or agent of said City and County who in any way interferes with, or fails to carry out the letter and spirit of said provisions, shall thereby forfeit his office or said position.

VIII. The said Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, and all the defendants herein, well knew all the foregoing facts and obligations, and also that in violation thereof a majority of the said Board of Supervisors contemplated selling to a private corporation, and thereafter did make with and to said corporation a contract for the sale, of a part of the electric power and other products of said "Hetch-Hetchy Project," which contract was in absolute violation of the conditions of said grant from the United States and of the laws of the United States and of the laws of the State of California, and of the Charter of said City and County and a violation of the said trust with the United States, and of the duties of said Board of Supervisors, as Trustees for the benefit of said City and County, and its inhabitants.

IX. But before said contract of sale was made, a controversy arose among said Board of Supervisors, and throughout said City and County with the people thereof, as to the legality, expediency, benefit or wisdom of said contemplated contract, and the said Board of Supervisors of said City and County created a special tribunal, called an Advisory Committee, and conferred upon said Committee jurisdiction to determine whether it was legal, or wise, or for the best interests of said City and County, or against the interests of said City and County to make said contract, and to hear all parties discuss the same, and finally and conclusively determine for said City and County, whether said contract of sale was against the best interests of said City and County, or violated said grant, and said tribunal did so hear all parties and evidence, and did finally and conclusively determine and report to said Board of Supervisors and the defendants, that said contemplated contract and sale was against the best interests of said City and County, and illegal, in violation of said Charter, and grant, and trust, and that said Board of Supervisors, and said City and County had no power or jurisdiction or authority, to enter into any such contract, or to make any such sale, and that said contract was unwise and against the best interests of said City and County and the taxpayers and inhabitants thereof, and would cause the forfeiture and loss of said $45,000,000.00 so invested by said City and County, and said determination of said Advisory Committee was duly and regularly entered upon the records of said Board of Supervisors and is and was, conclusive on said Boards and defendants.

X. The said Board of Supervisors and the defendants were and are estopped and barred by said judgment and decisions of said Advisory Committee from voting that said demand be paid out of the funds of said City and County, or approving said demand, in that the illegality, expediency, wisdom and against the best interests of said City and County and the taxpayers and inhabitants of said City and County has been determined against said demand and becomes res judicata by the said solemn judgment of said Advisory Committee given as aforesaid full jurisdiction to hear and determine said issues and such decisions were and are binding, final and conclusive on said Board of Supervisors and all said persons named in said demand, and on said defendants.

XI. Nevertheless, after said decision and judgment, with full knowledge of all the facts alleged herein and the force and effect of said decisions of said Advisory Committee, said persons named in said demand deliberately, in bad faith to said City and County and the interests of said City and County and the taxpayers and inhabitants thereof, although no part of the duties, or authorities of their offices or employments, and without any leave or authority from said City and County, and in direct violation of the said Charter and the duties of their offices and employments, went to the City of Washington, D. C., and endeavored to override and disregard the said judgment of said Advisory Committee and to secure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and other officers of the United States of the said contract of sale to said private corporation which said board of supervisors—or a majority thereof—had voted to make with said private corporation after the said decision of said Committee in direct violation of said charter, said grant, said laws of the United States and the duties of said defendants and all officials as trustees of the said City and County, and the people thereof, of said United States and of the said grant, which vote of said board of supervisors the persons named in said demand did all in their power to secure, and each and all of said acts being against the interests of said city and county and the inhabitants thereof, but for the benefit of said private corporation as all the defendants and persons herein mentioned well knew; but the said Secretary of the Interior and all said national officials refused to in any way approve said contract, or proceedings, and now said persons seek to compel the said city and county and the taxpayers thereof to pay in addition to their salaries for the said time so devoted against the interests and to the injury of said city and county, also for the board, rooms, lodgings, and other expenses and money paid for the entertainment of the persons named in said demand during the time they were absent from their work in the city and county for which they were hired to give their personal attention in said city and county and for which they were paid by said city and county, and the payment of which demand is prohibited by said charter.

XII. There was no necessity or good reason whatever, for any of said persons going to said city of Washington, D. C., as aforesaid, or expending any money whatever for traveling, or other expenses to secure the approval of said contract as it was in plain violation of said section 13 of Article XII of said charter; and also as the beneficiary of said contract of sale, said private corporation, was already represented in said Washington before the various officials there endeavoring to have said contract of sale approved by said officials of the nation and the attorneys and persons so representing said private corporation were far abler, and had more influence there, than any of said persons named in said demand, and every argument in favor of the approval of said contract could be, and was there presented by them; and every legitimate argument could be, and was also presented to said officials of the nation by mail, and there was no reason or justification whatever for the persons named in said demand, or any of them, going to said Washington; and their going to Washington was futile, useless, unlawful, against the interests of said city and county and injurious to said city and county and an indefensible attempt to so violate the said grant to, and contract with, and trust to said city and county and the inhabitants thereof, from the United States, leading lawfully to, a loss of more than $45,000,000, of the money of said city and county and of said grant from the United States, and by the said conduct of the persons mentioned in said demand the city and county and the inhabitants thereof are now liable to have a judgment of forfeiture of said grant and all said money entered in the United States Court as soon as the government of the United States commences action for said judgment of forfeiture, and for producing such damage to the said city and county and the inhabitants thereof is the money called for in said demand to be paid, and it was paid on December 16, 1925.

XIII. On November 3rd, 1925, there was directly submitted by said defendants and those interested in said contract, to the voters of said city and county of San Francisco, at an election held therein on said day, the approval or disapproval of the conduct of the officials and persons who made said contract, and the said contract, for the reasons hereinbefore stated which were then and there submitted to said voters, and said contract and the conduct of said persons who made said contract was overwhelmingly disapproved, and said McLeran overwhelmingly defeated for re-election as supervisor, and said vote was then, and is now, binding and conclusive on all the persons named in said demand and said defendants and every official of said city and county that said conduct and contract were repudiated by said voters and that said contract was against the interests of said city and county and the taxpayers and inhabitants thereof, and illegal, and in direct violation of the intents, purposes, language, and spirit, and actually destructive of said intents and purposes and their accomplishment, of said charter, and in direct violation of the laws of California, of the United States, and of said grant.

XIV. Notwithstanding all these facts known to all the defendants, the defendant Boyle as said auditor, on December 16, 1925, at the request and solicitation of the said McLeran approved and delivered said demand to said McLeran for the purpose of having him draw said money from said treasury of the city and county, and on the same day said McLeran presented said approved demand to the treasurer at said treasury, and received in cash from said treasury the full amount of said demand and at said time the taxes paid by plaintiff were in said treasury, and the said conduct of said defendants was in direct violation of their duties as trustees of said city and county and of and for the taxpayers thereof, and said defendants are liable for the amount of said demand with interest thereon to be by them returned to said treasury at once.

XV. A demand upon the city attorney, or mayor, or board of supervisors, or other officials of said city and county to bring this, or any other suit to compel the return of said money would be futile and useless as the payment was by their direct approval and orders, and they would refuse to bring any such suit as said city attorney stated December 15, 1925.

Wherefore, plaintiff prays, that said defendants be decreed trustees of the amount of said demand, so approved and paid, and that they be ordered forthwith to pay the amount thereof with compound interest thereon, into the said treasury of said city and county forthwith, and that such other orders and decrees be made and entered as the circumstances of the case and the interests of said city and county and taxpayers thereof require.

Demurrer to Second Amended Complaint.

Come now the defendants above named and demurring to the second amended complaint of plaintiff on file herein, for grounds of demurrer state:

That said second amended complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against these defendants.

Wherefore, defendants pray that this demurrer be sustained without leave to amend, and that defendants be hence dismissed with their costs of suit.

Plaintiff's Amendment to Second Amended Complaint.

Leave of court having been first obtained, the plaintiff hereby amends his second amended complaint in the above entitled action by adding to paragraph V of said second amended complaint the following:

The foregoing statement of said demand was as given to the plaintiff by said auditor in the private office of said auditor he reading said demand from a paper in the hands of said auditor which he declared to plaintiff was the demand, and plaintiff took said reading down in writing as read to him by said auditor, and all that was so read to him by said auditor was incorporated in said complaint, which plaintiff assumes was all that the said auditor considered a part of said demand, and which on the face of the paper is said to be the demand. But since the commencement of this action and at the argument of the demurrer the attorney for said McLeran presents to plaintiff a photostatic copy of a paper-writing which he says is the demand and requests that it be incorporated in the amendment to said second amended complaint, and it is as follows:

"City and County of San Francisco. Hetch-Hetchy Operative Revenue Fund 1925 appropriation demand No. ——— (Department). The Board of Supervisors hereby requests that the warrants listed hereon, constituting this demand be approved by the board of supervisors; allowed by the auditor and paid by the treasurer. 48276 Date Nov., 9, payee Ralph McLeran amount 3469.37 Warrant No. 1113 for expenses of self, mayor Rolph, attorneys Dailey and Searls & asst. City Engineer Eckert to and from Washington, D. C. covering period of six weeks in connection with Hetch Hetchy Water & Power Matter Resolution No. 24848 (New Series). Resolved that the sum of $3469.37 be and the same is hereby set aside and appropriated out of Hetch Hetchy Operative Revenue Fund, and authorized in payment to Ralph McLeran, being expenses for account of self, mayor Rolph, attorney J. Dailey, attorney R. Searls and assistant city engineer N. Eckert to Washington, D. C. and return, covering a period of six weeks; in connection with Hetch Hetchy Water and Power matter. Finally passed board of supervisors December 7, 1925: Ayes: Supervisors Badaracco * * * Excused supervisor Ralph McLeran. * * * passed to print board of supervisors December 7, 1925. Approved December 11, 1925, James Rolph, mayor. Allowed December 11, 1925, Thomas F. Boyle, Auditor. Approved by Department Items No. ——— to No. ———. George Lull, City Attorney. Dec. 12, It."

Plaintiff alleges that there was no such fund appropriated out of which said demand could be lawfully paid, and that said Searls mentioned therein was the attorney for said Hetch-Hetchy Project, and the said Lull had nothing to do with it and it was not a part of, or connected with his department and he could not approve the same and it was not approved by the head of the department having charge of said Hetch-Hetchy Operative Revenue Fund and its disbursement, and it was not advertised the number of times and in the manner required by the said charter before it could be lawfully approved, or paid, and the foregoing resolutions, proceedings and actions of said officials as set forth in said paper writing were, and are of no legal effect, or authority whatever for the payment of any of said money from the said public treasury.

Demurrer to Second Amended Complaint as Amended.

Come now the defendants above named and demurring to the second amended complaint as amended of plaintiff on file herein, for grounds of demurrer state:

That said second amended complaint as amended does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against these defendants.

Wherefore, defendants pray that this demurrer be sustained without leave to amend, and that defendants be hence dismissed with their costs of suit.

Daniel O'Connell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward F. Moran, of San Francisco, for respondent Boyle.

Robert M. Searls, of San Francisco, for respondent McLeran.

PER CURIAM. Upon a careful examination of the record herein, we are satisfied that the plaintiff's complaint failed to state a cause of action, that the demurrer thereto was properly sustained, and that the judgment in favor of the defendants thereon was correctly given and made, and that this appeal is without merit. The judgment is affirmed.

208 Cal. 715

GLOBE INDEMNITY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 13638.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Master and servant §405(2)—Evidence sustained finding that newsboy, at time of injury, was "employee" of publisher; "independent contractor."

Evidence showing right of publisher to discharge newsboy at any time, and right of control in publisher, held to sustain finding of Industrial Accident Commission that newsboy, at time of injury, was an employee of publisher, rather than an independent contractor dealing with publisher relative to distribution of newspapers.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Employé; Independent Contractor.]

2. Master and servant §367—Best test to determine whether relation is that of "independent contractor," or employer and "employee," is right of control.

One of the best tests in determining whether relation is that of an "independent contractor," or that of employer and "employee," is the right of control, irrespective of fact of actual interference in conduct of work.

3. Master and servant §375(1)—Injury to newsboy falling from bicycle in railroad station, when about to procure newspapers for distribution, occurred in "course of employment."

Injury to newsboy by reason of falling from his bicycle, while within precincts of railroad station and about to procure bundle of newspapers for distribution, held in "course of employment," regardless of the "going and coming" rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Third Series, Course of Employment.]

In Bank.

Certiorari to order of Industrial Accident Commission.

Certiorari by the Globe Indemnity Company and another to review and annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, in favor of Jack Clemmer. Award affirmed.

Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Certiorari to review and annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

The application was made by Jack Clemmer, a 12 year old newsboy, against Fred Johansen, Independent Publishing Company, publisher of the San Rafael Independent, and the Tribune Publishing Company, the publisher of the Oakland Tribune. The boy was injured by falling from his bicycle while within the precincts of the railroad station at San Rafael, when he was about to procure his bundle of newspapers for distribution. Hearings were had, and the commission found that Jack, at the time of the accident which caused the injury, was in the employ of the Tribune Publishing Company, and that the injury arose out of and occurred in the course of that employment; that, though he was at the same time employed by the San Rafael Independent, he was not acting in the course of that employment, but was engaged in a material detour therefrom at the time the injuries were sustained. As to that employer the application was therefore dismissed.

The Tribune Publishing Company and its insurance carrier, Globe Indemnity Company, after proceedings duly had, petitioned this court for a writ of review and to annul the award consequently ordered on the findings of the commission, on the grounds (1) that the evidence does not sustain the finding that Jack Clemmer was an employee of the petitioner, the Tribune Publishing Company, but in fact was an employee of Fred Johansen, who was an independent contractor; and (2) that, if this court should be of a different opinion, nevertheless the injury did not occur in the course of the employment. Under the second ground, the "going and coming" rule is invoked. The findings as to the San Rafael Independent are not seriously questioned by the petitioners.

Fred Johansen, also a minor at that time of about 15 years, with the assistance of his mother, carried on an agency to distribute the Oakland Tribune to subscribers in San Rafael. The record shows without dispute that he paid to the Tribune Publishing Company $1.50 per 100 for the newspapers and collected 85 cents per month from each subscriber, which he retained and for which he receipted on printed forms furnished by the Tribune Publishing Company. He was also paid $3 a month additional, which was intended to compensate him for the extra expense of distribution because of the large and scattered territory. He was furnished a list of the subscribers by the company, which was, of course, changed as new subscribers were added or old subscriptions were canceled. Notification of such changes was sent by the company. Complaints of poor service received by the company were also forwarded by it to Fred. A representative of the Tribune Publishing Company occasionally called to see if everything was all right, if more receipt forms were required, etc., but who gave no instructions on such visits.

It is conceded that at no time did the publishing company instruct Fred as to the means he should use in distributing the papers, the route that should be taken, or whom, if any one, he should employ to assist him. The publishing company knew that Fred was employing assistance in his work and made no objection thereto. His only instructions were that deliveries of papers should be made as early as practicable after their arrival at the San Rafael railroad station. A "bond and guaranty" was signed by Fred's father to guarantee to the Tribune Publishing Company payment of its bills rendered to Fred. The guaranty also provided that the company required 30 days' notice of any termination of the agreement by Fred, but reserved the right and privilege "to change agents at any time without question." It was testified by a representative of the Tribune Publishing Company that the oral agreement with Fred was that he would be discharged only if his services were deemed unsatisfactory.

The petitioners claim that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the commission's finding as to the employment within the meaning of the compensation act, and that it supports only a conclusion that Fred Johansen was purchasing newspapers at wholesale and selling them at retail, and was therefore, an independent contractor. If Fred Johansen was not an independent contractor, but was an employee within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, then the finding of the commission on the question of the employment of Jack Clemmer is correct.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that the evidence fairly and sufficiently sustains the finding of the commission in that respect. The relationship between Fred Johansen and the Tribune Publishing Company comes within the tests stated in recent cases. It is unquestionably well settled that "one of the best tests to determine whether the relation is that of an independent contractor or that of employer and employee, is the right of control. It is not the fact of actual interference with the control, but the right to interfere, that makes the difference between an independent contractor and a servant or agent. * * * It is not a question of interference, or noninterference, not a question of whether there have been suggestions, or even orders, as to the conduct of the work, but a question of the right to act, as distinguished from the act itself or the failure to act. * * *" Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 581, 582, 250 P. 570, 571. In Press Publishing Co. v. Ind. Acc. Commission, 190 Cal. 114, 121, 210 P. 820, 823, it was said: "One of the means of ascertaining whether or not this right to control exists is the determination of whether or not, if instructions were given, they would have to be obeyed." As was also stated in the case of Hillen v. Ind. Acc. Commission, supra, page 581 of 199

Cal., 250 P. 571. "Wages may be measured by time, by the piece, or by any other standard."

A case in which evidence closely resembling the facts here was held sufficient to sustain the finding of employment is Call Publishing Co. v. Ind. Acc. Commission, 89 Cal. App. 194, 264 P. 300. In that case, however, the agent received $22.50 a week additional, instead of $3 per month. But we are not basing our conclusions on the method or amount of payment, but rather on the existing elements of personal relationship and right of control. It is clear from the record in the present case that the evidence sustains the conclusion that the Tribune Publishing Company could discharge Fred at any time, and that, if given any instructions, they would have to be followed by Fred, at the risk of being discharged if he refused or failed to comply with them, and that, therefore, the right of control existed within the meaning of the tests stated by the authorities cited.

Petitioners make the contention that, if the decision in the Call Publishing Co. Case be extended to include the present case, then there will be nothing to prevent the payment of compensation by the publisher of a San Francisco newspaper to the employee of a newsdealer in a distant city, who purchased the company's newspapers at wholesale and sold them at retail. Such a case, however, is not tested by the terms by which the parties designate the relationship, but the conclusion, regardless of distance or locality, must be drawn from the facts and the application thereto of the appropriate rules of law.

[3] We are also of the opinion that the so-called "going and coming" rule does not apply to the facts shown by the record. It is not questioned that Jack Clemmer, if it be determined that he was an employee of the Tribune Publishing Company, was still in its employment when the injury occurred. The rule is invoked because it is contended that Jack and another lad to whom he was going to teach the Tribune route had not yet arrived at their destination, which was the railroad station at San Rafael, where it was their duty to pick up the papers for delivery. But the record sustains the conclusion that the boys collided, and Jack was hurt, within two or three feet of the station platform upon which the papers were lying, and just about as the boys were about to alight from their bicycles, and that the occurrence took place within the precincts of the station. We think the facts on this phase of the case are concluded by Makins v. Ind. Acc. Commission, 198 Cal. 698, 701, 247 P. 202, 203, 49 A. L. R. 411, wherein it was said: "The rule is well settled that an employee, in going to work, comes under the protection of the act when he enters the employer's premises or upon the means provided for access thereto, though the premises and such means of access are not wholly under the employer's control or management. * * *

We conclude that the findings of the commission are sufficiently supported by the record presented, and that the award must be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

208 Cal. 677

PIONEER EXPRESS CO. v. RILEY, Controller. (S. F. 13603.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1930.

1. Carriers ⇨11—Business of transportation company conveying freightage between fixed termini is not inseparable from drayage business at terminals.

Business of a public transportation company in conveying freightage from one of its fixed terminal stations to another is not, in nature of things, inseparable from pick-up and delivery business, which has to do with collection of freightage at its terminal depots at one end and distribution thereof at the other end of fixed termini, which it is bound to establish and maintain in conformity with law.

2. Corporations ⇨5—Persons, though belonging to one family, without fraudulent design maintain separate corporate entities conducting several lines of separable business in some degree connected.

Group of persons, whether belonging to one family or not, may form themselves into one or more corporate entities for convenient conduct of business as they may see fit to undertake in good faith and without fraudulent design, and maintain such separate corporate entities for purpose of conducting several lines of business which, while in some degree connected, are not in nature of things inseparable.

3. Taxation ⇨57—Citizen or citizens seeking to engage in single line or several allied lines of business may adopt lawful means existing for lessening taxes.

Any citizen or group of citizens seeking to engage in any single line or in several allied lines of business endeavor by which property is accumulated and profits derived may adopt whatever lawful means may exist for the lessening of the burden of taxes which in one form or other may be laid on such properties or profits.

4. Statutes ⇨245—Statutes levying taxes are not extended by implication beyond clear import of language or their operations enlarged to embrace matters not specified.

In every case involving the interpretation of statutes levying taxes, it is established rule not to extend provisions of statutes by implication, beyond the clear import of language used, or to enlarge their operations so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out.

5. Statutes ⇨245—When doubt exists, statutes levying taxes are construed most strongly against government.

In case of doubt, statutes levying taxes are construed most strongly against the government and in favor of the citizen.

6. Taxation ⇨469—Neither state equalization board nor controller could go behind corporate entities conducting transportation business between fixed termini and drayage business within cities to show ownership by one family to increase tax burden of one (Const. art. 13, § 15; Pol. Code § 3664aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 17).

In absence of showing of want of good faith or any fraudulent intent by family of persons dominating allied corporations to accomplish evasion of tax burdens by having one corporation for conducting transportation business between fixed termini and another for drayage business within cities at termini, neither state board of equalization of taxes nor state controller could, to increase tax burden of one legally assessed by virtue of Const. art. 13, § 15, and Pol. Code, § 3664aa, as added by St. 1927, p. 17, go behind corporate entities engaged in conducting severable lines of business to show that capital stock of entities was owned or controlled by one family engaged in doing that which in absence of alliances they would have lawful right to do.

In Bank.

Application by the Pioneer Express Company for writ of mandate prayed to be directed against Ray L. Riley, as Controller of the State, to compel respondent to issue an official receipt showing payment in full of all taxes due by or assessed against petitioner. Writ granted.

Thelen & Marrin, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Dixwell L. Pierce, of Sacramento, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioner applies to this court for a writ of mandate to be directed against Ray L. Riley, as controller of the state of California, and having for its purpose that of compelling him to issue to the petitioner his official receipt showing that the petitioner has paid in full all taxes which are due and payable to the state of California or that may be legally assessed against the petitioner, its franchises or property for the fiscal year 1929-1930, under and by virtue of the provisions of section 15, article 13 of the Constitution, and section 3664aa of the Political Code of the state of California as added by St. 1927, p. 17. By the aforesaid provisions of the Constitution and Political Code the state board of equalization is organized and empowered to act in the matter of the levy and collection of state taxes upon such transportation companies as are common carriers and are engaged in doing business as such upon the public highways between fixed termini within said state. The amount of the tax thus to be imposed and collected is 5 per cent. of the gross receipts of such transportation carrier, whether an individual, a partnership, or a corporation, and such tax is assessed and required to be paid to the state controller upon and after a report by such carrier to the equalization board, and upon an audit, if necessary, of the books and accounts of such carrier, in order to verify or qualify such report. The petitioner is, and for several years has been, a corporation duly organized as a highway transportation company, doing business along the public highways of this state between San Francisco and San Jose, with fixed terminals in each of said cities and in the intermediate towns and cities. Prior to March 24, 1929, the petitioner, as such transportation company, and in compliance with the foregoing provisions of the Constitution and Political Code, filed with the state board of equalization its report in conformity with the requirements of law and the regulations of said board, wherein the total gross receipts of said transportation company from the carrying of freight along said route for the year ending December 31, 1928, amounted to $45,926.85. Thereafter the board of equalization caused an audit to be made of the books and records of the petitioner and also of the books and records of another corporation known as Gibson's Express Incorporated, and from which latter audit it appeared that the gross receipts of Gibson's Express Incorporated from the operation of its business, which is hereinafter more particularly described, for the year ending December 31, 1928, was $58,557.31.

Upon receiving said audit, the board of equalization proceeded to add the gross receipts of Gibson's Express Incorporated, which had theretofore made to it no report, to the gross receipts of the petitioner herein, which had not included or mentioned the gross receipts of Gibson's Express Incorporated in its aforesaid report, and thereupon notified petitioner that its assessment as a highway transportation company would be based upon the added gross receipts of both corporations, amounting to $104,484.16, and that the amount of the state tax to be levied and collected thereon was to be 5 per cent. thereof. The petitioner protested before said board against its increase in taxes. The board, after a hearing upon the protest, refused to modify its tax levy, and accordingly made and entered an order fixing the petitioner's tax for the fiscal year 1929-1930 at the sum of $5,224.20, and, having done so, reported its assessment to the state controller as provided by law, and the state controller thereafter proceeded with the collection of the same in the manner provided by law. Thereupon the petitioner made payment to the controller of the amount of its tax which would have been leviable and collectible upon its reported and audited amount of its gross receipts of the aforesaid fiscal year, exclusive of the amount of tax sought to be imposed upon it based upon the gross receipts of Gibson's Express Incorporated, for which latter sum it claimed it was not liable. It is conceded that, if this claim of the petitioner is well founded, it became by its aforesaid payment entitled to receive from the state controller the receipt which has been sought through the issuance of this writ.

The foregoing facts, together with certain other averments relating to the organization, stock ownership, and method of business of these two corporations, have been fully set forth in the petition filed herein, and, the order to show cause having been issued thereon, the respondent appeared and answered the petition, and in so doing made such admissions and denials as seemed to this court to require a reference for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the disputed issues of fact. Such reference was made, B. Grant Taylor being appointed as referee to take such testimony, and said referee, after such hearings as were required, has made and filed his report herein. This matter coming on for hearing after the making and filing of said report, counsel for the respective parties have presented their oral argument and extended briefs in support and in opposition to the demand of the petitioner for the issuance of said writ, and, the matter having been submitted to this court for decision, it has thus become necessary to find the facts as developed by the report of the referee and by the admissions of the respective parties to this proceeding. The facts thus to be ascertained are in the main based upon either the undisputed evidence before the referee or the admissions of the parties hereto in their arguments and briefs, and which facts may be summarized and stated in their chronological sequence as follows:

The petitioner is, and ever since 1924 has been, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state of California for the purpose of conducting the business of a public transportation company upon the public highways between San Francisco and San Jose and intermediate points. Prior to its corporate organization, and since about 1917, it had existed in the form of a copartnership, comprised of S. B. McLenegan, now deceased, and his son C. S. McLenegan, and which copartnership during the period of its existence conducted said business as such. During those years it had a rival in business known as Gibson's Express Incorporated, and which conducted up to 1919 a competing business with said partnership between said points, operating from separate termini. In 1919 these competing companies entered into an agreement to co-operate and to do a combined business from the same termini, and they accordingly in that year applied for, and received, permission so to do from the State

Railroad Commission. The two companies were not, however, merged thereby, but they continued to operate as separate institutions, maintaining their separate identities and equipment, as well as their separate partnership interests, stock ownership, and control. In 1924, as we have seen, said partnership became a corporation, and its stock ownership therein was divided as to practically the whole thereof between the two members of the said former copartnership. After such organization the two corporations continued as before to co-operate in business, but to maintain otherwise their separate entities. The business which both of these institutions were then conducting and thereafter continued to conduct co-operatively until January 1, 1927, was one which included, not only the transporting of freight of various kinds along the public highways between said fixed termini, but also what is known as a "pick-up and delivery service," which consisted in the collection of articles in the cities and towns within which they had their combined termini and the delivery thereof to such termini, whereupon such freight was transported to its several destinations, and, reaching there, was conveyed from such termini to the local address of the consignee.

On or about January 1, 1927, however, Gibson's Express Incorporated concluded to discontinue its intercity service as a transportation company and confine its operations to a local drayage business in the larger cities. At or about the same date the petitioner concluded to discontinue its pick-up and delivery service in such cities, and confine its activities solely to that of a common carrier, conducting a transportation business between its designated termini. It accordingly, on or about May 21, 1928, filed an application with the Railroad Commission for permission to eliminate from its former transportation service the pick-up and delivery feature thereof, and to discontinue such service within the corporate limits of San Francisco, Burlingame, San Mateo, Redwood City, Palo Alto, and San Jose, and to thereafter confine its operation and tariff schedule to its transportation business between its fixed termini in said cities. The Railroad Commission, after a hearing thereon, granted said application, and permitted the petitioner to file with said commission a tariff schedule from which all provisions and charges relating to a pick-up and delivery service in said cities were eliminated, and the tariff schedules of the petitioner were confined to its aforesaid transportation service between said termini. At or about the same time Gibson's Express Incorporated, having abandoned its transportation service formerly maintained between said termini in said cities, applied to the Railroad Commission for permission to formally abandon such service and all rights, privileges, or franchises theretofore possessed and operated under prior orders of the commission, and to confine its operations strictly to a pick-up and delivery service, or, in other words, a draying business in said cities. The Railroad Commission also granted this application, and on or about October 31, 1928, made and entered its order canceling all of the existing tariffs of Gibson's Express Incorporated, with the result that said corporation has not since said date had any tariff on file with said commission, nor have its operations in its said draying business been subject to the jurisdiction of said commission.

The foregoing conditions and limitations of the respective business conducted by each of said corporations as thus established under the respective orders of the Railroad Commission still continue to exist, and neither of said corporations since the making and entry of such orders has undertaken to conduct any business other than that to which its respective operation was thus confined. Upon the organization of Pioneer Express Company as a corporation, the stock of said corporation then issued and ever since outstanding amounted to 2,500 shares of common stock, the whole of which, with the exception of a share or two, was divided between S. B. McLenegan and his son C. S. McLenegan, the members of the preceding copartnership. The duly elected officers of said corporation were: President S. B. McLenegan, during his lifetime, Vice President C. S. McLenegan, Secretary E. M. Hays, a daughter of S. B. McLenegan. The board of directors thereof were the aforesaid persons and Walter Robinson, the attorney for the corporation. Just prior to the death of S. B. McLenegan in 1927, his son C. S. McLenegan acquired by gift from his father practically all of the stock of Pioneer Express Company, and has since been the owner thereof. The incorporators of Gibson's Express Incorporated were originally J. R. Gibson, Bertha Ross, and H. F. William Brockman, who were the owners of practically all of its issued stock, and so continued to be down to the early part of 1928, when, one of its incorporators having died, the remaining two concluded to go out of business, and as a result thereof the entire stock of said corporation was offered for sale, and about one-half thereof was purchased by Carrie C. McLenegan, the wife of S. B. McLenegan, with funds belonging to her as her separate property. Not having sufficient money on hand from that source to purchase all of the stock of the aforesaid incorporators of Gibson's Express Incorporated, her husband, S. B. McLenegan, purchased the balance thereof for the purpose of holding the same until Carrie C. McLenegan might be in funds to take over the same, which she did shortly thereafter, repaying her husband the purchase price thereof out of her separate property, and she has ever since said time been the owner of practically all of the corporate stock of Gibson's Express Incorporated as her sole and separate estate, and has been since her purchase of the stock the president of the corporation.

Upon the acquisition of the entire stock ownership of Gibson's Express Incorporated by his mother, C. S. McLenegan, who had already by the death of his father become the owner of the larger portion of the corporate stock of Pioneer Express Company, became manager of both corporations, and managed and operated the same and the business thereof from the same office, but keeping the books and accounts of each of said corporations entirely separate from the other, and distributing the net earnings and dividends of each periodically to those persons who appear upon such books to be the owners respectively of the corporate stock thereof. It would be natural under such circumstances that a large part of the pick-up and delivery business, consisting of the bringing of packages of freight to the office and terminal of the Pioneer Express Company in any of said cities for the purpose of its transportation by the latter to its office and terminal in the city to which such freight had been consigned, would be done through the medium of Gibson's Express Incorporated. The charges, however, for such pick-up and delivery service were kept separate on the books of said corporation, and, on the other hand, the cost and charges for the transportation of said freight to the terminal in each of said cities to which said freight was destined to go were in every instance separately kept upon the books of Pioneer Express Company.

The evidence taken herein discloses that Gibson's Express Incorporated did a considerable amount of drayage in each of said cities wherein it had headquarters independently of its pick-up and delivery service with relation to packages destined to its respective termini by the Pioneer Express Company, and that, in so far as said separate drayage business was being conducted, the Pioneer Express Company had no interest or concern therein, and was entitled to receive, and did receive, no part of the profit derived therefrom by Gibson's Express Incorporated. Under the combined management of these corporations by C. S. McLenegan after the death of his father, the clerical work of the combined offices of both was, in the main, performed in such offices by the employees of Gibson's Express Incorporated, which paid the salaries of these employees for such service, making no charge therefor against the other corporation. C. S. McLenegan, however, the manager of both corporations, was paid a fixed and separate salary for his service as such to each, and as to all the other employees of each of said corporations they were paid in each and every instance by the corporation to which their services as the employees thereof were rendered, and, as we have seen, the net earnings of each corporation were strictly and separately kept upon the books thereof, and were periodically distributed to the stockholders of each of said corporations according to their respective stock ownership therein as shown upon the books of each. The evidence taken before the referee further shows that about the time when these two entities ceased their rivalry a third corporation, known as Peninsula Terminal Company, was organized, for the purpose of owning and maintaining terminal offices in each of the said cities, together with automotive equipment in the way of trucks and cars for the use of each of the aforesaid corporations in and about the cities where such terminals were maintained. The stock of this latter corporation was divided between the other two corporations, and is now held separately by each. As to the automotive equipment owned by the Peninsula Terminal Company, it rents the motor vehicles constituting such equipment to each of said corporations according to the daily needs thereof, being paid by each a fixed rental for such use, and distributing the net earnings of the latter corporation periodically among the stockholders thereof.

The foregoing facts with reference to the development, stock ownership, and operations of these three corporations have been established by practically undisputed evidence, and in fact are in the main admitted by the showing made and the briefs submitted by the counsel for the respondent. It is, for example, admitted "that Pioneer Express Company and Gibson's Express Incorporated have each its own set of stockholders and officers and maintain a separate corporate existence." It is contended, however, by the respondent that there is such an interlocking of control and ownership in the McLenegan family as binds these corporations together in an inseparable whole. It is nowhere, however, shown, and it is not contended by the respondent, that in the creation and maintenance of each of these corporations there was any fraudulent purpose or intent on the part of the members of the McLenegan family, and at the last analysis the respondent concedes "that it is the nature of the business conducted that determines its tax classification and not its ownership."

[1] The aforesaid concessions made on behalf of the respondent would seem to reduce the problems before us for determination in this proceeding to two in number, the first of which is whether the nature and conduct of the two lines of business, as conducted by the three foregoing corporate entities, are in their nature and essence inseparable. The answer to this problem seems to us to be found in the history and development of freight transportation between different and distant termini. It is a matter of common knowledge that, prior to the recent development of transportation along the public highways of this and other states by means of motor vehicles, such transportation was, in the main, conducted by the railroads, and that during such period, and even up to the present time, the business of pick-up and delivery of freightage was one which was carried on by trucking companies or individuals, and was entirely separate and severable from the main business of the railroads, which was that of transporting such freightage as was brought by such individuals or trucking companies to its established depots to the point of destination thereof which was at an established depot of the carrier, and that the matter of bringing such freightage to the carrier's depot at the one end, or of delivering the same freightage from the carrier's depot at the other end to the consignee thereof at his home or place of business, was a matter with which the railroad carrier had no concern. There is nothing in the recent development of highway transportation by means of motor trucks or vehicles which would render the collection and carriage and delivery of freightage any more inseparable than it was formerly or than it is now when the consignor seeks to choose a railroad for the carrier of his wares. It may be an inducement to a consignor to have his goods picked up at his doorstep, but it is not an inseparable condition that this should be done by a single transportation company, nor is it an inseparable condition that a consignee must have his delivery made at his doorstep by a single concern, and we are of the opinion as a matter of common observation that there are still many consignors who make use of the almost numberless expressmen to convey their goods to the fixed terminal of the transportation company, and many consignees who so receive delivery of such goods at the other fixed terminal of the transporter thereof. We conclude, therefore, that the business of a public transportation company in conveying freightage from one of its fixed terminal stations to another is not, in the nature of things, inseparable from the pick-up and delivery business which has to do with the collection of freightage at its terminal depots at the one end and the distribution thereof at the other end of the fixed termini which it is bound to establish and maintain in conformity with law.

[2-5] The second problem is as to whether a group of persons, whether belonging to one family or not, who may choose to form themselves into one or more corporate entities for the convenient conduct of such business as they may see fit to undertake, may not in good faith and without fraudulent design adopt and maintain such separate corporate entities for the purpose of conducting several lines of business which, while in some degree connected, are not in the nature of things inseparable. We are satisfied, without going into further detail, that common knowledge and observation would serve to supply an answer to this problem which would also be adverse to the contention which the respondent makes in opposition to the issuance of this writ. The authorities which have been cited on both sides of this controversy are of little aid or value in the determination of the two foregoing problems. But we think it may be stated as a reasonable conclusion of this whole matter that any citizen or group of citizens seeking to engage in any single line or in several allied lines of business endeavor by which property is accumulated and profits derived may adopt whatever lawful means may exist for the lessening of the burden of taxes which in one form or other may be laid upon such properties or profits. In every case involving "the interpretation of statutes levying taxes it is the established rule not to extend their provisions, by implication, beyond the clear import of the language used, or to enlarge their operations so as to embrace matters not specifically pointed out. In case of doubt they are construed most strongly against the government, and in favor of the citizen." Gould v. Gould, 245 U. S. 151, 38 S. Ct. 53, 62 L. Ed. 211; Estate of Potter, 188 Cal. 55, 64, 204 P. 826.

[6] We are of the opinion that the foregoing principle should be given full application to the powers and duties of the state board of equalization and of the state controller with regard to such situations as are presented by the practically uncontradicted evidence and the admissions of the parties in the instant case, in the absence of any showing of a want of good faith or of any fraudulent intent on the part of the McLenegan family to accomplish an evasion of tax burdens which the state under the foregoing provisions of the Constitution and statutes may lawfully impose. It would not seem just or reasonable to permit such officials to go behind the corporate entities which may be engaged in conducting certain severable lines of business in an endeavor to show that the capital stock of such corporate entities is owned or controlled by a few or many persons, whether such persons may happen to be allied in family or in social or in business relationships while engaged in doing that which, in the absence of such alliances, they have a lawful right to do.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

208 Cal. 661

RECLAMATION BOARD OF CALIFORNIA et al. v. RILEY, State Controller, et al.
(S. F. 13663.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1930.

1. States ⇨119—Payment of drainage district warrants outstanding before passage of act authorizing payment held not invalid as gift of public money (St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 117, as amended, § 37a, subd. 3, added by St. 1929, p. 714, § 5; Const. art. 4, §§ 31, 32).

Payment of drainage district warrants from joint navigation and flood control project fund, with consent of reclamation board, as authorized by St. 1911, Ex. Sess. p. 117, as amended, § 37a, subd. 3, added by St. 1929, p. 714, § 5, where warrant was outstanding prior to enactment of act authorizing payment, at which time state was under no legal obligation to assume or pay warrant, held not invalid as gift of public money prohibited by Const. art. 4, §§ 31, 32.

2. Constitutional law ⇨103—Drains ⇨18—Holders of drainage district warrants held to have no vested right to money appropriated by Legislature to purchase warrants, and, in absence thereof, to have no right to control allocation of appropriation.

Holders of drainage district warrants, primarily payable only through process of assessment provided for in various acts of Legislature, have no vested right to application of money appropriated by Legislature to aid public purpose and project of reclamation and flood control by purchasing outstanding warrants, and, in absence of such interest, holders of warrants have no right to control allocation of legislative appropriation.

In Bank.

Original application by the Reclamation Board of the State of California and another for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Ray L. Riley, State Controller, to issue warrant as purchase price of certain drainage warrant purchased by the state department of finance, in which proceedings the Western Land & Reclamation Company intervened. Writ granted.

Stephen W. Downey, Downey, Brand & Seymour, and F. R. Pierce, all of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Devlin & Devlin & Diepenbrock, of Sacramento, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Theodore Chester, of Sacramento, and Eddy Knapp, of San Francisco, for intervener.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioners have applied to this court for a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the respondent, as controller of the state of California, to issue his official warrant in the sum of $3,661.93, payable out of that certain fund known as "Joint Navigation and Flood Control Project", as the purchase price of a certain warrant purchased by the state department of finance of one W. McWilliam with the consent of the reclamation board of the state of California, one of the petitioners herein, on September 3, 1929, which warrant so purchased had theretofore been drawn on and based upon "Sutter-Butte By-pass Assessment Number Six" and which warrant had been so purchased in alleged conformity with the provisions of section 5 (section 37a of the Reclamation Board Act, as amended) of that certain act of the Legislature approved May 21, 1929, and which became effective on August 14, 1929. St. 1929, p. 707. The respondent in his answer and return to said application has demurred thereto upon the ground that the same does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the respondent or to entitle the petitioners to the relief prayed for therein or to any relief. The act of the Legislature above referred to is entitled: "An act to amend sections 14, 15 and 19 of the 'Reclamation board act,' approved December 24, 1911, as amended, and adding two new sections thereto to be numbered 15a and 37a, respectively, relating to the auditing of canceled warrants and providing for the application of moneys released, reimbursed, or appropriated under and pursuant to chapter one hundred seventy-six, California statutes of 1925 and the war department appropriations act of congress of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, being public law number eight hundred forty-three, seventieth congress, approved February 28, 1929, and providing for the repeal of all laws in conflict herewith." Section 37a of the act, after reciting that the purpose thereof was to further the provisions of certain previous acts of the State Legislature providing plans for the control of the flood waters of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and for the improvement and preservation of navigation and for the reclamation and protection of lands susceptible of overflow from said rivers and their tributaries, and after reciting that certain moneys amounting to somewhat over $4,000,000 had been made available for such purposes pursuant to an act of Congress approved February 28, 1929 (45 Stat. 1381) by which act said sum had been appropriated by the United States government and directed to be paid over to the state of California for the purposes above set forth, provided that said sum was to be deposited in a fund to be known as the "Joint Navigation and Flood Control Project Fund" and which fund was to be expended and disbursed by the reclamation board for the uses and purposes and subject to the conditions thereafter in said act to be set forth and at such times and in such manner as said reclamation board in its discretion should deem necessary or proper, and directing the state controller to issue his warrants upon said fund upon order by the reclamation board, and directing the state treasurer to pay the same. Section 37a of said act then proceeded to prescribe the uses and purposes to which the moneys thus accumulated in said fund should be expended and which uses and purposes were set forth in said section in three subdivisions thereof. The first of these related to new construction done or required to be done and to lands, rights of way, or easements necessary to be acquired by the state of California in carrying forward said work of reclamation and flood control pursuant to the previous legislation upon the subject and to the work of reclamation and flood control which had theretofore been done thereunder. The second division of said section authorized the Reclamation Board to draw upon said fund in a limited amount for administration purposes, but limited the amount to be thus expended to $25,000 in any one fiscal year, and also limited the amount to be expended under the first and second subdivisions of said section to the sum of $200,000 during the current fiscal year. Subdivision 3 of said section provided that with the balance of said money thus allocated to said fund the state department of finance, with the consent of the reclamation board, was authorized "from time to time and in such manner as it in its discretion shall determine to purchase, retire and cause to be canceled, at such price or prices as it may deem advisable, but not to exceed par plus the accrued interest thereon, all or any warrants or bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district heretofore or hereafter issued as provided in the reclamation board act or in chapter five hundred twenty, statutes of California 1919 and drawn on or based upon or secured by Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment number six, Feather river assessment number seven or Sacramento river outlet assessment number two," and which balance of said fund is allocated to each of said purposes for the fiscal years 1929 and 1930 in certain percentages in said subdivision set forth. The amount of money for which the petitioner herein seeks to have the respondent draw his warrant is within such allocation. It is with the provisions of subdivision 3 of said section that we are solely concerned in the instant proceeding, the respondent having by the briefs and argument presented on his behalf through the office of the Attorney General confined his assault upon said act of the Legislature to the provisions of subdivision 3 of section 37a thereof.

[1] The sole question which the respondent has thus presented for our consideration relates to the expenditure of any portion of said fund, under the provisions thereof for the purchase, retirement, and cancellation of any warrants or bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District which had been issued and were outstanding for work in the direction of reclamation and flood control done prior to the enactment of said act of the Legislature, and which warrants or bonds the state of California was theretofore under no legal obligation to assume or pay. It is the sole contention of the respondent that the assuming to purchase, pay, or retire said warrants or bonds in the manner and to the extent required by the terms and provisions of subdivision 3 of section 37a of said act of the Legislature would amount to a gift of public money, such as is prohibited by the provisions of sections 31 and 32 of article 4 of the state Constitution. An examination of the record herein, and particularly of the briefs and arguments presented on behalf of the respondent, discloses that the same precise objection which has thus been made by the respondent to the aforesaid provisions of the act of the Legislature above referred to were presented and urged before this court by the same respondent against the validity of the act of the Legislature approved May 27, 1919, and which became effective July 27, 1919, and by the terms of which act the sum of $3,000,000 had been appropriated by the state Legislature for certain uses by the reclamation board in connection with Sutter-Butte by-pass project No. 6 of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, and which uses as in said act provided were urged by the respondent as being violative of the aforesaid provisions of the state Constitution relating to gifts of public money. In the case of Sacramento, etc., Drainage District v. Riley, 199 Cal. 668, 251 P. 207, the aforesaid objections of the respondent to the act of the Legislature then under review were considered by this court upon the original hearing thereon and also upon a further and very full consideration of the subject upon rehearing, and in the decision this court, upon such hearing and rehearing, in an exhaustive opinion, disposed of the aforesaid objections of this respondent to the act of the Legislature then under review adverse to his contention. Counsel for the respondent in fact frankly admitted, both upon oral argument and in his later briefs, that, unless this court was prepared to overrule the decision in 199 Cal., this writ must issue. We are not prepared to overrule or modify in any respect our former opinion, but, on the contrary, we hereby fully affirm and approve the same.

We can perceive no present advantage to be gained by a review of the history of the great public undertaking of flood control, drainage, and reclamation along the upper reaches of the Sacramento river and its tributaries which resulted in the several enactments of the state Legislature since the inception of that undertaking up to and including both the act of 1919, which was considered and upheld in Sacramento, etc., Drainage District v. Riley, supra, and the act of 1929 and the particular section and subdivision thereof here under review, since we are satisfied that the reasoning and conclusion of this court in its aforesaid decision has full and exact application to the contention which the respondent herein makes in opposition to the issuance of said writ. We therefore conclude that the aforesaid opposition of the respondent to the issuance of the writ is without merit, and that in so far as the respondent is concerned, the writ should issue.

[2] During the progress of the instant proceeding the Western Land & Reclamation Company, a corporation, by leave of this court, filed its complaint in intervention herein, wherein it was set forth that said intervenor was the owner of warrant number 9420 issued by the state of California on or about October 7, 1919, directing and authorizing the treasurer of the state to pay to the intervenor out of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, Sacramento river outlet assessment two fund the sum of $5,000 and which warrant having been presented to the treasurer for payment and which payment was refused on account of lack of funds, the warrant was then and there registered by the treasurer, and the same registration thereof has since been renewed and extended from time to time until such time as there was money in the treasury belonging to said assessment fund with which to pay the same. It is the contention of the intervenor that, since the state Legislature by the adoption of the act of 1929, and particularly by the provisions of section 37a thereof, has appropriated the sums of money provided therein for the purchase, retirement, and cancellation of outstanding warrants and bonds, the intervenor is entitled to have its particular warrant and bond purchased, retired, and canceled in priority to the warrant which the petitioners herein seek to have ordered approved and paid. The application of the intervenor we hold, without an extended review of the long and involved history of the outstanding warrants and bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, to be without merit, since, under the authority of the previous decisions of this court, as well as of the District Court of Appeal, holders of warrants, such as that of the intervenor, and which primarily were payable through, and only through, the process of assessment provided for in various previous acts of the state Legislature, had no vested right to the application of whatever sums of money the state Legislature might otherwise see fit to appropriate in furtherance and aid of the aforesaid public purpose and project of reclamation and flood control, and that, in the absence of such vested interest in the moneys so appropriated, the holders of such warrants had and have no right to control the allocation of such legislative appropriation. The authorities which completely cover and fully and finally determine this phase of the instant proceeding are to be found in the following cases: San Joaquin Drainage District v. Johnson, 192 Cal. 211, 219 P. 442; Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District v. Riley, 194 Cal. 624, 229 P. 957; Sacramento, etc., Drainage District v. Riley, 199 Cal. 668, 251 P. 207; Reclamation Board v. Chambers, 46 Cal. App. 476, 189 P. 479. On the authority of the foregoing cases we hold that the intervenor is not to be heard in opposition to the issuance of this writ.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

208 Cal. 738

In re STAFFORD. (S. F. 13391.) ★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Attorney and client ⇄57—Supreme Court, on review of decision of disbarment, will examine record anew to ascertain whether any charge merits disbarment.

Supreme Court, on review of decision of disbarment by the Board of Governors of the State Bar is not bound by findings or recommendations made by local administrative committee, nor their adoption by Board of Governors, and will examine record anew to ascertain whether or not any charge has been proven which merits disbarment.

2. Attorney and client ⇄53(2)—Evidence relative to attorney signing name of another to note and deed of trust and release of homestead warranted disbarment.

Evidence in disbarment proceeding relative to attorney having signed name of another to a note and deed of trust and to release of homestead without knowledge or consent of such person held to warrant disbarment.

In Bank.

Petition by W. F. Stafford to review a decision of disbarment by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California. Petitioner debarred from practicing as attorney and counsellor.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Grover O'Connor, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is a petition to review a decision of disbarment by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California.

The record discloses that petitioner was charged with improper conduct in five distinct transactions, referred to in the proceedings as the Carl Smith transaction, the Hohenstein transaction, the Timbrell transaction, the Shewbridge transaction, and the Prince transaction. Evidence was heard upon all of these charges, and the local administrative committee found against the petitioner upon each of these charges and recommended his disbarment. At the hearing before the Board of Governors, counsel for petitioner urged as an objection to the findings and recommendation of the said local administrative committee that a quorum of the members of the committee that joined in the report did not participate in all of the hearings of the committee. The Board of Governors found that no such objection was made by petitioner at the time of the hearings before the said committee or at any of them, and that no injustice or prejudice was suffered by petitioner by reason of the irregularities mentioned. However, in deference to petitioner's contention, the judgment of disbarment was based upon the findings with reference to the Hohenstein transaction and the Prince transaction, and it was found that upon the hearings with reference to these transactions a quorum consisting of the same members of said committee was present at and participated in all the hearings thereon and joined in the findings and report in relation thereto, and that the misconduct of the accused in relation to said transactions, irrespective of any misconduct in relation to the other transactions, justifies and necessitates a judgment of disbarment.

[1] While the foregoing action of the Board of Governors satisfactorily disposes of the objection of petitioner, there is another reason why it is of no controlling force in this proceeding. This court is not bound by the findings or recommendations made by the local administrative committee, nor their adoption by the Board of Governors, and will examine the record anew to ascertain whether or not any charge has been proven against petitioner which merits disbarment.

[2] We have carefully read the transcript of the testimony and find with reference to the Prince transaction that it is admitted that the petitioner signed the name of Harry Prince to a note and deed of trust and to a release of homestead without the knowledge and consent of said Harry Prince, and that by so doing he secured for his own use the proceeds of a second mortgage upon community property of Harry Prince and his wife, Ruth Prince. It is true there is some conflict in the testimony as to the circumstances leading up to this action by petitioner, and it is his contention that, because of a close relationship between himself and Ruth Prince, his niece, and because of her knowledge and consent, he felt justified in signing Harry Prince's name to these documents without authorization. Ruth Prince denies that she ever gave her consent, but we think this is immaterial. Her consent would not validate or justify the acts of petitioner, and we think the testimony in the record regarding this transaction, and all the facts and circumstances surrounding it, warrant and necessitate the disbarment of petitioner.

It is ordered that the name of petitioner be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counsellors of the court and that he be debarred from practicing as such attorney and counsellor in any of the courts of the state.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

208 Cal. 723

KRUCÉ v. PARLIER WINERY.
(S. F. 13173.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1930.

1. Corporations ⇨432(12)—Evidence held to show that notes were authorized and ratified by corporation.

In action against corporation on notes, evidence showing that notes were properly signed by president, who was also general manager, and by secretary under seal of corporation, and that corporation directed several communications to plaintiff, acknowledging existence of notes, their validity, and promising payment, held to show that notes were authorized and ratified by corporation.

2. Bills and notes ⇨489(3)—Defense that notes were without consideration cannot be relied on, where not pleaded.

Contention in action on notes that notes were without consideration cannot be relied on, where such defense was not pleaded.

3. Bills and notes ⇨518(1)—Evidence held to show that money advanced by plaintiff to defendant, together with interest, made up consideration for notes sued on.

In action against corporation on notes, evidence showing that on behalf of defendant plaintiff advanced rents, freight, money for revenue stamps, and other items for maintenance of bonded warehouse, held to show that such items, together with interest, made up consideration for notes sued on.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by E. J. Krucé against the Parlier Winery, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank F. Oster, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This cause is submitted to us solely upon the transcript and appellant's brief. Respondent refused, upon inquiry by the clerk of the court, to file a brief, and expressed utter indifference as to the result of this litigation, due to its bankruptcy and death of its president.

Plaintiff seeks by the action to collect some $4,000, together with interest and also attorney fees, upon two promissory notes, for $4,000 each, signed by the president and general manager of the corporation and by the secretary, the seal of the corporation being attached thereto. These notes are set up in the complaint and admittedly the second note was to be a substitution for the first note, which was continued in the case only for the purpose of collecting interest. The answer is simply a denial of the due execution of the notes. Judgment went for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

[1] The evidence shows, however, as above noted, that the notes were properly signed by the president, who was also general manager, and by the secretary, under the seal of the corporation, these persons being two of the three members of the board of directors thereof. Evidence is also abundant that knowledge of execution of the notes was brought home to the corporation at that time and their execution was impliedly, if not expressly, ratified. In fact, the corporation directed several communications to plaintiff acknowledging the existence of the notes, their validity, and promising payment. There is, therefore, no ground whatsoever upon which to rest the contention that the notes were not either authorized or ratified by the corporation.

[2, 3] The contention was also made in the court below that the notes were without consideration, but this defense was not pleaded, and respondent, therefore, may not rely upon it. Pastene v. Pardini, 135 Cal. 431, 67 P. 681; Yellow Jacket, etc., Co. v. Holbrook, 24 Cal. App. 687, 142 P. 128; Flint v. Giguere, 50 Cal. App. 314, 318, 195 P. 85. Moreover, the evidence shows that a written contract existed between plaintiff and respondent respecting the sale and disposition of wines manufactured by respondent, and also shows that on behalf of respondent, plaintiff advanced rents, freight, money for revenue stamps, and other items for the maintenance of a bonded warehouse in the city of Detroit. The evidence shows that these items aggregated the sum of $3,800, which, together with interest of $200, made up the $4,000 consideration for the notes. We are pointed to no evidence to overthrow this showing made by appellant in his brief, which exhaustively treats the evidence. This being true, there is no foundation whatever upon which to justify the judgment in favor of defendant.

Accordingly, it is reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

103 Cal. App. 346

MATHEWS v. DAVISON et al. (Civ. 7214.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Appeal and error $\S$ 345(1)—Filing notice of intention to move for new trial extends time of appeal, although motion is not presented 60 days after judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Where notice of intention to move for new trial is served and filed within statutory time, it extends time within which an appeal may be taken, even though motion is not presented within 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment, and notice of appeal filed within statutory time after denial of such motion by operation of law is within time, since, under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, filing of notice of intention to move for new trial is commencement of new proceeding, which remains pending until disposed of by court or by operation of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by B. A. Mathews against Robert Davison, the Home Fire & Marine Insurance Company of California, and others. Judgment for plaintiff. On motion to dismiss the appeal of defendant Insurance Company. Motion denied.

Albert J. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel M. Samter and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for respondent Mathews.

Chas. W. Haswell, of San Francisco, for respondents Davison and others.

TYLER, P. J. Motion to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that it was taken after the time limited by law.

Judgment was entered on February 26, 1929. On March 6, 1929, a notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed. This document recites that the defendant Home Fire & Marine Insurance Company intends to move the court for an order vacating the judgment and granting a new trial on various grounds stated in the notice. It was further recited that the motion would be made upon the minutes of the court. It is here claimed in support of the motion to dismiss that, as no motion for a new trial was ever made, the proceedings taken by appellant were not sufficient to extend the time within which to take the appeal, and therefore it was taken too late, and should be dismissed.

The position is without merit. Where a notice of intention to move for a new trial is served and filed within the statutory time, it extends the time within which an appeal may be taken, even though the motion is not presented within 60 days after service of notice of entry of judgment, and a notice of appeal filed within the statutory time after denial of such motion by operation of law is within time.

Under section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure the filing of such notice in time is the commencement of a new proceeding, which remains pending until disposed of by the court or by operation of law. Estate of Bergland, 177 Cal. 227, 170 P. 400; Ferguson v. Fonner, 87 Cal. App. 590, 262 P. 337.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 392

DAVIDSON INV. CO. v. DABNEY.
(Civ. 6269.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 24, 1930.

1. Pleading $\S$ 121(1), 129(1)—Denial on lack of knowledge or information sufficient to form belief is not denial and so fatally defective as to constitute admission.

Denial, in answer to complaint in action in claim and delivery, that defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form belief regarding allegations contained in paragraph of complaint and basing his denial thereon, denying each and every allegation in said paragraph, held not a denial and so fatally defective as to require it to be construed as admission of allegations attempted to be denied, since attempted denial, being evasive and raising no issue, may be entirely disregarded.

2. Pleading $\S$ 126—Denial in action of claim and delivery that automobile was worth \$1,500 and alleging greater value held negative pregnant and insufficient.

Allegations of answer to complaint in action of claim and delivery for automobile regarding value, denying that automobile is of value of $1,500, and alleging automobile is worth far in excess of that sum, held a negative pregnant and insufficient as denial.

3. Pleading $\S$ 129(2)—Denial, in action of claim and delivery, of unlawful detention, without denying detention, held to raise no issue and constitute admission of possession.

Denial in action of claim and delivery that property is unlawfully detained by defendant, without denying fact of defendant's possession and detention thereof, held insufficient to raise issue as to facts and to amount to admission of possession as alleged in complaint.

4. Replevin $\S$ 63—Allegations of answer in claim and delivery for automobile justifying detention under contract to purchase on which defendant defaulted held insufficient as defense.

Answer, in action of claim and delivery, alleging facts attempting to justify defendant's admitted detention of automobile upon theory that he was purchasing it upon executory contract on which he, by his own pleading, was in default, held insufficient to constitute defense, since equitable defense cannot be based on contract which defendant has failed to perform.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 959(3)—Discretion of trial court in allowing or refusing amendments to pleading during trial will not be disturbed on appeal unless abused.

Allowance or refusal of amendments to pleading during trial is matter largely in discretion of trial court, whose rulings will not be disturbed on appeal unless abuse of discretion is clearly shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul B. Dougherty, Judge.

Action by the Davidson Investment Company against Henry R. Dabney. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson and Matthew C. Simpson, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. The defendant, appealing from a judgment on the pleadings, seeks a reversal thereof upon three grounds: First, that material issues were raised by his answer; second, that the pleading of affirmative matter as a defense barred the plaintiff from taking such judgment; and, third, that the refusal of the court to allow him to amend his answer was reversible error.

[1] The complaint is in the form common to actions in claim and delivery. It alleges the ownership and right of possession in the plaintiff of a certain automobile, that the value thereof is $1,500, that the same is in the possession of and wrongfully detained by the defendant, a demand by the plaintiff for possession and refusal of delivery by the defendant, and $1,500 damages. The allegation as to plaintiff's ownership and right of possession is traversed by a denial in the following form: "The defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to those allegations contained in paragraph two of the complaint, and basing his denial thereon denies each and every allegation in said paragraph contained." It is too well established in California to be controverted that a denial on lack of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief is not a denial and is so fatally defective as to require it to be construed as an admission of the allegations attempted to be denied. In the case of Aronson & Co. v. Pearson, 199 Cal. 295, 249 P. 191, 193, the defendant attempted to make a denial in the following words: "Defendant alleges she has not sufficient knowledge or information upon which to base a belief, and, placing her denial upon that ground denies," etc. The court said regarding this sort of an attempted denial: "For sixty-eight years the form of denial adopted by the defendant has been held insufficient. Relative to the denial of the allegations of a verified complaint, section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: 'If the defendant has no information or belief upon the subject sufficient to enable him to answer an allegation of the complaint, he may so state in his answer, and place his denial on that ground.' Section 46 of the Practice Act * * * as amended in 1854 * * * permitted a defendant to deny an allegation of a verified complaint 'according to his information and belief.' In Curtis v. Richards & Vantine, 9 Cal. 34, 38, the defendants based their denial upon the averment that 'they have not sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief.' The court said: 'By the forty-sixth section of the Practice Act, as originally passed in 1851, it was provided, that an allegation of the complaint might be controverted by a denial 'of any knowledge thereof sufficient to form a belief.' In practice, this mode of denial was found to furnish a convenient pretext for evading the statute. In some instances, defendants became critical in their judgments, as to the extent of knowledge sufficient to form a belief, and would, without hesitation, deny, in that form, facts, upon the existence of which they did not hesitate to act in other matters. In 1854, the forty-sixth section was amended to the present language, and the wisdom of the amendment is well illustrated by the present case.' The same construction has been placed upon the foregoing provision of section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83, 87, 37 Am. St. Rep. 23, 33 P. 757; Turner v. Watkins, 36 Cal. App. 503, 504, 172 P. 620; Nave v. Graham, 37 Cal. App. 332, 334, 174 P. 76. Such a denial will not be held fatally defective upon appeal if it was treated by the parties at the trial as creating an issue, but, since in this case neither party offered any evidence bearing upon the question, there is no ground for holding that it was so treated."

Such an attempted denial is evasive and raises no issue. It may therefore be entirely disregarded. Le Breton v. Stanley Contracting Co., 15 Cal. App. 429, 114 P. 1028; Bartlett Estate Co. v. Fraser, 11 Cal. App. 373, 105 P. 130; Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 47, 50 P. 1066.

[2] Defendant thus answers the allegation of the complaint as to value: "Denies that the personal property described in the complaint is of the value of fifteen hundred dollars ($1500.00) and in that behalf alleges that said property is worth far in excess of the sum of fifteen hundred ($1500.00) dollars." This is a splendid example of a negative pregnant which can give birth to no issue.

[3] The allegation as to defendant's possession is met by a denial that the property "is unlawfully detained by" the defendant, but the fact of defendant's possession and detention thereof is not denied at all. This manner of pleading is an attempt to deny a legal conclusion and raises no issue as to the facts, as has many times been held in this state. Prichard v. Kimball, 190 Cal. 763, 214 P. 863; Richardson v. Smith, 29 Cal. 529; Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 545; Busenius v. Coffee, 14 Cal. 91. It amounts to an admission of possession as alleged in the complaint. Richardson v. Smith, supra.

The attempted denial of the allegation as to damages is open to the same criticism as that just discussed, and the remaining allegations of the complaint are not denied at all.

It is evident from the foregoing review of the defendant's answer that it raises no issue as to any of the facts alleged in the complaint and that appellant's first point is without merit.

[4] As to the claim that the second defense sets up affirmative matter and thus bars plaintiff from the right to ask and receive a judgment on the pleadings, we are constrained to hold that it fails to allege facts which would constitute a defense to the case made by the facts as pleaded in the complaint and, as we have held, admitted by the failure of the defendant to deny them. The defense attempted to be set up is as follows: That the defendant on December 1, 1925, purchased the automobile which is the subject of the action from the plaintiff under an agreement whereby defendant was to pay $2,500 therefor, of which sum $250 was to be and was paid at the time the agreement was made, the balance to be paid in monthly installments of $250 each. A further consideration for the purchase was the settlement of a lawsuit in which one Ring was defendant and the agreement of the plaintiff herein to dismiss that action and to return to Ring a note and a mortgage given by him "to secure the payment thereof upon the chattels mentioned" in the complaint. It is alleged that the plaintiff failed to return the note and mortgage and to dismiss the action, and that the note is in the sum of $2,000, "which sum this defendant promised and agreed with said Ring that he would pay." This purported defense sets up, at most, an executory agreement of sale. It does not aver that title passed, and it does not allege that any payments have been made to plaintiff on the contract other than the down payment of $250, although at the date of verification of the answer four months had elapsed since the date of the contract to purchase. Neither does it allege that any time was fixed for the dismissal of the action or for the return of the note and mortgage to Ring. The most that can be said of it is that it attempts to justify defendant's admitted detention of the automobile owned by plaintiff upon the theory that he is purchasing it upon an executory contract on which he is, by his own pleading, in default.

The situation is analogous to that in Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 122, 23 P. 272, in which the defendant in an action in ejectment by way of defense set up a contract entered into by the plaintiff and himself for his purchase of the property in question. We quote from the opinion in that case: "But taking the defendant's own theory, viz., that the purchase money was to be paid in monthly installments of $10 each, it follows that at the end of each month an installment became due; and, therefore, at the time that a demand was made for possession, there were at least 32 installments due and unpaid. In any view that can be taken, therefore, the defendant was in default with his payments. He did not perform what his contract required of him; and, this being so, the fact that he made valuable improvements does not avail him. Such improvements cannot enable him to refuse to perform his contract, and yet retain possession of the property. The performance of his contract is an essential feature of any equitable defense on his part. If any authority were needed for such a plain proposition, it is to be found in some of the cases cited by the appellant himself. Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 20 [27 P. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679]; Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 241. The fact that interest was to be paid on overdue installments does not operate to extend the time for payment of the principal. To say that the defendant was entitled to hold the possession until all the installments became due is the very reverse of the true rule, which is that he has no sufficient equity until he has paid all that are due. Alston v. Wingfield, 53 Ga. 22. There is no question as to whether time was of the essence of the contract; for the defendant does not offer to pay what is due under the contract, but denies that he is in default. This case is determined in favor of plaintiff by Hoffman v. Remnant, 72 Cal. 1, 12 P. 804, which is precisely in point, and shows that the plaintiff had a right to recover. See Seabury v. [Doe ex dem.] Stewart, 22 Ala. 207-217, 58 Am. Dec. 254, where the point is ably discussed, and the authorities cited. The plaintiff was not called on to rescind the contract, or return any part of the purchase money. His right of recovery is consistent with the contract. He recovers because the defendant was in default in paying the purchase money, and defendant cannot have land and money both. Central Pacific R. Co. v. Mudd, 59 Cal. 585; Seabury v. [Doe ex dem.] Stewart, 22 Ala. 207-217, 58 Am. Dec. 254; Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 506 [18 L. Ed. 520]. Equitable principles cannot affect plaintiff's rights, since equity follows the law, and rules as the law rules."

We believe that the principles announced in Hannan v. McNickle, while there applied in an action to recover possession of real property, are equally applicable where the property possession of which is sought to be recovered is personal property. An equitable defense cannot be based on a contract which the defendant has failed to perform. Howard v. Hewitt, 139 Cal. 614, 73 P. 414.

[5] We find no abuse of discretion in the refusal of the court to permit defendant to amend his answer. After the motion for judgment on the pleadings had been made and during argument thereon, counsel for the defendant said: "If Your Honor will permit me to amend the special defense by alleging —by saying that on or about the first day of December, 1925, the defendant purchased the property described in paragraph two of the complaint from the plaintiff under an agreement wherein and whereby the defendant agreed to pay plaintiff $2500.00 payable as follows—the terms are as evidenced by the contract." If we are to regard this as a formal motion for an order granting leave to amend, the fact remains that the proposed amendment, if incorporated in the answer, would not have given it any additional weight as a statement of facts constituting a defense; and the allowance or refusal of amendments during trial is a matter largely in the discretion of the trial court, whose rulings will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown. Milliken v. Valencia, 47 Cal. App. 16, 189 P. 1049; Billesbach v. Larkey, 161 Cal. 649, 120 P. 31.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 209

HAVENS v. LOEBEL (Civ. 3950.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 16, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨208—Automobile driver held contributorily negligent in driving at unlawful rate of speed at time of collision (Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121).

In action to recover damages on account of death of minor son of plaintiff in collision between automobiles operated by plaintiff and defendant, evidence held to establish that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because of traveling at an unlawful rate of speed within provisions of Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121 (St. 1923, pp. 553, 557).

2. Automobiles ⇨208—Automobile driver traveling on boulevard or arterial highway is not exempted from restriction and obligations imposed by law (Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121, and § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15).

Automobile driver is not, by reason of fact that he was traveling upon a boulevard or arterial street or highway, exempted from restrictions, limitations, and obligations imposed by Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121 (St. 1923, pp. 553, 557), and section 131 (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15, relative to speed and right of way.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by R. F. Havens against A. Loebel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, Len H. Honey, of Stockton, and Lloyd E. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellant.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, and Alvin Weis, of Marysville, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant for and on account of the death of Gordon Leroy Havens, a minor son of the plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant.

[1] The record shows that on or about the 20th day of March, 1927, the plaintiff, with whom his minor son was riding, was driving westerly on a certain paved highway known as and called the Tahoe-Ukiah highway. At a point about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Yuba City this highway is intersected by a public highway known as and called the "Hooper road." While the Hooper road intersects the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, it does not cross the same. The defendant, at the same period of time, was driving southerly on the Hooper road. The record further shows that the board of supervisors of Sutter county had, by ordinance, declared the Tahoe-Ukiah highway a boulevard, and had placed a stop signal on the Hooper road at or near the point where it connects with the Tahoe-Ukiah highway. In the collision which occurred between the car driven by the plaintiff and the one driven by the defendant, Gordon Leroy Havens, who at the time was of the age of about six years, was so injured that he died shortly thereafter. The traveled portion of the Tahoe-Ukiah highway was paved to a width of about 15 feet. The record shows that it was the car driven by the plaintiff which collided with the one driven by the defendant, the plaintiff's car striking the defendant's car on the left-hand side to the rear of the front seat. The testimony also shows that it was the left or driver's side of the plaintiff's car which was most injured by the impact. The force of the plaintiff's car in striking the defendant's machine forced the defendant's machine partly around and off the paved portion of the Tahoe-Ukiah highway so that its position was to the south thereof and facing approximately due east. The car driven by the plaintiff, after the collision, was standing almost horizontally across the pavement. There is testimony to the effect that defendant did not bring his car to a standstill in accordance with the stop signal on the Hooper road, but proceeded past the same and onto the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, with the intent of turning eastward thereon. The plaintiff's testimony establishes that he was driving westerly at a speed of approximately 30 miles an hour, that he was traveling at such speed for some distance before reaching the intersection of the Hooper road, and that he continued on and across a portion of the intersection, without slackening the speed of his car, until he was within 4 or 5 feet of the automobile driven by the defendant. There is also testimony to the effect that on the north side of the Tahoe-Ukiah highway there was, on the 20th day of March, 1927, an olive orchard, and that this olive orchard extended up to the Hooper road. The testimony of some of the witnesses was to the effect that the trees of the olive orchard more or less interrupted the vision of an approaching automobile on the Hooper road, the plaintiff, however, testifying that he could see between the trees, and that an automobile driving southerly on the Hooper road would not be at any time entirely out of one's vision when traveling westward on the Tahoe-Ukiah highway. The collision occurred about 6 o'clock in the evening, and at a time when one traveling westward had to protect himself from the rays of the sun. This fact is clearly established by the testimony of the different witnesses. The testimony of the plaintiff, which we will hereafter set forth, shows beyond controversy that, from the point where the collision took place on the paved portion of the Tahoe-Ukiah highway northward into the Hooper road, there is an open space of at least 50 feet where a car approaching from the north on the latter road was ordinarily plainly and clearly visible. The testimony of the plaintiff likewise establishes that for the last 100 feet before reaching the intersection of the Hooper and Tahoe-Ukiah highways the plaintiff was traveling with his eyes blinded by the sunlight so that he could not or did not see whether there was any car approaching from the Hooper road or whether there was any obstruction whatever to his progress as he was driving westward. The testimony of the plaintiff further shows that at no time while his eyes were blinded by the sunlight did he slacken the speed of his car, but proceeded at the speed of 30 miles per hour. Upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiff's own testimony established his contributory negligence. This motion was denied, and at the conclusion of the case judgment went for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals. Upon this appeal it is contended that the plaintiff's own testimony establishes his contributory negligence up to the time of the collision; that it was his car that collided with the defendant's car; and, also, that there is no testimony establishing any negligence on the part of the defendant. Without quoting any of the testimony relating to the alleged negligence of the defendant, we will simply content ourselves with saying that there is sufficient testimony in the record upon which negligence upon his part may be predicated. What we have to say deals particularly with the alleged contributory negligence of the defendant. After testifying that he was familiar with the highways referred to, and had traveled the same a number of times, and was, at the time of the collision, driving at a speed of around 30 miles an hour, the following questions and answers appear in the transcript:

"Q. And you could not see very well on account of the sun, could you? A. It was just about six o'clock and the sun was shining on the highway and in my eyes to a certain extent.

"Q. And wasn't it shining in your eyes to such an extent that it interfered with your vision of the road and the side road? A. It especially interfered with my vision on the side road at a certain point when you are right close to it—right close to an object and the sun is shining towards you there is a glare and a dark spot on the right-hand side of your windshield and that is why I watched that space there and that is how the machine got on me, it came through that dark space at the vital time."

The witness was then asked the following questions and gave the following answers:

"Q. I will ask you if, when you testified before the coroner's inquest, you were asked this question, and if you gave this answer:

'Question: How fast were you driving? Answer: I was driving thirty miles an hour; I looked at the speedometer just a few seconds before that; I could not have driven any faster and stayed on the pavement facing the sun; I never drive any faster under those conditions.'

Being asked if he gave that testimony, he stated that he did. Further on the witness testified that he gave the following testimony before the coroner's inquest:

"Q. The sun was in your eyes? A. It was just a little after six o'clock.

"Q. The sun obstructed your view? A. There was an awful glare and the radiator—I have practically a new machine and the radiator and the hood are rather high and there was a glare both from that and the highway.

"Q. The sun kind of bothered you? A. It blinded me to the extent I kind of had my hand up."

Further:

"Q. Now, Mr. Havens, the fact is that you did not see the Loebel car until you were just in the act of striking it? A. Just as they came out on to the pavement, just as they started out on the pavement."

And being asked if he gave the following testimony before the coroner's inquest, plaintiff testified that he did:

"Q. You saw nothing of this car until it loomed up in front of you? A. I saw nothing, absolutely nothing until it was right in front of me like it was placed there by magic.

"Q. How far were you from the car when you first saw it? A. I was right on top of it."

And further:

"Q. Where was your car when you first saw the Loebel car, how far back from the point X? A. Five or six feet."

Without quoting any further testimony, it is sufficient to repeat what we have stated, that the testimony of the plaintiff shows an open space from the Tahoe-Ukiah highway extending northerly on the Hooper road for at least 50 feet, and that this open space is plainly visible, under ordinary conditions, for at least 100 feet to the eastward on the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, from its intersection with the Hooper road, to one traveling westward on the paved portion of the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, and that during the time the plaintiff traversed that distance on the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, at the rate of 30 miles per hour, his vision was so obscured by the sunlight that he could not and did not see the approach of the defendant's car. It may, however, be further stated that the testimony of the plaintiff referred to what he called the "dark spot" on his windshield caused by the reflection of the sun, so that he could not see any car approaching for the distance mentioned on the Hooper road. Was the plaintiff, under the circumstances set forth, guilty of contributory negligence? In other words, was he negligently driving his own car, at the time it collided with, or ran into the defendant's automobile? At the time of the collision in question the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), as amended in 1925 (St. 1925, p. 398), was in force. Section 113 of that act (St. 1923, p. 553) reads: "Any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this state shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person." Section 121 of the same act (St. 1923, p. 557) reads: "Any person who knowingly and wilfully drives any vehicle upon a public highway, either without due caution and circumspection or in such manner as to endanger the life, limb, or property of any person, shall be guilty of reckless driving," etc. Subdivision 2 of section 113 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553) limits the speed of one driving or traversing an intersection of highways, when the driver's view is obstructed, to 15 miles an hour. It further specifies that "a driver's view shall be deemed to be obstructed when at any time during the last one hundred feet of his approach to such intersection he does not have a clear and uninterrupted view of such intersection and of the traffic upon all of the highways entering such intersection for a distance of two hundred feet from such intersection." Section 131 of the same act (St. 1925, p. 412, § 15), at the time of the collision in question, gave the right of way as follows: "When two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed." Unless controlled by ordinances relating to the stop signal, under the conditions presented in this case, the defendant had the right of way. But if he had brought his car to a standstill at the stop signal, as claimed by him, he had then the duty of determining whether he could safely proceed out and upon the Tahoe-Ukiah highway, and that would be a question for the jury, as to whether he was or was not negligent in so doing, which question, however, we do not need consider.

Like most cases which we have examined having to do with the speed limit at intersections where the driver's view is interrupted, dealing with objects such as buildings or trees, we do not see why, in principle, it does not apply to any driver who does not have, in the language of the section, a clear and uninterrupted view of such intersection from any cause whatsoever, and that, upon his clear and uninterrupted view being taken away, it is the duty of a driver to reduce his speed to 15 miles per hour. We do not see why, if a driver is blinded by the sun so that he has no clear and uninterrupted view, he should not be held to the same speed as though his view were uninterrupted by either trees or buildings. The danger is just as great in one instance as in the other, and, in addition to the other sections requiring an automobile driver to so limit his speed as not to endanger person or property, we think the speed limit permissible under such conditions, when one does not have a clear and uninterrupted view of an intersecting highway, is as provided by the section. Whatever the cause, the sections to which we have referred are applicable, and the speed must be reduced.

In the case of Dam v. Bond, 80 Cal. App. 342, 251 P. 818, 822, this court, in its opinion, referring to the case of Graybiel v. Auger, 64 Cal. App. 679, 222 P. 635, considering the rate of speed permitted by the California Vehicle Act, said: "It is not the absolute speed at which an automobile is being driven that determines whether it is or is not being propelled at a reckless rate, but the conditions and circumstances of the highway at the instant of time must be taken into consideration, and if these conditions are such that the safety of persons and property require a lesser rate of speed, it is the duty of the driver of the motor vehicle to slow down the speed of his car." A hearing of that case was denied by the Supreme Court. It was contended in the case of Dam v. Bond, supra, that the automobile driver charged with negligence, was not driving beyond the speed limit of 35 miles per hour, and what was said, as above quoted, was in relation to the speed limit of 35 miles per hour then allowed upon an unobstructed highway.

In Hammond v. Morrison, 90 N. J. Law, 15, 100 A. 154, the Supreme Court of New Jersey, in considering a case where the automobile driver was blinded by street lights, used the following language: "The defendant did not deny that the decedent came to his death in the way above stated, but attempted to excuse himself upon the ground that just before the collision the street lights which he had passed were reflected into his eyes by the windshield of his car, so that he was unable to see in front of him, and that this temporary blindness was the cause of the collision. His own story demonstrates his lack of care. No man is entitled to operate an automobile through a public street blindfolded. When his vision is temporarily destroyed in the way which the defendant indicated, it is his duty to stop his car, and so adjust his windshield as to prevent its interfering with his ability to see in front of him. The defendant, instead of doing this, took the chance of finding the way clear, and ran blindly into the trolley car behind which the decedent was standing. Having seen fit to do this, he cannot escape responsibility if his reckless conduct results in injury to a fellow being."

In the case of Budnick v. Petersen, 215 Mich. 678, 184 N. W. 493, the Supreme Court of Michigan lays down the rule that, if the vision of an automobile driver is obscured by the glaring lights of an approaching car, it is his duty to slacken his speed and have his car under such control that he might stop it immediately if necessary. See, also, Yano v. Stott, etc., Co., 184 Wis. 492, 199 N. W. 48, and Holsaple v. Superintendents, 232 Mich. 603, 206 N. W. 529.

In Pietsch v. McCarthy, 159 Wis. 251, 150 N. W. 482, 483, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin used the following language: "The plaintiff testified that he was proceeding at a rate of speed of from 10 to 13 miles an hour; that his vision was so dazzled by headlights of automobiles coming in the opposite direction that he could not see the wagon ahead of him, and that in this situation he proceeded a distance of 100 feet without slackening his speed until he bumped into the wagon, which he did not see until he struck it. It seems clear, under these facts, that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law." It is true that the Supreme Court of Michigan has carried the rule further in relation to an automobile driver being required to limit his speed so that the car can be stopped within the radius of the vision afforded by his headlights, and that, if he does not do so, it is negligence as a matter of law. But there seems to be no conflict in the decisions which we have examined, and which are referred to in the cases which we have cited, that when an automobile driver has been blinded by approaching lights, it is his duty to reduce the speed of his car.

In the case of Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 715, 41 A. L. R. 1027, the circumstances presented and considered by the court were identical with those here being considered, to wit: The fact of an automobile driver not lessening his speed when blinded by approaching lights, the only difference being, in the instant case the sun takes the place of the approaching automobile. The Supreme Court, in deciding the Hatzakorjian Case, adopted the opinion of Mr. Justice Hart of this court, and the facts considered are so applicable to this case that we set them forth. Referring to the automobile driver in question, it is there said: "He was traveling, up to the time the glare reflected from the lights of the approaching automobile * * * at the rate of 25 miles an hour; when the glare struck his eyes he was a distance of between 150 and 200 feet from where he collided with deceased; the glare so obstructed his vision that he was unable to see an object on the highway before him, although his lights were in good condition and under ordinary circumstances he was able by them to discern an object before him at a distance of from 75 to 100 yards; he did not see the deceased until after his car struck him; when the glare first struck his eyes and blinded him, with the result as indicated, he diminished the speed of his car so that thereafter and until he struck deceased, he was still traveling at a speed of between 20 and 25 miles an hour; he did not put on his brakes, nor turn off either the gas or ignition; his brakes were in perfect order and he said he could have stopped his car between the time the glare first struck his eyes and the time he struck deceased, but that he did not do so, nor make any attempt to do so; that he was not anticipating the presence of pedestrians on the highway in front of him—in fact, his mind, he himself in effect stated, was not on the matter of whether he might or might not overtake a pedestrian. It is only necessary to compare the foregoing résumé of Kennell's own testimony with the requirements of the law with respect to the duties of operators of automobiles when driving over the highways of the state to force the conclusion that, from the time the glare from the lights of the approaching car first reflected through his windshield into his eyes, he proceeded on until he struck and killed the deceased with a degree of indifference or recklessness as to the rights and safety of others who might be ahead of him on the highway closely approaching, if indeed, not amounting, under the circumstances, as revealed by his own testimony, to gross negligence." We think this statement of the law a true and correct statement as applicable to the case at bar. The plaintiff, by his own testimony, was traveling 30 miles an hour, with his eyes blinded by the sunlight so that he could not or did not see the approach of the defendant's automobile. He did not slacken his speed during the time that he was blinded, but permitted his car to move forward under conditions rendering it impossible for him to see the defendant's car until he was within four or five feet of it. Thus, his negligence, by his own words, continued right up to and including the time when his automobile crashed into the one driven by the defendant. The case to which we have referred cites a number of other cases, among them California cases, holding: "That it is the duty of a driver of an automobile to anticipate the presence of pedestrians upon the highway over which he is traveling, is thoroughly settled as a part of the law of the road." This language was used in relation to circumstances where pedestrians were using the road, but is pertinent to conditions where automobile drivers may be anticipated as using a road.

In the case of Donat v. Dillon, 192 Cal. 426, 221 P. 193, 194, where it was claimed that the defendant had the right of way, the court used the following language: "A motorist must at all times use due care to avoid colliding with another; he must be ever alert and watchful, so as not to place himself in danger, and, while he may assume that others will exercise due care, he cannot for that reason omit any of the care which the law demands of him. Assuming, therefore, that the defendant had the right of way, he was required to proceed across the intersection in a careful and prudent manner, ever watchful of the direction in which danger was most likely to be apprehended."

[2] As the testimony of the plaintiff, and the cases which we have cited, including the various sections of the California Vehicle Act, show that the plaintiff was traveling at an unlawful rate of speed, and that his unlawful rate of speed continued up until the time his car struck the defendant's car, and that the plaintiff at no time lessened the speed of his automobile as required by the law as set forth in the Hatzakorzian Case, the conclusion is unescapable that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law and complies with the requirements set forth in the case of Flores v. Fitzgerald, 204 Cal. 374, 268 P. 369. There is nothing in the California Vehicle Act which exempts an automobile driver, traveling upon a boulevard or arterial street or highway, from the restrictions, limitations, and obligations imposed by the sections to which we have referred and the cases which we have cited; and whether blinded by the rays of the sun or the glaring lights of an approaching automobile, a driver who, under such circumstances, fails to slacken his speed, and without seeing it runs into another car, cannot escape the effects of his own contributory negligence simply because the street or highway is marked "arterial."

The defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 409

LISLE v. E. B. & A. L. STONE CO.
(Civ. 6882.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 25, 1930.

1. Brokers ⇨86(4)—Evidence held to support conclusion that agent was not procuring cause of sale made by principal after termination of agency.

In action by agent, having exclusive authority but not exclusive right to sell real property, to recover broker's commission on sale made by principal to municipality after expiration of contract of agency, evidence that agent, although appearing before proper municipal officers on different occasions, had quoted varying prices without ever making definite offer, held sufficient to warrant conclusion that agent was not the procuring cause of sale; agent's conduct being such as reasonably to justify municipal officers in their refusal to negotiate further.

2. Brokers ⇨50—Agent who fails to sell property during existence of his agency is not entitled to commission.

Although agent vested with exclusive authority but not exclusive right to sell may be the first to offer property to one who purchases after termination of agency, an agent to be entitled to a commission must make a sale within time limited by contract of agency, unless delayed by negligence, fault, or fraud of principal.

3. Brokers ⇨86(1)—Contention that agent was defrauded of commission was not sustained by record revealing nothing that would necessarily rebut presumption of good faith.

In action by agent to recover commission on sale made by principal, contention that fraud of principal prevented consummation of sale during existence of agency could not be supported, where record disclosed nothing the necessary effect of which would be to overcome presumption of good faith.

4. Trial ⇨98—Court's comment on materiality of evidence was not equivalent to exclusion thereof when qualified by words "let us see what it is."

Contention that court erred in excluding testimony could not be supported where ruling was, "I don't know that it is very material but let us see what it is," since court, although commenting upon possible effect of evidence, did not thereby exclude it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Belle Lisle against the E. B. & A. L. Stone Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. V. Cowan, of Oakland, and S. C. Wright, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Donahue, Hynes & Hamlin, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The above action was for the recovery of a commission for the sale of certain real property which plaintiff alleged was effected by her as a broker. This allegation was denied, and the case was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was ordered for defendant corporation and, findings having been waived, was entered accordingly.

The plaintiff, who has appealed, contends that the judgment is not supported by the evidence and that the defendant was shown to have been guilty of bad faith in the transaction.

Plaintiff's authority was evidenced by certain letters from the defendant corporation agreeing to pay her a commission for the sale of the property which consisted of several parcels of land in the city of Oakland. The authority to sell was exclusive for certain periods limited by the letters, which also specified the prices asked for the several parcels. By the terms of her contract plaintiff's authority expired on July 5, 1927, and the evidence shows that in August, 1927, a sale of the property was made by the defendant to the city of Oakland. The city was represented in the transaction by its port commission. According to the president of that body, the plaintiff appeared before the commission at different times, but on no occasion did she offer the property at a definite price or fix a price for any of the parcels. According to this witness, the prices mentioned by her varied from time to time until finally the members of the commission, who knew the owner of the property and were familiar with it before they were approached by plaintiff, refused to negotiate further with her. The commission subsequently opened negotiations with the defendant, which led to the purchase of the property by the city.

[1] The above, with the testimony of an officer of the corporation that the plaintiff on July 4, 1927, requested a further extension of her contract, supports the implied conclusion of the trial court that her efforts to effect a sale were fruitless; and where, as here, her conduct was such as to reasonably justify the commission in refusing further negotiations with her, the further conclusion that she was not the procuring cause of the sale subsequently made was warranted by the evidence.

[2] The plaintiff was not given the exclusive right to sell the property (Snook v. Page, 29 Cal. App. 246, 155 P. 107; Cal. L. Security Co. v. Ritchie, 40 Cal. App. 246, 180 P. 625; Faith v. Meisetschlager, 45 Cal. App. 7, 187 P. 61); and the rule is well settled that to entitle an agent to a commission he must make a sale within the time limited by his contract of agency. If he fails to do so, he is not entitled to the commission even though he made efforts to sell and first caused the property to be called to the attention of the person who subsequently made the purchase, unless the delay was caused by the negligence, fault, or fraud of the owner. Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 P. 642; Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 P. 354.

[3] As stated, the plaintiff contends that her failure to consummate the sale was due to the fraudulent conduct of the defendant. Such, however, was not the conclusion of the trial court, and we find nothing in the record the necessary effect of which would be to overcome the presumption that the defendant acted fairly and in good faith. On the contrary, testimony was introduced that there was no interference with plaintiff's activities or any attempt to influence the attitude of the commission toward her.

[4] Lastly, it is urged that the court erroneously excluded certain testimony which tended to show that the sale was brought about by the plaintiff. While the trial court commented upon the possible effect of the offered testimony, it was not excluded. The ruling of the court was as follows: "I don't know that it is very material but let us see what it is." Whereupon the question designed to elicit such testimony was withdrawn by the plaintiff.

The judgment is supported by the evidence, and no error appears which in our opinion warrants the conclusion that the result was a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

103 Cal. App. 173

RICHMOND v. MOORE.

RICHMOND et ux. v. SAME.

(Civ. 7030.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 15, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 14, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 13, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(9, 35)—Evidence that motorist drove too close to street car at excessive speed supported judgment for pedestrian, injured on stepping from street car.

In action by pedestrian to recover for injuries sustained when struck by automobile on stepping from street car, evidence from which jury could have concluded that motorist's speed of 25 or 35 miles per hour was excessive and negligent, and that motorist drove too close to street car, supported judgment for pedestrian.

2. Negligence ⇨85(2)—Age and mental capacity of minor must be considered, in determining whether he was contributorily negligent.

In action by minor to recover for injuries alleged to have been negligently inflicted, age and mental capacity of minor must be considered, in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence.

3. Automobiles ⇨245(74)—Whether minor, struck by automobile on stepping from street car, was contributorily negligent, held for jury.

Where minor eight years of age was struck by automobile as he stepped from street car, whether minor was guilty of contributory negligence held for jury.

4. New trial ⇨29—Asking if jurors in automobile accident case were interested in insurance company held not ground for new trial, question being asked in good faith.

Denial of motion for new trial in action against motorist for personal injuries, on ground that jurors were asked if they were interested in certain insurance company, held not improper, where plaintiff filed counter affidavits stating that question was asked in good faith, believing that named insurance company was in fact defendant's insurer, and that jurors were questioned generally as to their interest in any insurance company.

5. New trial ⚡31—Parties, not objecting to examination of jurors at outset of trial, could not raise question of improper examination as grounds for new trial.

Parties, not objecting to examination of jurors at outset of trial, could not raise question of improper examination as ground for new trial, in event of unfavorable verdict.

6. Appeal and error ⚡1032(2)—Party complaining of exclusion of evidence must show, not only that evidence was material, but also that exclusion was harmful.

Party objecting to exclusion of evidence must show, not only that evidence was material, but also that exclusion thereof was harmful.

7. Evidence ⚡471(17)—Motorist's answers that there was no reason for her to sound horn prior to accident held properly stricken as conclusions.

In action against motorist for personal injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck on stepping from street car, where motorist, in answering questions on direct examination, stated that she did not sound horn prior to accident, and insisted on adding, "there was no reason for me to do so," and "the car was not close enough to me for that, when I first saw him," quoted parts of answers held properly stricken out, on ground that they stated conclusions of witness.

8. Appeal and error ⚡1033(5)—Trial ⚡296(8)—Giving improper instruction requiring greater degree of proof than required by law held not ground for reversal, where proper instructions were given, and instruction complained of operated on respondents more directly than on appellant.

Giving improper instruction in automobile accident case, that evidence is satisfactory which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in unprejudiced mind, held not cause for reversal, where proper instructions on subject of burden of proof and preponderance of evidence were given, and instruction complained of operated on respondents in respect to their proving appellant's negligence more directly than on appellant in respect to sustaining her burden of proving defense of contributory negligence.

9. Automobiles ⚡246(60)—Instructing that burden of proving contributory negligence was on defendant, without stating in same instruction that contributory negligence might appear by plaintiffs' evidence, held proper.

In pedestrian's action against motorist for personal injuries, instructing that burden of proof to establish contributory negligence is on motorist, without stating in same instruction that contributory negligence might be made to appear by pedestrian's evidence, as well as motorist's evidence held proper.

10. Automobiles ⚡246(6)—Instructing on proof of negligence by violation of statute or ordinance, without stating in same instruction that such negligence must proximately cause injury, held not error.

In action by pedestrian against motorist for personal injuries sustained in alighting from street car, it was not error to instruct on proof of negligence by proof of violation of statute or ordinance, without stating in same instruction that negligence so proven is not actionable negligence, unless it proximately causes injury.

11. Automobiles ⚡246(6)—Instruction on proof of negligence of motorist by violation of statute or ordinance, and including in same instruction statement concerning excusable violation thereof, held not error.

In pedestrian's action against motorist for personal injuries sustained while alighting from street car, instructing on proof of negligence by proof of violation of statute or ordinance, and including in same instruction statement concerning excusable, unintentional, or blameless violation of ordinance or statute, held not error.

12. Automobiles ⚡246(6)—Refusing instruction that pedestrian, struck on stepping from street car, could not recover from motorist if street car company, dismissed from case, was solely liable, held not error.

In action against motorist for personal injuries sustained by pedestrian on stepping from street car, refusing instruction that pedestrian could not recover, if accident was caused solely by negligence of street car company, held not error, the company's motion for nonsuit having been granted.

13. Automobiles ⚡246(35)—Refusing instruction which would require same care of minor struck by motorist as that required of adult held proper.

In action by minor pedestrian against motorist for personal injuries sustained when pedestrian was struck on stepping from street car, refusing instruction which would require of minor care required of adult held proper.

14. Damages ⚡132(7)—$5,000 damages held not excessive for minor eight years old, whose injuries included leg fracture and fractures of both arms.

$5,000 damages for minor eight years of age, struck by automobile, held not excessive, where minor's injuries included transverse fracture of leg, transverse fractures of both arms, cut over left eye, requiring him to remain in hospital two months, with plaster casts on both arms and leg.

15. Damages ⚡133—$2,500 damages to parents of minor, which included $1,125 expenses, held not excessive, where minor sustained fractures of leg and of both arms.

$2,500 damages to parents of minor, which included $1,125 actual expenses, held not excessive, where minor eight years of age suffered fractures of leg and of both arms.

16. Trial $\hookrightarrow$ 252(20)—Absence of evidence of minor's earnings did not make instruction allowing parents to recover sum which would compensate them for loss of minor's earnings improper.

In parents' action against motorist for injuries negligently inflicted on minor eight years of age, absence of evidence of actual earnings of minor did not make instruction allowing parents to recover such sum as would compensate them for loss of earnings or services of minor, which they would reasonably suffer during his minority, improper.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Two separate actions by William A. Richmond, Jr., by Dora C. Richmond, his guardian ad litem, and by William A. Richmond and wife, against Mrs. William G. Moore. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Redman, Alexander & Bacon, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse H. Steinhart and John J. Goldberg, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. The above-named minor respondent and his parents obtained separate verdicts and judgments for damages for personal injuries received by the minor when struck by the automobile of appellant. The points raised on appeal relate to the sufficiency of the proof, the examination of the jurors, rulings on the evidence, and instructions to the jury.

The minor was eight years of age at the time of the accident. He was struck by the appellant's automobile just after he had stepped off of the No. 32 street car at its southerly and westerly terminus on the west side of Stanyan street, just north of Haight street, San Francisco. The street car had approached Haight street from the north. The automobile came towards the street car from the south. The minor left the street car by the front or southerly platform of the street car, and stepped off from the exit of the east side thereof, that being the only exit provided for him. According to the evidence relied upon by respondents, the minor was struck immediately upon stepping off the street car and within 2 feet thereof. The appellant claims that the minor respondent suddenly rushed out from the street car in a diagonal direction, without looking for an automobile, and had proceeded 6 or 8 feet from the street car before being struck.

[1] While the evidence is conflicting, our examination of the record discloses sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of appellant to support the verdict in favor of respondents. The evidence disclosed negligence on the part of the appellant in several particulars. The jury could have concluded from the evidence that appellant's speed of 25 or 35 miles per hour was excessive and negligent under the circumstances and conditions disclosed by the record that she should have given a warning signal of her approach; that she drove too close to the street car, seeing either the conductor or minor respondent making ready to alight in the direction of her course.

[2, 3] It is argued that this court should hold the minor respondent negligent himself as a matter of law. The form of the argument deserves mention. First, the evidence is explained and interpreted in a way so favorably to the appellant as to show that the conduct of the minor in an adult person would amount to contributory negligence; then authorities are cited showing that under some circumstances minors as young as eight years have not only been held capable of contributory negligence, but also have been held barred by contributory negligence as a matter of law. Other citations by appellant, however, show that her counsel realize that the question of contributory negligence of a minor cannot be thus divided into two parts.

The question must be answered by a consideration of all the evidence in the case, including the evidence of the age and mental capacity of the minor. These last-mentioned facts are to be considered in direct conjunction with each other fact in the case. Neither the trial court nor this court should hold as a matter of law that the minor respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The effect of his age upon the question of whether he had measured up to the standard of care and conduct which the law exacts from him was a question of fact for the jury. The same thing is true for an additional reason. The facts relied upon by appellant to show that the minor respondent was negligent are disputed facts. The evidence by no means compelled the jury to find that the minor jumped off a moving street car in the middle of the block and, without looking for automobiles, ran in a diagonal course towards the sidewalk and directly into the path of the automobile. Evidence to the contrary justified the jury in finding that the accident did not occur in the manner claimed by the appellant.

[4, 5] Upon motion for new trial appellant's counsel filed an affidavit setting out that in the examination of the jurors they were asked if they were interested as stockholders or otherwise in the Standard Accident Insurance Company. The affidavit further set forth that the named insurance company had not in fact insured the appellant. The counteraffidavit of respondents' counsel stated that the question was asked in good faith, believing that the named insurance company was in fact the insurance carrier of appellant, that appellant was insured at any rate (upon information and belief) in some company which conducted her defense, that the jurors were also questioned generally as to their interest in any liability insurance company, and that counsel for appellant made no objection of any kind in respect to such examination of jurors by respondents. Under these affidavits the trial court was justified in concluding that the incident was merely one of misnomer, and that it was neither intended to result, nor did it result, in a verdict arrived at in any part by an improper consideration of the fact that an insurance carrier would be responsible for such damages as might be awarded respondents.

No question is made by the parties of the circumstances that this point was raised in the trial court only by affidavit on motion for a new trial. We should nevertheless say that appellant, after hearing the examination of the jurors at the very outset of the trial, should not be permitted to sit silently through the trial without making any objection, and then raise the point only in the event of an unfavorable verdict. Parties may examine jurors to ascertain their possible financial interest in the outcome of the case, but an appeal to prejudice or to other improper considerations has never been permitted. Girard v. Irvine (Cal. App.) 275 P. 840, and cases therein cited. The denial of a new trial was a decision by the trial court that the verdict was not induced by improper considerations, and this decision cannot, under the circumstances shown by the affidavits, be said by this court to be unjustified. Girard v. Irvine, supra.

[6] Appellant testified upon direct examination that, after the boy had been removed from beneath her automobile and placed within it, she asked the conductor something (the record does not show what she asked him), but, upon objection being made, she was not permitted to testify what the conductor had stated. The statement is claimed by appellant to have been a spontaneous and unpremeditated one, and therefore admissible as part of the res gestæ, according to the rule in Heckle v. Southern Pacific Co., 123 Cal. 441, 56 P. 56. The meager record on this point fails to show that the statement was any part of the res gestæ. On the contrary, it rather shows that it was not. Neither does the record show whether the alleged statement of the conductor was material or whether its exclusion was harmful in any way. Appellant should have shown each of these things in order to sustain the burden resting upon an appellant. Marshall v. Hancock, 80 Cal. 82, 22 P. 61; Snowball v. Snowball, 164 Cal. 476, 129 P. 784; Coleman v. Farwell, (Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 335; Dougherty v. Ellingson (Cal. App.) 275 P. 456.

[7] In answering certain questions upon direct examination, appellant answered that she had not sounded her horn prior to the accident, and insisted upon adding to her answer, "there was no reason for me to [do so]," and "the car was not close enough to me for that, when I first saw him [the conductor]." These parts of her answers were properly stricken out, upon the ground that they stated conclusions of the witness, rather than facts.

[8] Appellant claims that the giving of instruction No. 7 was reversible error under the authority of People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 653, 154 P. 468, and Estate of Ross, 179 Cal. 629, 178 P. 510. The instruction reads: "Evidence is satisfactory which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind. Such evidence alone will justify a verdict. It is not necessary that your minds be free from all doubt." The instruction should not have been given. The question remains, however, whether the giving of it requires a reversal of the case.

In this connection two things should be noticed. First, the court also gave complete and proper instructions upon the subject of burden of proof and preponderance of evidence, stating that in civil cases a preponderance of evidence is all that is required and also stating that if the minor respondent was guilty of any negligence which contributed proximately to his injuries then none of the plaintiffs could recover. It also instructed that the other respondents must have been free of any contributory negligence in order to recover. Second, it should be noticed that the instruction complained of, in requiring a greater degree of proof to justify a verdict than is required by law, operated upon the respondents in respect to sustaining their burden of proving appellant's negligence more directly than upon the appellant in respect to sustaining her burden of proving the defense of contributory negligence. Upon these two grounds, the instruction complained of has been held not to justify a reversal of a cause. Gregoriev v. Northwestern Pacific Railroad Co. (Cal. App.) 273 P. 76, and cases therein cited; Mella v. Hooper, 200 Cal. 628, 254 P. 256; see, also, East Bay Municipal Utility District v. Kieffer (Cal. App.) 278 P. 476.

[9] It was proper for the court to instruct that the burden of proof to establish contributory negligence of plaintiff was upon appellant, without stating in the same instruction that such contributory negligence might be made to appear by evidence offered by the plaintiffs, as well as by the evidence offered by the defendant. That such contributory negligence may be shown by evidence offered by the plaintiffs is not an exception to the rule that the burden of proof is upon the defendant. It is only one of the ways in which the burden of proof may be sustained. There was no more reason for attaching this statement to an instruction on the defendant's burden of proof than to an instruction upon the plaintiffs' burden of proof. Furthermore, the instructions clearly state in another part that appellant's defense could be inferred from evidence offered by respondents.

[10, 11] It was not error to instruct upon the proof of negligence by the proof of violation of a statute or ordinance, without stating in the same instruction that negligence so proven is not actionable negligence, unless it is a proximate cause of the injury. In the instant case the court also instructed upon the two subjects in a single instruction immediately preceding the questioned one. Neither did the court err in not including in the same instruction a statement concerning the excusable, unintentional, or blameless violation of an ordinance or statute. Such a violation, of course, is not in fact or in law a true violation. The case relied upon by appellant in this connection, Berkovitz v. American River Gravel Co., 191 Cal. 195, 215 P. 675, relates to the failure of a motorist to maintain a tail-light burning on his automobile—something which might occur without the knowledge or negligence of the motorist. The case holds that an instruction on this point should have been given because requested and applicable. The appellant does not claim that the evidence in this case particularly made this matter a proper subject of instruction and the appellant did not ask the court to instruct upon the subject.

[12] The court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury that the respondent could not recover if the accident was caused solely by the negligence of the street car company. The street car company was out of the case, its motion for nonsuit having been granted. The only helpful part of the requested instruction was the word "solely." It was a poor way of stating the condition of no actionable negligence upon the part of the appellant, for it called the attention of the jury to a false quantity in the case.

[13] The court properly refused to instruct the jury upon the duty of an adult person when crossing a street. The requested instruction, as worded, would require of the minor respondent the same care as that required of an adult.

[14-16] The award of damages was not excessive. The minor's injuries included a transverse fracture of the right leg near the knee, transverse fractures of both arms, and bad cut over left eye, which became infected. The minor remained in a hospital, with plaster casts on both arms and on the broken leg, extending up to the ribs. He remained in the hospital two months, and in bed at home for a month longer. There was also testimony to the effect that he suffered nervous shock, contusions, and bruises, impairment of his health and strength, and that at the time of the trial he was still nervous and carried a plainly visible scar two inches long over his left eye. There is no merit in the contention that the award of $5,000 was excessive, in view of the injuries received by the minor respondent.

The award of $2,500 to the parents of the minor included $1,125 actual expense. The court's instructions limited the amount which the jury might award the parents to two things, the expense incurred by reason of the accident and such sum as would compensate them for any loss of earnings or service of the minor which they would reasonably suffer during his minority. The absence of evidence of actual earnings of the minor did not make this instruction erroneous. Girard v. Irvine (Cal. App.) 275 P. 840, and cases therein cited. In the instant case the parent respondents were not suing for the loss of actual earnings and services of their minor eight year old son as special damages. Such a point was foreign to the trial and it is not conceivable that the jury included in the award to the respondents anything other than would be legitimately included in the parents' damage for the loss of earning capacity and capacity for services of the minor for which there is not precise measure of damages. Girard v. Irvine, supra; Sally v. W. T. Garratt & Co., 11 Cal. App. 138, 104 P. 325.

This disposes of all the points raised by the appellant. The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

103 Cal. App. 275

KRESS v. TOOKER-JORDAN CORPORATION. (Civ. 6271.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 20, 1930.

1. Licenses $\S$ 39—Testimony of assistant secretary of corporation that certain permits to sell stock were the only ones she had found did not alone authorize introduction of such permits as only permits issued (Corporate Securities Act, $\S$ 12).

In suit against corporation by purchaser of corporation's stock at pledgee's sale, to have stock transferred to his name on books of corporation, in which defense was that the issuance of the stock was not authorized, and that the certificates were therefore void, under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679) $\S$ 12, testimony of assistant secretary that she had nothing to do with application to sell stock, and that permits shown to her were the only ones she had found, did not authorize introduction in evidence of such permits as the only ones issued to corporation, where there was no proof that no other permits were issued, and commissioner of corporations and corporation's secretary were not called; introduction of inferior evidence giving rise to presumption that higher evidence would be adverse, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 6.

2. Licenses Ⓒ39—In suit against corporation to require transfer of stock on books, corporation had burden to prove stock was issued without authority (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

In suit by purchaser of capital stock of corporation at pledgee's sale, corporation had burden to prove its affirmative defense that stock had been issued to its employees without authority from commissioner of corporations, and was therefore void, under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679) § 12; employees having pledged stock to secure loan for corporation.

3. Licenses Ⓒ39—Finding that issuance of stock was authorized held justified in suit by purchaser to require transfer thereof on corporation's books (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

In suit by purchaser at pledgee's sale of stock pledged by employees of corporation, to require transfer thereof on corporation's books, in which defense was that issuance of stock to employees had not been authorized by commissioner of corporations, and that stock was therefore void, under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679) § 12, finding that the sale and issuance of the stock was in fact authorized by permit from commissioner of corporations held justified under evidence, in view of presumption that law has been obeyed, and that private transactions have been fair and regular, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 33, 19.

4. Licenses Ⓒ39—Corporation could not take advantage of failure of officers to keep proper records, to prove issuance of stock was not authorized (Corporate Securities Act, § 12).

In suit by purchaser at pledgee's sale of stock issued by corporation to employees and pledged by them, to require transfer of stock on corporation's books, in which defense was that issuance to employees was unauthorized, and that stock was therefore void, under Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679) § 12, corporation could not avail itself of failure of its own officers or employees to make and to keep proper records of its transactions, as showing that the issuance of the stock had not been authorized by the commissioner of corporations.

5. Corporations Ⓒ432(3, 4)—Certificates bearing signatures of proper officers, with corporate seal affixed, are presumably issued by authority of corporation.

Fact that corporate seal was attached to certificates of stock of corporation and that certificates bore signatures of proper officers raised presumption, sufficient until overcome by other evidence, that officers did not exceed their authority, and that certificates, which plaintiff sought to have transferred to his name on corporation's books, were issued by authority of corporation.

6. Appeal and error Ⓒ1071(6)—Conclusion that party is bona fide purchaser is one of law, so that trial court's omission to find on this point is immaterial.

Conclusion that party is or is not a bona fide purchaser or holder is one of law, and not of fact, and therefore omission of trial court to expressly find on this point is immaterial, since such a finding, if made as one of fact, would have to be disregarded.

7. Corporations Ⓒ162, 163—Indebtedness due corporation from original stockholders held not to create lien on stock, where there was no agreement to that effect, and purchaser of certificates not disclosing such agreement as to lien or unpaid indebtedness took free from lien (Civ. Code, § 324).

Fact that part of indebtedness due corporation on stock remained unpaid did not create lien on stock, but merely personal obligation as between the original stockholders and the corporation, where there was no agreement between them and corporation creating lien on stock, and language of certificate did not indicate either the existence of such an agreement or that the stock was not fully paid for, and therefore purchaser at pledgee's sale of stock took free from indebtedness to corporation, and it was immaterial whether the purchaser had knowledge of the indebtedness; shares of stock being transferable, under Civ. Code, § 324.

8. Corporations Ⓒ163—Original stockholder may transfer stock notwithstanding indebtedness remaining due corporation (Civ. Code, § 324).

In absence of agreement between original stockholder and corporation creating lien for unpaid purchase price of stock, fact that stockholder is indebted to corporation will not prevent him from transferring title to stock to third party, under Civ. Code, § 324, permitting such transfer.

9. Payment Ⓒ16(1)—Agreement that note is to discharge original obligation operates as payment, and such agreement may be inferred.

While promissory note is generally merely evidence of indebtedness and does not discharge debt, agreement between parties that note is to discharge original obligation and substitute a new one therefor operates to satisfy original debt, and such agreement may be inferred from declarations and conduct of parties.

10. Corporations Ⓒ133—In suit to compel transfer of stock on corporation's books, evidence warranted finding that corporation accepted notes of original stockholders in payment.

In suit to compel corporation to transfer stock on books to purchaser thereof at pledgee's sale, evidence justified finding that notes of original stockholders were accepted by corporation in payment of indebtedness due on stock, in view of requirement of Civ. Code, § 323, that certificate issued prior to full payment must show what amount has been paid thereon.

11. Corporations  131—That purchaser of stock at pledgee's sale paid only small amount did not prevent transfer on corporation's books, where corporation had no lien and there was no evidence of market value.

That purchaser of stock at pledgee's sale paid only small amount therefor did not defeat his right to have stock transferred on corporation's books, where corporation had no lien on stock, and there was no evidence as to the actual market value of stock at time of sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Suit by Samuel Kress against the Tooker-Jordan Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Merriam, Rinehart & Merriam, of Pasadena, for appellants.

G. R. Dexter and Howard B. Henshey, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment decreeing the plaintiff to be the owner of 300 shares of the capital stock of the appellant corporation and ordering the latter to issue the same to him free of all claims of the corporation or any other person. The facts as found by the court may be thus summarized:

Prior to August 2, 1922, one Boadway, "who was then an officer and actively in charge of the management of defendant corporation" (then known as "Boadway Bros."), solicited a loan for and on behalf of the corporation from the Central Commercial Savings Bank (hereinafter referred to as "the bank"), and was informed by the officers thereof that the bank was unable to make a single loan of the size required. It was thereupon arranged between Boadway, acting for the corporation, and the bank, that a loan of $8,500 would be made to each of three of the employees of the corporation namely, Feeny, Ormsby, and Smith, conditioned on each of them executing his note for $8,500, to be secured by a collateral deposit with the bank of 100 shares of the common stock of the corporation, and that as additional security Boadway was to indorse each of the three notes. August 2, 1922, the corporation issued to each of these employees 100 shares of its common stock, of a par value of $100 per share; the bank loaned $8,500 to each of them, and each of them in turn executed his note to the bank in the amount of his loan, pledging the certificates evidencing his 100 shares of stock as security therefor, indorsing the same in blank, and Boadway indorsed the notes. Feeny, Ormsby, and Smith immediately deposited with the bank the amount of their respective loans, together with additional small amounts, and each drew his check for the full amount of his loan in favor of the corporation, which thus received a total of $25,500.

This transaction was handled solely by Boadway, on behalf of the corporation; no one but himself having any part in the procuring of the loans or any conversation with the officers of the bank with regard thereto. He stated to the bank officers that Feeny, Ormsby, and Smith were each paying to the corporation the $1,500 difference between the amount loaned by the bank and the par value of the stock, and the bank had no knowledge that the stock was not being paid for in full. In fact, it believed that such was the case. None of the certificates referred to showed upon its face, either that it had not been paid for in full, or what amount, if any, had been paid thereon or therefor. Thereafter the three promissory notes, together with the stock so deposited as collateral security, were in the regular course of business assigned and transferred to North American Bond & Mortgage Company, which, upon the default of Feeny, Ormsby, and Smith as to both principal and interest payments on their respective notes, caused the stock to be sold at a pledgee's sale held January 9, 1924, of which notice was given in the manner provided by law, and at which the plaintiff respondent bid it in. Two days later plaintiff forwarded the certificates to the defendant corporation, together with sufficient money to cover the cost of the United States internal revenue stamps required on the transfer, with the request that the stock be transferred to him on the books and new certificates issued in his name, which request being refused was followed by a formal demand, and thereafter this action was filed.

Upon certain issues tendered by the answer, the court further found that the stock was regularly and duly issued by the corporation under its former name of "Boadway Bros.," and that it had received a good and valuable consideration for the issuance thereof; also that it was not true that no permit had been applied for by the corporation, or issued by the commissioner of corporations, authorizing the issuance or sale of the 300 shares of common stock involved in the action, or that the same was void. It likewise found that the corporation did not at any time advise either the bank or its assignee that the stock had not been validly issued.

[1] One of the points upon which appellant relies in seeking a reversal of the judgment is that the stock involved in this case and the certificates evidencing it were void, because its issuance was unauthorized by any permit from the commissioner of corporations. In support of this contention appellant relies on the provision of section 12 of the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 679) to the effect that "every security issued by any company, without a permit of the commissioner authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void," and upon the claim that "the record discloses that the only permit authorizing the sale of capital stock of the defendant then in force was one bearing the date of July 10, 1922, which authorized the sale of 2,000 shares of preferred stock at par and for cash, * * * and did not authorize the sale of any common stock. The evidence to which appellant thus refers consists of certified copies of corporate permits issued to the corporation, the first bearing date February 26, 1919, and the last being dated February 5, 1923. This evidence was received under the following circumstances:

A Mrs. Millard, called as a witness by the defendant corporation, testified that she was its assistant secretary and had been such for about two years (the trial was in November, 1926), prior to which she had been employed as a bookkeeper for the corporation for nine or ten years, and that its records had been in her custody for about five years. This testimony she qualified by the statement that between February of 1923 and the date when she became assistant secretary, which was some time in 1924, a lady who preceded her in that position had charge of the records, as did also Mr. Ormsby, the secretary of the corporation, and by the further statement, "Well, my custody of the records has been that they have been in the vault for which I was responsible during all that time," and that her familiarity with the records appertained to "all the records pertaining to the bookkeeping end of it." She then testified that she was not familiar with the archives with respect to applications for permits, "except as I looked through them, but I had nothing to do with the applications," or with the custody of the records with respect thereto; that she had searched through them and that the permits which were shown to her were the only ones she had found. The court permitted the introduction into evidence of the permits, over the objection that the evidence was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, not the best evidence, and without proper foundation, with the remark, "I will let it in for what it is worth."

The objection should have been sustained. There was no proof that these permits were the only ones actually issued by the commissioner of corporations. The testimony of Mrs. Millard that they were the only ones she had found falls far short of that. The commissioner of corporations could, of course, have settled the question beyond controversy by producing the records of his office showing all permits issued to the corporation, but the defendant did not see fit to avail itself of this testimony, nor did it even call as its witness its own secretary, the proper custodian of its records, which omissions were in no way explained. It would seem that the presumption, which arises from the production of inferior evidence, "that higher evidence would be adverse" (section 1963, subd. 6, Code Civ. Proc.), might well be here applied.

[2, 3] But apart from the failure of proof to support the issue of illegality of the stock, and if it be assumed for the sake of argument only that the copies of permits found by the witness constituted all the permits issued, they show that the issuance and sale of common stock was in fact authorized. The permit of February 26, 1919, authorized the corporation "to sell and issue to L. A. Boadway 390 shares of its capital stock, and to C. E. Blackwell 50 shares of its capital stock, for the considerations heretofore received by said company, and to sell and issue to L. A. Boadway and O. E. Boadway 2,200 shares of its capital stock in consideration of the transfer first to be made by them of that certain dry goods business situated in the city of San Diego mentioned in the application." The character of the stock as common or preferred is not specified on the face of the permit, but the indorsement on the reverse side thereof is "2,640 shares common." The permit of December 30, 1919, authorized the sale and issuance of 500 shares of stock, whether common, preferred, or both, not specified, with a similar indorsement. This last-mentioned permit, unlike the other, required the sale to be for cash and at par.

The burden was, of course, upon the defendant to prove its affirmative defense that this stock was issued to its three employees without authority from the commissioner of corporations. If it was not a part of the stock covered by either of these permits, but was an additional and therefore unauthorized and void issuance, that fact could easily have been established by the corporation's own books and records, which the evidence showed to be in its possession. In the absence of contradictory evidence, it must be presumed that the law has been obeyed (section 1963, subd. 33, Code Civ. Proc.), and that private transactions have been fair and regular (subdivision 19). The finding "that it is not true that at no time prior to the sale and issuance of said 300 shares of common stock had any permit been applied for or obtained by defendant corporation from the commissioner of corporations of the state of California, authorizing the sale or issuance of said * * * stock; that it is not true that the issuance of said * * * stock was or is wholly void"—was, under the state of the record, fully warranted.

[4, 5] Appellant also attacks the finding that the issuance of the stock was "duly and regularly authorized" as being in conflict with the "uncontradicted testimony" of Boadway that its issuance "was not shown by any of the corporation's records other than the stock book itself." On this point appellant cites no authority, and it may be dismissed with the statement that the corporation cannot avail itself of the failure of its own officers or employees to make and to keep proper records of its transactions, and with the observation that the fact that the corporate seal was affixed to the certificates and that they bore the signatures of its proper officers raises a presumption, sufficient unless and until overcome by other evidence, that the officers did not exceed their authority and that the certificates were issued by authority of the corporation. Commercial Security Co. v. Modesto Drug Co., 43 Cal. App. 162, 178, 184 P. 964; Anderson v. Wickliffe, 178 Cal. 120, 172 P. 381; Chandler v. Hart, 161 Cal. 405, 119 P. 516, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094.

The remaining points attempted to be made by appellant have to do with the question of the good faith of the plaintiff; it being the contention of appellant corporation that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment ordering the corporation to transfer the stock on its books and to issue new certificates to plaintiff unless he could establish that he was a bona fide purchaser for value, and that the evidence did not show and the court did not in fact find that he was such bona fide purchaser.

[6] Disposing first of the point as to the finding of the court, it has been repeatedly held that "the conclusion that a party is or is not a bona fide * * * purchaser or holder is one of law and not of fact." Smith v. Armstrong, 85 Cal. App. 624, 260 P. 347, 349, from which the quotation is taken, and numerous cases cited therein. Consequently the omission of the trial court to expressly find on this point is immaterial, since such a finding were it made as one of fact would have to be disregarded. Smith v. Armstrong, supra.

[7, 8] A bona fide purchaser has been defined as one who can prove the possession of his grantor, the purchase of the property, and the payment of the purchase money in good faith and without notice, actual or constructive. Eversdon v. Mayhew, 65 Cal. 163, 3 P. 641; James v. James, 80 Cal. App. 185, 251 P. 666. Appellant seeks to remove respondent from this category, not upon the theory that the North American Bond & Mortgage Company had no right to sell the pledged stock, but upon the theory that the purchaser had notice, or at least means of knowledge, that the persons to whom the stock had been sold, and in whose names the certificates stood, had not completed their payments on its purchase price, but still owed the corporation the unpaid portion thereof, for which they had respectively given it their notes for $1,500. Much of appellant's brief is devoted to a discussion of these matters, but in the view we take of the situation it is not material whether or not the plaintiff, who was concededly acting merely as agent for Mr. Beesemeyer, secretary of the North American Bond & Mortgage Company and an officer of the bank, knew or did not know of the indebtedness of Feeny, Ormsby, and Smith to the corporation, since this indebtedness created and could create no lien on the stock, but merely a personal obligation as between these three individuals and the corporation.

A case in point, although not cited in any of the briefs herein, is Anglo-Californian Bank v. Grangers' Bank, 63 Cal. 359. In that action a certificate evidencing ownership of certain stock of the defendant bank was assigned and delivered to the plaintiff bank by one Fowler, in whose name it stood, as security for the payment of a debt which he owed to such plaintiff bank. At the time of this transfer Fowler was also indebted in a large amount to the defendant bank, and the latter refused to transfer the stock on its books and to issue a certificate in the name of the plaintiff bank, claiming a lien on the stock, under one of its by-laws, for the payment of this indebtedness. While the plaintiff bank had no actual knowledge of this by-law, the court noted that it might have ascertained its existence, had inquiry been made, which the bank neglected to do. It was held, however, that this was not a by-law which the bank had a right to enforce, because it was in conflict with section 324 of the Civil Code, providing that shares of stock "are personal property, and may be transferred by indorsement by signature of the proprietor, his * * * attorney, or legal representative, and the delivery of the certificate." We quote from the opinion:

"The shares for which Fowler held a certificate were personal property, i. e., his personal property, and he could transfer it by his indorsement and the delivery of the certificate to the plaintiff or any one else. Fowler being the holder of the certificate was in the possession of the shares for which it was issued, and those shares were his personal property, which he was authorized by law to transfer by an indorsement and delivery of the certificate to the plaintiff. The defendant was not in possession of the shares for which Fowler held the certificate, and such shares being his personal property, the defendant had no general lien upon it for any balance which might be due it from Fowler in the course of business. Civ. Code, § 3054."

While, as held in the case just reviewed, the law creates no lien upon stock in favor of a corporation as against a stockholder who is indebted to it, and the corporation cannot make a by-law which will operate in and of itself to create such lien, the corporation and its stockholder may by mutual agreement do so, and if this is done it will be good as between them, and an assignee of the stockholder will not be protected by the rule as to bona fide purchasers. This is the holding in Jennings v. Bank of California, 79 Cal. 323, 21 P. 852; 5 L. R. A. 233, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145, in which case the stockholder had received a certificate which stated on its face that the stock evidenced thereby was transferable "only upon the books of the bank, personally or by attorney, upon the surrender of this certificate, after compliance with the conditions printed on its back." The condition thus referred to was as follows: "No transfer of the stock described in this certificate will be made upon the books of the bank until after the payment of all indebtedness due the bank by the person in whose name the stock stands on the books of the bank, except with the written consent of the president or cashier." (Italics appear in the opinion.) The court held that under the circumstances of the case an equitable lien on the stock was created by contract.

We quote from the opinion: "Then was there a contract for an equitable lien? We think that such a contract must be implied from the conduct of the parties. We do not say that the mere acceptance by the stockholder of the certificate without objection would constitute a contract, in the absence of subsequent dealings with reference thereto. It is not necessary to express an opinion upon such a case; but we think that the acceptance, without objection, of the certificate containing such a condition, and the subsequent borrowing of money from the bank without anything to exclude the idea that the condition was to be binding, amounts to an assent to it, so far as the particular loan was concerned, and that a contract is to be implied that the stock was to stand upon the books as security for the loan." The stockholder, one Bowman, being indebted to the bank, it was further held that his assignee had no right to enforce a demand for the transfer of the stock to himself on the books of the bank, the court saying:

"The assignee of Bowman is not protected by the rule as to bona fide purchasers for value. Without considering the question as to the negotiability of certificates of stock, it is sufficient to say, in the first place, that, as against the bank, the plaintiff was not the assignee of the legal title. The Code provides that the transfer by indorsement and delivery of the certificate 'is not valid, except between the parties, until the same is entered upon the books,' etc. Civil Code, § 324. As against the bank, therefore, the assignee took a mere equity, which must yield to the superior equity of the defendant. Vansands v. Middlesex Bank, 26 Conn. 153, 154; Taylor v. Weston, 77 Cal. 534, 20 P. 62; Stebbins v. Phenix Ins. Co., 3 Paige [N. Y.] 361; Union Bank v. Laird, 2 Wheat. 393 [4 L. Ed. 269]; McCready v. Rumsey, 6 Duer [13 N. Y. Super. Ct.] 582. In the next place, the condition in the certificate was sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry. The case of Anglo-Californian Bank v. Grangers' Bank, 63 Cal. 362, is not in conflict with this. There no condition was embodied in the certificate, and the by-law relied upon was not referred to therein or printed thereon."

In the case before us there is no evidence of any agreement between Feeny, Ormsby and Smith, or either of them, and the corporation defendant, that the latter should have a lien on the stock issued to them, nor did the certificates contain any language which would indicate either the existence of such agreement or that the stock was not issued as fully paid. In the absence of any lien the fact that the stockholders were indebted to the corporation could not operate to prevent them from transferring title to their stock to a third party—unless for the purpose of defrauding a creditor—any more than it could operate to prevent them from transferring any other property which they might own, although, of course, the corporation might, in an action to recover on its claim, have caused an attachment to be levied on the stock just as it might have done with respect to any other property of the debtor stockholders. In Lankershim Ranch Land Co. v. Herberger, 82 Cal. 600, 23 P. 134, 135, the defendant stockholder being in arrears to the corporation in payments upon the purchase price of his stock, the latter brought suit against him and caused an attachment to be levied upon his property. The trial court granted his motion to dissolve this attachment, made upon the ground "that the payment of the obligation sued on was secured at the making by a retention of the evidences of title to such personal property, and the certificates of stock for which said obligation was created by plaintiff as security for said debt." Reversing the order dissolving the attachment the court said:

"In granting the motion the court below evidently proceeded upon one of two theories: First, that as the corporation had sold the stock to defendant, but had not issued to him a paid-up certificate of stock, it still retained the stock, and had a special seller's lien thereon for the unpaid installments of his subscription, under section 331 of the Civil Code; or, second, that as it had not issued a certificate for full-paid stock, whether it thereby retained possession of the stock or not, it had a general lien thereon for the unpaid installments. For if a lien existed in either case an attachment would not lie. Code Civil Proc. § 537. A corporation for profit may give credit to the subscribers to its capital stock for the stock, and may, by proper provision in its by-laws, issue certificates to such subscribers prior to full payment for the stock. Civil Code, § 323; Mitchell v. Beckman, 64 Cal. 117 [28 P. 110]. The defendant in this case, therefore, upon paying the installments due, and receiving the transferable certificate showing his subscription to and payment of all installments due on 25 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff, thereby became the owner of such shares of the capital stock evidenced by such certificate, subject to the unpaid installments mentioned in the certificate, and such certificate gave him as complete possession of the shares evidenced by it as though it were a certificate in the ordinary form issued for paid-up stock. Hence, as the plaintiff, at the time the installments sued for became due, did not have possession of the defendant's stock, it could not have a seller's lien thereon.

"Did the corporation have a general lien upon the stock of defendant not dependent upon possession? We think not. Under our statutes, the only lien given to corporations for profit upon their subscribed capital stock, and which does not depend upon the possession of the certificate of stock, is to secure the payment of assessments levied for the purpose of paying expenses, conducting business, and paying debts. Civil Code, § 331. It has been doubted, even, whether a lien upon stock can be created by a by-law, in view of section 324 of the Civil Code, which provides that certificates of stock may be transferred by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, but that such transfer is not valid, except between the parties thereto, until the same is properly entered upon the books of the corporation. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Grangers' Bank, 63 Cal. 359. But, however that may be, a lien not dependent upon possession of the certificate of stock may, by a contract between a corporation and its stockholders, be created in favor of the corporation, to secure the indebtedness of the stockholders to the corporation. Jennings v. Bank of California, 79 Cal. 323, 21 P. 852 [5 L. R. A. 233, 12 Am. St. Rep. 145].

"It is claimed by the respondent that a contract was made between himself and the corporation whereby the latter was to retain possession of his stock and have a lien thereon for the unpaid installments of the subscription; but the record fails to show such a contract. Our conclusion is that, as no lien existed upon defendant's stock in favor of the plaintiff, to secure the installment sued for, the court erred in granting the order dissolving the attachment, and it should therefore be reversed."

The refusal of the corporation to transfer the stock into the name of the plaintiff on its books was absolute, and the question whether or not the plaintiff would have been liable for the unpaid balance of the purchase price if the transfer had been made is not involved here. Hence the cases of O'Dea v. Hollywood Cemetery Association, 154 Cal. 53, 97 P. 1; Visalia & Tulare R. R. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 P. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136; Perkins v. Cowles, 157 Cal. 625, 108 P. 711, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 137 Am. St. Rep. 158, and Geary Street, etc., R. R. Co. v. Bradbury Estate Co., 179 Cal. 46, 175 P. 457, upon which appellant relies are not in point. The point decided in those cases is that one who purchases stock in a corporation which has not been fully paid for by the original purchaser, and who has the same transferred to himself on the books of the corporation, is substituted for the original subscriber as a stockholder and thereafter holds the stock upon the same conditions and subject to the same obligations as the original subscriber prior to the transfer, and is therefore liable to a call or assessment for the unpaid balance due on the stock.

[9, 10] We do not intend by what we have said above to indicate that in our opinion it has been established that the stock in question was not fully paid for. On this point the record would seem to establish the contrary. The general rule is that a promissory note is but the evidence of indebtedness and does not discharge the debt for which it was given unless by agreement of the parties (Western Fuel Co. v. Lewald Co., 190 Cal. 25, 210 P. 419; Ellison v. Henion, 183 Cal. 171, 190 P. 793, 11 A. L. R. 444); but if the agreement is that the note is to operate to discharge the original obligation and substitute a new one therefor—in other words, that it is taken in payment of the debt—then the original debt is fully satisfied by acceptance of the note, and manifestly such agreement may be inferred from the declarations and actions of the parties. (Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Wallace, 58 Cal. App. 625, 209 P. 78). This is the effect of our recent decision in Taylor v. King, 282 P. 1017.

In the instant case Mr. Boadway, who handled the entire transaction on behalf of the corporation, testified as follows:

"Q. Do you know of your own knowledge what, if anything, Mr. Ormsby paid for the stock in addition to the $8,500? A. What did they pay?

"Q. Yes. A. $1,500 additional.

"Q. How was that payment evidenced? A. In the form of a note made payable to the corporation.

"Q. $1,500 then in the form of a note was given by each, Smith, Ormsby and Feeny? A. By each individual; yes."

The books of the corporation showed that each of the three purchasers was charged with certificates evidencing 100 shares of common stock, of a total par value of $10,000, and credited with a check for $8,500 and a note for $1,500. Furthermore, Boadway testified that he advised the officers of the bank that each of the three employees was paying the corporation the full par value of the stock. This would seem sufficiently to indicate that the corporation accepted the notes as payment of the $1,500 difference between the par value of the stock and the $8,500 borrowed by each of its employees from the bank and paid over to the corporation by check.

This view is further borne out by a consideration of section 323 of the Civil Code, providing that "all corporations for profit must issue certificates for stock when fully paid up, signed by the president and secretary, and may provide, in their by-laws, for issuing certificates prior to full payment, under such restrictions and for such purposes as their by-laws may provide, but any certificate issued prior to full payment must show on its face what amount has been paid thereon. * * *" The fact that the certificates in question did not show on their faces that but part payment had been made, but were issued as though evidencing stock fully paid for, lends additional weight to the view that the corporation regarded the notes as given and accepted in extinguishment of the balance of the obligation.

[11] Appellant makes the further point that the sale by the bank's assignee was not in good faith because the corporation was not notified and because the stock was bid in and sold for but $300. This point is untenable, since, as we have held, the corporation had no lien or interest of ownership in the stock, and for the further reason that there is nothing to show that the price paid at the pledgee's sale was inadequate, there being no evidence in the record as to what, if anything, was the actual market value of the stock at the time of the sale.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 443

FICKBOHM v. KNAUST. (Civ. 3973.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Vendor and purchaser Ⓒ99—Purchaser, acting in good faith and tendering deferred payments and interest shortly after default, held not grossly negligent and entitled to relief from forfeiture (Civ. Code, § 3275).

Purchaser under contract for sale of realty, having sought information regarding total amount required to fully pay vendor's equity in land, and being only in default in payment of two installments at most, and having tendered full compensation for all deferred payments and interest, held not guilty of gross negligence, entitling him to be relieved of forfeiture, under Civ. Code, § 3275.

2. Banks and banking Ⓒ90—Facts showing arrangement for purchaser to make payments at vendor's bank held to constitute bank vendor's agent making bank's knowledge of default notice to vendor (Civ. Code, § 2332).

Where vendor under contract for sale of realty designated bank with which she customarily did business as place for making payments, and installments were collected by bank for her benefit and credited to her account, and bank cus-tomarily gave notice of payments made, bank held agent of vendor in accepting deferred payments, and under Civ. Code, § 2332, knowledge on part of bank of default in payment of installments was therefore notice to vendor.

3. Vendor and purchaser Ⓒ101—Vendor having accepted deferred payments with implied notice of default could reinstate prompt payment provision only by giving purchaser notice.

Where vendor accepted deferred payments with implied notice of purchaser's default, vendor could reinstate provision of contract of sale requiring prompt payment only by giving purchaser notice to that effect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Louis F. Fickbohm against Mary A. Knaust, in which defendant filed cross-complaint. From a judgment for defendant on her cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Frank J. Lavan, of Culver City, for appellant.

Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon a cross-complaint decreeing a forfeiture and quieting title to real property for default in the payment of installments due upon the purchase price thereof. The defendant owned only an equity in a certain Los Angeles lot, which she was purchasing on contract from another person. February 15, 1924, the parties to this action executed a written contract by the terms of which the defendant agreed to sell and the plaintiff agreed to buy the lot for $3,800 to be paid for as follows: $1,200 cash, which was paid upon the execution of the contract. The balance was to be paid $35 "on the 15th day of March, 1924, and the balance in monthly installments of equal amounts at the rate of * * * $420.00 per year," together with seven per cent. interest per annum on deferred payments. Time was made the essence of the contract.

At the request of the plaintiff the defendant designated the branch of the Bank of Italy of Los Angeles, where she was accustomed to do her banking, and authorized it to collect for her and credit to her account, the installments to be paid on this contract. Pursuant to this arrangement the following payments were made to this bank, accepted without objection and credited to the defendant's account, to wit: $50.17 on March 8, 1924; $49.97 on April 23, 1924; and $49.77 on June 3, 1924. Before any default in payments occurred the plaintiff wrote to the defendant to ascertain what her exact interest in this lot was, claiming that his object in doing so was to pay up her entire equity, and that her failure to answer this inquiry led him to believe she was not insisting upon prompt payments of the installments. This letter was sent May 1, 1924, and read in part as follows: " * * * Will you kindly tell me what is your equity in it [the lot], and what are the payments required on your contract [with the title owner]. In the near future I may be able to pay out your equity. I would appreciate hearing from you soon."

On July 18, 1924, the defendant sent the plaintiff a written notice of rescission of the contract on the ground of delayed payment of monthly installments. The following day the plaintiff tendered to the bank and to the defendant the entire amount due upon the contract including the installments for June and July, together with interest, which was refused.

This action in assumpsit was then commenced to recover the money which had been paid on the purchase price of the land. The contract and the foregoing facts were alleged. The allegations of the complaint were controverted in the answer, except as to the execution of the contract and the payments alleged, which were admitted. A cross-complaint was also filed setting out the contract, the default in the payment of the June and July installments and the cancellation of the contract, together with the usual allegations of a complaint in a suit to quiet title. This cross-complaint was properly answered. The case was tried on the issues presented by plaintiff's theory that the prompt payment of installments was waived by defendant's acceptance of payments which were deferred beyond the time specified by the contract, and that he should be relieved from a forfeiture of the money paid for the reason that he had tendered full compensation to the defendant and was not guilty of gross negligence in the payment of the installments. These issues were all determined against the plaintiff and the contract was declared to have been canceled and title was quieted in the defendant.

The facts of this case should appeal strongly to the conscience of a chancellor. Justice would seem to demand that the plaintiff should be relieved from what, at most, appears to have been a slight and technical default, which was harmless to the defendant, beyond the brief delay in the payment of not more than two installments. There is little use in reiterating the maxim that "equity abhors forfeitures," unless the principle is enforced when the facts warrant its application.

[1] There is a controversy over the interpretation of the contract as to whether the installments were due on the 15th of each month. The plaintiff contends that they were payable at any time during the month. The contract is open to this construction. It provides that the first $35 installment was due March 15, 1924, and that "the balance [was due] in monthly installments at the rate of $420 per year." The first payment was made on March 8th. If the foregoing language of the contract is construed to authorize the payment of subsequent installments at any time during the months which followed, the plaintiff was in default of only a single installment for a period of 18 days when notice of the rescission of the contract was served on him. Full compensation for all deferred payments and interest was tendered the following day. No further damage by virtue of the delay is claimed by the defendant. In view of the unanswered letter, which was sent to the defendant, seeking information as to the total amount required to fully pay for her equity in the land, the legitimate question as to just when the installments were due, and the slight delay in two payments at most, the plaintiff should be credited with good faith in the effort to fulfill his contract. This conduct does not amount to gross negligence. Under such circumstances, even if the defendant did not waive prompt payments by her acceptance of deferred installments, the plaintiff should be relieved from a forfeiture under the provisions of section 3275 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"Whenever, by the terms of an obligation, a party thereto incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom, upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, wilful, or fraudulent breach of duty."

Regardless of the application of the foregoing equitable provision of the statute, a fair reading of the record shows that the defendant waived strict compliance with the contract with respect to the time of payments by accepting deferred installments.

[2] The respondent claims the bank did not collect the installments as her agent, and that she had no personal notice of delayed payments. We are of the opinion that the record clearly shows the bank to have been her agent. This was the institution with which she had been accustomed to bank. She designated this very bank as the place for making payments. The installments were collected by the bank for her benefit and credited to her account. While the defendant denied receiving notice of the time when these payments were actually made, an officer of the bank testified it was their custom to promptly notify customers when payments were made and credited to their accounts. This is no more than the usual businesslike custom of all banks. In spite of the fact that the defendant was exacting enough to compel the defendant to pay the bank's commissions for collecting the installments, we are of the opinion that the record conclusively shows that the bank acted as the agent of the defendant in these transactions. Knowledge on the part of the bank of the default in the payment of the installments was therefore notice of that fact to the defendant. Section 2332 of the Civil Code provides:

"As against a principal, both principal and agent are deemed to have notice of whatever either has notice of, and ought, in good faith and the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, to communicate to the other."

[3] Having accepted deferred payments with implied notice of such default, the defendant could reinstate the provision of the contract requiring prompt payment, only by giving the plaintiff notice to that effect. 6 Cal. Jur. 357, § 214; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 297, 110 P. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; American-Hawaiian Eng., etc., Co. v. Butler, 165 Cal. 497, 519, 133 P. 280, 289, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44. In the authority last cited the court says:

"The time of performance even when it is made of the essence, if it is once waived, sets the matter at large, and another date for performance can only be fixed by a definite notice, or by conduct equivalent thereto."

No such notice was ever given to the plaintiff in this case. Title should have been quieted in the defendant in this action, subject to the equities in favor of the plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 490

MOREL v. SIMONIAN. (Civ. 3981.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Findings based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed by courts of appeal.

Courts of appeal will not disturb findings of fact based upon conflicting evidence.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨281(4)—In contractor's action to foreclose mechanic's lien, evidence held to support finding that contractor had not built house in workmanlike manner and according to specifications.

In action by contractor to foreclose mechanic's lien, evidence held sufficient to support finding that contractor had not built house in workmanlike manner and according to plans and specifications, and that defendant was damaged in amount of excess of balance remaining due contractor.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇨281(4)—Contractor's contention, in action to foreclose mechanic's lien, that court's assessment of damages was arbitrary, held without merit, where evidence supported finding that contract had not been substantially performed.

In contractor's action to foreclose mechanic's lien, contention that court's finding as to damages was arbitrary held without merit, where evidence was sufficient to support finding that contract had not been substantially performed.

4. Trial ⇨29(1)—Objection to court's criticizing contractor for failing to perform contract and then seeking to recover for services which he failed to perform held without merit.

In contractor's action to foreclose mechanic's lien, where court criticized contractor for failure to perform contract, and then seeking to recover for services that he failed to render, objection to court's criticism held without merit, since there is no rule of law which prevents judge from expressing his opinion of merits of litigation.

5. New trial ⇨6—Granting or denying motion for new trial is within trial court's discretion.

Granting or denying of motion for new trial rests largely in sound discretion of trial court.

6. New trial ⇨157—Granting or refusing privilege to argue motion for new trial is within trial court's discretion.

Granting or refusing party moving for new trial privilege to argue such motion is within sound discretion of trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by E. Morel to foreclose mechanic's lien against Lionie Berthe Bal Simonian, also known as Mrs. L. B. Simonian. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Joujon-Roche and Martin E. Geibel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $865.70 alleged to be the balance due on a building contract and to foreclose a mechanic's lien on the property upon which the building was erected. The action was dismissed as to all of the defendants other than Lionie Berthe Bal Simonian. The court entered judgment in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

It appears from the court's findings of fact that plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed that, for a consideration of $2,400, he would build, in accordance with plans and specifications adopted by the parties, a dwelling house and garage upon the premises described in the complaint and upon which he seeks to foreclose his lien. The court further found that plaintiff did not substantially perform the contract, and that the building has never been completed in accordance with the plans and specifications and has never been accepted by the defendant. It is further found that the defendant has paid on said contract the sum of $1,800, and, because of the plaintiff's failure to construct the building according to the plans and specifications and in a workmanlike manner, defendant was damaged in an amount in excess of any balance remaining due him under the contract.

[1] The appellant contends that such findings are not supported by the evidence. Bearing in mind the well-settled rule that courts of appeal will not disturb findings of fact based upon a conflict in the evidence (Clopton v. Clopton, 162 Cal. 27, 121 P. 720), we will briefly epitomize some of the evidence that sustains the findings of fact.

[2] The respondent testified that the buildings were not completed on the 18th day of September, 1925, or at all; that many things were not completed; that the roof was not braced; that the workmanship and plumbing were not what they should have been; that the house could have been occupied, but did not conform to the specifications; that the specifications called for larch siding on the house instead of the No. 2 hemlock which was used by plaintiff; that the cement should have been 3 inches thick, and, as a matter of fact, was much less than that in some places, and that the house did not comply with the specifications in many other respects and was not satisfactory to her.

Appellant admitted on cross-examination that the cement was not 3 inches thick in some places; also, that the cement was broken by an automobile before he left the job; that the specifications called for the underpinning of the house to be 4 inches by 4 inches, but that some of them were 2 inches by 4 inches, and that, under the specifications the girders were to have been 4 inches by 6 inches, but, as a matter of fact, that they were 4 inches by 4 inches; and that under the specifications the floor joists should have been 16 inches apart, but were placed 20 inches apart, except that in one place they were 24 inches apart. Appellant also admitted that he used No. 2 hemlock instead of larch for the siding; that the foundation had some holes in it; that the concrete strips to the garage were so far apart that an ordinary automobile could not be driven on them; and that some of the inside woodwork was hammer marked, which, he said, was made by a poor mechanic whom he had in his employ for a few days, but that he took the woodwork out that was not good enough and replaced it. He also, admitted that the size of the lavatory was not the size provided for by the specifications; that he put no electric switch in the hallway, as called for by the specifications. Plaintiff further admitted that he put in no air vent, as required by city ordinance, and that the siding of the house bulged.

The pleadings also admitted that red paint was used on the roof instead of asphalt. It is true that many of the foregoing admissions by the plaintiff were coupled with a statement that the changes and omissions were at the request of the defendant, but the defendant denied that she made such requests.

George E. Miller, a contractor of eight years' experience, testified that the underpinning of the house was 2 inches by 4 inches, and to install 4 inches by 4 inches would cost $16; that to replace the girders, which were 4 inches by 4 inches, with 4 inches by 6 inches, would cost $20; that the floor joists were placed 20 inches on centers, and to tear them out and replace them would cost not less than $100; and that to tear off the siding and put on larch would cost, including materials, about $225. This witness also testified that the cement drives were already cracking and crumbling and were very poorly finished on top; that the cause of this was the material used was too thin and contained an insufficient quantity of cement and that it would cost $75 to tear out all of the cement in the driveway and replace it with a proper mixture. As to the porch, he testified that it was made of cement and was uneven; that the steps were not the same on top as they were on the bottom; that the material was all right, but the workmanship was very poor; and that to correct these defects would cost $25. Mr. Miller further testified that the moldings over the doors and windows were every one hammer marked, and that it would cost about $15 to tear them out and replace them; that to take out the lavatory and replace, as called for by the specifications, would cost $25, less a refund for the old lavatory of about $15; that it would cost about $8 to install a switch box in the hall and about $6 to install a heater vent, in accordance with the city ordinance; and, that it would cost about $5 to put a cabinet on the back porch. Mr. Miller also testified that the foundation under the front of the house was beginning to crumble, and that there was not enough cement in it to hold solid. The witness further testified that the house was not built in a workmanlike manner.

Mrs. J. C. Harris testified that the woodwork had not been properly stained and had not been sanded, and that the polish was put on very unevenly, and that the varnish showed it and, that the plaster in the house was very uneven. The witness examined the outside of the house and said she could put her fingers under the boards, and that there were a number of places where there were no nails in the studding at all.

M. Weiler, another witness, testified that he was present when appellant commenced the construction of the building; that he saw the building many times; that it was not level, being lower on one side than the other; that he had measured the cement, and that it was only 2 inches thick, and in some places not quite that much; and that he also noticed that the studding had buckled and that the roof was sagging.

We are of the opinion that, under this evidence, the court's findings are sustained. It is true that there is evidence in the record contradicting some of the above evidence, but this court is not concerned with such conflict, there being substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court.

[3] Appellant further contends that under the findings of the court there is due on the contract price the sum of $593.50, and that the damages found by the court to be due the defendant amount to the sum of $354, leaving a balance due the plaintiff of $239.50. It is claimed that the court arbitrarily assessed for other damages found by it to exist, this last-named amount of $239.50; but that such other defects are insignificant, and that there is no evidence to sustain their assessment at said amount.

In reply to this claim, it is sufficient to say that the trial court found, upon sufficient evidence, that there has not been a substantial performance of the contract by the plaintiff. Under the rule in Perry v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 311, 38 P. 740, it is held that the owner has a right to such a building as he contracted for, and to authorize a court or jury to find that there has been a substantial performance of a contract, it must be found that he has such a structure. To the same effect is Jones & Laughlin, etc., Co. v. Abner Doble Co., 162 Cal. 497, 123 P. 290. The objection is without merit.

[4] The appellant also claims that his motion for a new trial should have been granted because of the prejudice of the trial judge. This claim is based upon a statement made by the judge, upon the submission of the case. In summing up the evidence and awarding the defendant a judgment the court criticized the plaintiff for his failure to perform the contract and then seeking to recover for services that he had failed to render. The court's statement was quite lengthy, but no useful purpose would be served by setting it out in this opinion. We know of no rule of law that prevents a judge from expressing his opinion of the merits of litigation. The point is also without merit.

[5] Many affidavits were submitted in support of the motion. We have examined each one of them; nearly all set forth what is termed newly discovered evidence, but a large part of said evidence is merely cumulative of the evidence received at the first trial. The granting or denying of a motion for a new trial rests very largely in the sound discretion of the trial court. We discover no abuse of discretion in the order of the court denying the motion.

[6] Complaint is also made that the trial court refused to give appellant the privilege of arguing the motion for a new trial. This is also a matter of discretion resting with the trial court.

No sufficient reason has been shown why the judgment of the trial court should be disturbed, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 412

SNODGRASS v. SNODGRASS. (Civ. 6117.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 25, 1930.

1. Costs 213—Moving papers under motion for permission to amend cost bill held not to show mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Under defendant's motion for permission to amend purported cost bill, if considered as motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, moving papers held not to show mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, where they showed that defendant intended to serve and file document which on its face would have appeared to be verified claim, but which in fact had never been verified.

2. Costs ⇐213—Moving papers under motion for permission to amend cost bill held insufficient to justify application to trial court to exercise powers to make record speak truth.

Moving papers under defendant's motion for permission to amend purported cost bill held insufficient to justify application to trial court to exercise its inherent powers to make record speak truth, where record as made spoke all of truth, but real application was request to add something, not to amend.

3. Costs ⇐213—Allowing purported amendment to cost bill and denying motion to strike unverified memorandum of cost held error.

Trial court held to have erred in allowing purported amendment to cost bill and in denying motion to strike unverified memorandum of costs, where defendant, within 30 days immediately following filing of remittitur did not file any other document purporting to be memorandum of cost.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by David E. Snodgrass against Harold G. Snodgrass. From orders denying a motion to strike out cost bill and granting leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Joseph J. Geary, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The remittitur in the case of Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, 81 Cal. App. 360, 253 P. 755, went down on the 21st day of April, 1927. On the 22d day of April, 1927, defendant served and filed a purported cost bill. It had attached to it a verification certificate in which defendant's attorney purported to make the affidavit of verification. The purported affidavit was signed by the attorney, but the jurat was not filled in and was not signed by any officer having the power to administer an oath or by any one else. On the 26th day of April, 1927, the plaintiff served a notice of motion to strike the document from the files. That motion came on for hearing on the 17th day of June, 1927. At the time of the hearing the defendant made a counter motion for permission to amend, and supported his counter motion with the affidavit of his secretary. In her affidavit the secretary alleged that, after the attorney signed the verification, she gave the document to the attorney's clerk, with instructions for him to take it to a notary public who was familiar with the signature of the attorney for the purpose of having the notary public affix his notarial seal thereto; and that the clerk did not follow her directions, but, instead of doing so, he served a copy of the incomplete document on the plaintiff's attorney and filed the original. The trial court granted the defendant's application to amend, and denied the order to strike. The plaintiff appealed from both orders.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Jan. 27, 1930.

[1] Considered as a motion under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the moving papers of the defendant did not show mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. They showed that the defendant had intended to serve and file a document which on its face would have appeared to be a verified claim, but which in truth and in fact had never been verified, because the affiant had never appeared before any officer to take the oath to the verification.

[2] The papers were insufficient to justify an application to the trial court to exercise its inherent powers to make the record speak the truth. This is so because the record as made spoke all of the truth, but the real application of the defendant was a request to add something, not to amend. 15 C. J. 976, § 395.

[3] Within the 30 days immediately following the filing of the remittitur, the defendant did not file, either with or without the permission of the court, any other document purporting to be a memorandum of cost. From what has been said it follows that the trial court erred in allowing the purported amendment, and it erred in denying the motion to strike the unverified memorandum of costs.

The orders appealed from are reversed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨37(4)—Representations that property sold had great value as oil lands, and that purchasers would make large royalties, coupled with other statements, were not expressions of opinion.

Representations that property sold had great value as oil lands, and that purchasers would make large oil royalties from lots, coupled with agent's representations that United States geologists had made survey of land, and had located large pool of oil under tract, and that when lease was made and pump in operation purchasers would receive one-sixth royalty of oil produced from tract, were not mere expressions of opinion.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨37(1)—Agent's statements vendors had standing offer to lease lots that streets would be put in and graded, and that drilling operations would be started immediately, held part of general scheme to defraud purchasers.

Agent's statements to purchasers that vendors had standing offer to lease lots for $25 for each lot, that streets would be put in and graded, and that drilling operations would be started immediately, taken in connection with other evidence, held to be part of general scheme to defraud purchasers.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence held to show vendors' representation they had standing offer to lease lots sold was false.

In action to rescind contract for purchase of real property, evidence held to show that vendors' representation they had standing offer to lease each lot sold for $25 was false, where it was shown that purchasers asked on many occasions to have agent go ahead and make lease, but were each time put off, and nearly four years elapsed before trial, and yet no leases were ever entered into.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨44—Evidence of fraud on part of vendors need not be direct to warrant rescission.

Evidence of fraud on part of vendors need not be direct in order to warrant rescission of land contract.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⇨45—Whether vendors' representations constituted fraud and induced purchasers to enter into contract was question for court sitting as jury.

Whether vendors' representations that property had great value as oil land, and that purchasers would make large oil royalties from lots, and that vendors had standing offer to lease each lot for $25 constituted fraud, and were inducing cause of purchasers' entering into agreement was question for court sitting as jury.

6. Principal and agent 23(1)—Evidence held to establish agency between person making fraudulent representations inducing plaintiffs to purchase property and his codefendants.

Evidence showing that one codefendant owned property, and that another codefendant had property listed, and that F. was selling through latter's office, that contract was made in name of first codefendant and in their office, and that it received all payments, adjusted a difference between plaintiffs and themselves over a payment, and paid the other codefendant and his partners their commission on deal, held to sufficiently establish agency between F., who made fraudulent representations inducing purchasers to enter into contract, and his codefendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by George Dalice Gater and wife against C. H. Skinner and others, to rescind a contract for the purchase of real property on the ground of fraud. From a judgment for plaintiff, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles H. Sherrick, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of real property on the ground of fraud in its procurement and to recover the sum of $1,250 paid thereon. Judgment as prayed for was rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant John P. Mills Organization, Inc., a corporation hereinafter called the Mills Company, and the defendants Skinner and Holladay have appealed. The defendant Watts was served with process, but failed to appear therein, and the remaining defendant, Norman A. Foster, was not served with process, nor did he appear in the action. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the defendants made a motion for a nonsuit, which was denied. Defendants failed to offer any evidence, and the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the judgment complained of was thereupon entered.

The evidence discloses that the Mills Company was at all the times mentioned in the complaint the owner of lots 44 and 45 of block 3 of the Wardlow-Manor tract in the county of Los Angeles, and was engaged in the business of selling real estate. It had a main and branch office in the city of Long Beach. The branch office was conducted by the defendants Skinner, Watts & Holladay, but both offices carried in large letters signs announcing that they were offices of the Mills Company. The defendant Foster was a licensed real estate agent working with the office of Skinner, Watts & Holladay, and at times working with the office of the Mills Company. According to the testimony of the defendant Skinner, his firm was the selling agent of the Mills Company.

On June 23, 1923, defendant Foster called upon the plaintiffs and discussed with them the advantages that would accrue to them by investing in the lots above described. Plaintiff George D. Gater testified that Foster told them the tract had just been opened up and was about sold out. He had purchased three of the lots himself, and would have taken more, had he been able to do so. The tract had proved so good with oil that the United States geologists had made a survey and analyzed it, and said they had located a pool of oil directly under the tract. Foster also told them it was going to be opened up as an oil field right away. He further stated that 90 per cent. of the lots had been sold to Mills salesmen. He then told about the oil on Signal Hill, and the people there who owned lots whose income was running some of them, $800 or $900 a month. He said the geologists claimed there was a better lake of oil under the land he was trying to sell them than there was under Signal Hill, that there was a strata or line running through there from Signal Hill to the Torrence Field, and there was a main lake right under this tract of land, and it would be far better than Signal Hill. The witness continued substantially as follows:

He wanted to know when I could go over there and see the land. I went over with him the next morning, and he took us pretty well over toward Wilmington, and around where some big oil tanks were being constructed, and he said the production was going to be so great that they had to be built in order to take care of the oil. I told him the road was so rough I would not buy in there. He replied that they were going to build up the streets, and this would be one of the main thoroughfares through the tract. He said I would treble my money on them in three months. He said the lots were only valuable for oil. They had a tent on one corner of the property, and I asked what it was for. He said it was used for serving meals when they had people out there to listen to their speeches and to buy lots. He said he was working for the Mills Company. He told us he had a standing offer to lease all these lots for $25 per month for each lot, and also had a reliable party figuring on renting them for $50 per month for each lot, and if we bought they did not want us to lease, wanted it to go through their hands, because the more lots they got together we could get bigger monthly payments. He said, after the oil came in, we would get one-sixth of the royalty of the body of oil that was under the tract; it wouldn't be no time until there would be a regular chain of derricks there that would beat anything on Signal Hill.

The witness further testified that on different occasions he asked Foster to lease the lots for him, and told him to take $25 per month per lot, but that he never did it; that he went to the main office of the Mills Company about May, 1924, and talked with a Mr. Miner who seemed to be the main man in charge of the office, and demanded his money back, and offered to give them a quitclaim deed to the lots. The witness further stated that he would not have bought the lots, but for the statement that they had located oil under that tract, and that it was a big lake. The contract of purchase of the property was signed by the Mills Company as the seller. All payments thereon made by plaintiffs were made to the Mills Company by check and the checks were returned to plaintiffs endorsed by said company. On May 1, 1924, some correspondence took place over a credit claimed by the plaintiffs as a payment of these lots. In reply thereto the Mills Company wrote a letter in which they stated: "You will note that we have given you credit of $50 on your final payment of your Wardlow-Manor property."

The testimony of Mrs. Gater, the other plaintiff, is in large measure corroborative of the testimony of her husband. In addition thereto she testified that the day following the trip to the land about which her husband told, Foster visited her home and said to her: "Did you hear the good news?" I said: "What's that?" He said: "That big well came in last night. I went back over there at 12 o'clock, and it gushed up over everything, and I got it all over my shoes and on my clothes—a big gusher came in." He said: "That opens up the field now, and there is only three lots left, and you have got to take them this morning, if you want any, because they will be gone by night." So I told him Mr. Gater didn't want them; and I said, "We haven't got much money anyway." He said, "We'll arrange that." Foster took Mrs. Gater up to the John Mills offices where they saw Holladay.

The witness continued: "He [Holladay] said: 'Well, this is one of the best [buys]. * * * That big gusher came in. It opens up that field over there now. That big gusher looked to be a mile away; he didn't say how far it was; but I could see it when we were there. Mr. Foster pointed out the derrick to us. I wrote him a check for $25. * * * The check was given, I think, about the 29th of June, 1923. On that same day, Mr. Foster took me down to the main office [of the Mills Company] after I got through with Mr. Holladay, to a lady there and swore me. They told me I had purchased some lots, and they got me to sign a paper, but I don't know what it was, now. I think Mr. Foster called it a sales slip."

The witness testified she signed the long contract about three months later. She said:

"I believed every word of what Mr. Foster said about the leasing of the lots for $25 each, and the United States Geological Survey, and the pool of oil, and that they were going to put a road in front of the lots. I certainly relied upon it. I wouldn't have paid anything for the lots, if it hadn't been for that. Neither Mr. Foster nor the Mills Organization have ever leased these lots for $25 each per month, nor for $50 each per month, to my knowledge. I did demand that they do lease them. To my knowledge, there has been no drilling on that tract of land by the Mills Organization nor any one else. The money we paid for these lots was demanded back from the Mills Organization. We did offer to give a quitclaim deed to the Mills Organization for them. In December, 1923, we knew the derrick [near the land] had been torn down, and then we asked him to give us our money back."

She further testified in effect as follows: "Foster pretended to know the oil business. When I went to the office and talked with Mr. Holladay, there was a big sign there. It read, 'John P. Mills Organization.' I did not see the sign, 'Skinner, Watts & Holladay.' Mr. Holladay said it was the Mills Organization. My husband was opposed to this purchase until the big gusher came in. It was on a line with Signal Hill, and nearer this land than Signal Hill. I only heard read the front page of the agreement. Mr. Foster read it. He said he had read the important parts of it. This was at night, and he was in a hurry."

Wells A. Rathbun, an officer of the Mills Company, testified he did not know whether Foster was with the Mills Company in August, 1923. He stated that their method of operating was such, "even though he were working in our office, he might have a desk there, yet he wouldn't be working for us." Defendant C. H. Skinner testified that Foster was a selling agent for Skinner, Watts & Holladay, and that the latter firm were the selling agents for the Mills Company, and that neither Mills nor his organization ever gave them a right to make any statements claimed by the plaintiffs to have been made by Foster.

[1] Appellants claim that the first two alleged false representations are mere expressions of opinion; the first one being that "said property had great value as oil land," and the other "that respondents would make large oil royalties from said lots." Standing alone, such statements might bear such a construction, but when coupled with the evidence of Foster to the effect that the United States geologists had made a survey of the land and had located a large pool of oil under the tract, and that when the lease was made and the pump in operation the plaintiffs would receive a one-sixth royalty of the oil produced from the tract they go further than mere expressions of opinion, and were undoubtedly intended to and did deceive the plaintiffs.

[2] It is the next claim of error that the statements made to the plaintiffs that defendants had a standing offer to lease the lots for $25 per month for each lot, that streets would be put in and graded, and that drilling operations would be started immediately were mere promises with reference to the future, and failure to perform them does not constitute actionable fraud. Taken in connection with the other evidence, it is clear that such statements were merely a part of the general scheme to defraud the plaintiffs.

[3] Appellants next claim that there is not a scintilla of testimony in this case that the statements that defendants had a standing offer to lease each lot for $25 or that United States geologists had examined said property and there was a large pool of oil under said tract and under respondents' lots, or that 90 per cent. of the lots had been sold to the Mills employees, were or are false. Eliminating from consideration the last claim concerning the purchase of the lots by the Mills employees, we will consider the statement that defendants had a standing offer to lease the lots for $25 each per month. Plaintiffs on many occasions asked Foster to go ahead and make the lease, and were each time put off. Once he asked that any consideration of the offer of $50 per month be abandoned, and accept the standing offer of $25 per month. Notwithstanding this request, months elapsed; in fact the trial of this action was had nearly four years after such promises were made, and yet no leases were ever entered into.

It is obvious that only one inference can be drawn from this situation, and that is that the promise was a material statement, made without any intention to perform, and under the evidence of both the plaintiffs was one of the moving causes that led them to enter into the agreement. It is also claimed that there is no evidence that the United States Geological Survey did not examine the property and make the report that there was a pool of oil under the land. This contention might be sound, were it not that Foster stated that by virtue of a certain well on other property having brought in oil had thereby proved the assertion of the said geologists that there was a pool of oil under the lots. Further, Foster himself stated that there was a pool of oil under this land.

In Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 77, 141 P. 926, 927, it is said: "True, of course, it is that expressions of opinion honestly made are not actionable. Equity has no concern with them. But equally true it is that a false statement of an opinion * * * expressed to one entitled to rely upon it may form the basis of an action for deceit, like any other misrepresentation of fact." Crandall v. Parks, 152

Cal. 772, 93 P. 1018; Herdan v. Hanson, 182 Cal. 538, 189 P. 440, 444.

[4] Counsel's contention that fraud must be proved, and that there is no presumption of fraud, and plaintiffs have failed to prove fraud, states a well-recognized rule of law; but this does not mean that the evidence must be direct. In Herdan v. Hanson, supra, it is held: "While fraud must be clearly proved, direct evidence is not necessary for this purpose, but the 'indirect evidence and the inference to be drawn from the proved facts must be so convincing as to satisfy trial court or trial jury that fraud was designed and accomplished.'" Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 158 P. 753.

[5] From the foregoing we are satisfied that such representations, when made with intent to deceive and defraud, whether considered as expressions of opinion or as a statement of fact, constitute fraud and were the inducing cause of the plaintiffs entering into the agreement in the instant case. Furthermore, the question was one for the court, and has been decided adversely to appellants. Davis v. Monte, 81 Cal. App. 164, 253 P. 352. It is also claimed by appellants that there is no evidence that any of the statements were false. The evidence shows that in 1923 the defendant Foster told plaintiffs that he would lease their lots for them at $25 per lot; that they were going to drill for oil at once; that the plaintiffs were to receive a one-sixth royalty from the sale of all oil pumped from the tract; that the land had actually been brought in as oil land, and that there was a pool of oil under the land. The trial of this action took place in March, 1927, nearly four years after the statements were made, and yet the record discloses that none of these promises had been performed at that time. It is very apparent that the promises were made without any intent to perform, particularly in view of the fact that the only derrick near the property had been removed.

[6] It is further claimed that no agency has been established between Foster and his codefendants. The facts are that the Mills Company owned the property; according to defendant Skinner, his firm had the property listed, and Foster was selling through his office. The contract was made in the name of the Mills Company, and in their office; they received all payments, adjusted a difference between the plaintiffs and themselves over a payment; they also paid Skinner and his partners their commission on the deal, and thereby held themselves out as a party in interest. We therefore believe that they are sufficiently connected with their codefendant Foster and should not be released from liability.

Many other points are made for a reversal, but no useful purpose would be served by setting them forth in detail. We have examined each one, and hold they are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

MILO v. PRIOR. (Civ. 6728.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Judgment ⇨562—Judgments not on merits are included in judgments which are not res adjudicata in whole or in part.

Judgments not res adjudicata in whole or in part include judgments which are not on the merits.

2. Judgment ⇨197—Judgments not res adjudicata in whole or in part are without prejudice, and it is proper, though not necessary, for judgment to so state.

Judgments which are not res adjudicata in whole or in part are without prejudice, and it is proper, although not necessary, for judgment itself to so state.

3. Judgment ⇨197—Judgment without prejudice is not proper where cause is tried and submitted only on merits.

A cause which is tried and submitted only on the merits should not result in judgment without prejudice.

4. Appeal and error ⇨223—Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits should not be affirmed on technical points court might find which were not raised in support of reservation.

Where judgment without prejudice was rendered in personal injury action, and on appeal, plaintiff assigned no reason for, or in support of, reservation in judgment, reservation should not be affirmed on any technical points court might be able to find which were not raised or mentioned in any way.

5. Judgment ⇨197—Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits held not entirely void.

Judgment without prejudice in personal injury action after trial on merits was not entirely void, since such a reservation may be properly made where evidence in proceedings at trial warrants such a judgment, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1, providing action cannot be dismissed by plaintiff after its submission.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1175(1)—Appellate court will not render final judgment against respondent where it would deprive respondent of right to appeal from final judgment on merits originally entered in appellate court.

Where plaintiff, in action for personal injuries, did not appeal from judgment which was satisfactory to her as a whole, appellate court, in reversing part of judgment appealed from, will not render a final and nonappealable judgment in favor of defendant on merits, where to do so would have effect of depriving plaintiff of right to assign errors and to appeal from final judgment on merits entered in appellate court for first time.

7. Appeal and error ⇨839(1)—Where part of judgment appealed from is not severable from remainder of judgment, court may review whole judgment.

Rule that only part of judgment appealed from will be reviewed by appellate court is subject to an exception when such portion is not severable from remainder of judgment.

8. Appeal and error ⇨839(1)—Without prejudice provision in judgment held not severable from entire judgment, and therefore appellate court on appeal from such part could review entire judgment.

Where defendant in personal injury action appealed from part of judgment without prejudice after trial on merits, part of judgment appealed from was not severable, and therefore appellate court could review entire judgment, since reservation entered into and qualified each and every part of entire judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Hazel Milo by A. Milo, her guardian ad litem, against Leland S. Prior. From that part of judgment for defendant without prejudice, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Adopting opinion published in 280 P. 392.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This action was for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff in an automobile collision alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. This action and two other actions between other parties based upon the same automobile collision were tried together upon the same evidence by the court sitting without a jury. After the causes were submitted and briefed, the court gave judgment in each case, denying relief to each of the several plaintiffs and cross-complainants. In this action judgment was announced for defendant without prejudice. Thereafter both plaintiff and defendant waived findings of fact, and after that a judgment was signed by the judge and fled. After stating the usual recitals and waiver of findings, it ordered judgment in favor of defendant "without prejudice to plaintiff's bringing a new action herein if so advised." Defendant appeals from that part of the judgment alone which we have just quoted. The record contains the judgment roll of this case and the reporter's transcript of the testimony taken at the trial of the three cases, but does not contain the judgment roll in the other two cases nor any findings of fact.

At the time of the collision, the plaintiff, a minor, was riding in an automobile with Norma Furlong and Harry Deller, a minor, who was driving. The other automobile in the collision was driven by the defendant, Leland S. Prior, who was accompanied by his wife, Florence M. Prior. This action was by Hazel Milo against Leland S. Prior alone. The defendant denied negligence, and alleged negligence of Deller and contributory negligence of plaintiff. The other two actions, according to the briefs, were as follows: First, Leland S. Prior against Deller and his parents, for personal injuries and damage to Prior's automobile. In that action Deller's father filed a cross-complaint for damage to the car driven by his son Harry Deller. Second, Florence Prior against Deller and his parents for personal injuries. In that action Deller's father also filed a cross-complaint for damages to his car. In those two actions no one was awarded damages. This might mean that the court decided that both drivers were negligent or that neither was negligent. A final judgment upon the merits for defendant in Hazel Milo v. Leland S. Prior might also mean either that Prior was not negligent or that both Hazel Milo and Leland S. Prior were negligent.

[1-3] Appellant contends that, the action having been fully tried and submitted, the judgment should have been a final judgment between the parties, and not merely a judgment without prejudice. He cites a number of California cases to the effect that a plaintiff may not dismiss an action without prejudice after the case has been tried and submitted, and from this argues that the court cannot decide the cause without prejudice after it has been submitted. Simply because a plaintiff is not permitted by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1) to dismiss the action after its submission, it does not follow that in no case and under no circumstances may a court give a judgment without prejudice. Respondent cites a number of cases to the point that, where a judgment is not upon the merits or expressly provides that it is without prejudice, such judgment is not res adjudicata, the reservation itself being res adjudicata and prevents the raising of any question as to the right to maintain a subsequent suit. These authorities, which are collected in 34 Corpus Juris, 797, note 65, show, however, that such a reservation has been treated as valid in many instances. In Ahlers v. Smiley, 11 Cal. App. 343, 104 P. 997, such a reservation in a judgment is referred to and its effect considered, although the propriety of the reservation is not directly passed upon. The reservation there was in respect to an issue of damages which could not be decided on account of the insufficiency of the pleadings. Many judgments are not res adjudicata in whole or in part. It will be sufficient for this case to say that they include judgments which are not upon the merits. 15 Cal. Jur. 124 et seq. Such judgments are without prejudice, and it is proper, although perhaps not necessary, for the judgment itself to so state. Lloyd v. Imperial Mach. Stamping & Welding Co., 224 Mass. 574, 113 N. E. 456. A cause which is tried and submitted only upon the merits, however, should not result in a judgment without prejudice. Parsons v. Riley, 33 W. Va. 464, 10 S. E. 806.

[4, 5] There was no motion for dismissal or nonsuit in this case. No findings were made, and so we cannot look to them to find the reason for the reservation. Respondent has suggested no reason for the reservation which he is willing to support, and the reservation should not be affirmed for any technical points we might be able to find, but which were not raised or mentioned in any way. The appeal is therefore well taken. The part of the judgment appealed from, however, is not entirely void, because such a reservation may be properly made where the evidence and proceedings at the trial warrant such a judgment.

[6-8] Supplementary briefs were filed in this court in which the appellant contends that the judgment of this court upon this appeal should have only the effect of eliminating that part of the judgment appealed from and leave the remainder stand as a modified judgment so that there would be a final and non-appealable judgment in favor of the defendant upon the merits. Respondent goes to the other extreme. She contends that the evidence wholly fails to show any negligence on her part, but that the evidence, as well as the court's decision in the companion cases, shows that the defendant was negligent. She therefore asks this court to enter judgment in her favor, or at least that an entire new trial be ordered by this court. As the respondent is not an appellant here, we may not adopt either of these courses upon assignment of errors by her. On the other hand, she should not be penalized for not having taken an appeal from the judgment or from a part thereof when it was satisfactory to her as a whole. For this reason we should not adopt appellant's suggestion, as it would have the effect of depriving respondent of her right to assign errors and to appeal from a final judgment upon the merits entered against her in this court for the first time. The rule that only the part of the judgment appealed from will be reviewed by the appellate court is subject to an exception when such portion is not severable from the remainder of the judgment. In re Yoder, 199 Cal. 699, 704, 251 P. 205; Whalen v. Smith, 163 Cal. 360, 125 P. 904, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1319. In the instant case the part appealed from is not severable. The reservation enters into and qualifies each and every part of the entire judgment. Wanzer v. Self, 30 Ohio St. 378. The merit of this appeal is, not that such a reservation may never be made, but that the appellant was entitled, according to the record presented here, to have a judgment entered upon the merits either for or against him instead of a judgment which amounts only to a dismissal or nonsuit. According to the record, the case was fully tried and submitted upon its merits, but no judgment upon the merits has been rendered. A judgment which is erroneous because not on the merits is the only one which has been rendered.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and it is ordered that the trial court proceed to render and enter a new judgment upon the merits in the action according to the views herein expressed.

After the foregoing opinion was filed a rehearing was granted, for the purpose of reconsidering what the form of the judgment on appeal should be. After such reconsideration, we are of the opinion that the order previously made by us is the correct one, and the foregoing opinion, together with what is now added, is adopted as the opinion of the court.

Appellant, in his petition for rehearing, asks this court to remand the case, with instructions to the trial court to enter a judgment in favor of appellant upon the merits and expressly allow respondent the right to appeal from such order. This, of course, is inconsistent with appellant's original position that a judgment upon the merits had already been made, and that the part appealed from was severable and was void surplusage, which should be stricken out and disregarded; for, if a judgment upon the merits had already been rendered, no reason would exist to remand the case for judgment on the merits to be made.

The trial court had jurisdiction to give a judgment without prejudice as shown by the instances above referred to in which it has been properly done. See, also, cases collected in Buchholz-Hill Transp. Co. v. Baxter, 206 N. Y. 173, 99 N. E. 180, 31 Ann. Cas. 1106. The fact that the trial court did so erroneously in the present case does not mean that it gave a judgment beyond its jurisdiction, but only that it erroneously exercised its jurisdiction. Whether the part of the judgment appealed from be within or without the jurisdiction of the court, however, it is nevertheless not severable from the remainder of the judgment. So, if there were no jurisdiction for the part of the judgment which is appealed from, there would be no jurisdiction for the entire judgment.

We cannot say from the record before us that the trial judge was of the opinion that the defendant was entitled to a judgment upon the merits. This court cannot say upon this appeal that a judgment for defendant is the only judgment on the merits which could be given upon the evidence.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter a judgment upon the merits between the parties hereto upon the evidence and record before it when the cause was submitted to it for decision.

I concur: STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 456

ZACHARY et al. v. CHAPMAN et al. ★
(Civ. 3983.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Mechanics' liens ⇨272—Allegations of answer in action to foreclose mechanic's lien held to sufficiently allege plaintiff's noncompliance with contract supporting judgment for defendant.

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien, allegations of defendant's answer that plaintiffs, over protest and objection, installed inferior grade of flooring; that work was of poor class; that ends of pieces of flooring were broken off, and wide cracks left in floor; that broken places were patched with filler and that floor is wavy and does not conform to high-grade material and workmanship employed in construction of other portions of house—held to sufficiently allege plaintiff's noncompliance with terms of flooring contract, and therefore to support judgment for defendant.

2. Mechanics' liens ⇨290(3)—Allegations of answer in action to foreclose mechanic's lien held to sustain finding that plaintiff did not substantially perform contract, precluding recovery.

In action to foreclose mechanic's lien, allegations of answer regarding flooring furnished, installation of material, nature of work, and defects in workmanship held broad enough to sustain finding that plaintiffs did not substantially perform flooring contract, warranting denial of recovery for reasonable value of material furnished and labor done, less damage sustained by defendant.

3. Mechanics' liens ⇨290(1)—Failure to find value of materials furnished and defendant's damages in mechanic's lien foreclosure held immaterial, where plaintiffs did not substantially perform, precluding recovery.

Where plaintiffs, suing to foreclose mechanic's lien, did not substantially perform flooring contract precluding recovery for material and labor, trial court's failure to find reasonable value of materials furnished and labor performed, and deduct therefrom the specific amount of damage sustained by defendant through plaintiffs' failure to comply with contract, held immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Harry F. Zachary and another, copartners doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the National Floor Company, against Arthur E. T. Chapman and another. From a judgment for defendant Chapman, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Courtney A. Teel, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Arthur E. T. Chapman and Albert Sidney Brown, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of the defendant Chapman. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone.

Two causes of action are stated in the complaint. The first is to foreclose a mechanic's lien; the second is in quantum meruit. In the first count it is alleged that the plaintiffs and defendant Chapman entered into a contract by the terms of which, for a consideration of $247 to be paid to them by the defendant, the plaintiffs agreed to furnish, lay, scrape, sand, and finish complete the hardwood flooring in a residence then being erected for the defendant. It is further alleged that plaintiffs have fully performed all of the terms and conditions of said contract to be performed by them, but that the defendant has failed and refused to pay said sum of $247, or any part thereof. The second count of the complaint alleges the reasonable value of said materials and labor to be the same in amount as the contract price.

The answer of the defendant Chapman admits the making of the contract, and also admits the nonpayment of the contract price, or any portion thereof. The answer further alleges that the contract provided that plaintiffs were to furnish the best grade of plain white oak flooring, and that the work of scraping, sanding, and finishing complete, said hardwood flooring, would be of the highest grade, and of first-class workmanship, and denies that the plaintiffs furnished the best grade of flooring, and alleges that, over the protest of the defendant, plaintiffs furnished a very inferior grade of flooring and installed it in the house, and that the work was done in a very poor manner, and not in conformity or in accordance with said agreement. It is further alleged in said answer that, in laying said floor, plaintiffs damaged the premises and property in said house, which they had agreed should not be done, and that said damage consisted of punching holes in the sanitas cloth and plaster that was on the walls, and in defacing the baseboards in the rooms at various places, and in the improper installation of a threshold which permitted the collection of water and dampness, and thereby ruined a large front door.

Defendant denies the allegations of the second count of the complaint, and by way of a counterclaim for damages alleges, in detail, a total damage to the building through the fault of the plaintiffs in performing said work in the sum of $449. Defendant further alleges that, in laying and finishing said flooring, it was not properly fitted and joined and scraped, and on account thereof there were wide cracks and pieces chipped or knocked off the ends of the flooring where they joined, requiring a great deal of filling to be inserted, which is of a temporary nature, and that the floor is uneven and wavy; that in the construction of the other portions of the building defendant used the very highest grade of material obtainable, and that the low grade of flooring and poor workmanship used by the plaintiffs in laying and finishing the floor detracts from the general appearance of the building.

The court found the making of the contract as pleaded by the defendant, and that defendant has not paid the amount claimed to be due thereunder. The court also found the foregoing allegations of defendant's answer to be true.

[1] It is claimed by the appellant that the findings are not supported by the pleadings, in that plaintiffs did not substantially perform the contract, and that the defendant was entitled to have the material and workmanship provided for in said contract, and the contract itself substantially performed. We are of the opinion that the answer does plead the failure of plaintiffs to comply with the terms of the contract. It is alleged that over the protest and objection of the defendant the plaintiffs installed an inferior grade of flooring; that the work was also of a poor class; that the ends of the pieces of flooring were broken off, and wide cracks were left in the floor; that said broken places and cracks were patched with a filler which would not be durable; and that the floor is wavy and does not conform to the high-grade material and workmanship employed in the construction of the other portions of the house. These allegations were found by the court to be true, and are sufficient to sustain the judgment.

[2] It is also claimed by the appellants that under the second count of the complaint the court should have found the reasonable value of the material furnished and labor done, and whatever damage, if any, was suffered by the defendant, should have been deducted therefrom. This is answered by the finding that the material and labor were performed under the contract. In Perry et al. v. Quackenbush, 105 Cal. 299, 38 P. 740, 742, it is said: "Since the rule as to what shall constitute performance has become so indefinite, it is an important consideration, in determining whether there has been a substantial performance, that the deviations are so slight that they might have been made by one who was honestly endeavoring to comply with his contract. Good faith, however, on the part of the contractor, is not enough. The owner has a right to a structure in all essential particulars such as he has contracted for, and, to authorize a court or jury to find that there has been a substantial performance, it must be found that he has such a structure." In the light of this decision, it seems unnecessary to cite additional authority, or discuss the question further. The answer to the complaint is broad enough to sustain the findings of the court that plaintiffs did not substantially perform the contract, and the findings sustain the judgment.

[3] Appellants also complain that the trial court erred in not finding the specific amount of damage suffered by the defendant. Appellants not having substantially performed the contract, that question becomes immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 414

IN RE DOUD'S ESTATE.

SMITH v. SMITH.

(Civ. 122.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California. Jan. 25, 1930.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨510(9)—Allowance to administratrix of more than one annual premium on bond held not erroneous in view of presumption of right action.

Allowance on final accounting to administratrix of more than one annual premium on her bond held not erroneous, in view of failure of record to establish that estate should have been closed in one year or in any other definite time; the presumption being in favor of action of trial court in making such allowance.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨511(1)—Order setting portion of estate aside to widow was species of "distribution," as respects allowance of attorney's fee.

Portion of estate set apart to widow was a part of estate to be accounted for by administratrix, and order setting it apart was a species of distribution, as respects allowance of attorney's fee on total amount of estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Distribution.]

3. Executors and administrators ⇨511(5)—Evidence in final accounting of administratrix sustained order allowing $175 attorney fee.

Evidence in final accounting of administratrix held sufficient to sustain order allowing an attorney fee in the sum of $175.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨104(6)—Refusal to charge administratrix with compound interest after first year of administration held not erroneous, where record failed to show estate could have been closed in definite time.

Refusal of court in final accounting of administratrix to charge her with compound interest after first year of administration of estate held not erroneous, in view of failure of record to show whether estate could have been closed in one year or any other definite time.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨109(4)—Allowance to administratrix of $100 for traveling expenses held not erroneous, in view of record.

Allowance on final accounting of $100 for traveling expenses of administratrix from residence to place where estate was being probated held not erroneous, in view of failure of record to contain facts in respect thereto.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨109(1)—Allowance as debt of estate of payment on sewing machine set apart to widow as exempt property held not erroneous, in view of record.

Allowance on final accounting of administratrix of an item as payment on a sewing machine as debt of estate held not erroneous, in view of failure of record to show that it was not a proper debt, nor when sewing machine was set apart to widow as exempt property.

7. Executors and administrators ⇨109(1)—Allowance on final accounting of hospital bill, included in former account with funeral expenses, held not erroneous.

Allowance on final accounting of administratrix of hospital bill, included in former account with funeral expenses, and appearing to be one of expenses of last illness of deceased, held not erroneous without any showing in record to the contrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Final accounting by Olive B. Smith, formerly Olive B. Doud, as administratrix of the estate of M. G. Doud, deceased. From an order settling and approving the final account, C. A. Smith, a creditor, appeals. Affirmed.

Robert G. Hill, of San Diego, for appellant.

D. C. Bitler, of El Centro, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an appeal from an order settling and approving the final account of an administratrix. Olive B. Doud was appointed administratrix of the estate in question on December 23, 1921. Her final account was not filed until September 17, 1928. The appellant, a creditor of the deceased, filed exceptions to the several items in the account, and charged her with negligence, carelessness, and bad faith, in delaying her final settlement. After a hearing, the court approved the account as filed, and this appeal is from that order.

The only record before us consists of the order appealed from, and a bill of exceptions setting forth certain evidence introduced at the hearing on the final account and containing a copy of a portion of the original inventory and appraisal and portions of two previous accounts filed by the administratrix, together with a few vague references to other proceedings in the estate not set forth or explained.

The bill of exceptions sets forth six specifications of error, which we will take up in order.

[1] First, that the court erred in allowing the administratrix more than one annual premium of $37.50 on her bond as administratrix. This is based on the contention that the estate should have been closed in one year, and that the same was fully ready to be closed within that time. No specific evidence is pointed out to support this contention, other than the fact that the estate was not closed for nearly seven years. On the other hand, the meager record before us shows that the estate contained both real and personal property, and that the real estate and a portion of the personal property were set aside to the widow as a homestead at some time not stated; that certain shares of stock in two banks, valued at over $5,000, were held by a creditor as collateral security for certain notes, and were later sold and the proceeds applied to these debts, but the time of the sale and the manner and the entire transaction leading up to the same are not disclosed by the record. The record shows that notice to creditors was published in 1921 and republished in 1925, the court having declared the first publication to be void, but nothing appears to show whether this was due to the fault of the administratrix or her attorneys or to other matters beyond their control. The record shows that certain claims, including the one of appellant here, were filed in 1922 and finally rejected in 1926 and 1927; and that a suit was filed and went to trial on the claim of this appellant. In this connection, it may be observed that appellant had the option to consider his claim rejected and act thereon 10 days after it was filed. Section 1496, Code Civ. Proc. The bill of exceptions alleges that the estate is bankrupt. There is nothing in the record to show there was ever a time when the debts could have been paid. It appears that there was another 160 acres of land, which was owned by the administratrix and the deceased as joint tenants, and that a suit was filed in 1927 by appellant herein, against the estate and others, involving that land; that another suit was filed by appellant against the estate upon a promissory note in 1927; that two previous accounts had been filed by the administratrix and approved by the court after certain matters were stricken out, the record being silent as to what these matters were or how much controversy was involved in that result. It is apparent from the record that there has been much controversy in relation to the affairs of this estate from the beginning. Many assertions are made in appellant's brief that find no support in the short bill of exceptions. The record is in such shape that we cannot tell whether the estate should have been closed in one year or in any other definite time. Not only is the presumption in favor of the action of the trial court, but such evidence as there is appears to support the same.

[2, 3] The second error claimed is in the allowance of attorneys' fees. One attorney was allowed a fee of $240 in 1926, and a different attorney was allowed $175 upon the approval of the final account. There is nothing in the record to show what was the basis for the first allowance of $240, nor what evidence was before the court at the time. That particular account mentions receipts of $2,006 and apparently appellant contends that the attorney's fee should have been computed on that amount. It is possible the court allowed additional attorney's fees for special services or the court may have computed the attorney's fees on the total amount of the estate, including the portion which was set aside to the widow. This latter portion was a part of the estate, was to be accounted for by the administratrix, and the order setting it apart to her is a species of distribution. Estate of Miller, 121 Cal. 353, 53 P. 906. In reference to the last item of $175 allowed for attorney's fees, the attorney testified that he represented the administratrix in a suit filed against the estate upon a promissory note for $2,250, preparing for trial and appearing thereat; that he represented the administratrix in another suit in which she was sued as such administratrix; that on three or four occasions he appeared in the superior court in response to citations issued by the court for the appearance of the administratrix; and that he represented the administratrix at the contested hearing on the exceptions to the final account. Whether or not the court allowed this $175 attorney's fee entirely for special services cannot be determined from the record. However, if that be the case, we cannot say the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the order.

[4] The third specification of error relates to the refusal of the court to charge the administratrix with compound interest after the first year of her administration of the estate. This is based upon the assumption that the estate should have been closed within one year, and, for the reasons stated in commenting upon the first specification of error, this contention cannot be sustained.

[5] It is next insisted that the court erred in allowing the administratrix a total of $100 for traveling expenses from Los Angeles to El Centro, where the estate was being probated. It is stated that the administratrix moved to Los Angeles soon after her appointment, but how long thereafter is not alleged, and there are no facts in the record that justify us in holding that the trial court was in error in this respect.

[6] In the fifth specification of error, appellant objects to an item of $50, which was set out in an earlier account as having been made as a payment upon a sewing machine, as a debt of the estate. This is objected to on the ground that the sewing machine was set apart to the wife as exempt property. There is nothing in the record to show that it was not a proper debt of the estate, nor when the sewing machine was set apart to the wife. The court approved the item at a hearing in 1926.

[7] The last specification of error is an objection to the allowance of $127.50 for a hospital bill, it being argued that it was not a preferred claim against the estate. The item is objected to now for the first time, although it was approved by the court in 1926 at the hearing of a former account. In the excerpt from that account which is before us, it is included with the funeral expenses and would appear to be one of the expenses of the last illness of the deceased. There is nothing in the record to show the contrary. If this was the fact, it was, of course, a preferred claim. The appellant having failed to show any facts sustaining his contention, the action of the trial court must be upheld.

While the appellant makes a general charge of delay, negligence, and bad faith against the administratrix, he has utterly failed to produce a record upon which his contention could be sustained as to any particular item of the account.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 460

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. HALL et al. ★
(Civ. 7147.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Eminent domain ⇨262(5)—Jury view of premises at close of plaintiff's evidence, defendants not objecting, held not prejudicial as depriving defendants of fair trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 610).

Permitting jury in condemnation proceedings to view premises at conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, without objection by defendants, held not prejudicial to defendants as depriving them of fair trial; Code Civ. Proc. § 610, not requiring view to be at any particular stage of trial.

2. Eminent domain ⇨224—Jury verdict in condemnation proceedings cannot be impeached by affidavits of jurors that other jurors had formed opinions as to value of land prior to introduction of evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2, verdict of jury in condemnation proceedings can be impeached by testimony of juror only on issue of whether determination was result of chance, and testimony of jurors as to statements of other jurors indicating opinions formed prior to introduction of evidence is not admissible to controvert verdict.

3. Eminent domain ⇨246(3)—Proceedings to condemn land for park purposes must be dismissed on city's failure to pay award as provided by statute, unless case be within exception expressly stated by statute, irrespective of issuance of execution (Code Civ. Proc. § 1251 as amended by St. 1911, p. 92, § 1252, and § 1255a, as added by St. 1911, p. 377).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a, as added by St. 1911, p. 377, providing that failure to comply with section 1251, as amended by St. 1911, p. 92, shall constitute implied abandonment of condemnation proceedings, and under section 1252, requiring payment or deposit of money in court, defendant is entitled to dismissal of proceeding by city to condemn land for park purposes, when award has not been paid as provided by section 1251, as amended by St. 1911, p. 92, notwithstanding no execution issued under section 1252, unless the case be within one of the exceptions mentioned in the statute.

4. Eminent domain ⇨167(4)—Owner is entitled to have condemnation proceedings carried out in all material respects in accordance with statutes.

The owner of property proposed to be taken in condemnation proceedings is entitled to have proceedings leading to that end carried out in all material respects in accord with every requirement of statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Condemnation proceeding by the City of Los Angeles against Leicester C. Hall and others. From an adverse decree, and from an order denying the motion to dismiss, named defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed, and order denying motion to dismiss reversed, and cause remanded, with directions.

Leicester C. Hall, in pro. per., and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., and Leslie K. Floyd, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by the city of Los Angeles to condemn for park purposes certain real property owned by defendant and appellant, Leicester C. Hall. A jury awarded him the sum of $904.05 for the land taken, and an interlocutory judgment was entered accordingly. He moved for a new trial and also for an order dismissing the proceedings upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to comply with the provisions of section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The motions were denied, and he has appealed from the judgment and the order denying his motion to dismiss.

The points relied upon for a reversal of the judgment are alleged irregularities in the proceedings of the court, and misconduct of the jury, due to which defendant claims that a new trial should have been granted. The denial of the motion to dismiss is also assigned as error.

[1] At the time plaintiff rested its case, its counsel suggested that the jury should view the land in question. Appellant, who is an attorney, appearing in the action in propria persona, approved the suggestion. The court thereupon fixed an hour of the same day for the view, to which appellant made no objection. He now claims that, the view having been had before all the evidence was presented, he was prevented from having a fair trial.

The statute does not require the jury to view the property at any particular stage of the trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 610), and no prejudice was suffered by appellant from a course of proceeding in which he acquiesced without objection.

[2] In support of the motion for a new trial, certain members of the jury made affidavits that other members thereof had formed opinions as to the value of the land prior to evidence being introduced, and had made statements in the presence of other jurors that the land was of little value. It is not contended that any member of the jury was induced to assent to a finding on any of the issues by resort to the determination of chance; and it is well settled in this state that on no other ground can the verdict be impeached by the testimony of a juror. Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 2; People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 P. 59; Siemsen v. Oakland, etc., Ry., 134 Cal. 494, 66 P. 672; People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 232 P. 457, 36 A. L. R. 1435.

[3] Section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 92), provides that "the plaintiff must, within thirty days after final judgment, pay the sum of money assessed. In case the plaintiff is the State of California, or is a public corporation, and it appears by affidavit that bonds of said state or public corporation must be issued and sold in order to provide the money necessary to pay the sum assessed, then such sum may be paid at any time within six months from the date of such judgment; provided, further, that if the sale of any such bonds can not be had by reason of litigation affecting the validity thereof, then the time during which such litigation is pending shall not be considered a part of the six months' time in which such payment must be made. * * *

It is provided by section 1252 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "payment may be made to the defendants entitled thereto, or the money may be deposited in court for the defendants, and be distributed to those entitled thereto. If the money be not so paid or deposited, the defendants may have execution as in civil cases; and if the money cannot be made on execution, the court, upon a showing to that effect, must set aside and annul the entire proceedings. * * *

A new section, numbered 1255a, was added to the Code of Civil Procedure by the Statutes of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 377). This section provides that the "plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment; and failure to comply with section 1251 of this code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding. Upon such abandonment, express or implied, * * * a judgment shall be entered dismissing the proceeding. * * *

In the present case the interlocutory judgment was entered on January 17, 1928, this being the final judgment referred to in section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Glenn County v. Johnston, 129 Cal. 404, 62 P. 66; Cal., etc., R. R. Co. v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 67 Cal. 59, 7 P. 123), and on March 17, 1928, the notice of motion to dismiss the proceeding was served and filed. The amount awarded appellant, including his costs, was deposited in court by the plaintiff on March 22, 1928, following which the motion to dismiss was heard and denied. Plaintiff contends that, before dismissal could be had, it was necessary for defendant to show that execution had issued as provided by section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the amount of the award could not be made thereon.

[4] While a defendant may avail himself of the remedy provided by this section where he fails to recover the award on execution, section 1255a—which was a later enactment—clearly shows an intention to provide additional relief by dismissal of the proceedings in case the plaintiff has failed for 30 days after final judgment to pay the award. And the exceptions to the requirement that payment be made within that time where the bonds of the state or public corporation must be issued and sold to provide the means of payment, or such sale cannot be had by reason of litigation affecting their validity, impliedly exclude all other exceptions in cases where either the state or a public corporation is a party plaintiff. The owner of property proposed to be taken is entitled to have the proceedings leading to that end carried out in all material respects (Graham v. Ballard, 157 Cal. 96, 106 P. 215); and it has been held that every requirement of the statute giving the least semblance of benefit to the owner must be complied with (Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 P. 599).

It is our conclusion from the language of the above sections that the issuance of execution under section 1252 is not a condition to the right to proceed under section 1255a; and that, in enacting the latter section, it was the legislative intention to require dismissal when the award has not been paid as provided by section 1251, unless the case be within one of the exceptions mentioned above.

We find no merit in the appeal from the judgment, but, in view of the facts, the motion to dismiss the proceedings as against appellant should have been granted.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed, and the order denying the motion to dismiss is reversed; the cause is remanded, and the trial court is directed to enter an order dismissing the proceedings as against appellant, Leicester C. Hall, and awarding him his costs and disbursements.

103 Cal. App. 399

PEOPLE v. BRASWELL. (Cr. 12.)★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 24, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1930.

1. Burglary ⇨41(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction of burglary.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of burglaries charged in two counts of information.

2. Burglary ⇨42(1)—Unexplained possession of stolen property is insufficient to establish burglary, but may be considered by jury in reaching verdict.

While mere unexplained possession of stolen property is not sufficient to establish crime of burglary, such fact may be considered by jury, together with other circumstances, in arriving at a verdict.

3. Criminal law ⇨419, 420(1)—Sheriff's testimony as to whether defendant was person named in copies of prior judgments of conviction held not hearsay.

Questions to sheriff of county in another state as to whether defendant in burglary trial was person named in copies of judgments of conviction of burglaries in such county held not objectionable, as calling for hearsay testimony; testimony as to whether witness knew defendant to be the same man being called for.

4. Criminal law ⇨1202(3)—Evidence held to justify jury's finding that defendant was man involved in prior convictions of like offense.

In trial under information charging burglary and prior convictions of like offense in another state, evidence held sufficient to justify jury's finding that defendant was man involved in such prior convictions.

5. Judgment ⇨815—Foreign judgment of insanity held not bar to trial for offenses committed on later date (Pen. Code, § 1367).

Judgment of county court of another state that defendant was insane on date thereof held insufficient to prevent court from placing him on trial for burglaries committed over 15 months later, under Pen. Code, § 1367; question being whether he was sane at time of committing offenses charged.

6. Criminal law ⇨740—Defendant's insanity at time of alleged burglaries held for jury.

Whether defendant was insane at time of committing alleged burglaries held question of fact for jury to determine.

7. Criminal law ⇨1159(5)—Jury's finding on conflicting evidence as to defendant's insanity at time of offenses charged cannot be disturbed on appeal.

The jury's finding on conflicting evidence as to whether defendant was insane at time of committing offenses charged cannot be disturbed on appeal.

8. Criminal law ⇨1212—Three prior convictions of any felony, whether on charges separately brought and tried or not, are sufficient to constitute fourth offender an "habitual criminal" (Pen. Code, § 644, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1066).

Under Pen. Code, § 644, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1066, construed so as to give effect to all provisions thereof, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1858, three prior convictions of any felony are sufficient to constitute fourth offender an "habitual criminal," whether they were on charges separately brought and tried or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Habitual Criminal.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Claude Braswell was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Fred Duffy, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BARNARD, J. The defendant was charged in an information filed by the district attorney of San Bernardino county with the crime of burglary in 6 separate counts. He was also charged with 15 prior convictions of a felony. He entered a plea of "not guilty," and "not guilty by reason of insanity," as to each count of the information, and also denied all of the alleged prior convictions.

After a trial by jury, defendant was found guilty of the crime of burglary as charged in counts 1 and 5 of the information, and the jury also found he had suffered prior convictions in Anderson county, Texas, in the following three cases: Criminal 9828, criminal 9831, and criminal 9834. The remaining prior alleged convictions were found to be not true. Defendant was later tried by the same jury on the issue of sanity, and was found to be sane at the time the offenses were committed.

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

[1, 2] In brief, the evidence with reference to the first count of the information, is as follows: Mrs. A. B. Burcky testified that she lived at 1754 Second avenue, Ontario, Cal., and that about 2 or 2:30 on the morning of February 18, 1929, some one entered and burglarized her home; that the back door of her home was left standing open; that her son's trousers were taken from his room and left lying on the floor, together with her daughter's purse, which was lying on the floor empty. Her son testified that he was awakened by revolver shots, and shortly thereafter the police officers came to the door; that his trousers had been taken from the side of his bed into the next room, and $7.60 removed therefrom; that $1.50 was taken from his sister's purse. A police officer, J. L. Lock, testified that shortly after 2 o'clock that morning he and another officer were called to the Burcky home; that he saw the flash of a flash-light, apparently in the house, and as he walked toward the back door the flash-light quit operating; that as he went on around the house, and was near the back door, the flash-light continued to operate in quick, short flashes, going from the front part of the house to the rear, whereupon the defendant came out of the door. When commanded to put up his hands, the defendant ran. Several shots were fired, but the officer overtook defendant and placed him under arrest. The officer then testified:

"After I pursued him and caught him, Officer Fred Tebo also came along, and we took Braswell into custody and returned to the police station and there searched him. At the time we took him in custody we found $7 in $1 bills in his left hand and his flash-light in his right hand. We searched for a gun and we found none, but found an ice pick. We then returned to the police station and searched him further, and found a purse with approximately $56, and I believe mostly in paper money in his pants pocket, and after he was searched took him to the hospital for first aid."

This officer further testified that appellant's purse had two compartments; in one of these there was a roll of currency amounting to $54, and in the other there were two $1 bills. The $54 consisted of one $20 bill, one $10 bill, four $5 bills, and four $1 bills. In appellant's pants pocket was found 2 half dollars, 6 dimes, 2 quarters, 7 nickels, and 2 pennies; also a knife and a pass-key. When arrested, the appellant had two pairs of socks pulled on over his shoes. This evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury as to 'appellant's connection with the offense charged in the first count.

It is urged that the evidence is not sufficient to establish appellant's connection with the offense charged in count 5 of the information. In reference to that count, one John Batchelor testified that he lived at 1753 Second avenue, Ontario, California, directly across the street from the Burcky home, heretofore mentioned; that he was awakened about 2 o'clock on the morning of February 18th by several shots; that he found the outside door of his house standing open, whereas it had been closed, but not locked, when he retired the night before; that a purse containing $54 in currency had been taken from his trousers, which were lying on his bed when he retired the previous evening; that the same purse was found the next morning on the adjoining lot, about 20 feet from his house, minus the money. He testified that the $54 consisted of four $1 bills, four $5 bills, one $10 bill, and one $20 bill, which was a new crisp bill. He stated that the $54 found on the appellant looked like his money.

The chief of police testified as follows, with regard to a voluntary conversation he had with appellant: "Officer Lock and myself brought him over, and he talked all the way over on various subjects; talked about being wanted in Texas, and about wanting his property, that part that we had out there, and among other things was a fountain pen and his part of this money, and whatever part that was not 'hot' he wanted; he said he could use it in his business, and all that kind of stuff, and he told at that time about being a reward offered for him in Texas; he said it was '25.' I asked him, '2500 dollars,' and he said, 'no; he wasn't worth that much; it was only $25.'"

It must be conceded that the mere unexplained possession of stolen property is not sufficient to establish the crime of burglary. People v. Nichols, 39 Cal. App. 29, 177 P. 861. However, the fact of such possession, if unexplained, may be taken into consideration by the jury, together with other circumstances, in arriving at a verdict. People v. Reed, 58 Cal. App. 7, 207 P. 1025; People v. McNamara, 65 Cal. App. 521, 224 P. 476; People v. Cronevitch, 86 Cal. App. 646, 261 P. 309.

We have here, not only the unexplained and uncontradicted possession of the stolen money, but also the following facts: The property had been taken from Batchelor's clothes while they were lying on his bed, under such circumstances of stealth that no one in the house was awakened. The door of his house was left open; the pocketbook in which the money had been contained was thrown away; and a similar amount of money in a similar form, and bearing a very close resemblance, was found in a separate compartment in a pocketbook carried by defendant. He was actually apprehended immediately across the street, where he was engaged in an enterprise exactly similar to the one that had taken place in the Batchelor home. He was at the time fully equipped for such an expedition of stealth, having on two pairs of socks over his shoes, and also having a flash-light, an ice pick, and a pass-key. He also admitted that a part of the money was "hot." While the evidence as to the entry of the appellant into the Batchelor home is circumstantial, we think these facts constitute ample evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

[3, 4] It is next contended that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that appellant had theretofore been three times convicted of a felony. This contention is based upon the claim that the identification of the defendant as the party who had been convicted on the former occasions in Texas was not sufficient. Duly authenticated copies of the judgment of conviction of the crime of burglary, in each of the three cases in Texas, were introduced in evidence. The sheriff of Anderson county, Texas, testified that he knew appellant and had placed him under arrest in the latter part of 1919, and that appellant was the same man that was tried in each of the three cases in question. In reference to the three prior convictions in Texas, the sheriff made the following answer to the following questions:

"By Mr. Thompson: Q. Calling your attention first to the authenticated copy of conviction, judgment of conviction, in the case of State of Texas v. Claude Braswell, 9831, tried on January 14, 1920, at which time John W. Normington was foreman of the jury, do you know if this Claude Braswell is the defendant now in court here that is named in that? A. Yes, sir, he is the same party.

"By Mr. Thompson: Q. Now, calling your attention to People's Exhibit 10, which is also an authenticated copy of judgment of conviction in the case of State of Texas v. Claude Braswell, No. 9828, bearing date of January 14, 1920, at which time John W. Normington was the foreman on the trial jury, do you know if this man is the same Claude Braswell as was tried at that court at that time? A. It is.

"Q. Directing your attention now to People's Exhibit 12, which is an authenticated copy of the judgment, record of judgment of conviction in the State of Texas v. Claude Braswell in the county of Anderson, in cause No. 9834, January 14, 1920, at which time John W. Normington was the foreman of that jury trying Claude Braswell named therein, do you know if the Claude Braswell named in this certificate is the same person as is here now on trial? A. Yes, sir, he is the same party."

Appellant insists that these questions called for hearsay testimony. This contention is without merit. The question called for the knowledge of the witness, as to whether he knew appellant to be the same man named in the record of conviction. The question called for the knowledge of the witness as to a fact, and the witness testified as a fact that he knew appellant to be the same man. Appellant had ample opportunity to cross-examine the witness as to the basis of his knowledge, but the record shows no attempt to do so. There was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the jury that the defendant was the same man involved in the prior convictions.

[5-7] Appellant's next contention is that the court erred in placing defendant upon trial at all, for the reason that a man cannot be tried or punished for a public offense while he is insane. Pen. Code, § 1367. Defendant offered in evidence an authenticated copy of a judgment of the county court of Walker county, Texas, adjudging the defendant insane, under date of November 7, 1927. It is insisted that this judgment should be considered in full force and effect, and that it is sufficient to prevent the defendant being placed on trial.

This contention is also without merit. So far as insanity is concerned, the only question before the trial court was whether appellant was sane at the time of the commission of the offenses charged in the information and the question of his insanity at that time was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. The record of the Texas court adjudging defendant to be insane on November 7, 1927, was admitted in evidence for whatever effect it might have upon the question of defendant's insanity at the time the offense here involved was committed. The jury found that the other evidence introduced was sufficient to establish the sanity of the defendant at the time involved, and their decision is controlling. The question as to whether the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the offense charged was properly submitted to the jury. People v. Schuler, 87 Cal. App. 68, 261 P. 1059. There being conflicting evidence, the finding of the jury cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[8] It is finally contended by appellant that, even if he were properly found guilty of three prior convictions in the state of Texas, since the record shows that these convictions all occurred on the same day, to wit, January 14, 1920, and in the same court they did not constitute three prior convictions, within the meaning of section 644 of the Penal Code. It is argued that the intent and purpose of section 644 of the Penal Code is to provide that, where a defendant has been apprehended, convicted, and punished, he shall be given an opportunity for reformation, and that after this has occurred three separate times, upon a fourth conviction he shall be deprived of his liberty for life.

It is argued that the three prior convictions in this case are, in effect, one conviction only, and should be so considered for the purposes of this statute. It may be conceded that this argument might, with considerable force, be addressed to a law-making authority. There might be good reason for providing that an interval, for punishment and for reformation, should take place between respective convictions before regarding a reformation as hopeless. There might also be good reason for providing a different rule where the prior offenses were committed all one day, possibly under peculiar stress of circumstances, and where the respective offenses were committed on different occasions. The record here does not disclose whether the offenses involved in the prior convictions were committed on the same day, or over a period of time. The record does not show whether the cases were tried separately or together. The record discloses that each case had an individual number, that each of the verdicts were, on the same date, signed by the same man, as foreman of the jury.

Prior to the amendment of 1927, section 644 of the Penal Code read as follows:

"Third conviction. Penalty. Every person convicted in this state of any felony who shall previously have been twice convicted, whether in this state or elsewhere, of the crime of robbery, burglary, rape with force and violence, arson or any of them, shall be adjudged to be an habitual criminal and shall be punished by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not less than ten years.

"Fourth conviction. Penalty. Every person convicted in this state of any felony who shall previously have been three times convicted whether in this state or elsewhere of the crime of robbery, burglary, rape with force and violence, arson or any of them, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state penitentiary for not less than life; provided, however, that nothing in this act shall abrogate or affect the punishment of death in any and all crimes now or hereafter inflicting such punishment of death."

In that year (St. 1927, p. 1066) the section was amended to read as follows:

"Every person convicted in this state of any felony, who shall have been previously twice convicted upon charges separately brought and tried, either in this state or elsewhere, of the crime of robbery, burglary, burglary with explosives, rape with force or violence, arson, murder, assault with intent to commit murder, grand theft, bribery of a public official, perjury, subornation of perjury, train wrecking, feloniously receiving stolen goods, felonious assault with a deadly weapon or any of them, shall be adjudged an habitual criminal and shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for life and shall not be eligible for release on parole until he shall have served a minimum of at least twelve years. Every person convicted in this state of any felony who shall have been previously three times convicted, either in this state or elsewhere, of any felony, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than life and shall not be eligible to parole. Nothing in this act shall abrogate or affect the punishment by death in any and all crimes now or hereafter inflicting such punishment of death." (Italics ours.)

The first part of this statute provides that every person convicted of any felony, who has been previously twice convicted, where the charges have been separately brought and tried, either in this state or elsewhere, of certain crimes, shall receive life imprisonment, and shall not be paroled for at least 12 years. The second part of the statute provides that every person convicted of any felony, who has been previously three times convicted, either in this state or elsewhere, of any felony, shall be given life imprisonment, and shall not be eligible to parole. The second part of the statute leaves out the provision contained in the first part (and placed there for the first time by the amendment of 1927), providing that the prior charges must have been separately brought and tried, and also makes the prior convictions applicable to any felony, instead of the particular ones mentioned in the first portion of the statute. It may be argued with some force that the Legislature should not have required the prior convictions to be upon charges separately brought and tried, when the limit upon parole is fixed at only 12 years, and have left that provision out where the defendant is never to be eligible to parole. In other words, that more is thus required in laying the foundation for a 12-year term than is required for a life term. While that argument might well be addressed to a legislative body, it is not controlling upon the judicial interpretation of the statute in question. In order to adopt appellant's contention, it would be necessary to add the words "upon charges separately brought and tried" to the second part of the statute. This might be done if there were any ambiguity about the second part of the statute, if it was incomplete, or if it had been left in such condition as to disclose that it was the intention of the Legislature to merely add one more to the list of prior convictions, leaving all of the other provisions of the first part of the section intact, and then fix an additional punishment therefor.

Section 1858 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows:

"Construction of Statutes and Instruments—General Rule. In the construction of a statute or instrument, the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted; and where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction is, if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all."

It will be noted that the second portion of the statute is complete in itself. It does not adopt or refer back to the preceding portion of the paragraph, but states in full its own conditions. It makes two distinct changes, leaving out the reference to a separate bringing and trying of the prior charges, and changing its application from certain named felonies to any felony. Under the rule of construction laid down by section 1858 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not for the courts to insert in the second portion of the section such a provision as is contained in the first portion. It is entirely possible to give effect to each portion of the statute. The Legislature may have considered three prior convictions to have been sufficient to have constituted a man an habitual criminal, whether or not they were upon charges separately brought and tried.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 425

LEWIS PUB. CO. v. HENDERSON et al. ★
(Civ. 6681.)

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Evidence ⇨450(8)—Oral testimony that steel plates for reproducing portrait were to be entirely hand-engraved was competent, where memorandum of agreement failed to specify type (Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1698; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

Where memorandum of agreement, relative to purchase of set of books with reproduction of portrait of purchaser and deceased husband from steel plate, which, together with 10 prints therefrom, were to be delivered to purchaser, failed to specify whether steel plates were to be entirely hand-engraved or otherwise, oral testimony was competent, under Civ. Code, § 1625, Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, and Civ. Code, § 1698, to explain ambiguity in memorandum, and evidence to effect that plates were to be entirely hand-engraved was not inconsistent with memorandum, and did not contradict or vary terms thereof.

2. Evidence ⇨432—Law relating to merger and superseding of negotiations by written instruments does not prevent showing want or failure of consideration (Civ. Code, § 1625).

Civ. Code, § 1625, relating to merger and superseding of all negotiations by written instruments, does not prevent a showing by parol evidence of want or failure of consideration in defense of an action on written instrument.

3. Evidence ⇨419(13), 432—Parol evidence as to agreement to reproduce portrait from steel plates entirely hand-engraved was competent on question of consideration and failure of consideration for contract for sale of books.

Parol evidence to effect that seller of set of books had agreed that portrait of purchaser and her deceased husband therein would be reproduced from steel plates entirely hand-engraved, was competent on question of whether such agreement was consideration for agreement to purchase books, and whether such consideration had failed.

4. Sales ⇨176(5)—Failure to return books did not create liability for contract price, in absence of acceptance.

Failure to return set of books sold did not create liability for payment of full contract price, where books were never accepted.

5. Contracts ⇨278(1)—Party to contract cannot compel performance while he himself is in default (Civ. Code, § 1439).

One party to a contract cannot compel another party thereto to perform while he himself is in default, in view of Civ. Code, § 1439.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Lewis Publishing Company against Charles U. Henderson and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Ellen M. Wetherbee, deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walker S. Teeson, of Oakland, and Paul A. Lindley, of Berkeley, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment in an action to recover the sum of $565 on a rejected claim theretofore presented for allowance against the estate of Ellen M. Wetherbee, deceased. The facts as they appear from the findings and the evidence supporting the findings are as follows:

Mrs. Wetherbee subscribed for a set of books which plaintiff was about to publish, entitled "California and Californians," the purchase price being $65. A few days later plaintiff's representative stated to her that, if she would agree to cancel said subscription and pay an additional $1,000, plaintiff would reproduce the portrait of herself and her deceased husband in said books from steel plates which would be entirely hand-engraved and deliver to her a set of the books, the hand-engraved steel plates from which the portrait was to be reproduced, and 10 prints therefrom. Mrs. Wetherbee accepted the proposition, and thereupon plaintiff's representative prepared a memorandum of the agreement, which was addressed to plaintiff, signed by Mrs. Wetherbee, and provided, among other things, that one-half of the agreed price of $1,065 should be paid on submission of the proofs and the balance on delivery of the books, etc. Mrs. Wetherbee made the first payment of $500, as called for in the agreement, but before the publication of the books was completed she died. Thereafter the books were sent by express to her late residence, and defendants refused to accept or pay for the same, for the reason, as the answer alleges and the evidence shows, that the portrait of Mrs. Wetherbee and her husband was not reproduced therein from steel plates entirely hand-engraved, as plaintiff agreed it would be, but were executed on plates partly machine-made and of a greatly inferior quality. The trial court concluded from the foregoing facts that plaintiff had not performed its contract; that there had been a failure of consideration, and that, consequently, plaintiff was not in a position to enforce the terms of the contract against the other party thereto.

[1] The main contention made by plaintiff in support of the appeal is that the findings and judgment are erroneous, in that they are founded upon evidence which is violative of the Code provisions declaring in effect that a contract, when reduced to writing, supersedes all negotiations and stipulations concerning its matters which preceded or accompanied its execution (Civ. Code, § 1625; Code Civ. Proc. § 1856), and can be altered only by a contract in writing or by an oral executed agreement, but not otherwise (Civ. Code, § 1698). This contention arises out of the following circumstances: In preparing the memorandum of agreement, plaintiff's representative omitted to specify therein, as agreed, that the steel plates to be used in the reproduction of said portrait were to be entirely hand-engraved; but the answer alleged that such was the agreement and that plaintiff had failed to perform that part of it. Plaintiff did not demur to the answer, but at the trial treated the issue thus raised as the main one to be tried, and in response thereto offered as its first witness Mrs. Lottie Gonzales, who was present at all times during the negotiations between the parties, for the purpose of establishing what the oral agreement was between the parties as to the type of the steel plates; but she testified on direct examination, in response to questions propounded by counsel then representing plaintiff, that plaintiff agreed to furnish and use steel plates which would be entirely hand-engraved.

It will thus be seen that plaintiff is now complaining of the competency of the evidence which it introduced as a part of its case in chief, in response to an issue raised by an answer to which it did not demur, and defendants argue, therefore, that plaintiff is precluded from doing so, particularly for the first time on appeal. Kuhn v. Dickey, 66 Cal. App. 227, 225 P. 867. Whether or not that be so, we are of the opinion that the evidence was competent under the provisions of section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is there provided in effect, among other things, that when the agreement has been reduced to writing the rule as to the exclusion of parol evidence "does not exclude other evidence of the circumstances under which the agreement was made or to which it relates, as defined in section 1860, or to explain an extrinsic ambiguity. * * *

Here the evidence shows that there are various kinds and types of steel plates used in the reproduction of portraits, some being costly, such as those entirely hand-engraved, while others are of a cheaper and inferior variety, such as those made partly by machine, and it further shows that the agreement between the parties was made with the distinct understanding that steel plates, entirely hand-engraved, were to be used. Therefore, since the memorandum of agreement failed so to state, extrinsic evidence was admissible, and in fact necessary, to explain the ambiguity in the memorandum and to show what the parties intended thereby; and the evidence introduced in this behalf, having relation to a matter upon which the written memorandum was silent, and not being inconsistent therewith, cannot be said to contradict or vary the terms thereof. Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, 32 P. 571.

[2, 3] Moreover, it is well settled that section 1625 of the Civil Code, relating to the merger and superseding of oral negotiations by a written instrument, does not change the law as to parol evidence of the consideration of such instruments, and accordingly a person may show by such evidence want or failure of consideration in defense of an action on such written instrument. 6 Cal. Jur. 207, and cases cited. In the present case, therefore, the parol evidence introduced by plaintiff and to which it now objects was competent to be considered in determining whether, as defendants claimed, the consideration for the execution of the second agreement, which called for the payment of an additional $1,000, was that plaintiff agreed to reproduce said portrait from steel plates entirely hand-engraved, and whether such consideration had failed.

[4, 5] Plaintiff makes the further contention that, aside from the merits of points mentioned, defendants are nevertheless liable for the payment of the full contract price because the books were not returned. The evidence upon this point shows, however, that defendants never did accept the books; that some time after they arrived by express at the residence of Mrs. Wetherbee, following her death, they were removed to the city library, but by whom or at whose direction the evidence does not make clear. In any event, as stated in Rathbun v. Security Mfg. Co., 82 Cal. App. 793, 256 P. 296, it is elementary that one party to a contract cannot compel another to perform while he himself is in default. See, also, section 1439, Civ. Code;

Karales v. Los Angeles Creamery Co., 36 Cal. App. 171, 171 P. 821; Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Seurich, 5 Cal. App. 252, 90 P. 51; San Francisco Commercial Agency v. Widemann, 19 Cal. App. 209, 124 P. 1056. Therefore, in the present case, plaintiff having failed to prove, as alleged in its complaint, that it had performed its part of the contract, was not entitled to enforce its terms against the other party thereto. If the judgment herein were founded upon a rescission of the contract, a different question would be presented, but such is not the case. The defense here rested upon the proposition that plaintiff had failed to perform its contract, and consequently no rescission was attempted or required. Wood, Curtis & Co. v. Seurich, supra.

In view of the conclusions we have reached upon the matters above discussed, it becomes unnecessary to consider or determine the remaining contentions made by plaintiff, which relate to the question of plaintiff's corporate entity.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 486

WESTERN IRON WORKS v. SMITH.
(Civ. 6833.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

1. Sales ⇨52(5)—Evidence held to support finding that in action for goods sold and delivered certain material was never ordered.

In action for goods sold and delivered to recover for certain locker cars and other iron work, evidence held sufficient to justify finding that locker cars were not ordered.

2. Appeal and error ⇨842(1)—Decision of whether consignee by unreasonable retention of goods has waived right of rejection involved question of fact, viewed like any other on appeal.

Whether conduct of consignee in relation to acceptance and retention of goods for unreasonable time without rejection was such as to constitute waiver of right to object was question of fact which, after decision by trial court, will be treated by appellate court like any other question of fact.

3. Sales ⇨22(1)—Letter saying certain material was not in contract could be construed as rejection.

In action for goods sold and delivered, it being contended that locker cars shipped to defendant were not ordered, his letter stating they were not included in contract could be construed as a rejection, although defendant, instead of saying he would not accept, said that trustees for whom he was doing construction work would not accept.

4. Sales ⇨22(1)—Seller's conduct could be construed as bearing resemblance to urging buyer to keep goods on trial, which has been held to warrant delay in rejection.

In action for goods sold and delivered, plaintiff's conduct could be construed as analogous to importuning dissatisfied buyer to retain goods for further trial; such conduct having been held to excuse what otherwise would be unreasonable delay in rejecting unsatisfactory goods.

5. Interest ⇨39(2)—Interest prior to judgment is not recoverable in action for the reasonable value of goods sold.

In action to recover reasonable value of goods sold and delivered, no interest is recoverable prior to judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by the Western Iron Works against William J. Smith to recover $1,150 for goods sold and delivered. From a judgment for plaintiff for $250 without interest, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Waldo F. Postel, of San Francisco (L. Seidenberg, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Geary & Geary and C. J. Tauzer, all of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff instituted this action to recover $1,150 for locker cars and other iron work alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendant for the Analy Union high school in Sebastopol, Cal. The complaint was in two counts of indebtedness, one for the reasonable value and the other upon an open book account. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $250 without interest, being for a certain part of the iron work, but was denied judgment for the value of the locker cars. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The main points on appeal are whether the locker cars were ordered and whether the defendant acted promptly enough in rejecting them. Both questions are largely questions of fact, and the appeal therefore presents chiefly the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and judgment of the court. The evidence discussed and printed in the appellant's briefs would make it appear that the locker cars were ordered and that after delivery they were accepted and retained an unreasonable length of time before final and definite rejection. Respondent prints other evidence, however, to the contrary.

In 1926, respondent and appellant entered into a contract for the supply of steel and ironwork for the high school building. Some material (not involved in this action) was delivered. Then in April, 1926, respondent notified appellant that the bond election had failed and that the original plans for the high school building would not be carried out by the high school trustees. Respondent settled for materials already delivered and the contract was considered as ended.

Thereafter on July 16, 1926, respondent wrote appellant: "They are going to complete the gym here as per the original contract now, and I would like to know if there will be an advance over your original contract with me. I wish you would send all the pipe railing and fixtures for around the bleachers and balcony." Appellant claims the expression in the letter "fixtures for around the bleachers and balcony" included and meant the locker cars. Respondent claims it did not. Appellant claims this letter was an order and made a new written contract. Respondent claims to the contrary.

After receipt of the letter appellant sent its secretary, Mr. Gates, to Sebastopol, July 20, 1926. According to the testimony of appellant and Mr. Parsons, foreman on the building, the conversations at that time and place between Mr. Gates and respondent were to the effect that owing to lack of funds the school board would not purchase locker cars and safety treads. Mr. Gates nevertheless took measurements for the locker cars and safety treads with the expressed understanding that it was only for possible future use and to save another trip to Sebastopol in case it should be finally decided by the board to do that part of the work. Respondent, however, at that time did order certain thresholds and pipes delivered. Thereafter a shipment arrived at Sebastopol. Respondent ordered his truckman to deliver it to the high school building. On October 29, 1926, respondent wrote appellant: "You sent some locker cars up here for the Sebastopol Auditorium and they are not in the contract and the Trustees will not accept them." Thereafter respondent went to San Francisco and talked with the representatives of appellant. He told them that the locker cars had not been ordered, and Mr. Morris, appellant's manager, asked him to "see if he could not have the Board take them over." In February respondent wrote appellant inquiring on behalf of the school trustees about the probable cost of changing the size of the locker cars. The reply was that the change would be impracticable. Then on March 26, 1927, respondent reshipped the locker cars to appellant.

[1] Under the testimony the court was warranted in deciding that the locker cars had not been ordered. It is very doubtful whether the letter itself of July 16, 1926, was an order because of its wording, and because appellant is not suing upon the theory of a revival of the original express contract, but for the reasonable value (different from the original agreed price) as though the letter was a new contract. Taking the letter in connection with the conversations with Gates upon his visit to Sebastopol, the court was at full liberty to decide that the letter was only an inquiry, so treated by the parties, that the real order was as modified by the oral conversation, and that it included only that part of the ironwork for which judgment was confessed.

[2-4] It is true that a consignee of goods may so conduct himself in respect to the acceptance and retention of the goods for an unreasonable time without rejection as to be held to have waived his right to object. This is a question of fact, however, which, when decided by the trial court, is to be viewed by the reviewing court like any other question of fact. The court could construe the letter of October 29, 1926, as a rejection even though it stated "the trustees will not accept them" instead of "I will not accept them." It definitely stated "they are not on the contract." Furthermore, the conversation of respondent with appellant's manager in San Francisco could well be construed as conduct by the appellant analogous to importuning a dissatisfied buyer to retain goods for further trial. Such conduct has been held to excuse what otherwise would be an unreasonable delay on the part of a buyer to reject unsatisfactory goods. Luitweiler, etc., Co. v. Ukiah, etc., Co., 16 Cal. App. 198, 208, 116 P. 707, 712; Fox v. Harvester, etc., Works, 83 Cal. 333, 23 P. 295.

[5] The action being for the reasonable value, no interest was recoverable prior to judgment. Sea v. Lorden, 37 Cal. App. 445, 174 P. 85, and cases there cited.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.;
NOURSE, J.

HAVENS et ux. v. LOEBEL (Civ. 3951.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 20, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 17, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨208—Automobile driver held contributorily negligent in collision in driving at unlawful rate of speed when vision was obscured (Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121, 131).

In action to recover damages on account of injuries to plaintiff's wife, and for loss of services and damages to automobile, in collision between automobiles operated by plaintiff and by defendant, evidence held to establish that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in traveling at an unlawful rate of speed at time vision was obscured, in violation of Vehicle Act, §§ 113, 121, 131 (St. 1923, pp. 553, 557, 560), as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15.

2. Negligence ⇨93(2)—Husband's contributory negligence in operation of automobile in traveling at unlawful speed when vision was obscured was imputable to wife.

Contributory negligence of husband in operation of automobile at time of accident in traveling at an unlawful speed when vision was obscured was imputable to wife riding with him, and prevented recovery by her for injuries sustained in collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by R. F. Havens and another against A. Loebel. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, Len H. Honey, of Stockton, and Loyd Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellant.

Arthur Coats, of Yuba City, and Alvin Weis, of Marysville, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This is an action for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff Leila Havens, by reason of the alleged negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant; also to recover for loss of services and damages to the automobile belonging to the plaintiff R. F. Havens. The plaintiffs had judgment, and the defendant appeals.

This action is based upon the collision of the automobile owned by R. F. Havens with the defendant A. Loebel, mentioned and considered in the action of R. F. Havens v. A. Loebel (Civil No. 3950) 284 P. 676, heretofore decided by this court in an opinion filed on the 16th day of January, 1930. The testimony in the instant case is practically the same as in the case of Havens v. Loebel, so far as it relates to all the conditions and circumstances attending the collision between the two automobiles. In addition to the testimony of the plaintiff there set forth, and the statements in the opinion in that case as to what the testimony of the plaintiff established in relation to the plaintiff driving into the intersection with his sight so blinded or interrupted by the rays of the sun that he could not and did not see the defendant's car, and that he did so while driving at the rate of 30 miles an hour, without slackening his speed, we may add the following:

After stating that there was no object in the road to interrupt his view, the plaintiff testified: "There was a dark spot on the windshield from the glare; I tested it out and there is a spot on the left-hand side of the windshield, so you could not see." (This was after the witness had stated that he did not see the defendant's car.) Further on the plaintiff testified as to giving certain testimony before the coroner's jury, which is set forth herein as the plaintiff's testimony, when there giving an explanation of the occurrence. It is as follows:

"I was going west just about six o'clock, or a little after, and the sun was directly in my eyes; there were machines coming and going both ways; I was watching my end of the road in order to keep to my side of the pavement; I knew that the stop-signs are along on the roads coming in and I trust to this; I was taking in vision as much as I could see in front of me; if there had been any machine stopped along that side I could have seen it because there is a clear spot there, and just like that, that machine seemed to come just from space like it had been placed by magic right square in front of me; I had no chance at all; to me it seemed as if the machine was stopped dead still right in front of me; that is my vision of the thing. * * * I was driving 30 miles an hour; I looked at the speedometer just a few seconds before that; I couldn't have driven any faster and stay on the pavement facing the sun; I never drive any faster under those conditions; I absolutely saw no car on the road approaching the highway until it was directly in front of me, not until the impact was made; I hit his car; there was an awful glare and the radiator—I have practically a new machine, and the radiator and the hood are rather high; there was a glare from that and the highway."

[1.2] In consideration of this testimony and what we have set forth in the case of Havens v. Loebel, supra, there is no escaping the conclusion that the plaintiff's negligence continued up to the instant that his car struck the side of the defendant's automobile, turning it over, and under the sections of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, pp. 553, 557, §§ 113, 121, and section 131, p. 560, as amended by St. 1925, p. 412, § 15), and the cases which we have cited in our former opinion dealing with the same transaction, there is no escaping the conclusion that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. We may also add that the testimony

In this case shows that the plaintiff Leila Havens was so blinded by the sunlight that she could not and did not see the approach of the defendant's car. Under the authority of McFadden v. Santa Ana, O. & T. St. Ry. Co., 87 Cal. 464, 25 P. 681, 11 L. R. A. 252, it must be held that the contributory negligence of the husband is imputable to the wife and prevents recovery by her.

Basing our opinion upon what we have here said, and the companion case decided by this court in its opinion filed as aforesaid, it follows that the judgment in this case must be and the same is hereby reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

In re McARTHUR'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6643.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 25, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 18, 1930. Hearing. Granted by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

Descent and distribution §61—Surviving spouse having remarried and died intestate and without issue, sister of deceased spouse held not entitled to one-half estate; "widow" (Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8).

Where deceased, dying intestate and without issue, on death of her first husband, had become vested of title to community property, but had thereafter remarried, she was no longer a widow within meaning of Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, at time of her death, her second husband being alive, and sister of first husband was not entitled to one-half of estate under statute, providing that on death of widow without issue common property shall go in equal shares to brothers and sisters of deceased spouse; "widow" being a woman whose husband is dead and who has not married again.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Widow.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Proceedings between Lillian Mae Flint and Margaret I. McArthur, administratrix of the estate of Iva Farrand McArthur, deceased. From an order directing distribution of the property, Lillian Mae Flint appeals. Affirmed.

H. G. Simpson, of Pasadena, for appellant.
Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. On the death of one Farrand, his widow, Iva Farrand, became vested of the title to certain community property which formerly was the property of her and her said deceased husband. Thereafter she married one McArthur, following which event she died intestate, without issue, but leaving as her survivor her then husband McArthur. On the probate of her estate, which included the community property which formerly had belonged to her and her former husband, the lower court ordered distribution thereof to the executor of the estate of her second husband, McArthur—he having died following her decease. It is from such order or judgment that this appeal is taken by a surviving sister of Farrand.

The question presented is whether, under the provisions of subdivision 8 of section 1386, of the Civil Code, one-half of the estate should have been distributed to the sister of the former husband of the deceased. If the words of the statute be reduced to a form assumed by appellant to be applicable to the facts herein, it may then be read as follows:

"If the deceased is a widow, * * * and leaves no issue, and the estate, * * * was common property of such decedent and * * * her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the * * * brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse. * * *"

It is conceded by each of the parties herein that the construction of the portion of the statute as thus stated turns on a decision of what is meant by the word "widow," occurring therein.

In the case of Rosenbloom v. Southern Pacific Co., 59 Cal. App. 102, 104, 210 P. 53, 54, a woman was the plaintiff, and one of the questions involved on the appeal was whether, in the absence of an allegation in the complaint that the husband of the plaintiff was dead, she had legal capacity to maintain the action. In ruling on the matter, in part the court said: "* * * She testified that she was a 'widow.' 'A widow is a woman whose husband is dead and who has not married again.' Black's Law Dictionary. A widow is defined to be an unmarried woman whose husband is dead; one who has lost her husband by death and has not taken another"—citing authorities.

In the case of Commonwealth v. Powell, 51 Pa. 438, among other things, it is said: "When the property of Eliza L. Jordan passed by her will to Elizabeth P. Powell, the defendant, she was not the wife of the testator's son, for he was dead, nor his widow, for she was again married. * * * In common parlance, we know the term 'widow' means an unmarried woman, and unless it be shown, which has not been attempted, that there is a technical sense to which it is to be referred for exposition, this is the sense in which we must regard it as used by the legislature. Our law dictionaries agree in their definitions of the usual acceptation of the meaning of the word 'widow': a woman whose husband is dead: Whart. 'Widow,' an unmarried woman whose husband is dead: Bouvier [Law Dict., Vol. 3, page 3454]. Worcester defines the word thus, 'a woman whose husband is dead and who remains unmarried;' and Webster, in the unabridged edition of 1844, 'a woman who has lost her husband by death and has not taken another—one long bereaved of a husband.' The word is so entirely and exclusively descriptive of an unmarried condition, having once been married, that any other sense would be figurative."

To the same effect, see Appeal of Kearns et ux., 120 Pa. 523, 14 A. 435; Bodwell v. Nutter, 63 N. H. 446, 3 A. 421.

In accord with the foregoing authorities, it is clear that, after Iva Farrand was married to McArthur, she was no longer a widow, from which it follows that the statute upon which the appellant relies had no application to the situation which arose on her decease and the consequent distribution of her estate.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

103 Cal. App. 260

BLAIR et al. v. GUARANTEE TITLE CO. OF LONG BEACH, Inc., et al. (Civ. 3917.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 18, 1930.

1. Abatement and revival ☞55(3)—Cause of action to recover value of equity in property obtained from deceased through defendants' fraud held to survive her death (Civ. Code, § 954).

Cause of action to recover value of equity in property obtained from deceased by false and fraudulent representations of defendants held not to abate by death, but to survive under Civ. Code, § 954, providing that thing in action arising out of violation of right of property upon owner's death passes to his personal representative.

2. Appeal and error ☞989—Appellate court, when verdict is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, can only determine whether there is substantial evidence supporting conclusion reached.

Where verdict is attacked on appeal for insufficiency of evidence, only question presented to appellate court is whether there is substantial evidence which in and of itself will support conclusion reached by jury.

3. Appeal and error ☞930(1)—Where verdict is attacked for insufficiency of evidence, appellate court must assume jury resolved conflict, if any, in favor of prevailing party.

Where verdict is attacked on appeal for insufficiency of evidence, and testimony on any material point is in conflict, appellate court must assume jury resolved conflict in favor of prevailing party.

4. Fraud ☞58(1)—Evidence in action for damages for fraud held to support judgment based upon deceit against escrow officer of defendant title company (Civ. Code, § 1710).

In action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction, evidence held sufficient to support judgment based upon deceit, under Civ. Code, § 1710, against escrow officer of defendant title company.

5. Fraud ☞49—Allegations of conspiracy in action for fraud held immaterial, and need not be proved to entitle plaintiff to damages from defendants who participated in fraud.

In action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction, allegations of conspiracy between several defendants held immaterial, and need not be proved to entitle plaintiff to damages from such of defendants as can be shown to have participated or co-operated in defrauding her, since gist of action is injury done to plaintiff by fraudulent and wrongful acts of defendants, and injury is actionable whether result of conspiracy or not.

6. Appeal and error ☞1070(1)—Fact that jury disregarded erroneous and conflicting instructions held not to constitute reversible error.

Fact that jury disregarded erroneous instructions which were somewhat conflicting and instructions on questions of fact and not of law held not reversible error, since jury may disregard erroneous or conflicting instructions.

7. Appeal and error ☞1068(1)—Appellate court cannot put strained construction upon trial court's charge to upset verdict and judgment in action for damages for fraud which is manifestly just.

On appeal by defendants in action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction, appellate court cannot put strained construction upon trial court's charge to upset verdict and judgment which is manifestly just.

8. Appeal and error ☞216(1)—Defendants appealing from judgment cannot complain of trial court's failure to instruct upon material issue, absent request therefor.

Defendants appealing from judgment in action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction cannot complain of trial court's failure to instruct upon material issue absent request therefor, since, if defendants believed themselves entitled to specific instruction embodying particular special defense, it was their duty to request such instruction.

9. Trial ☞251(2)—Decree of foreclosure after plaintiff's property was obtained through fraud and conveyed to innocent purchaser held no defense in action for fraud, and therefore instruction on such defense was not required.

In action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction, decree of foreclosure after deed to plaintiff's property was obtained through fraud and grantee conveyed property to innocent purchaser held not available as defense, though plaintiff was party to foreclosure proceedings, and therefore trial court was not required to instruct jury on such matter which constituted no defense.

10. Fraud ⚡56—Admitting testimony in action for fraud regarding acts during time defendant's escrow officer lulled plaintiff into false security held not error.

In action for damages growing out of fraudulent real estate transaction, admitting testimony of defendant's escrow officer held not error, where fraud covered entire period from time of transfer of property by plaintiff to time of transfer to innocent purchaser, during which time escrow officer by his fraud and deceit lulled plaintiff into false security and inactivity until it was too late to recover her property.

11. Torts ⚡21—Persons aiding in commission of wrongful act are liable for resulting damages, though expecting no benefits and in fact receiving none.

Persons aiding in commission of wrongful act by another are liable for resulting damages, though they expected no benefits therefrom, and in fact received none.

12. Corporations ⚡423—Title company held liable as principal for actual damage caused by fraudulent acts of escrow officer in performance of official duties depriving plaintiff of property (Civ. Code, § 2338).

Where escrow officer of title company, during time he participated in fraudulent scheme to deprive plaintiff of her property, was duly authorized escrow officer with power and authority to handle all escrow transactions and at time was acting within scope of his powers, title company, under Civ. Code, § 2338, held liable for acts of its escrow officer in perpetrating fraud resulting in damage to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy Hight, Judge.

Action by Bryson P. Blair and another, coexecutors of the estate of Helen Wood Blair, deceased, against the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach, Inc., and others. Action was dismissed as to the defendant Victor Bellotti, and, from a judgment for plaintiffs, the remaining defendants, except A. E. Cronin, appeal. Affirmed.

Linnell & Linnell, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Russell H. Pray, of Long Beach, for respondents.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach and I. H. Wright from a judgment entered against them upon a verdict of a jury in the sum of $1,750, in an action for damages growing out of a fraudulent real estate transaction.

The facts, as they existed at the time of the transaction hereinafter related, were briefly these: On June 16, 1925, Helen Wood Blair, the original plaintiff in this action, was residing with her husband at Orange, Cal., but was the owner of a house and lot at the corner of Seventeenth and Rose streets in the city of Long Beach, which she valued at $8,500, and which was incumbered by a mortgage in the sum of $5,000. The defendant A. E. Cronin was a real estate agent residing in Long Beach, and well acquainted with Mrs. Blair, having been her agent in one or two business transactions. Mrs. Blair had implicit faith and confidence in Cronin, and, at the time of the transaction hereinafter related, Mrs. Blair held a note against Cronin for the sum of $1,000, and, as security for the payment of said note, she held a bill of sale and the registration certificate for Cronin's automobile. Victor Bellotti was another real estate agent residing at Long Beach and a friend of Cronin, but unacquainted with Mrs. Blair. The defendant and appellant Guarantee Title Company was a corporation engaged in the title and escrow business in Long Beach, Cal. The defendant and appellant I. H. Wright was an employee of said Guarantee Title Company, and was its escrow officer.

On said 16th day of June, 1925, Cronin, in company with Bellotti, called upon Mrs. Blair at her home in Orange, and Cronin told her that they could exchange her equity in the Long Beach Property for a ranch of 160 acres at Minot, N. D. Bellotti told her his father was the former owner of this ranch, and that it was a very valuable piece of property, and was clear of all incumbrances. Bellotti and Cronin also stated many details relative to the crops grown on the North Dakota ranch, the land's adaptability, etc., and urged Mrs. Blair to make the exchange. Finally, upon the advice and at the urgent solicitation of Cronin, she agreed to the exchange—that is, she agreed to exchange her equity in the Long Beach property, and the $1,000 note and bill of sale and registration certificate, for a deed and a clear and unincumbered title to the 160-acre ranch in North Dakota. Cronin then presented to her a deed, which he had already prepared, for the Long Beach property with the name of the grantee left blank. Cronin and Bellotti then accompanied Mrs. Blair to a nearby notary public. The notary and Mrs. Blair, seeing there was no grantee named in the deed, insisted that a grantee should be inserted in the deed, but Cronin stated that he did not know the "initials of the owner of the North Dakota ranch," and that it would be all right to execute the deed without naming a grantee; that it was a common practice to leave the grantee blank, etc. Mrs. Blair and the notary apparently accepted Cronin's explanation as satisfactory, for she signed and acknowledged said deed and delivered it to Cronin, with the instructions to deposit it in escrow, to be exchanged for a deed and clear title to the North Dakota property. Cronin suggested that the appellant Guarantee Title Company be the escrow holder, and Mrs. Blair consented to this suggestion. Cronin, on the same day, and after leaving Mrs. Blair, inserted his own name in the deed as grantee. On the same day, to wit, the 16th day of June, 1925, at 4:20 p. m., the deed was recorded in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county, at the request of the appellant Guarantee Title Company, and contained printed instructions on the back thereof to return when recorded to the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach, Cal.

On the same day, Cronin executed a trust deed on said Long Beach property to secure a loan of $1,700, in which the appellant Guarantee Title Company was named as trustee for John A. Benell, the beneficiary. This trust deed was acknowledged before a notary public, who was also at the same time an employee of, and in the office of, the Guarantee Title Company. Said trust deed was recorded at the same time as the deed from Mrs. Blair to Cronin, and also at the request of said Guaranty Title Company. Two days later, and on June 18, 1925, Cronin again called at the office of said Guarantee Title Company in Long Beach, and there, in the presence of appellant I. H. Wright, the escrow officer of said title company, and upon a blank form furnished by Wright, prepared what purports to be an escrow agreement between Mrs. Blair and James I. Butterfield, the owner of the North Dakota ranch, which agreement provides in part: "We, the undersigned, buyer and seller, enter into the following agreement and hereby instruct the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach, to carry out the conditions and agreements hereby entered into within 30 days from this date; and in the event the conditions of this escrow have not been complied with at the expiration of 30 days, you are instructed to complete same at the earliest possible date thereafter unless written demand shall have been made upon you by the party not in default, otherwise the same is automatically extended. Seller James I. Butterfield * * * Address, Long Beach City, who agrees to sell the buyer, Helen Wood Blair * * * Address, 504 W. Lemon, Orange, California, who agrees to purchase * * * 160 acres in North Dakota * * * in exchange for house and lot, Cor. 17th and Rose, Long Beach, two lots in Bellflower, and Haynes sedan; subject to mortgage on house and lot of $5,000.00. * * * Interest, insurance and rents are to be pro-rated to date, close of escrow. * * * The Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach is hereby instructed to draw the usual form of Grant Deed, Bill of Sale, from the Seller to the Buyer, and also as herein required and issue the title * * * in the names of new owner on both properties. * * * Further instructions are buyer is to deliver to A. E. Cronin pink slip, bill of sale and note and bill of sale Mrs. Blair to Cronin. The seller agrees to pay all of the taxes for the fiscal year of 1924 & 5 through this escrow if not already paid. * * * The buyer and seller do each agree to pay their half of the escrow charges and expenses. It is agreed that this escrow and the papers and the funds deposited therein cannot be withdrawn by either party before the close of this escrow, and all charges paid without the written consent of both parties hereto. It is agreed that in case the seller performs his part of this agreement and the purchaser fails to make further deposit as herein required, the escrow deposit herein referred to shall be forfeited to the seller, and the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach is hereby requested to pay same to the seller. It is also agreed that the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach shall not be responsible for adjustments in rents, interest, insurance premiums or commissions, unless the correct amounts have been furnished the Guarantee Title Company of Long Beach by the interested parties."

To this agreement, Cronin, also in the presence of Wright, signed the name of "Helen Wood Blair, by A. E. Cronin," and forged the name of "James I. Butterfield," the owner of the North Dakota ranch. Wright thereupon filed said purported escrow agreement in said Guarantee Title Company's office, and opened an escrow therein for this transaction, and numbered it 7079. Wright testified, however, that the deed from Mrs. Blair to Cronin was never placed in escrow by Cronin or any one else. The Blair deed bore no escrow number; neither did the trust deed.

A few days after delivering this blank deed to Cronin, and after Cronin and Wright opened the purported escrow above mentioned, Mrs. Blair, accompanied by her husband, went to the office of said title company in Long Beach, and was there advised by Wright "that the exchange had been escrowed and that everything in it was coming along all right," and exhibited to her the purported signature of James I. Butterfield to said escrow agreement, but did not inform her that said name "James I. Butterfield" had been forged to said agreement by Cronin.

Thereafter, and on July 6, 1925, Wright wrote the following letter to Mrs. Blair:

"Mrs. Helen Wood Blair, 504 North Lemon street, Orange, California. Dear Madam: Re our escrow 7079

"Your escrow on the North Dakota quarter is nearing completion, but in order to finish this escrow, we must have a note of $1,000.00, and bill of sale given to you by Mr. Cronin, also bill of sale from you to him showing that he is the legal owner of his car.

"Kindly find bill of sale enclosed which you will please sign. Please return to this office at your earliest convenience.

"Yours very truly,

"Guarantee Title Company,

"By I. H. Wright, Escrow Officer."

In response to this letter, Mrs. Blair, in company with her husband, again visited the title company's office and delivered to Wright the said $1,000 note, bill of sale, and registration certificate. On this occasion, Wright informed her "that the exchange was practically completed, and that the only thing that was delaying it was that the deed from Butterfield to her for the North Dakota property had been sent to North Dakota for recording, and as soon as it was returned, the escrow would be completed and the deal finally consummated." Wright, however, knew at that time that this statement was false, that no deed had ever been placed in escrow or procured from Butterfield for the North Dakota ranch, and also knew that Butterfield had not agreed or authorized Cronin to make the exchange, and also knew that Butterfield was entirely ignorant of any negotiations being carried on with Mrs. Blair by Cronin.

Thereafter, and before Mrs. Blair had discovered that Wright's statements were false, and on July 23, 1925, A. E. Cronin conveyed the Long Beach property to Evelyn Ferguson, who was an innocent purchaser. This deed was also acknowledged before a notary public, who was at the same time in the employ of the Guarantee Title Company.

Thereafter, and in August or September, 1925, Wright was discharged by said title company as its escrow officer and clerk, and was succeeded by one J. Gordon Poe, and on September 3, 1925, Poe wrote Mrs. Blair as follows: "I have just been in conference with your agent, Mr. A. E. Cronin, and I find things are in somewhat of a muddle. I have arranged with Mr. Cronin to come to this office at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning September 8th, and meet you and Mr. Blair, if you can possibly come. This is very urgent and I must ask that you make it convenient to be here at that hour. There is nothing we can do until Tuesday, at which time Mr. Cronin has agreed that he will make a justifiable settlement with you."

In response to this letter, Mrs. Blair and her husband again called at the office of the title company in Long Beach, and were informed by Poe that Wright was no longer connected with the title company, and that the escrow was incomplete, and in a "mess," and that it contained only the thousand dollar note and the bill of sale and the registration certificate, and did not contain her deed or the deed from Butterfield for the North Dakota property. Thereupon Mrs. Blair demanded of Poe the return of her deed that she had given Cronin, but was informed by Mr. Poe that the deed was not in the possession of the title company. Poe, however, returned to Mrs. Blair the $1,000 note. During this conversation, Mrs. Blair was informed by Mr. Poe that the purported signature of Butterfield to the escrow agreement was forged, and that no deed from Butterfield to her was ever procured or placed in escrow, and that Butterfield never had agreed to the exchange and knew nothing of the purported transaction.

Through this information given by Poe, Mrs. Blair discovered for the first time that she had been defrauded out of her Long Beach property and that the title thereto had passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser.

Thereafter, and on the 7th day of October, 1925, C. E. Brumwell and Martha V. Brumwell brought an action against Mrs. Blair, Cronin, and the Guarantee Title Company and others to foreclose the $5,000 mortgage on the Long Beach property formerly belonging to Mrs. Blair. Mrs. Blair made no appearance in this action, and the decree of foreclosure and order of sale was finally entered and the property sold pursuant to this decree and order. Thereafter, and on the 29th day of April, 1926, Mrs. Blair brought this action against Guarantee Title Company, I. H. Wright, A. E. Cronin, and Victor Bellotti, and alleged in her complaint in considerable detail the facts we have enumerated above, by which she claims she was defrauded of her equity in the Long Beach property. She also alleged a conspiracy on the part of Cronin, Wright, and the Guarantee Title Company to defraud her of her property.

Mrs. Blair died before this action was tried in the court below, and the respondents, executors of her last will and testament, were, by order of the superior court, substituted as parties plaintiff in her place and stead. Before her death, her deposition was taken and was used at the trial of the action.

The case was tried before the court sitting with a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants Guarantee Title Company, I. H. Wright, and A. E. Cronin, for the sum of $1,750, as above stated. The action was dismissed as to the defendant Bellotti. Cronin has not appealed.

[1] The appellants first contend that this action abated by the death of Mrs. Blair. There is no merit in this contention. This action is for the recovery of the value of Mrs. Blair's equity in the house and lot in Long Beach, which she claimed was obtained from her by the false and fraudulent representations of defendants. All the cases cited and relied upon by appellants in support of their contention that the action abated by her death, deal with torts, none with contracts, and affect the person only and not the estate. In the case at bar, the thing in action arises out of the violation of a right of property which, by the express language of section 954 of the Civil Code, passes to the personal representatives of the deceased, for that section provides: "A thing in action arising out of the violation of a right of property, or out of an obligation, may be transferred by the owner. Upon the death of the owner it passes to his personal representatives"—and it necessarily follows that the thing in action would pass to the legal representatives of the plaintiff upon her death. Vraghizan v. Savings Union, etc., Co., 31 Cal. App. 713, 161 P. 507; Henderson v. Henshall (C. C. A.) 54 F. 320; 1 Cal. Jur. 68, 69, 70.

In Pomeroy's Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 147, it is said: "It is now the general American doctrine that all causes of action arising from torts to property, real or personal—injuries to the estate by which its value is diminished—do survive and go to the administrator or executor as assets in his hands."

[2, 3] Appellant next contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of the jury. We are unable to agree with this contention. When a verdict is attacked for insufficiency of the evidence, our power begins and ends with the inquiry whether there is substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which in and of itself will support the conclusion reached by the jury. If, on any material point, the testimony is in conflict it must be assumed that the jury resolved the conflict in favor of the prevailing party. Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243-260, 228 P. 25; Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429-431, 129 P. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 197 Cal. 1, 239 P. 332.

[4] We have set forth enough of the record to show that the verdict has substantial support in the evidence. It is true that the evidence shows that Cronin was the instigator and prime mover in this diabolical scheme to defraud Mrs. Blair of her property, but it is equally true, as shown by the evidence, that Wright, by concealing from Mrs. Blair, from time to time, the true condition of the escrow in his hands, and making false statements to her, thereby aided and abetted Cronin in carrying out his fraudulent scheme to rob Mrs. Blair of her property. It is idle to contend that Wright did not knowingly and actively participate in the fraudulent scheme of Cronin's. If Wright was innocent of any wrongdoing, then why did he, as escrow officer of the Guarantee Title Company, accept from Cronin a forged escrow agreement and open a pretended escrow with his title company? Why did he not require Cronin to deposit with him the Blair and Butterfield deeds, as contemplated by the escrow agreement? Why did he not tell Mrs. Blair, before Cronin had sold her property to an innocent purchaser, that her deed was not in escrow and that Butterfield had not agreed to the exchange and knew nothing of the transaction? Why did he tell Mrs. Blair "that the Butterfield deed had been sent to North Dakota for recordation and as soon as it was returned the exchange would be finally completed," when he knew that Butterfield had never executed such a deed and that the whole proposed exchange was fictitious and a fraudulent scheme of Cronin's to obtain title to her Long Beach property? If Wright had told her the facts on her first or second visit to his office, she could no doubt have recovered her property from Cronin, because she inquired of Wright concerning the condition of the exchange before Cronin conveyed her property to an innocent purchaser. Can it be said, from the acts and conduct of Wright, that he was wholly innocent of any wrongdoing? Certainly not, and it is the height of absurdity to make such a claim. Wright's own admissions are sufficient to show his participation in the fraudulent scheme of Cronin's. The evidence is also sufficient to support a judgment against Wright based upon deceit. Section 1710, Civ. Code.

[5] Appellants argue that respondents have wholly failed to prove that a conspiracy existed between Cronin, Bellotti, and Wright to obtain the deed from Mrs. Blair and defraud her of her equity in the Long Beach property. Conceding, for the sake of argument, that this claim is true, it does not defeat plaintiffs' action. It is wholly unnecessary to establish such a conspiracy, because the gist of the action is the injury done to Mrs. Blair by the fraudulent and wrongful acts of Cronin, Wright, and Bellotti, and this injury is actionable, whether it is the result of conspiracy or not. The allegations of a conspiracy are immaterial and need not be proved. Mrs. Blair is entitled to relief for the injury done her from such of the defendants as can be shown to have participated or co-operated in doing her the wrong. More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 319, 60 P. 933; Herron v. Hughes, 25 Cal. 553; Nevin v. Gary, 12 Cal. App. 1, 106 P. 422; Revert v. Hesse, 184 Cal. 295, 193 P. 943; Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 135 P. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011; 4 Cal. Jur. 528; Mox Incorporated v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675-678, 262 P. 302.

[6] Appellants next contend that the verdict of the jury is against the law and the instructions. A careful reading of the instructions satisfies us that they are somewhat conflicting, and that some of them were instructions on questions of fact and not of law, but we fail to see how these instructions could have operated injuriously against the appellants. The instructions tended to prejudice the rights of respondents, rather than those of appellants. The instructions, taken as a whole, were far more favorable to the appellants than to the respondents.

If the jury, as appellants contend, disregarded the instructions appellants refer to, still this alone does not constitute grounds for a reversal, for a jury may disregard erroneous or conflicting instructions. Kelley-Clarke Co. v. Leslie, 61 Cal. App. 566, 215 P. 699, 703; Dennison v. Chapman, 105 Cal. 447, 448, 39 P. 61; 14 R. C. L. § 74, pp. 815, 816; Treadwell v. Nickel, supra.

In Kelley-Clarke Co. v. Leslie, supra, the court said: "The jury either disregarded or misunderstood the instructions of the court. The verdict was in favor of plaintiff and against defendants for the amount sued for. This presents an interesting, but by no means novel, question. It has been repeatedly held that—'A conflict in instructions which could not operate injuriously to appellant is not ground for reversal.' * * * It is only when an erroneous instruction has resulted in prejudicing the rights of the complaining party that the judgment will be reversed, and it is the general rule that such action will not be taken by the appellate court for error in giving or refusing to give instructions if the verdict is manifestly right. * * * Mr. Thompson, in his work on Trials (section 2431), says that instructions faulty or technically erroneous will not work a reversal of the judgment if the jury are not misled, or if as a whole the case was fairly presented to them, and especially if their verdict is obviously correct."

[7] We are not called upon to put a strained construction upon the trial court's charge to upset the verdict and judgment in the instant case, which is so manifestly just. Wright v. Foreman, 86 Cal. App. 595, 261 P. 481.

Appellants next complain that the court erred in failing to instruct upon a material issue. This contention is based upon these facts: Appellants, for a further and separate defense to the complaint, plead that, by reason of the foreclosure proceedings in the case of Brumwell et al. v. Helen Wood Blair, A. E. Cronin et al., plaintiff, Helen Wood Blair, was estopped from claiming any right, title, or interest in the Long Beach property, or from claiming any damages from appellant Guarantee Title Company on any of the grounds stated in her complaint. There are two complete answers to this contention:

[8] First, if appellants believed themselves entitled to a specific instruction embodying this particular special defense, it was their duty to request the court to give such an instruction. Having failed to request such an instruction, they cannot now be heard to complain. Carbaugh v. White Bus Line, 51 Cal. App. 6, 195 P. 1066; Gomez v. Scanlan, 155 Cal. 532, 102 P. 12; Treadwell v. Nickel, supra; Lahti v. McMenamin, 204 Cal. 415, 268 P. 644; Johnson v. Pearson (Cal. App.) 280 P. 394.

[9] Second, said foreclosure action was instituted October 7, 1925, four months after the deed to the property had been obtained from Mrs. Blair by Cronin, and three months after Cronin had conveyed the property into the hands of an innocent purchaser. Under these circumstances, the decree of foreclosure could avail appellants nothing in this case, and no defense could be predicated thereon. Therefore the court was not called upon to instruct the jury on matters that constituted no defense to the action.

[10] Appellants also contend that the court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of I. H. Wright, and in support of this contention state: "It has already been shown that the offense in obtaining the deed was committed on the 16th day of June, 1925, and that the escrow proceedings were opened on the 18th day of June, 1925. The offense was completed on the 16th day of June, 1925. Mr. Wright is named as a coconspirator, but the rule is that after the completion of the offense the acts and declaration of a coconspirator are not admissible for any purpose. This would bar the letter that Mr. Wright wrote to Helen Wood Blair."

We cannot agree with this argument. The offense was not completed on the 16th day of June, 1925, as appellants suggest, but it covered the period from that date to the date of the transfer of the property by Cronin to the innocent purchaser, which occurred on July 23, 1925. During this period, the evidence shows that Wright, by his fraud and deceit, lulled Mrs. Blair into false security and inactivity until it was too late to recover her property from Cronin. Wright's acts and conduct made it possible for Cronin to get away with Mrs. Blair's property, without her discovering what was going on. Under these facts, we think the evidence was properly admitted.

Appellant Guarantee Title Company contends that it is not liable for the acts and conduct of Wright for two reasons: First, because there was no proof that either Wright or the Guarantee Title Company received or kept any of the proceeds from the transfer of Mrs. Blair's property; second, there is no evidence to show that said acts were within the scope of the authority of the agent, or that the Guarantee Title Company ratified the acts of its agent, Wright.

[11] Neither of these contentions can be sustained. The law is well settled that those who aid in the commission of a wrongful act by another are liable for the resulting damages, although they expected no benefits from the wrongful act and, in fact, received none. Brumley v. Chattanooga Speedway, etc., Co., 138 Tenn. 534, 198 S. W. 775; Breedlove v. Bundy, 96 Ind. 319; Felsenthal v. Thieben, 23 Ill. App. 569; Revert v. Hesse, supra; Mox Incorporated v. Woods, supra.

[12] The evidence is undisputed that Wright was the duly authorized escrow officer and clerk of said Guarantee Title Company and had power and authority to handle all escrow transactions for said title company. It is also clear from the evidence that Wright was acting within the line of his known powers—that is, he was handling for his company what purported to be an escrow transaction, and any loss arising from his dishonesty, when acting within the apparent scope of his agency, should be borne by the title company, because it enabled him to assist Cronin in perpetrating the fraud upon Mrs. Blair, rather than by Mrs. Blair, who innocently suffered the loss of her property by the fraud of Cronin, aided and assisted by the fraud and deceit of Wright. This principle is sustained by a long line of authorities, among them being Bank of Palo Alto v. Pacific Postal Tel. Cable Co. (C. C.) 103 F. 841; National Bank of San Mateo v. Whitney, 181 Cal. 202, 205, 206, 183 P. 789, 8 A. L. R. 298.

The Guarantee Title Company would be responsible as principal for all the actual damage caused by the fraudulent acts of its agent, Wright, committed in the performance of his official duties as escrow officer. Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 578; Turner v. N. B. & M. R. Co., 34 Cal. 599; Mendelsohn & Coleman v. Anaheim Lighter Co., 40 Cal. 657; Otis Elevator Co. v. First National Bank, 163 Cal. 31, 124 P. 704, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529; Muehlebach v. Paso Robles S. Hotel, 65 Cal. App. 634, 225 P. 19; sec. 2338, Civ. Code; Johnson v. Monson, 183 Cal. 149, 190 P. 635.

We deem a further discussion of this case entirely unnecessary. Looking at the substance of this transaction in its true light, unclouded by the earnest but highly technical arguments of appellants' counsel, we find that Cronin was not only the trusted confidant and friend, but the agent and business adviser, of Mrs. Blair. His relation to her was fiduciary, and every rule of law and honesty commanded of him the utmost fairness and good faith in all his dealings with her. Instead of living up to the trust and confidence reposed in him, he procured title to Mrs. Blair's property by means of chicanery and various varieties of fraud and deceit. Then we find Wright, who was also the confidential and trusted employee and agent of the title company, whom the public had a right to believe was honest and trustworthy, aiding and assisting Cronin in defrauding Mrs. Blair of her property, and by his deceit and fraud lulling her into false security until the title to her property had passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser. The law abhors fraud in all its guises and renders abortive its shrewdest intrigues and machinations.

We find no reason for disturbing the righteous verdict and judgment of the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 306
PEOPLE ex rel. STEPHENS, City Atty., et al.,
v. SECCOMBE. (Civ. 6273.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

1. Nuisance ⇨84—Complaint in action to restrain defendant from continuing profession of userer held not to state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 731; Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480).

In action brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 731, to obtain injunction restraining defendant from continuing to pursue occupation of userer, allegations that defendant had been convicted on two separate occasions of violating usury law, and that he intended to further violate law, which would obstruct free use of property, and thus amount to a nuisance, within meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, held not to state cause of action.

2. Nuisance ⇨84—Where action is for abatement of nuisance by injunction, it is not sufficient to allege merely that defendant had committed and intended to commit additional criminal acts (Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480).

Where action is for abatement of nuisance by injunction, facts which bring act or course of conduct within definition of nuisance in Civ. Code, §§ 3479, 3480, must be pleaded, and it is not sufficient to allege merely that defendant has committed and intended to commit additional criminal acts.

3. Nuisance ⇨80—Acts constituting nuisance may be enjoined, although same acts are of criminal nature.

Equity will not withhold remedy of injunctive relief merely because acts constituting nuisance are also of criminal nature.

4. Injunction ⇨102—Injunction cannot be obtained to prevent commission of crime, or series of crimes, which do not constitute nuisance (Civ. Code, § 3369).

Where acts or conduct which are sought to be enjoined constitute merely crime or series of crimes, and not nuisance, neither specific nor preventive relief can be granted, under Civ. Code, § 3369.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Jess E. Stephens, City Attorney, and J. M. Friedlander, City Prosecutor, of the City of Los Angeles, against A. H. Seecombe. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Lickley, Ford M. Jack, and Vernon S. Gray, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Baillie, Turner & Lake and Albert E. Marks, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal following an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. The purpose of the action was to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant from continuing to pursue the occupation of usurer. The complaint contains the following allegations:

That the city attorney and city prosecutor of the city of Los Angeles bring the action as such on behalf of the people of the state of California; that the defendant has on two separate occasions been convicted of the misdemeanor of "demanding and receiving usury"; "that many other complaints have been made to plaintiff" charging the defendant with violation of the Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), and that "plaintiff has filed and prepared to file many criminal complaints" against defendant charging him with violations of the same law; that defendant conducts a money-lending business and has violated and intends to continue to violate the Usury Law as a continuous course of conduct; that "many thousands" of the population of Los Angeles, which exceeds a million persons (latest estimates of the Chamber of Commerce are over a million and a half), borrow money and do business with money lenders; that those doing business with the defendant "are persons of limited means and are necessitous borrowers," and are forced to pay him usury because of their great need for obtaining money; that unless restrained defendant "will carry out his said continuous course of conduct, and will thereby not only injure persons so forced to pay usury to the said defendant, but will also cause a loss and detriment to the community and to the economic and financial well-being of said community, and also thereby cause a loss of income to the state of California and the city of Los Angeles, under its revenues, taxes and laws"; and that the people of the state of California "is without adequate remedy of law to prevent the defendant from carrying out and continuing said continuous course of conduct and from doing said unlawful acts," except by injunction.

[1] It appears to have been the theory of the pleader, and is the theory of the city prosecutor, whose signature is appended to the briefs filed on behalf of appellant, that sanction for the institution of the action is to be found in the last sentence of section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure, reading as follows: "A civil action may be brought in the name of the people of the state of California to abate a public nuisance, as the same is defined in section thirty-four hundred and eighty of the Civil Code, by the district attorney of any county in which such nuisance exists, or by the city attorney of any town or city in which such nuisance exists, and each of said officers shall have concurrent right to bring such action for a public nuisance existing within a town or city, and such district attorney, or city attorney, of any county or city in which such nuisance exists must bring such action whenever directed by the board of supervisors of such county or whenever directed by the legislative authority of such town or city."

Section 3480 of the Civil Code defines a public nuisance as "one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal." A nuisance is "anything which is (a) injurious to health, or is (b) indecent or offensive to the senses, or (c) an obstruction to the free use of property, * * * or (d) unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any navigable lake, or river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway." Civ. Code, § 3479. We have interpolated the parenthesis-inclosed letters in the Code definition the better to set off and differentiate the various separate classes of conditions or acts any one of which constitutes a nuisance. It is very evident that, if following the despicable calling of usurer constitutes a public nuisance as above defined, it must be because such conduct constitutes "an obstruction to the free use of property" as set forth in clause (c). It could not by any stretch of the imagination be considered as covered by any other clause of the Code definition.

The complaint, however, contains no allegation of facts, as distinguished from conclusions of the pleader, which, being deemed true, would support a conclusion of law that the defendant's course of conduct constitutes an obstruction to the free use of the property either of the state or of "an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons." It does plead that the defendant has committed two separate misdemeanors and alleges that he intends to commit further crimes of the same nature. This, however, is but an allegation of past and a conclusion as to future criminality.

Intention is a mental process. A statement of one's own intention may be one of fact regarding the present state of his mind as to his future conduct, but a statement as to another's intention can be but the conclusion of him who makes it as to the state of mind of that other. Thus in Ellis Landing & Dock Co. v. Richmond, 70 Cal. App. 720, 234 P. 336, 337, it was held that "the mere conclusion of the pleader" that the defendants threatened to do certain things, "without the recital of any facts showing such intention, can add nothing to the complaint." To the same effect is Hodge v. Alabama Water Co., 205 Ala. 472, 88 So. 585. Here it is not even alleged that the defendant has threatened to, or made any statement that he intended to, continue in the future to violate the law as he had done in the past on the two occasions specified in the complaint. The allegations as to complaints which have been made to "plaintiff" with respect to defendant's usurious conduct, and as to the criminal complaints filed and prepared to be filed against him, can, of course, add no weight to the pleading, since as to offenses of which he has not been actually convicted he must be presumed innocent.

[2] Criminal conduct may, of course, be coupled with the maintenance of a nuisance, as, for example, the maintenance of a factory giving forth noisome gases, which not only offend the sense of smell of those residing in the vicinity, but also imperil their health in a district where the law prohibits and penalizes the maintenance of such establishments. But as a nuisance may exist without a concomitant crime, so may criminality exist without the criminal act or course of conduct constituting a nuisance as defined by the laws of this state. It follows that, where the action is for abatement of a nuisance by injunction or otherwise, facts which bring the act or course of conduct within the definition of a nuisance must be pleaded, and it is not sufficient to allege merely that the defendant has committed and intends to commit additional criminal acts. The only attempt in the complaint before us to allege facts which would go to show that the course of law violation which it is averred the defendant intends to continue to pursue will obstruct the free use of property, and thus amount to a nuisance, is found in the statement "that, unless restrained by this court, defendant and his agents, servants and employees will carry out his said continuous course of conduct and will thereby not only injure persons so forced to pay usury to the said defendant, but will also cause a loss and detriment to the community and to the economic and financial well-being of said community, and also thereby cause a loss of income to the state of California and the city of Los Angeles, under its revenues, taxes and laws."

The manner in which the persons forced to pay usury to the defendant will be injured or in which the free use of their property will be obstructed is not stated, nor are there any facts alleged from which a court could determine as a conclusion of law that defendant's continued violation of the Usury Law will cause a loss or detriment, by an obstruction of the free use of its property, to the community or a loss of income to the state or to the city. As to the latter, the income of both city and state is derived from taxation of property therein, and while the allegation of the defendant's usurious conduct might warrant the conclusion that some of the property of his victims has been or will be wrongfully acquired by him, it is difficult to see in what way that circumstance is calculated to cause any loss of income to city or to state, since such property would be equally subject to taxation in whoever's hands it might be.

A very similar allegation was contained in the complaint in Ellis Landing, etc., Co. v. Richmond, supra, in which the court affirmed a judgment for the defendant, following an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend; it being there averred that unless the carrying out of an alleged void agreement by the officials of the city of Richmond be restrained "the income of said city will be reduced and the taxable burden of plaintiff will be increased, to his irreparable injury and damage."

The pleading here is of a similar nature to that in State v. Johnson, 26 N. M. 20, 188 P. 1109, 1110, a case in which the state of New Mexico brought an action to enjoin the defendant from continuing the practice of medicine and osteopathy without a license as provided by law. The complaint averred that such illegal practice constituted a nuisance "and is dangerous, detrimental, and injurious to the health of the inhabitants of the county of Bernalillo and state of New Mexico," but pleaded no facts showing in what way it was, or, if continued, would be, either dangerous, detrimental, or injurious to the public health. It was held that this allegation was a mere conclusion of the pleader, and not an averment of fact, and the judgment of the trial court sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the action was affirmed. Such an allegation is akin to one that the plaintiff will, unless an injunction be granted, suffer irreparable injury and that he has no adequate remedy at law, and is regarded as a mere conclusion of the pleader, unless accompanied by a statement of facts from which the court can draw the conclusion which the pleader himself has stated. Bishop v. Owens, 5 Cal. App. 83, 89 P. 844. "The mere allegation that irreparable injury will result to the complainant, unless protection is extended to him, is not sufficient; the facts must be stated, that the court may see that the apprehensions of irreparable mischief are well founded." Carlisle v. Stevenson, 3 Md. Ch. 499, quoted in Mechanics' Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 601, 17 P. 703; Torbit v. Warner (Mo. Sup.) 217 S. W. 40.

[3] The greater part of appellant's briefs is taken up by a discussion of the legal proposition that equity will not withhold the remedy of injunctive relief merely because the acts constituting a nuisance are also of a criminal nature. There is no question of the correctness of this statement (Pierce v. Stablen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 P. 324; In re Wood, 194 Cal. 49, 227 P. 908, 909; People v. Gold Run D. & M. Co., 66 Cal. 138, 4 P. 1152, 56 Am. Rep. 80; Weis v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 730, 159 P. 464; Herald v. Glendale Lodge, 46 Cal. App. 325, 189 P. 329, 333), but it must appear that the acts, condition of property, or course of conduct complained of fall within the definition of a nuisance as laid down by our laws, and that the injury is, and if the wrong is persisted in will continue to be, of a tangible character, affecting (where property is involved) some designated property.

This principle is demonstrated by the California cases relied on by appellant. Thus the cases of People v. Truckee Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 P. 374, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183, People v. Stafford Packing Co., 193 Cal. 719, 227 P. 485, and People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., 195 Cal. 548, 234 P. 398, 38 A. L. R. 1186, involve acts which, in addition to being forbidden by law, amounted to obstruction to the free use of property of the state, to wit, fish within the territorial waters of the state, title to which is vested in the state and by it held in trust for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof.

People v. Gold Run, etc., Co., supra, involved the dumping of tailings from mining operations into the American and Sacramento rivers, thereby shallowing and widening them, increasing the liability of overflow, with consequent danger of disastrous floods, and affecting their navigability, a clear case of that type of nuisance within the purview of clause (d) of section 3479 of the Civil Code, and constituting as well an obstruction of the free use of the property, a navigable river, of the state. Pierce v. Stablen's Union, supra, had to do with an actual interference with the plaintiff's business, accompanied by threats of continued trespasses upon his property.

In re Wood, supra, was a case in which the petitioner sought release on habeas corpus from imprisonment for contempt consisting of the violation of an injunction restraining him and other members of the Industrial Workers of the World from "further conspiring with each other to carry out, and from carrying out, or attempting to carry out, their conspiracy to injure, destroy, and damage property in the state of California, and to take over and assume possession of the industries and properties in said state," and from circulating printed matter advocating the destruction of property. The court noted that among the aims of petitioner's organization, for which the affidavits on injunction showed that he had been busily recruiting members, was "the overthrow of organized government by unlawful means, among which are sabotage, arson, and other crimes of violence and oppression."

In Herald v. Glendale Lodge, supra, the right of a member of a lodge of Elks to have the lodge enjoined from serving beer in violation of a city ordinance was upheld upon the theory that such criminal conduct would result in prosecutions, as a result of which the lodge would be fined and put to expense for legal services, "and that such fines, costs, and expenses will fall upon the membership of the club, or at least be paid from money in which the members have an interest." The court there said: "This procedure is not against the infraction of law in itself, but against the infliction upon the club and its members of the pecuniary loss, as well, perhaps, as social odium, affecting the material prosperity of the club, growing out of the unlawful method adopted by the managers in carrying on its business."

[4] But where the acts or conduct complained of constitute merely a crime or series of crimes, the rule as laid down in section 3369 of the Civil Code applies: "Neither specific nor preventive relief can be granted to enforce a penal law, except in a case of nuisance." This rule is reiterated in the cases we have just mentioned. As was well said in State v. Ehrlick, 65 W. Va. 700, 64 S. E. 935, 939, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691: "It is not the criminality of the act that gives jurisdiction in equity, but the deprivation of personal and property rights interfered with, injured, destroyed, or taken away by the unlawful act. For the mere vindication of the criminal law and the enforcement of the public policy of the state, let it be founded upon moral or other considerations, the legal remedy by indictment and prosecution is fully adequate and peculiarly appropriate."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 340

PACIFIC FRUIT EXCHANGE v. DUKE
et al. (Civ. 3949.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Mortgages ⇨47—Words of grant or conveyance of property are not required to constitute valid mortgage (Civ. Code, § 2920).

Words of grant or conveyance of property are not required to constitute valid mortgage, since mortgage is merely written contract hypothecating specific property and creating lien for security of debt, under Civ. Code, § 2920, and is not necessarily a grant of real property.

2. Mortgages ⇨40—Where document, after describing real property on which crop lien was created, stated land described was also mortgaged to secure indebtedness, it constituted valid real estate mortgage (Civ. Code, § 2948).

Where document, after naming parties, setting out promissory note in detail and describing real property on which crop lien was created to secure payment of note, stated that "real estate herein described is also hereby mortgaged to secure indebtedness herein mentioned," such instrument, taken as a whole, complied with statutory form under Civ. Code, § 2948, and created valid real estate mortgage.

3. Mortgages ⇨40(4)—Commencement of foreclosure action was sufficient notice of election to declare entire amount due for default.

Commencement of action to foreclose mortgage was sufficient notice of election to declare entire amount due for default of payment of principal and interest.

4. Mortgages ⇨105—Where conflict respecting maturity of debt exists between conditions in mortgage and in note, provisions of note control.

Where conflict respecting maturity of debt exists between conditions which appear in mortgage and in note secured thereby, provisions of note will control.

5. Mortgages ⇨105—Clause in note authorizing acceleration of date of maturity for default in payment of principal or interest controls statement in mortgage conflicting therewith, where provisions could not be reconciled.

Clause in note authorizing acceleration of date of maturity for default in payment of principal or interest controls statement in mortgage which was conflicting therewith, where provisions of the two instruments could not be reasonably reconciled.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Suit by the Pacific Fruit Exchange against G. E. Duke and others, to foreclose a mortgage. From a decree of foreclosure, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. E. Duke, of Oakland, and Robert W. Huston, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a decree of foreclosure. The defendants were the owners of 200 acres of farm land in San Joaquin county. April 24, 1925, they executed and delivered to the plaintiff, which was a fruit-marketing corporation, their promissory note for $15,000, payable in installments of $5,000 on September 15 of 1925, 1926, and 1927, secured pursuant to section 2955 of the Civil Code by a crop mortgage upon all the products from said land during the years from 1925 to 1929, inclusive. The instrument also provided that "the real estate herein described is also hereby mortgaged to secure the indebtedness herein mentioned." Only about the sum of $3,200 was paid upon the indebtedness in 1925.

In 1926 the property was sold to the state for delinquent taxes, and was subsequently redeemed by the plaintiff. In 1926 the farm was not cultivated or cared for in proper manner and the plaintiff was compelled to and did take possession thereof and operate the same at a reasonable cost of $5,769.79, leaving a deficit in the income for that year of $2,233.26. No further sum was paid upon said note. The terms of the note provided in part that: " * * * We and each of us promise to pay to Pacific Fruit Exchange, a corporation, or order, the sum of fifteen thousand and no/100 dollars, * * * with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum in like gold coin, payable annually, and if not so paid the interest may be added to the principal and bear like interest, and the whole note may, at the option of the holder, without notice to the maker thereof, be treated as due and payable. * * *" For default in the payments of both principal and interest for the years 1925 and 1926 the plaintiff declared the entire amount represented by the note to be due. In January, 1927, this suit for foreclosure was brought. The instrument was treated as an agreement for a crop lien and also as a real estate mortgage to secure the payment of the note.

The facts were stipulated at the trial. By agreement, two questions only are raised to be determined on this appeal. The appellants contend that (1) the instrument in question is not a real estate mortgage, but, upon the contrary, that it creates only a crop lien; (2) the foreclosure action was prematurely commenced, since the time for deferred payments was specifically extended to December 1, 1929, by the following terms of the mortgage:

"It is further agreed by the parties of the first part that if the whole of said indebtedness, and all other indebtedness due, owing or existing from first parties or either of them during said year, to second party, is not paid out of the proceeds of said crops of 1925-26-27-28-29, the parties of the first part may pay such balance in United States gold coin, on or before the first day of December, 1929, but should the whole of said indebtedness not be paid on or before the first day of December, 1929 (time being of the essence of this contract), then this agreement is hereby continued through the season of 1930 and thereafter so long as any indebtedness remains unpaid from the parties of the first part to the party of the second part, in all respects as herein agreed upon for the seasons of 1925-26-27-28-29."

[1] We are of the opinion that the instrument in question constitutes a valid real estate mortgage which the plaintiff was authorized to foreclose for any default in the terms thereof or for deferred payments on the note for the security of which the mortgage was given. The appellants assert that the provision of the instrument that "the real estate herein described is also hereby mortgaged to secure the indebtedness herein mentioned" is defective as a real estate mortgage for the reason that it contains no language of grant or conveyance of the real property previously described. Words of grant or conveyance of the property are not required to constitute a valid mortgage. A mortgage is merely a written contract hypothecating specific property and creating a lien for the security of a debt. Section 2920, Civ. Code; 17 Cal. Jur. 696, § 5. A mortgage is not necessarily a grant of real property. Adler v. Sargent, 109 Cal. 42, 49, 41 P. 799. Neither is a mortgage, strictly speaking, a conveyance or transfer of property. Booker v. Castillo, 154 Cal. 672, 677, 98 P. 1067. Section 2948 of the Civil Code prescribes the form for a real estate mortgage, with which provisions the instrument involved in the present case conforms in every essential respect. No language of grant or conveyance is employed in this statutory form. The language designating the character of the instrument as required by that section of the code is "that the mortgagor mortgages to the mortgagee [here describe the property], as security for the payment to him of [here follows a description of the amount and terms of the indebtedness secured]."

[2] In the present case, after naming the parties, setting out the promissory note in detail and describing the real property upon which a crop lien was created to secure the payment of the note, the document further states that "the real estate herein described is also hereby mortgaged to secure the indebtedness herein mentioned." This instrument taken as a whole not only complies with the statutory form for a real estate mortgage, but it clearly expresses the intent of the parties to thereby create a valid real estate mortgage. In the case of Barrollhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. 450, very similar language which was employed in a lease of real property was held to constitute a valid mortgage authorizing a foreclosure for default in the payment of rent. The court said:

"The first question which arises in this case, is, whether the stipulation amounts to a mortgage, according to the true intent of the parties. It will be observed that the language, though concise, is very explicit. The house is 'declared to be mortgaged as security.' That the parties meant something by these words is clear, and what else could that meaning be, but that which is so clearly expressed? What language could more clearly express, in the same number of words, the intention to create a mortgage? The term, 'mortgaged,' is very definite and certain in itself, but the parties have added 'as security for the payment of the monthly rent herein stipulated,' thus giving an express definition of the sense in which they used the term." Nor is the challenged language of the instrument which creates the real estate mortgage repugnant to the terms of the same document providing for the crop lien. The real estate mortgage and the crop lien are merely cumulative methods of securing the payment of the note.

[3-5] The foreclosure proceeding was not commenced prematurely. The defendants were in default of payments of both principal and interest for the years of 1925 and 1926. The specific terms of the note authorized the holder thereof to declare the entire amount due for default at any time without notice to the makers thereof. The plaintiff elected to do so. The commencement of the action was sufficient notice of this election. It is true that the provision of the contract heretofore quoted purports to allow the defendants to pay the deficiency in any annual installments which were due, "on or before the first day of December, 1929." The language of the note and this provision of the contract are utterly and irreconcilably inconsistent. Where a conflict respecting the maturity of a debt exists between the conditions which appear in a mortgage and in the note secured thereby, the provisions of the note will control. 1 Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) 82, § 71; 19 R. C. L. 493, § 287; 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, note.

A clause in a note authorizing the acceleration of the date of maturity for default in the payment of principal or interest will control a statement in the mortgage which is conflicting therewith unless the provisions of the two instruments may be reasonably reconciled. 19 R. C. L. 494, § 290. It is true that when the note is silent regarding an option on the part of the holder thereof to declare the entire debt due for default in the payment of an installment of interest and the mortgage contains such an acceleration clause, the latter will control. 41 C. J. 453, § 340. This is because the provisions of the two instruments are not repugnant and may be reconciled by adding to the note the further remedy for default which is provided by the mortgage. In the present case, however, the provisions respecting the maturity of the note and mortgage are irreconcilable and the default clause of the note must, therefore, prevail.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 354

LIEBMAN v. RICHMOND et al. (Civ. 7131.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 23, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Nuisance ☞65—Attorney could not maintain action to abate courthouse as nuisance; it being maintained by express authority of statute (Civ. Code, § 3482; Pol. Code, § 4041).

Under Civ. Code, § 3482, attorney at law could not maintain action to abate county courthouse as nuisance; it being maintained by express authority of Pol. Code, § 4041.

2. Nuisance ☞80—That county supervisors were not doing their duty was not basis for action to abate county courthouse as nuisance (Pen. Code, § 758).

That county supervisors were not doing their duty, in that county courthouse was defective, unsanitary, decayed, deteriorated, etc., was not basis for action to abate courthouse as nuisance, although it might be basis for different kind of action under Pen. Code, § 758.

3. Nuisance ☞61—Dilapidated wooden building is not nuisance per se.

A dilapidated wooden building is not a nuisance per se.

4. Counties ☞143—Where county courthouse becomes out of repair and for that reason person is injured, such person has remedy by action for damages (St. 1923, p. 675).

Where county courthouse becomes out of repair, broken down, or dangerous, and for that reason person is injured, such person has remedy by way of action for damages under St. 1923, p. 675.

5. Statutes ☞233—In absence of express words to contrary, state is not included within general terms of statute.

In absence of express words to contrary, state is not included within the general terms of a statute.

6. States ☞191(1)—State may not be sued without its consent.

State may not be sued except it gives its consent.

7. States ☞191(1)—Statute giving state's consent to be sued will not be construed in favor of private litigant.

Statute giving consent of state to be sued will not be construed in favor of a private litigant.

8. Nuisance ☞82—If statutes do not expressly include right to sue counties to abate nuisance, power does not exist.

If statutes do not expressly include right to sue counties to abate a nuisance, such power does not exist.

9. Nuisance ☞84—Complaint to abate courthouse as nuisance did not state facts warranting recovery of damages where there was no attempt to plead negligence or amount of damages, if any (St. 1923, p. 675).

Complaint by attorney at law to abate county courthouse as nuisance did not state facts warranting recovery of damages under St. 1923, p. 675, where no attempt was made to plead negligence or to plead amount of damages, if any.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Walter V. Tryon, Judge.

Suit by Richard Liebman against Ralph Richmond and others, as the Board of Supervisors of Alameda County, and another, to abate the courthouse of Alameda County as a nuisance. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Richard Liebman, of Oakland, in pro. per. Earl Warren, Dist. Atty., Frank M. Ogden, Asst. Dist. Atty., and James H. Oakley, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Oakland, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to abate the courthouse of Alameda county, alleging it to be a nuisance. The defendants appeared and interposed a demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff has appealed.

Among other things, it is alleged that Alameda county is a subdivision of the state; that the personal defendants are the supervisors of Alameda county; that plaintiff is an attorney at law, practicing before the courts of Alameda county, and in particular before the courts located in the courthouse; that the courthouse was built in 1868; that it consists of two stories and a basement, and that there is a cupola thereon weighing six tons; that the joists of the floor are rotten; that a portion of the roof is rotten; that the foundations of the cupola are crumbling and giving way; that the stairway is weakened; that pieces of the plaster in the ceiling are constantly falling; that the floor trembles when walked across; that the roof leaks; that the sanitary system is inadequate; that the courtrooms are dark; that the acoustic properties in the courtrooms are poor; that there is no ventilating system in the building; and that the heating system is inadequate.

The defendants assert that this plaintiff should show (1) that his special injury differs, not merely in degree, but also in kind, from that sustained by other members of the public; and (2) that it affects either plaintiff's property or his personal enjoyment of a right. Answering that assertion, the plaintiff asserts that the very essence of his case is that his right to practice his profession as an attorney at law is property of the highest character (Carvassa v. Off [Cal. Sup.] 274 P. 523), and that it is that right which he complains is and will be affected. Continuing, he claims that, having made that showing, it is immaterial that there are other attorneys at law who are similarly affected to the same degree or otherwise (Lind v. City of San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 340, 344, 42 P. 437). But that was an action brought to abate a nuisance per se.

[1, 2] The defendants assert that, as the courthouse is a public building, built and maintained as a place of business of public agencies created by a sovereign state for the transaction of a part, at least, of the sovereign business, it is not such a public nuisance as the plaintiff may sue to abate. To that contention the plaintiff replies that the sovereign power does not authorize the defendants to maintain a building that is "defective, unsanitary, decayed, deteriorated," etc. The defendants reply that the power to build and maintain a courthouse has been vested in the defendant board by the express provisions of the statutes, and the building may not be abated as a nuisance. The reply is sound. Section 3482 of the Civil Code provides: "Nothing which is done or maintained under the express authority of a statute can be deemed a nuisance." The courthouse is being maintained by the express authority of the statute. Pol. Code, § 4041. But it is said the defendants are not doing their duty. If that is true, it is not a basis for this action, but may be a basis for a different kind of an action. Pen. Code, § 758. The defendants cite and rely on Commonwealth v. Reed, 34 Pa. 275, 71 Am. Dec. 661. That case involved a portion of the Erie Canal which was constructed by the state of Pennsylvania. Later defendant purchased. At page 282 the court said:

"We should suppose that works of internal improvement, erected at the expense and by the officers of the state, for the benefit of the citizens at large, never could be regarded by the law as a nuisance; for the sovereign authority has expressly intended them to advance the prosperity of the community. If this be so, how is it possible, that their character should be entirely altered by being placed in the hands of a private company, with an express requirement that they should be kept up for the purposes of the canal, in order that it may be and remain a public highway? The Commonwealth and its agents could not have been indicted, and it seems clear, that the company and its officers occupy precisely the same position.

"It would, indeed, be strange, that any legal proceeding could be instituted in a county through which a great public work passes, by which the whole purposes of the improvement might be destroyed, upon the singular allegation, that what has been constructed under the express authority of the Legislature, is a great public nuisance."

[3, 4] The case is particularly persuasive as it is one of the authorities on which our Code section was based. See Commissioner's note in Ann. Code 1872. Butler et al. v. State, 6 Ind. 165, 166, 167, New Albany & Salem R. Co. v. Higman, 18 Ind. 77, 78, 79, and II Wood on Nuisances, §§ 753, 757, 758, are to the same effect. Another authority cited by the commissioners is First Baptist Church v. Utica & Sch. Railroad Co., 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 313. At page 318 the court said: "But that which is authorized by an act of the Legislature cannot be a nuisance. The reason that a private action will not lie for a common nuisance, unless there be special or particular damage, is not only because of multiplicity of suits, but the king is intrusted with the remedy. (Iveson v. Moore, Com. 59.) A party having this license from government may be liable civiliter for a misuse of his privileges on the principle sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, but not criminaliter; nor can the erection be abated as a nuisance. (Sutherland, J. in Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cowen, 167 [15 Am. Dec. 462]; The People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195 [8 Am. Dec. 382].) Where a railroad corporation had authority by statute to make a railway on a given line, not deviating therefrom over 100 yards, and within that limit made their track about one rod from an ancient highway, and the horses of travelers were in consequence frightened by their trains, it was held that this interference with the rights of the public must be taken to have been sanctioned and contemplated by the Legislature; and that an indictment for a nuisance would not lie. (Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30.) And there are several authorities bearing upon the same point. (Citing long list of cases.)" See, also, Stoughton v. State of Wisconsin, 5 Wis. 291, 297; Call v. Allen, 83 Mass. (1 Allen) 137, 143; Butler et al. v. State, 6 Ind. 165, 166, 167; New Albany & Salem R. Co. v. Higman, 18 Ind. 77, 78, 79. The plaintiff cites and relies on Adams v. City of Modesto, 131 Cal. 501, 63 P. 1083; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 P. 557; People v. City of Reedley, 66 Cal. App. 409, 226 P. 408; and Lind v. City of San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 340, 42 P. 437.

Those cases involved nuisances per se, but a dilapidated wooden building is not a nuisance per se. 46 C. J. 699, § 147. Again those cases involved cities, not counties, and the rights of the plaintiff are not the same. 43 C. J. 956, § 1734. The plaintiff also cites and relies on Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. (C. C.) 18 F. 753, and Indianapolis Water Co. v. American S. Co. (C. C.) 57 F. 1000. Instead of being opposed to anything said by us, the two authorities are in accord. In no one of the cases cited by the plaintiff is it held that a public improvement which has been constructed in a manner not unlawful and for a purpose expressly authorized by law can be abated as a nuisance. If, as in this case, by reason of subsequent events, any part of the said public improvement becomes out of repair, broken down, or dangerous and for that reason a person is injured, such person has his remedy, but that remedy is not an action to abate the public improvement. It is an action for damages. Stats. 1923, p. 675; 2 Wood on Nuisances (3d Ed.) §§ 753, 757; 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. 718, note 8; 20 R. C. L. 500, note 7; Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 167, 15 Am. Dec. 462; Eastman v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 44 N. H. 143, 82 Am. Dec. 201, 212, 213; Louisville & N. T. Co. v. Lelleyett, 114 Tenn. 368, 85 S. W. 881, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; Zimmerman v. Gritzmacher, 53 Or. 206, 98 P. 875, 1135, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 299; Toledo Disposal Co. v. State, 89 Ohio St. 230, 106 N. E. 6, L. R. A. 1915B, 1207; Campbell v. Jackman, 140 Iowa, 475, 118 N. W. 755, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288; Pickens v. Coal River Boom & T. Co., 66 W. Va. 10, 13, 65 S. E. 865, 866, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354, at page 357. In the latter case, the Supreme Court of West Virginia said: "But for the charter the boom would be a public nuisance, but that makes it a lawful structure as to the state and the public. The state or an individual cannot abate it as a public nuisance; it cannot be indicted as a nuisance. (Citing cases.) An individual affected by a private nuisance may peaceably abate it. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 79. But he cannot do so if the work is under charter rights."

[5-8] Looking at the question from a different angle, we come to the same conclusion. It is settled law that, in the absence of express words to the contrary, the state is not included within the general terms of a statute. Whittaker v. County of Tuolumne, 96 Cal. 100, 30 P. 1016; Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 P. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451. It may not be sued except it gives its consent. 23 Cal. Jur. 578. Statutes giving consent will not be construed in favor of a private litigant. Berton v. All Persons, 176 Cal. 610, 170 P. 151. That rule applies to each of the counties as agencies of the state. Whittaker v. County of Tuolumne, supra. The measure of any of those statutes is the measure of the right. If the statutes do not expressly include the right to sue one of the counties to abate a nuisance, the power does not exist. 46 C. J. 749, § 344; 15 C. J. 569, § 273. Plaintiff has not cited any statute, and we know of none, that expressly gives him the right to maintain this action.

[9] If we view the action as one to recover damages, the complaint is insufficient. The plaintiff's rights are defined, as against these defendants, by chapter 328, p. 675, Statutes of 1923. The plaintiff has made no attempt to plead negligence or to plead the amount of his damages, if any.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J

103 Cal. App. 329

PEOPLE v. ELLIOTT et al. (Cr. 1881.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 22, 1930.

1. Criminal law ☞763, 764 (13)—Instruction on circumstantial evidence held not erroneous as comment on evidence.

In prosecution for attempted bribery, instruction to effect that law makes no distinction between direct and circumstantial evidence in proving guilt, and that conviction is warranted if jury is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that words, acts, and conduct of defendants unmistakably carried import that it was bribe defendants were seeking, notwithstanding specific words asking for bribe might not have been used, held not erroneous, as violating constitutional provision forbidding comment on evidence.

2. Criminal law ☞823 (16)—Instruction warranting conviction of codefendant of attempted bribery if he aided and abetted defendant held not erroneous, in view of other instructions, covering same subject.

In prosecution for attempted bribery, instruction warranting conviction of codefendant if he aided and abetted defendant held not erroneous, in view of other instructions, defining word "abet" and requiring jury to be satisfied that codefendant knowingly and corruptly aided and abetted defendant.

3. Criminal law ☞1043 (2)—Appellate court need not make special examination of instructions to ascertain alleged inconsistency, where defendants did not point out inconsistency.

Where defendants, appealing from conviction for attempted bribery, contended that several instructions were inconsistent, but did not support contention by any specific statement regarding particular in which alleged inconsistency exists, appellate court held under no duty to make special examination of several instructions for purpose of ascertaining merits of claim.

4. Bribery ☞14—Instruction in prosecution for attempted bribery, warranting conviction if defendant negotiated bribe, provided codefendant aided and abetted, held not erroneous under information and evidence.

In prosecution for attempted bribery, instruction in effect warranting conviction if defendant negotiated bribe, provided jury also found codefendant aided and abetted defendant, held not erroneous, where information charged defendants with crime of attempted bribery and evidence showed that but one defendant actually suggested bribe.

5. Bribery ☞14—Instruction in prosecution for attempted bribery, defining what constitutes abetting another in commission of criminal offense, held not erroneous; "abet."

In prosecution for attempted bribery, instruction that to "abet" another in commission of criminal offense means to knowingly and with criminal intent aid, promote, encourage, or instigate, by act or counsel, commission of such offense, held not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Abet.]

6. Criminal law ☞755½—Instruction in prosecution for attempted bribery, defining what constitutes abetting commission of crime, held not erroneous as constituting instruction of fact (Const. art. 6, § 19).

In prosecution for attempted bribery, instruction that to abet commission of crime means to knowingly and with criminal intent aid, promote, encourage, or instigate, by act or counsel, or by both, commission of such criminal offense, held not erroneous, as constituting instruction of fact, in violation of Const. art. 6, § 19.

7. Bribery ☞13—Criminal law ☞1159(3)—Determination of truth of conflicting testimony in prosecution for attempted bribery held for jury, and its conclusion is final.

In prosecution for attempted bribery, determination of truth of conflicting testimony held for jury, and its conclusion is final.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walton J. Wood, Judge.

Orion L. Elliott and another were convicted of asking and agreeing to receive a bribe, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph W. Ryan and Frank J. Ryan, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendants (who were police officers), were convicted on the first count of an information wherein they were charged with the commission of the crime of asking and agreeing to receive a bribe. They appeal from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Appellants' principal complaint relates to several different instructions which, at the request of the prosecution, were given to the jury. The first two of such instructions should be considered together. After giving the definition of direct and of circumstantial evidence, in effect the jury was informed that, as to the degree of proof required for conviction, the law makes no distinction between the two kinds of evidence, and that if, upon consideration of the whole case, the jury should be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendants, it should so find, regardless of whether such conclusion was produced by either direct or by circumstantial evidence, or by both such kinds of evidence. The jury was also instructed that, if it was satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt "that the words, and acts, and conduct of the defendants unmistakably carried the import that it was a bribe that the defendants were seeking, at the time set forth in the information," it would be the duty of the jury to find accordingly, notwithstanding specific words asking for a bribe might not have been used.

[1] The first criticism of appellants to the combined instruction is that, as against the provision of the Constitution, which forbids the judge of the trial court to comment on the evidence, the instruction suggests that circumstantial evidence was introduced on the trial of the case which tended to prove the guilt of the defendants. Scanned with some particularity, it is possible that in some of its parts the instruction might be considered faulty in the particular to which attention has been directed; but, as a whole, it is most apparent that the instruction deals with definitions of legal terms and with abstract questions of law. As to that part of the instruction herein quoted, appellants contend that no evidence was introduced on the trial of the action upon which such instruction properly could be predicated. If such contention were to rest upon a consideration of the entire evidence in the case, the point suggested should receive serious and careful consideration. But an examination of the transcript discloses the fact that, although from the testimony adduced on behalf of the defendants only, the viewpoint of the appellants in the matter may be correct—from the testimony given by the several witnesses presented by the prosecution, "the words, acts, and conduct" of the defendants were of such character as to justify the conclusion reached by the jury that at the time stated in the information "it was a bribe that the defendants were seeking"—from which it follows that the point presented by appellants is lacking in substantial merit.

[2] Prejudicial error is also predicated upon another instruction, by which the jury was told that, if it found that "the defendant Lemmer aided and abetted the defendant Elliott,"

It would become the duty of the jury "to return a verdict of guilty as charged in the first count of the information." The point made by appellants is that the instruction contained nothing to the effect that, before a conviction of Lemmer would be justified in the law, it must appear beyond a reasonable doubt that he knowingly and with criminal intent aided defendant Elliott in the commission of the offense of which he was charged. The word "abet" is stronger in its implication than is the word "aid."

In the case of People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 492, 55 P. 581, 584, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50, it is said: " * * * A person may aid in the commission of an offense by doing innocently some act essential to its accomplishment. * * * The word 'aid' does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the definition of the word 'abet' includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime. * * * " The clerk's transcript of the record shows that by other instructions given by the court to the jury the rights of defendant Lemmer were fully protected as to the error suggested by him. For example, by one of such instructions the jury was informed that for one person to abet another person in the commission of a criminal offense simply means to knowingly and with criminal intent aid, promote, encourage, or instigate by act or counsel, or by both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense. The jury was also instructed that before it would become its duty to return a verdict of guilty against defendant Lemmer it must be satisfied that Lemmer "knowingly and corruptly aided and abetted the said Orion L. Elliott in said action and conduct."

[3] The point that the several instructions are inconsistent one with the other is not supported by any specific statement as to the particular in which the alleged inconsistency exists. In such circumstances it is not deemed the duty of this court to make special examination of the several instructions for the purpose of ascertaining the merit of the claim.

[4] As hereinbefore indicated, by count one of the information defendants were charged with the commission of the crime of asking and agreeing to receive a bribe. Appellants here complain of an instruction given by the court to the jury to the effect that "if the defendant Orion Elliott, a policeman, asked for a bribe and was then and there ready and willing to enter into a corrupt agreement or understanding with Leo Holland that his official conduct in and about his arrest for a violation of law should be influenced thereby, it will be the duty of the jury to return a verdict of guilty as charged in the first count of the information, provided you also find the defendant Lemmer aided and abetted defendant Elliott."

The objection presented by appellants to such instruction is that it does not harmonize with the accusation and that there was no evidence upon which the instruction might properly have been founded. In neither respect is this court able to agree with such contention. Even conceding the materiality of the question thus presented, it is plain that the information and the instruction are each based upon an identical situation, to wit, the asking and agreeing to receive a bribe. That the evidence introduced shows that but one of the defendants actually made the suggestion that he and his brother officer be compensated for their failure to arrest the prosecuting witness for his violation of the traffic ordinance is of no prejudice to the rights of either of the defendants, provided, as stated in the instruction, that the jury also find that "defendant Lemmer aided and abetted defendant Elliott."

[5, 6] Appellants assert error in that the trial court gave to the jury the following instruction: "For one person to abet another person in the commission of a criminal offense, simply means, to knowingly and with criminal intent, aid, promote, encourage or instigate, by act or counsel, or by both act and counsel, the commission of such criminal offense."

In the case of People v. Matezusi, 11 Cal. App. 465, 105 P. 425, this court approved an instruction nearly identical in language with the instruction of which appellants here complain. The only difference between the two instructions was that, instead of the words "knowingly and with criminal intent," which are contained within the instruction here under consideration, in the Matezusi Case the words "and with criminal intent" were omitted. It thus appears that the questioned instruction was more favorable to the defendants herein than was the approved instruction to the defendant in the case to which attention has been directed. Nor is this court in accord with appellants' suggestion that the questioned instruction constitutes an instruction of fact and thus violates section 19, article 6, of the Constitution. Its effect is a simple definition of a legal expression for the express purpose of enabling the jury to understand the law relating to the offense charged and the manner of its commission.

[7] Finally, it is contended by appellants that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was insufficient to support the verdict and the judgment. To herein set forth the evidence upon which the judgment depends would serve no useful purpose. Although the witnesses produced by the people may not have been entirely consistent in some of their several statements of fact, and although the case for the defendants may have presented what might have been taken as satisfactory explanation of their "words, acts, and conduct" on the several occasions referred to in the testimony given by the witnesses for the prosecution, nevertheless the duty of determining where lay the truth rested with the jury. Its conclusion was final. This court is convinced that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

103 Cal. App. 235

PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION v. HENDLEY et al. (Civ. 3792.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1930.

1. Carriers ⇨58—Title to automobiles shipped to dealer by motor company forwarding bills of lading with sight drafts for price to finance corporation passed to latter (Civ. Code, § 2129b).

Under Civ. Code, § 2129b, title to automobiles, shipped to retail dealer by motor company, which forwarded bills of lading with sight drafts for price thereof to finance corporation, reserving title until drafts were paid by latter, was transferred to finance corporation.

2. Chattel mortgages ⇨6—Bill of sale of automobiles, given to secure payment of note without changing possession, constituted mortgage only.

Bill of sale of automobiles and trust receipt, given as security for payment of note, without change in possession of property, constituted a mortgage only.

3. Chattel mortgages ⇨138(1)—Sales ⇨473 (1)—Owner may sell conditionally and deliver personalty, reserving title superior to that of subsequent innocent purchaser or mortgagee.

Owner of personal property may make a conditional sale and deliver possession thereof, reserving title until payment of agreed price, which title is superior to that of subsequent purchaser or mortgagee without notice of reservation.

4. Estoppel ⇨75—Seller delivering personalty under conditional sale contract to "buyer" displaying it for sale with similar property with seller's knowledge, is estopped to assert reserved title against bona fide "mortgagee"; "purchaser" (Civ. Code, § 1142).

Where personal property is delivered under conditional sale contract to buyer engaged in business of selling property of same kind and placed on display for sale with such other property with seller's knowledge, holder of reserved title is estopped to assert it against bona fide subvendee or mortgagee for value under Civ. Code, § 1142; word "buyer" in such section being synonymous with word "purchaser," which includes "mortgagee."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Purchaser; First and Third Series, Buyer; Mortgagee.]

5. Estoppel ⇨115—Mortgagee, not alleging estoppel to assert reserved title to automobiles under conditional sale contract in answer held not precluded from relying on such defense in finance corporation's action for possession (Civ. Code, § 1142).

Mortgagee, sued by finance corporation for possession of mortgaged automobiles, delivered to mortgagor under conditional sale contract, and displayed by him for sale with other automobiles, could rely on estoppel to assert reserved title under Civ. Code, § 1142, though answer contained no such defense, where complaint did not disclose basis of plaintiff's claim of title and right to possession, and it did not appear that defendant had knowledge thereof when answer was filed.

6. Estoppel ⇨75—Mortgagee's lack of notice or knowledge of seller's reserved title is necessary element of estoppel to assert it (Civ. Code, § 1142).

A necessary element of estoppel to set up reserved title under conditional sale contract as against subsequent mortgagee of automobiles, sold to dealer and placed on display by him for sale with other automobiles, under Civ. Code, § 1142, is mortgagee's lack of notice or knowledge of such title at time of transaction with mortgagor.

7. Partnership ⇨159—Either partner's knowledge is knowledge of partnership.

Either partner's knowledge of reserved title under conditional sale contract prior to execution of mortgage to partnership is the knowledge of the partnership.

8. Estoppel ⇨116—Burden is on party asserting estoppel to prove all elements thereof.

The burden rests on the party asserting an estoppel to prove all the elements constituting it.

9. Chattel mortgages ⇨177(4)—Mortgagee delivering automobiles to conditional seller, which resold them before trial of its action for possession thereof, could recover no more than value of its special interest therein (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 509-514).

Mortgagee delivering mortgaged automobiles, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 509-514, to conditional seller, which resold them before trial of its action against mortgagee to recover possession thereof, could not recover more than value of its special interest in property, which court found was worth more than amount due mortgagee from mortgagor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Finance Corporation against J. T. Hendley, the Valley Investment Company, an association, and another. From a judgment for defendant investment company, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. G. Bailey, of Woodland, for appellant.
Neal Chalmers, of Woodland, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. In this action to recover possession of two automobiles, they were delivered to the plaintiff before trial, pursuant to the provisions of sections 509 to 514 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant Valley Investment Company for the return of the property or the value thereof, found by the court to be $2,500. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

[1, 2] At the time of the transactions described herein, the defendant Hendley was a retail dealer in automobiles at Woodland. He ordered a number of automobiles from the Pacific Nash Motor Company, including the two mentioned, and they were shipped by that company, which forwarded the bills of lading, together with sight drafts for the amount of the purchases, to the plaintiff, the motor company reserving title until the drafts were paid by the plaintiff. By these transactions the title to the automobiles was transferred from the Pacific Nash Motor Company to the plaintiff. Civ. Code, § 2129b; Mohr v. First National Bank, 69 Cal. App. 756, 232 P. 748; Lawshe v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 191 N. C. 473, 132 S. E. 160. The plaintiff then sold the automobiles to Hendley on conditional sale contracts, reserving title until payment of the agreed prices. By the terms of these contracts Hendley agreed "not to sell, * * * lease, mortgage, hypothecate, or otherwise dispose of said personal property * * * during the life" of the contracts. The plaintiff knew, however, that Hendley "was in the business of retailing automobiles"; that those sold to him by the plaintiff were placed "on his floor and in his show room"; and that he purchased the automobiles for resale. After the automobiles had been kept on display for a few months by Hendley, he borrowed $3,000 from the Valley Investment Company, giving his promissory note therefor, and as security for the payment thereof he gave that company a bill of sale of three automobiles, including the two involved in this action, and also a trust receipt acknowledging that company's ownership of the property, but there was no change of possession thereof. The bill of sale and trust receipt constituted a mortgage only. Bonestell v. Western Auto-Motive F. Corp., 69 Cal. App. 719, 232 P. 734. Hendley made a payment of $900 on the promissory note, but it does not clearly appear whether he paid anything additional on account of the monthly installments of interest as they fell due. About three months after the execution of these instruments, Hendley abandoned his business and disappeared. The investment company thereupon took possession of the two automobiles in question, and thereafter the plaintiff commenced this action.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the automobiles. The answer of the defendant Valley Investment Company, which will be referred to as the defendant and respondent, denies that the plaintiff is the owner or entitled to possession of the property, and alleges that the defendant is the owner thereof and entitled to its possession. The court found the allegations of the complaint to be untrue and those of the answer to be true.

[3, 4] It is well settled in this state that the owner of personal property may make a conditional sale of the same and deliver possession thereof, reserving the title thereto until payment of the agreed price, which title will be superior to that of a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee without notice of the reservation. Oakland Bank of Savings v. California P. B. Co., 183 Cal. 295, 297, 191 P. 524. It is equally well settled that, if personal property is delivered, under a conditional sale contract, to a buyer who is engaged in the business of selling property of the same kind, and, with the knowledge of the seller, is placed on display for sale with such other property, the holder of the reserved title is estopped to assert it against a bona fide subvendee for value. Civ. Code, § 1142; Democrat-Herald Pub. Co. v. Pettit (Cal. App.) 271 P. 910; General Secur. Corp. v. Reo Motor Car Co., 91 Cal. App. 16, 266 P. 576; State Finance Co. v. Isaacson, 86 Cal. App. 113, 260 P. 580; Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 246 P. 1067; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Pacific Acceptance Corp., 70 Cal. App. 41, 232 P. 489; Carter v. Rowley, 59 Cal. App. 486, 211 P. 267. In such a case the rights of the innocent subvendee "do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom he deals directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against the innocent party, the existence of the title or power which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he has caused or allowed to be vested in the party making the sale." Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 422, 246 P. 1067, 1069. The word "buyer," as used in section 1142 of the Civil Code, is synonymous with the word "purchaser," and, in similar cases, it has been held that "purchaser" includes "mortgagee." Hughes v. Bullen, 209 Ala. 134, 95 So. 379; Brunsdon v. Brunsdon, 199 Iowa, 1099, 200 N. W. 823; In re Gill's Estate, 79 Iowa, 296, 44 N. W. 553, 9 L. R. A. 126; Halbert v. McCulloch, 60 Ky. (3 Mete.) 456, 79 Am. Dec. 556; Snyder v. Hitt, 32 Ky. (2 Dana) 204; Jones v. Light, 86 Me. 437, 30 A. 71; Eason v. Garrison & Kelly, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 574, 82 S. W. 800; Allison v. Manzke, 118 Wis. 11, 94 N. W. 659.

[5-8] Appellant contends that respondent cannot rely on the defense of estoppel, because the answer contains no such defense. The complaint does not disclose the basis of the plaintiff's claim of title and right to possession, and it does not appear that the defendant had any knowledge thereof at the time the answer was filed, and therefore the defendant was not called upon to plead an estoppel. The court, however, failed to find on the issue of estoppel, but found erroneously that title was in the defendant and not in the plaintiff. It further appears that the evidence is insufficient to prove an estoppel. A necessary element of the estoppel attempted to be proved is that the defendant, at the time of the transaction with Hendley, was without notice or knowledge of the plaintiff's title. The defendant is a partnership composed of two men named Foulks and Elliott. Foulks testified that he knew nothing of plaintiff's reserved title, but it does not appear whether or not Elliott had notice or knowledge thereof. The knowledge of either partner is the knowledge of the partnership. Hazzard v. Johnson, 45 Cal. App. 19, 27, 187 P. 121. "The burden rests upon the party asserting an estoppel to prove all the elements constituting it." 10 Cal. Jur. 656.

[9] The value of the property as found by the court exceeded the amount due the defendant from Hendley. The plaintiff resold the automobiles prior to the trial. In no event is the defendant entitled to recover a greater sum than the value of its special interest in the property. Campbell v. Smith (Cal. App.) 274 P. 758.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: R. L. THOMPSON, J.; PLUMMER, J.

209 Cal. 7

FAHRENBRAKER v. E. CLEMENS HORST CO. et al. (Sac. 4212.)★

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 5, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 3, 1930.

1. Mortgages ☞372(4)—Assignee under unrecorded assignment of rents takes only lessor's rights.

Rights of assignee under unrecorded assignment of rents as against subsequent purchaser of leased premises at sale under trust deed are no greater than, but the same as, lessor's would have been had no assignment been made.

2. Landlord and tenant ☞204—Rent accrues only on due date, and person then owning reversion is entitled to entire installment.

At common law, rent does not accrue from day to day, but only on day fixed for payment, so that person who owns reversion on that day is ordinarily entitled to entire installment due, though he owned reversion or rent only part of time elapsing since last rent day.

3. Vendor and purchaser ☞196—Grantee of reversion is entitled to all rent due at next rent day, in absence of contrary stipulation.

When the landlord conveys the reversion, grantee is entitled to all the rent which falls due at the next rent day, in the absence of a contrary stipulation.

4. Execution ☞281—Judicial sales ☞50(1)—Landlord and tenant ☞204—Mortgages ☞372(4), 548—Conveyance by operation of law, under trust deed or power of sale in mortgage, or under decree or execution valid against lessor, passes reversion and rent thereafter accruing.

A conveyance by operation of law, under a trust deed or power of sale in a mortgage, or by a master or sheriff under decree or execution valid against lessor, passes his reversion and rent thereafter accruing as effectively as a deed from him directly.

5. Mortgages ☞372(4)—Statute providing for apportionment of rent during redemption period does not apply to sales under trust deeds (Code Civ. Proc. § 707).

Code Civ. Proc. § 707, providing for apportionment of rent during period allowed for redemption of property sold under execution or foreclosure of mortgage, does not apply to sales under trust deeds.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Frank C. Fahrenbraker against the E. Clemens Horst Company, Josephine A. Hunt, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Hunt appeals. Reversed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 279 P. 172.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, and John R. Connelly, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A hearing in this case was granted by this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the State of California, in and for the Third Appellate District, Finch, P. J., writing the opinion. The following portion of said opinion is hereby adopted as and for the opinion of this court:

This is an appeal by the defendant Josephine A. Hunt from the judgment herein apportioning the rent of the lands described in the complaint for the year ending November 1, 1926.

[1] The defendant E. Clemens Horst Company holds the land under a lease from A. D. Murphy for a term of ten years, commencing November 1, 1919, at the annual rental of $1,500, payable annually at the end of each year of the term. The lease was duly recorded. During the term of the lease, Murphy executed a trust deed to secure payment of his promissory note to the appellant and on September 4, 1926, the land was sold by the trustee to satisfy the indebtedness; the appellant becoming the purchaser for the amount of the debt and the expenses of sale. On September 17, 1926, the trustee conveyed the land to appellant. At the time of the sale, the plaintiff held an unrecorded assignment of all rents to become due under the lease as security for an amount due him from Murphy. The assignment was made prior to the execution of the trust deed, but the appellant had no knowledge thereof until after she had purchased and paid for the property and had received the trustee's deed therefor. The court apportioned the rent for the year ending November 1, 1926, awarding the plaintiff $1,316.10 thereof and the appellant $183.90. Appellant contends that she is entitled to all of the rent for the year. The plaintiff's rights under the unrecorded assignment are not greater than, but the same as, Murphy's would have been, if no assignment had been made.

[2, 3] "Rent is not, at common law regarded as accruing from day to day, as interest does, but it is only upon the day fixed for payment that any part of it becomes due. The result of this principle is that, ordinarily, the person who is on that day the owner of the reversion is entitled to the entire installment of rent due on that day, though he may have been the owner of the reversion or rent but a part of the time which has elapsed since the last rent day. * * * When the landlord makes a conveyance of the reversion, the grantee is entitled, in the absence of a contrary stipulation, to all the rent which falls due at the next rent day." Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 176. In Diepenbrock v. Luiz, 159 Cal. 716, 115 P. 743, L. R. A. 1915C, 234, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1084, the following language in section 389 of Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) is quoted with approval:

"It is well settled that in all cases of periodical payments, accruing at intervals, and not de die in diem, there can be no apportionment, for rent will not be apportioned in respect of time, unless by force of a statute or of some special provision of the lease."

[4] "A conveyance by operation of law or under a trust deed or power of sale in a mortgage or by a master or sheriff under a decree or execution that is valid against the lessor, will be as efficacious as a deed from him directly. Whatever unqualifiedly passes his reversion will pass rent thereafter accruing." Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, § 318; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 180; 36 C. J. 366.

[5] In this state rent is apportioned during the period allowed for redemption of property sold under execution or in the foreclosure of a mortgage. Clarke and Cain v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 54 P. 74. The decision last cited, however, is based on the special provisions of section 707 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to the redemption of property from sales on execution and foreclosure, which section has no application to sales under trust deeds.

The judgment is reversed.

208 Cal. 697

HENIGAN v. YOLO FLIERS CLUB et al.*
(Sac. 4093.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1930.
As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Feb. 20, 1930.

1. Abatement and revival ⇨69—Cause of action for fraud and deceit in sale and purchase of land survived plaintiff's death pending appeal.

Cause of action for damages for fraud and deceit in the sale and purchase of tract of land survived plaintiff's death pending appeal.

2. Limitation of actions ⇨197(2)—Finding that facts existed imputing to purchaser knowledge of fraud within three-year limitation held warranted by evidence (Civ. Code, § 19; Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4).

In action for damages for fraud and deceit in sale and purchase of land, evidence of existence of facts imputing knowledge of fraud under Civ. Code, § 19, within three-year limitation prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, held to sustain finding adverse to plaintiff.

3. Limitation of actions ⇨100(13)—Constructive notice of vendor's fraud within three-year limitation may exist where inquiry becomes duty and failure to make it constitutes negligent omission (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4).

Though actual fraud based upon misrepresentation of material fact inhered in and if acted upon in time vitiated sale of land, constructive notice of fraud may exist within three-year limitation prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, where circumstances are such that inquiry becomes duty and failure to make it constitutes negligent omission.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨100(13)—Where agency for sale of land was terminated, purchaser suing for fraud could not rely upon confidential relationship so as to preclude imputation of knowledge of fraud within three-year limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4).

In determining whether fraud inducing purchase of land was discovered more than three years prior to commencement of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, where sale had been consummated and agency of defendant terminated, plaintiff had no right as against seller of property to rely upon confidential relationship between himself and defendant, so as to preclude imputation of knowledge of fraud from existing facts.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Andrew Wikstrom against the Yolo Fliers Club and another, in which Hiram Henigan, executor of Andrew Wikstrom, deceased, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Armfield & Eddy, Elmer W. Armfield, and Arthur B. Eddy, all of Woodland, for appellant.

Huston, Huston & Huston, Arthur C. Huston, and Arthur C. Huston, Jr., all of Woodland, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. Action by plaintiff against defendants for damages for fraud and deceit in the sale and purchase of a tract of land of 152.44 acres in Yolo county, Cal.

The action was begun more than three years after the alleged fraud was perpetrated. Plaintiff alleged a discovery thereof within the requisite period. Section 338, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc. The court found the existence of the fraud as alleged, but sustained defendants' plea of the statute of limitations under the section of the Code above noted. In sustaining this plea, however, the court found that, as a matter of fact, plaintiff did make the discovery within the three-year period, but found that, as a matter of law, the existence of certain facts imputed prior knowledge of the fraud to him. Section 19, Civ. Code.

[1] Plaintiff appealed, but during the pendency thereof died. The cause of action, however, survived. Wikstrom v. Yolo Filers Club, etc. (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 959.

It is not necessary to pass definitely upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding that the fraud was perpetrated upon plaintiff in the transaction, for we are firmly of the opinion that the action of the court below sustaining the statute of limitations must be upheld. Enough of the facts as gleaned from the findings will be stated to set forth this issue.

The whole case centers around the actions of the defendant O. W. H. Pratt, a real estate operator, who at the time in question had under execution a plan to cause the purchase of a large area of land known as the Wolfskill tract and to procure a sale of certain subdivisions thereof to various people, among whom were defendant Yolo Fliers Club, of which he was the active vice president. This was accomplished. It was the plan of the club, in turn, to subdivide the tract purchased by it and to sell a portion thereof, retaining the remainder for its own purposes, and to that end it had employed its said vice president, Pratt, upon a 5 per cent. commission, to procure a purchaser for the portion of said lands so to be sold.

At this point it is necessary to advert to a rather unusual situation. Said Pratt for more than seven years prior to said time had been the confidential agent of plaintiff in the purchase, subdivision, and sale of real property and through this relationship there had grown up the greatest confidence between them, and plaintiff relied upon him and trusted him implicitly, as the court found. It is also a fact that, during the negotiations with plaintiff for the purchase of a portion of said tract, as will be hereinafter noted, plaintiff empowered defendant Pratt to act as his agent in the consummation of the purchase, and, furthermore, during the pendency of the negotiations, empowered defendant Pratt as his agent to subdivide and sell the property about to be purchased; in fact, the sale was largely induced by the guaranty made by defendant Pratt to plaintiff that he would subdivide and sell a portion of the said property at a large profit to plaintiff. Not only is this true, but defendant Pratt did, in point of fact, become the agent of plaintiff pending the consummation of the sale for the subdivision and sale of said property and continued as such agent during practically all the time mentioned in the complaint. This relation was apparently known to defendant club, as it expressly consented that Pratt might receive, as a commission, $1,000 from plaintiff for the consummation of the sale here under attack. The actual contract of sale and purchase between plaintiff and defendant club was entered into on October 20, 1919; defendant Pratt signing as vice president of the club and plaintiff signing in his own right.

The description of the tract so to be purchased was somewhat uncertain, and read as follows: "The part of the Rancho Gueis-soli of the Gordon Grant, bounded on the North by the center line of Cache Creek, on the East by the Exterior line of said Rancho, on the South by the right of way of the Woodland and Moore Canal and on the west by a line drawn parallel to the East line of said Rancho and a sufficient distance therefrom to contain 148.3 acres of land between the ditch and the high bank of Cache Creek, together with that portion of the property lying in the low land and extending to the North boundary of the said Rancho. * * *

Subsequent to the execution of this contract, and prior to the execution of the deed therefor, both plaintiff and defendant club jointly engaged a civil engineer to make certain surveys respecting said property. The club sought to have its various subdivisions of the larger tract marked, and plaintiff had the tract being purchased by him subdivided into some six smaller tracts. After this survey had progressed to a certain point, a sufficient description was procured for the deed, and on November 17, 1919, defendant club conveyed to plaintiff said 152.44 acres of land, at a purchase price of $32,012.40, or $210 per acre for the entire acreage deeded. The deed was regularly spread of record and then returned to the bank which had loaned a certain amount of money on the property as security for its advancement of a portion of the purchase price to plaintiff. Within a very few days after the consummation of the transaction, the civil engineer completed his work, making for plaintiff a map showing the entire tract purchased by him and the subdivision thereof into lots, each lot having marked thereon the acreage therein. The total acreages marked in the subdivision comprised in the aggregate the exact number of acres purchased from the club. Plaintiff himself received a copy of this map and had it in his possession for a considerable period of time. He was cognizant of the number of lots into which the larger tract was subdivided; also of the number of acres in each lot, the aggregate number of acres, and of the price per acre desired by him therefor, which said price was largely in excess of the price per acre paid by him. He was also cognizant of the fact that no land was marked for donation to purchasers.

We will now set forth the facts alleged to constitute the issue of fraud. Across the northerly portion of said tract of land from east to west ran a fence. Plaintiff contends that, at the time he and defendant Pratt were upon the property during the negotiations, it was pointed out to him that all the land north of said fence was worthless, and that it would be donated to him, should he purchase the portion thereof south of said fence. Plaintiff claims that no deduction was made for the said waste area, and that he paid full purchase price for the whole thereof, thus paying some ten thousand odd dollars more than he should have paid for the entire acreage purchased. As above noted, the court sustained this contention as to the existence of actionable fraud in the consummation of the transaction.

Plaintiff, while a man of advanced years, was by the court found to be a man of ordinary intelligence. He was a man who had had a considerable experience in the purchase and sale of real property, and knew something of deeds and mortgages and their functions. He had a splendid knowledge of farming properties, having lived upon and managed a large farm for a great many years. Admittedly, he had good judgment in estimating acreages of land, being able also to approximate the area by stepping it off and other methods commonly known to experienced farmers.

The map introduced in evidence by the defendant showed 109.20 acres south of said fence and 43.24 acres north thereof. Plaintiff knew also that the total acreage purchased was 152.44 acres and he knew the price he had paid therefor. If his contention is to be upheld, he must have thought that he was getting 152.44 acres of land in the area south of the fence.

[2] The issue as to the imputed knowledge found by the trial court was one of fact, and each case must rest upon its own peculiar facts. We are wholly unable to say that the conclusion of said court is not supported by the evidence. On the contrary, to us the evidence seems clear that plaintiff should have known of the existence of said fraud prior to the three-year period. In the first place, the fraud, if it existed, was not concealed. The means of ascertaining the number of acres paid for and the number donated, if any, were open to plaintiff at all times. The club had directly no dealings with him. Neither the club nor Mr. Pratt did anything to conceal the alleged fraud nor to in any wise prevent plaintiff from pursuing the knowledge the law declares him to have had so as to make complete discovery thereof. As above noted, during and at all times subsequent to the negotiations, Pratt was also the agent of plaintiff and not in all his actions the agent of defendant club.

A visit to the land, or a perusal of the deed, consultation of the map, the knowledge of the acreage bought, and the purchase price paid, the fixing of the values on the subdivisions of the tract or the totaling of the acreage in all the subdivisions, or a consideration of the question as to whether waste land was to be donated to purchasers from him, would have brought home to plaintiff full knowledge of the facts upon which he urges fraud.

[3] But counsel contends vigorously that, inasmuch as the court found actionable fraud based upon a misrepresentation of a material fact to have inhered in, and, if acted upon in time, to have vitiated, the sale, the rule of constructive notice cannot be applied. He grounds his contention on the rule often announced by this court, that "every contracting party has a right to rely on the express statement of an existing fact, the truth of which is known to the opposite party and unknown to him, as the basis of a mutual agreement; and he is under no obligation to investigate and verify the statements to the truth of which the other party to the contract, with full means of knowledge, has deliberately pledged his faith." Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 92 P. 1011, 1017; Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 P. 851; French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, 217 P. 515; 12 R. C. L. p. 376.

But the full application of this rule does not meet the issue here, for, after consummation of the sale, facts abundant came to the notice of appellant that could not but have aroused an inquiry as to the true facts. The conscious fact that he had purchased 152.44 acres of land and paid the full price therefor and that no acreage appeared anywhere as donated land, either in the deed or in the map procured by him, and the further fact that, after subdivision, one tract thereof reaching the north line of the tract had been sold within a few days after his purchase and no worthless land was by him directed to be donated to the purchaser, speaks eloquently to the effect that he knew waste area had been bought by him and was being offered for sale at a profit. These facts, in view of the finding of the court thereon, bring into operation the doctrine recognized by the case of Tarke v. Bingham, 123 Cal. 163, 55 P. 759, 760, where, in discussing the facts under the statute of limitations here involved, it was recognized that the rule contended for by appellant here would give way in cases where the facts meet the following test: "The circumstances must be such that the inquiry becomes a duty, and the failure to make it a negligent omission."

The case of Phelps v. Grady, 168 Cal. 73, 79, 141 P. 926, 928, is applicable here. In that case the court, discussing laches in seeking relief because of a fraudulent misrepresentation as to value in the conveyance of real property, said in part: "While it is conceivable that a person under such circumstances might misrepresent to another at a distance the value of those lands, it is impossible that that person could have concealed [from the grantors] knowledge of the true value had the slightest inquiry been made. It cannot be said, therefore, and of course it is not alleged, that Mrs. Phelps ever did or attempted to do anything to conceal from these interveners knowledge of the true value of the land. If, under such circumstances, with every means of information open and patent before them, they may refuse to make inquiries for seven years, they may do so for seventy. There is an absolute failure to show not only due diligence but any diligence in seeking to discover during all this intervening time whether or not they had parted with their property at a fair valuation."

We think the language of Simpson v. Dalziel, 135 Cal. 599, 603, 67 P. 1080, 1082, is applicable here: "Natural curiosity, as well as business prudence, would have compelled him to make the inquiry, and his failure to make it was inexcusable negligence; and it is well settled in this class of cases that 'one will be presumed to have known whatever with reasonable diligence he might have ascertained concerning the fraud of which he complains.'"

[4] We cannot accord weight to the contention that, by reason of the confidence appellant had in defendant Pratt, he is excused from the operation of the above doctrine. We have already made it clear that we are not dealing with a mere case of actual fraud. That such fraud was committed was found by the court, and such finding, for the purposes of this discussion, was accepted as true, but we are in fact here dealing with the finding of the court that the action is barred. The question is: Was the discovery of the fraud, as a matter of law, made more than three years prior to commencement of the action? The sale had been consummated and the agency of Pratt for that purpose had been terminated; hence, as against defendant club, appellant had no right whatsoever to rely upon such confidential relationship. Moreover, the court, in Simpson v. Dalziel, supra, recognizes a principle which would forbid plaintiff from relying upon this relationship, even as against defendant Pratt individually, for the court in that case held that the confidential relation between the appellant and his attorney did not excuse the duty to follow up the lead to full knowledge as to the acts and conduct of such attorney, which inquiry was required by known facts.

In closing the discussion, we would here note that we have not failed to consider the point strenuously urged that the high bank of the creek and the fence are practically the same line and, for this reason, appellant, in view of the deed and map, would be excused from the imputation of knowledge of the fraud. We cannot see how this contention, if true, would overthrow the finding of the court. It would, at most, go only to the weight of a portion of the evidence. If the court had made a finding in appellant's favor on the issue of imputed knowledge, we would be in an altogether different position. But in fairness it must be said that not all the witnesses understood the high bank line and the fence line to be practically the same. Certainly defendant Pratt did not so consider it, and his testimony and the contract of sale appear to agree, and would have sustained a finding that only a very much smaller area than the acreage north of the fence was to be donated.

We do not think further discussion is profitable as under well-settled rules we are bound by the finding of the trial court on this issue of imputed knowledge.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

208 Cal. 740

VAUGHAN v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.★ (L. A. 11618.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Attorney and client ☞61—Whether disbarment of attorney was warranted was settled by decision on appeal therein, precluding consideration of same contentions in application for reinstatement (State Bar Act).

Question relative to whether disbarment of attorney was warranted was settled by decision on appeal to Supreme Court, and precluded consideration of same contentions on subsequent application for reinstatement after refusal of the board of governors of the State Bar of California, acting under the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), to recommend petitioner for readmission.

2. Attorney and client ☞61—Question for determination on attorney's application for reinstatement is whether conduct since disbarment warranted readmission.

Question for determination on application of attorney at law for reinstatement is whether conduct since judgment of disbarment has been such as to warrant belief that he now possesses necessary qualifications, particularly as to integrity and character warranting his readmission to privileges of office of attorney at law.

3. Attorney and client ☞4—Those seeking admission to practice law must be possessed of unquestioned good character and be above suspicion in dealings with public.

One of the requirements for admission to practice law is that those seeking to so practice must be possessed of unquestioned good character and be above suspicion in their dealings with public at large, particularly those with whom they will come in closer relationship of attorney and client.

Langdon, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application by Arthur C. Vaughan for reinstatement as an attorney at law, after refusal of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California to recommend petitioner for readmission. Application denied.

Frank R. Willis and Arthur C. Vaughan, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

R. P. Jennings, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. Petitioner makes application for reinstatement as an attorney at law. On accusations filed by the Los Angeles Bar Association, Arthur C. Vaughan, an attorney, was disbarred on December 30, 1920, by order of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles; the grounds of disbarment being that the accused was guilty of the offenses and acts charged against him, each of which involved moral turpitude and dishonesty on the part of the accused. The facts on which the accusations were based were, among others: (1) That the attorney converted and appropriated to his own use money placed in his hands by a client for the special purpose of being used as expenses in preparing and printing a transcript and briefs on appeal; (2) that, for the purpose of obtaining an extension of time to file a supersedeas bond in a case pending before the Supreme Court, the attorney made and filed an affidavit containing statements that were untrue, and known by the attorney to be untrue; (3) that the petitioner recovered certain bonds for a client, but, instead of delivering them to the owner, used them as security for a personal loan of $600. On appeal, the facts were carefully considered by this court, and it concluded that the evidence was sufficient on the three grounds noted to sustain the order of disbarment. The judgment was accordingly affirmed. In re Vaughan, 189 Cal. 491, 209 P. 353, 24 A. L. R. 858.

During the year 1927, petitioner filed in the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District his petition for reinstatement. Subsequently the court entered an order dismissing the application without prejudice upon the ground that the court was of the view that, under the provisions of the State Bar Act (St. 1927, p. 38), it was without jurisdiction to act on the merits concerning the petition. Petitioner then filed a petition for reinstatement with the board of governors of the State Bar of California. After due notice to the applicant, a hearing was had before the board of bar examiners. As a result of this investigation, the board of bar examiners made its findings that the applicant "is not possessed of such moral qualifications as to entitle him to reinstatement," and refused to favorably recommend petitioner to this court for readmission as an attorney at law.

[1, 2] Petitioner has now filed with this court what he styles a petition for a writ of review, but which will be regarded as an application for admission to the bar. Decision of this court denying a hearing in Re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 551, 179 P. 898; Brydon-jack v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 281 P. 1018. In his application, the disbarred attorney alleges that since the date of his disbarment he has not attempted to and has not practiced law, and does not maintain an office of his own, although he seems to have rendered some services for other attorneys. During all of that time, he alleges, he has maintained himself as an upright and honorable citizen. He presents testimonials as to his qualifications as an attorney at law and as to his good character signed by some one hundred members of the bar and other citizens of Los Angeles county. He alleges that he has been severely punished financially, and has suffered great humiliation and embarrassment by reason of his disbarment, judgment of which, he says, "has taught him a lesson he will never forget." In addition to these recommendations and general allegations, petitioner presents, in substance, the record of the evidence taken in the disbarment proceeding in the superior court in 1920, and analyzes the testimony in an effort to show that his conviction was not warranted. That question was settled by the decision on the appeal, supra, and the same contentions, now advanced, will not be again considered.

As to the other matters presented by the petition, the attitude of this court is well expressed in the following quotation: " * * * Where the present conduct of an attorney satisfies the court that the continuance of his disbarment is no longer necessary, it should not be required. * * * In considering an application such as the present, while of course we cannot ignore past delinquencies, we must accord prime importance to the present manner of life and conduct of the applicant; and if we are convinced that there really has been a reformation, and that the disbarred attorney will in the future be a law-abiding citizen, and show a proper regard for the duties and responsibilities of his profession, we will lift the ban that past lapses necessitated placing upon him." In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 550, 179 P. 897, 898. The question therefore to be now considered is whether the conduct of the attorney since the judgment of disbarment has been such as to warrant a belief that he now possesses the necessary qualifications, particularly as to integrity and character, to entitle him to the high regard and confidence of the public, warranting his readmission to the privileges of the high office of an attorney at law.

The petitioner testified before the board of bar examiners concerning his business affairs and the manner in which he has conducted himself since his disbarment, and introduced the testimonials as to his present good character. A number of those signing the testimonials appeared and testified for petitioner, with the result that usually follows the presentation of such indorsements bearing the signatures of a large number of persons: Many of those appearing and testifying, some of whom were former judges of courts of record in this state, admitted on cross-examination before the committee of bar examiners having merely a casual or "passing acquaintance" with the applicant, and never having had that intimacy of association or contact which would enable them to give an opinion worthy of consideration in this special and important matter. We do not doubt for a moment that the signers of the indorsement of the petitioner, who, as petitioner avers, "were among the most distinguished gentlemen of Los Angeles," had the best interests of the bar at heart, but we do doubt that this array of persons could have had petitioner so closely under their observation as to enable them, en masse, and with no showing of fact except their general statement en masse, to say with assurance that the petitioner would make an honest and reliable attorney at law. See In re Stevens, 59 Cal. App. 251, 256, 210 P. 442. The evidence of those who testified before the examiners was, for the most part, materially weakened on cross-examination.

Entirely aside from these considerations, there are a number of matters in the long record brought here which we must assume contributed to the unfavorable report of the committee of bar examiners of the board of governors of the State Bar, to which we do not deem it necessary to particularly refer. Two matters, however, involving business transactions of the applicant, may have very largely influenced the adverse recommendation. It appears that since his disbarment petitioner became a bankrupt, and, during the proceedings in that behalf, failed to disclose to the court in bankruptcy certain assets which he claimed at the time he became bankrupt. The inference to be drawn from this transaction is that the petitioner omitted the real property in question from his list of assets in order to cover a transaction between himself and a client named Hillman. The explanation made by the petitioner, under the circumstances set forth in the transcript, fails to convince us that the analysis of the situation and the conclusion reached by the bar examiners was not the right one. Another transaction which no doubt weighed heavily with the examiners in determining whether or not the petitioner was sufficiently honest to entitle him to again practice law was one between petitioner and two elderly people named Henrich, whereby petitioner, through oral negotiations, became the record owner of property stated by him at one time in his proceedings for reinstatement to be of the value of $125,000. The explanation by petitioner of these transactions was no doubt satisfactory to himself, but failed to impress the board of bar examiners. Nor are we so impressed with the showing made by petitioner before the examiners and here as to be willing to subscribe to an opinion holding that petitioner has shown such a reformation on his part as would convince, not only ourselves, but the general mind, that, if reinstated, he would discharge his duty as a lawyer with unswerving fidelity. Such consideration must be of controlling influence in every such proceeding as this. In re Stevens, supra.

[3] We deem it unnecessary to further discuss the voluminous record. The board of governors of the State Bar, through its committees and board of bar examiners, has power under the State Bar Act to recommend to the Supreme Court for admission to practice law those who fulfill the requirements. One of the requirements, whether made by regulation of the State Bar or not, is that those seeking to practice law must be possessed of unquestioned good character and be above suspicion in their dealings with the public at large, particularly those with whom they will come in the closer relationship of attorney and client. The record brought here in this case, read alone and without the critical study and analysis made by the board of bar examiners in presenting its findings to the governors of the State Bar, would appear on the face to entitle the applicant to be again admitted to practice law. We can but feel, however, in view of the opposition which has been filed in behalf of the board of governors of the State Bar, based as it is upon a critical analysis of the record, and in which the attention of the court has been called to the various points of weakness which the record contains, that the applicant has not made a sufficient showing to entitle him to a favorable consideration of his application.

The application for admission to practice law is denied.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

LANGDON, J. (dissenting). I dissent from the conclusion reached in the majority opinion. I am in accord with the first portion of that opinion, wherein it is held that the correctness of the judgment in the disbarment proceedings in 1920 is concluded by the decision upon appeal therefrom, and that that matter will not be again considered. I am also in accord with the general policy announced by the opinion in the quotation from the case of In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 550, 179 P. 897.

We now come to the action of the board of governors of the State Bar of California, in the present proceeding, in denying petitioner reinstatement as a member of the bar. Eight years after his disbarment, petitioner filed with the said board of governors his petition for reinstatement as an attorney at law and an order was made by said board referring the application to the committee of bar examiners, before whom a hearing was had. This committee filed with the board of governors their findings and recommendations, in which it was found in favor of petitioner's mental qualifications, but in which it was also found "that applicant is not in possession of such moral qualifications as to entitle him to reinstatement."

As stated in the majority opinion, this court will regard petitioner's proceeding in this court as an application for admission to the bar, and we are not bound by the findings of the said committee nor the acceptance thereof by the said board. It is argued, in effect, however, by the attorney for respondent, that petitioner has not sustained the burden of showing such moral qualifications as to entitle him to reinstatement.

The argument is based upon but two matters revealed by the record. The first concerns an alleged concealment of assets in proceedings in bankruptcy. It is asserted by respondent that, at the time petitioner filed his schedule of assets in the bankruptcy proceeding, he believed, erroneously, it is conceded, that he had an equitable interest in a piece of real property of small value, located at Sawtelle, Cal., growing out of an unacknowledged and unrecorded deed to his son, which interest he did not list among his assets. Respondent concedes that petitioner had no such interest and that the finding of the referee, when the matter was reopened for hearing, that there were no assets of the bankrupt, was proper. However, it is not necessary to consider this matter and the explanation thereof made by petitioner, as it is immaterial here. It is not disputed that the date of the adjudication in bankruptcy was December, 1919, and that the date of the disbarment was December 30, 1920. Therefore any intent which petitioner may have had to deal unfairly in the bankruptcy proceeding before his disbarment is not pertinent upon the inquiry here, which is directed to ascertaining whether, since said disbarment, petitioner has developed sufficient moral strength to entitle him to reinstatement.

The other matter urged upon our attention by the respondent involves a business transaction with Mr. and Mrs. Henrich. The outstanding feature of the record is that these people are not only not complaining of this transaction, but are most emphatic in their expressions of satisfaction and of trust, confidence, and admiration for petitioner. They deeded to the sister of petitioner a valuable piece of property under a plan by which petitioner was to build thereon a hotel building and to pay Mr. and Mrs. Henrich $1,000 a month from the rentals thereof for thirty years, after which time the property was to belong to petitioner or his estate. There are details of this transaction which probably would not appeal to the business sense of experienced people, but the fundamental thing is that the Henrichs are satisfied therewith; they intended to trust petitioner and still trust him; they were not misled nor deceived. They knew of his disbarment; petitioner told them to consult a lawyer, and they had an attorney who attended to their business. They are entitled to freedom to contract as they wish and to trust whom they wish, without interference or suggestion by the board of governors of the State Bar of California. At the hearing it was pointed out to them that certain disastrous consequences to them were possible if petitioner and his sister did not deal honestly with them, and they replied that these matters and things had been explained to them previously by petitioner, that they understood the entire matter from its inception, and that they had been and were willing to trust petitioner and his sister, and that they had not been disappointed in so doing. They had in their exclusive possession a reconveyance of the property to themselves which they might effectuate as against all the world at any moment by placing it upon record. Petitioner was not acting as their attorney, and there is nothing in the record to show fraud or deceit on his part, nor a fiduciary relationship. Mr. and Mrs. Henrich are people of financial standing and of intelligence, as appears from their testimony at the hearing and from their statements on file in this case, and presumably of some business experience. They are not "two old people," as so effectively argued by respondent. The record discloses that they are about 50 years of age, strong and active; that they contemplated just such a business transaction as they entered into with petitioner with some other person previously. Since petitioner alleges that he graduated from the university in 1902, after having previously served as a minister of the Gospel, it is fair to conclude that he is as equally handicapped with age as are Mr. and Mrs. Henrich.

It is difficult for me to see how moral delinquency can be predicated upon a business transaction such as this one is, when all parties concerned are emphatically satisfied and indeed grateful and enthusiastic; when all parties, apparently, were well informed of every fact and circumstance and possible consequence attending the steps taken in the transaction and nevertheless elected to take such steps and still so elect; when no one has been injured, and the Henrichs can, at any time, by their own action, place themselves in statu quo.

While it is true that some of the character witnesses at the hearing did not intimately know petitioner, the record shows that many of them had observed him carefully and for a long period of time, and the characters of many of the men who signed his petition and who testified that they were satisfied with his qualifications for reinstatement should be most persuasive with this court, for these men are known to the court to be conscientious and scrupulous in every way and most exacting in their requirements of members of their own profession. It is inconceivable to me that such men would have recommended and urged the admission of an attorney at law to the bar of this state without substantial basis for such action.

While the action of the board of governors in disbaring erring attorneys is worthy and necessary for the protection of the public and should be supported when cause therefor exists, there is a correlative responsibility resting upon such board and upon this court not to close the door of hope and repentance to any man. When, after disbarment, with its consequent humiliation and difficulties, a man continues to live in one community for eight years, earning his living and handling transactions involving large sums of money and requiring trust and confidence upon the part of his clients, studiously and earnestly reading and studying law during these years, looking to a possible day of rehabilitation in his profession, and when, after that period of time, he has earned the recommendations of judges of the trial and appellate courts in his community, of lawyers who brought about his disbarment, and of others with whom he has worked and been associated during these years, and when the record contains absolutely nothing pertinent against his claim of moral fitness, I think he should be given another chance.

208 Cal. 749

STEPHENSON v. NORTHWESTERN PAC. R. CO. (S. F. 12692.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1930.

Railroads ⇨327(8) — Motorist approaching crossing without having looked for trains after reaching point opposite last obstruction held contributorily negligent.

Driver of automobile looking for approach of train from point opposite last obstruction, and failing to look thereafter, though view was increased and sun had not yet set and whistle was blown, held guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, as regards injuries sustained in crossing collision.

Langdon, Richards, and Shenk, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by John Stephenson against the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion 278 P. 263.

Rehearing denied; RICHARDS, SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

Eells & Orrick, Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, and R. W. Palmer, all of San Francisco, and Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

F. De Journal, Philip Conley, and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, and W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. We ordered a transfer of this cause to this court, after decision therein by the District Court of Appeal, for the reason that some of the members of this court were not in entire accord with the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal, holding that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in the operation of his automobile, which collided with defendant's locomotive and train, and therefore, not entitled to recover in damages for the injuries sustained by him in said collision. After a further study of the evidence in the case and the decisions of the courts of this state applicable to the defense of contributory negligence we have reached the conclusion that the opinion of the District Court of Appeal correctly disposes of all questions arising under said defense, and we therefore adopt said opinion as the opinion of this court. Said opinion, written by Presiding Justice Koford, and concurred in by Justices Nourse and Sturtevant, is as follows:

"Respondent recovered a verdict and judgment against appellant for $25,000 for personal injuries inflicted upon him by appellant's locomotive and train when it collided with his automobile at the Matheson street crossing in the city of Healdsburg. Appellant claims upon this appeal that the conduct of the respondent was negligent, barring his recovery, despite negligence of the appellant.

"The crossing is about one-fourth [$\frac{1}{4}$] mile north of the depot. The train left the depot at 4:50 p. m. February 4, 1925, and proceeded north towards the said crossing, where the collision occurred a few minutes later. The railroad track crosses Matheson street curving on a large radius, the inside of the curve being to the east. About 28 feet east of the track and south of Matheson street is a large packing house extending over 200 feet along the railroad right of way and about 125 feet along Matheson street. Respondent had parked his automobile on Matheson street at the north end of this packing house near the railroad track, but where the building blocked his view of the track south towards the depot. He went inside the building upon business for about 5 or 10 minutes. Then he came out and entered his automobile alone. He said, in substance: I could see the railroad track. I looked up and down it. I did not hear any train or see anything, so I started the automobile slowly, and I looked again and there was a little grade, a little dip there (in the street), and I started slowly across the track in low gear at not over five or six miles per hour and just all of a sudden there was a flash; that's all I saw. After looking from a point opposite the corner of the packing house I did not look any more because I had already looked. Respondent was never aware of the presence of the train until it struck him. He testified that he heard no bell, whistle, or noise. The positive testimony of witnesses that the locomotive gave several short warning blasts of the whistle immediately following the regular crossing whistle of two long and two short blasts and that the bell was constantly ringing is deserving of mention, although the plaintiff and other witnesses testified negatively, having heard no bell or whistle. The point from which respondent last looked for a train prior to the collision was about opposite the corner of the packing house, which corner was the last obstruction to a clear view down the track in the direction from which the train came. At this point his vision down the track would be greatly increased or diminished by advancing towards the track or retreating from it a few feet. He estimated that when he last looked he could see down the track about 100 feet. The permanent objects on the ground there show that, after passing the corner of the packing house, one could see down the track in excess of 400 feet. During the time the last 20 or 25 feet was traversed by respondent just prior to the collision, the engine must have been plainly visible to him if he had looked. Had he seen the danger he could have stopped in safety because traveling in low gear at a slow rate of speed in an automobile in good condition. A train at 40 miles an hour would travel not over 200 feet, while a motorist travels 25 feet at 5 miles per hour.

"Counsel points to the curving track as an excuse for respondent's failure to see, but the curve was not sharp enough to conceal the train behind the packing house if the train was close enough to reach the automobile at the most favorable speeds found in the testimony. The engine was visible, therefore, despite the curve in the track, even assuming the train was coming at the speed of forty miles an hour. A 14 year old boy was the only witness who testified to such high speed. He estimated it at 30 to 40 miles per hour. None of the numerous other witnesses on this point estimated the speed of the train in excess of 14 miles per hour.

"Counsel for respondent also assigns poor visibility as an excuse for failure to see the train, but the evidence does not show this. The collision occurred between 4:50 and 5 p. m. February 4, 1925, which was about one-half hour before sunset. It was a cloudy and stormy day but not raining at the time. No witness testified that it was dark. The plaintiff himself testified the light conditions were pretty good, and that by 'pretty good' he meant 'not dark or anything.'

"The rough condition of the street surface where it approaches and crosses the railroad tracks is also assigned as an excuse. The respondent did not testify that his attention was diverted by the surface of the street, nor does the testimony indicate that the condition of the street was such as to require marked or more than ordinary attention.

"While there are conflicts in the evidence regarding other facts, such conflicts are not upon subjects which could alter the foundation upon which appellant lays its plea of contributory negligence. There seems to be no escape from the conclusion that respondent was negligent in failing to observe the approach of the train under the circumstances. The facts are not distinguishable in principle from the cases relied upon by appellant holding such conduct to be contributory negligence as a matter of law. Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Eddlemon v. Southern Pacific Co., 41 Cal. App. 340, 182 P. 811; Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21; Baltimore & Ohio Ry. Co. v. Goodman, 275 U. S. 66, 48 S. Ct. 24, 72 L. Ed. 167, 56 A. L. R. 645.

"The authorities relied upon by respondent in which contributory negligence was held to be a question for the jury show much greater precautions taken by the one injured than in the instant case. They are: Levings v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 231, 173 P. 87; Walker v. Southern Pacific Co., 38 Cal. App. 377, 176 P. 175; McDonald v. Southern Pacific Co., 71 Cal. App. 656, 236 P. 172; Badostain v. Pac. Electric Ry. Co., 83 Cal. App. 290, 256 P. 576."

The judgment is reversed.

LANGDON, J. I dissent. The evidence produced by the plaintiff is: That the train was traveling at an excessive rate of speed; that, when the plaintiff was within 28 feet of the track he looked to the left and to the right, and on the left, from whence the train came, he could see down the track for 75 to 100 feet; that he saw no train; that he listened for a bell or whistle and did not hear either; that no bell was rung nor was any whistle blown; that he then proceeded at a slow speed over the crossing, which was not paved, but was rough and contained ruts and puddles of water; that it was a dark, cloudy day and had been raining; that the plaintiff was unfamiliar with the crossing in question and had never been over it before; that he was familiar with the other main crossings in Healdsburg and knew that they were equipped with signaling devices, and, because of the lack of such equipment at the crossing in question, plaintiff believed it was not the main track, but a side track.

With all these facts and circumstances before the jury, I think the question of contributory negligence was one for its determination, and I do not think that, under the circumstances narrated above, it was negligence, as a matter of law, for the plaintiff, when within 28 feet of the track to divert his attention to his driving and not to look further for the train.

The question of contributory negligence having been submitted, properly, to the jury by the trial judge, the verdict should be binding upon appeal.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.

209 Cal. 1

CLARK v. HAMILTON DIAMOND CO.
et al. (L. A. 11916.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1930.

1. Sales $\Rightarrow$ 202(2, 3)—Delivery of ring to buyer giving worthless check therefor was conditional, and title remained in seller; sale being for cash.

Sale of ring to one giving worthless check in payment therefor being in effect a sale for cash, as distinguished from one on credit, delivery of ring to purchaser was conditional, and title thereto remained in seller, in absence of agreement that check was to be received as absolute payment.

2. Sales $\Rightarrow$ 234(5)—Seller giving buyer no indicia of title except possession of ring, for which buyer gave worthless check, could recover possession from subsequent innocent purchaser (Civ. Code, § 1142).

Seller, giving purchaser of ring no indicia of title other than possession thereof and taking immediate steps to recover it on learning that buyer's check, presented in due course of business, was worthless, held entitled to recover possession thereof from subsequent innocent purchaser; Civ. Code, § 1142, being inapplicable.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Clark against the Hamilton Diamond Company, a corporation, J. S. Cohen, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Cohen appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 280 P. 549.

Charles A. Bank, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry M. Lee and Thomas A. Joyner, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiff brought an action in claim and delivery for recovery of the possession of a diamond ring alleged to be of the value of $500. Judgment went for the plaintiff, and the defendant Cohen has appealed, contending that he is a bona fide purchaser of the ring without knowledge of defect of title, and is entitled to a reversal of the judgment.

The appeal is on the judgment roll alone, and the findings show that plaintiff sold the ring to Harry Justice, who "fraudulently gave a worthless check in payment therefor." Justice traded the ring to one Dye as payment on a secondhand automobile. Dye deposited the ring for sale with one Allen, a retail jeweler, who in turn placed the ring in the possession of one Friedman, who was in the business of going from store to store buying and selling jewelry. Friedman sold the ring to the defendant Cohen, doing business as Hamilton Diamond Company, who purchased it without knowledge of the transaction between plaintiff and Justice. Immediately upon receipt of the check from Justice the plaintiff deposited it, in due course of business, for collection, and it was returned marked "not sufficient funds." Immediately upon the return of the worthless check plaintiff brought this action for the recovery of the ring, and, by proper proceedings in claim and delivery, obtained possession from the defendant Cohen.

Further findings are that the sale of the ring to Justice was for cash; that plaintiff did not waive immediate cash payment, and gave no indicia or muniment of title to any one when the sale was made; and, in obtaining the ring, Cohen, the purchaser, did not rely upon any evidence of title in his grantor.

[1, 2] From these findings it follows that the sale of the ring by plaintiff to Justice was, in effect, a sale for cash, as distinguished from a sale on credit, payment to be made, as is customary in similar transactions, by check. As it was not agreed that the check was to be received as absolute payment, the delivery of the ring to Justice was also conditional, and, the check being dishonored upon due presentation, title to the ring remained in plaintiff. South San Francisco Packing, etc., Co. v. Jacobsen, 183 Cal. 131, 135 et seq., 190 P. 628. It seems to be very definitely settled by that case and the authorities there cited that, as between the parties, upon the check being dishonored, the seller is clearly entitled to resume possession of the property. As between the original seller and third parties, the relation is to be determined by what the vendor has done or has not done. In this case the plaintiff gave to Justice, the original purchaser, no indicia of title, other than the possession of the property. He followed the due course of business in attempting to secure payment of the check, and took immediate steps to recover the ring upon learning that the check was worthless. Appellant has not made it appear, in fact, apparently does not claim, that he was injured by any delay on plaintiff's part. It is very clear from the findings that in this case the plaintiff did not transfer the possession of the ring to Justice with a power to dispose of it. Therefore, section 1142 of the Civil Code does not apply, and any executed sale by Justice, or those purporting to claim under him, does not transfer plaintiff's title to them. Pacific Acceptance Corp. v. Bank of Italy, 59 Cal. App. 76, 80, 209 P. 1024. There was no other indicia of property than mere possession. That was not enough. There must have been some act or conduct on the part of the real owner whereby the party selling was clothed with apparent ownership or authority to sell, and which the real owner will not be heard to deny or question to the prejudice of the innocent third persons dealing on the faith of such appearances. Levi v. Booth, 58 Md. 305, 42 Am. Rep. 332.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

102 Cal. App. 783

R. G. MOORE, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. John ROGERS, Frank Carli, Frank Roach, as Constable of Township No. 3, County of San Mateo, State of California. (S. F. 13028.)

Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1930.

In Bank.

For opinion of the District Court of Appeal, see 283 P. 840.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for a hearing in the above-entitled cause, we expressly withhold our approval of those certain portions of the decision, especially the last paragraph thereof, which seem to make laches a ground of the decision.

The petition is denied upon the other grounds appearing in the opinion.

208 Cal. 725

Ex parte EDWARDS. (Cr. 3279.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Infants ☞19—Mere adjudication by juvenile court that minor is ward is insufficient to deprive parents of minor's custody (Juvenile Court Law, § 9b).

Mere adjudication by juvenile court that minor is ward thereof is insufficient to deprive parents of custody of minor child under Juvenile Court Law, § 9b (St. 1915, p. 1233), requiring finding that parent is incapable of providing for or has failed or neglected to provide for proper maintenance, training, and education for minor before ward can be taken from custody of parents.

2. Infants ☞19—Provisions of juvenile court law must be strictly complied with before juvenile court can take ward from parents' custody (Juvenile Court Law, § 9b).

Juvenile Court Law, § 9b (St. 1915, p. 1233), providing that no ward shall be taken from custody of parents without their consent unless court shall find parent is incapable of providing or has failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training, and education for minor, must be strictly complied with before juvenile court can take ward from custody of parents.

3. Infants ☞19—Finding that minor has no parent or guardian actually exercising parental control and needs such control is insufficient to deprive parents of custody; "proper parental control"; "proper maintenance, training and education" (Juvenile Court Law, § 9b).

Mere statement in juvenile court order, if sufficient as finding of fact, that minor has no parent or guardian actually exercising parental control and that such child is in need thereof, held insufficient to take minor from custody of parents under Juvenile Court Law, § 9b (St. 1915, p. 1233), since phrase "proper parental control" and "proper maintenance, training and education" means practically same thing, and finding that child has no parent actually exercising proper parental control is not equivalent to finding that such parent was either incapable or failed or neglected to exercise parental control.

4. Infants ☞19—Upon final hearing upon petition to declare minor free from parents' custody and control, juvenile court may, if evidence warrants order, declare ward free from such custody and control.

Upon final hearing on petition to declare minor free from custody and control of parents, juvenile court may, if evidence warrants such order, declare ward free from custody and control of parents, and upon entry of order parents have no right to exercise further custody and control over child.

5. Infants ☞19—Pending hearing on petition to declare minor free from parents' custody and control, parents are entitled to custody, subject however to jurisdiction of juvenile court (Juvenile Court Law, §§ 9b, 14).

Pending hearing on petition to declare minor free from custody and control of parents under Juvenile Court Law, § 9b (St. 1915, p. 1233), parents are entitled to custody, subject, however, to jurisdiction of juvenile court to determine finally question whether minor shall be declared free, notwithstanding section 14 empowering juvenile court, pending hearing on petition to declare minor a ward, to retain minor in detention home or otherwise temporarily provide for him.

6. Infants ☞19—Juvenile court may make order depriving parents of custody and control upon proper notice, if best interests of minor will be promoted (Juvenile Court Law, § 9b).

Juvenile court, under Juvenile Court Law, § 9b (St. 1915, p. 1233), if it appears that best interests of minor will be promoted by parents being deprived of custody and control, is authorized to make such order upon proper notice to parents.

7. Habeas corpus ⇨92(1)—Whether facts alleged in petition to juvenile court are sufficient to support order depriving parents of minor's custody is immaterial in habeas corpus proceedings involving custody.

In habeas corpus proceeding to determine custody of minor child, question whether petition to juvenile court alleges sufficient facts to support order depriving parents of custody and control of minor will not be inquired into.

8. Infants ⇨19—Allegations of parents' abandonment held insufficient to support order declaring minor free from parents' custody and control (Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1).

Petition to juvenile court alleging minor within county has been abandoned by father and whereabouts of mother is unknown, that child was abandoned in custody of petitioner, and that father has contributed no money for child's support, held insufficient to support order declaring minor free from custody and control of parents on ground of abandonment under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1 (St. 1915, p. 1236).

9. Infants ⇨16—Child receiving communication from either parent during year, abandoned by one parent only, or supported by mother, is not abandoned (Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1).

If communication has been received from either parent during year, or if mother has paid for child's care or made provision for its keep or child is abandoned by only one of parents, child is not an abandoned child within Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1 (St. 1915, p. 1236), precluding order declaring minor free from custody and control of parents on ground of abandonment.

10. Infants ⇨16—To warrant order adjudging minor free from parents' custody and control, both parents must join in acts of abandonment, or parent not joining must have consented to other's acts (Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1).

To warrant order adjudging minor free from custody and control of parents under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, subd. 1 (St. 1915, p. 1236), on ground of abandonment, parents must either join in acts of abandonment, or parent not joining therein must be shown to have given minor into custody of one committing acts or in some other manner expressly or impliedly consented thereto.

11. Infants ⇨19—Order on appeal in proceedings involving jurisdiction of juvenile court held to determine only that under facts juvenile court had jurisdiction over minor.

Order of District Court of Appeal, in proceeding involving jurisdiction of juvenile court over minor, that minor be restored to jurisdiction of juvenile court and to custody of petitioner, subject however to such further orders as may or shall be made by juvenile court, held not to confer upon juvenile court any jurisdiction over minor, but simply amounts to holding that, under facts before it, juvenile court has jurisdiction over said minor, and, so long as facts and conditions remain unchanged, order was conclusive.

12. Habeas corpus ⇨34—District Court of Appeal order in proceedings involving jurisdiction of juvenile court held not res judicata in habeas corpus proceedings in Supreme Court involving custody where facts were different.

In habeas corpus proceedings in Supreme Court to secure custody of minor child, decision and order of District Court of Appeal in proceedings involving jurisdiction of juvenile court over minor held not res judicata or conclusive of rights of parties to such proceedings, where different state of facts was presented to Supreme Court.

In Bank.

Application by Alice Akers for writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of Imperial County, V. N. Thompson, Judge, sitting in exercise of its jurisdiction as a juvenile court, to secure custody of Damon Edwards, a minor child. Writ granted.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, Dan F. Conway, and C. M. Ozias, all of Fresno, for petitioner Alice Akers.

Utley & Nuffer, Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and C. B. Smith, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of El Centro, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Petition for writ of habeas corpus was filed herein by Alice Akers, the mother of Damon Edwards, a minor child eight years of age. It is alleged therein that said minor is unlawfully detained and withheld from petitioner in the county of Imperial by the juvenile court of said county and by one Cornelia Stevens, a resident of said county, and that said juvenile court claims the right to the custody of said minor by virtue of certain proceedings had in said juvenile court. Petitioner has annexed to and made a part of her petition what is alleged to be "a true copy of the entire record, orders and proceedings of said juvenile court in the matter of said Damon Edwards upon and under which said claim of said juvenile court is based." It is further alleged that said Cornelia Stevens bases her claim to the care and custody of said minor under and by virtue of the orders in said juvenile court proceedings. Upon the filing of said petition this court granted a writ directed to the juvenile court of Imperial county and to the said Cornelia Stevens commanding them to produce the body of said minor before this court, together with the time and cause of his detention. The respondents, the juvenile court of Imperial county and said Cornelia Stevens, have each made separate returns to said writ. Neither of said respondents questions the record of the proceedings before the juvenile court of Imperial county as set forth in the petition herein. They show, however, that since the filing of said petition and since the issuance of said writ said juvenile court on September 11, 1929, made an order vacating and setting aside one of the orders of said juvenile court, a copy of which was made a part of said petition. The order which said juvenile court vacated and set aside was dated July 6, 1928, and purported to be an order declaring said minor free from the custody and control of his parents. It was vacated and set aside upon the application of the respondent Cornelia Stevens and upon the ground that it "was made by the court without proper service upon the parents of said minor child and without either of said parents having appeared personally in said action." In addition to vacating said order of July 6, 1928, said order of September 11, 1929, further provided: "It further appearing to the court that said minor child has no parent or guardian actually exercising proper parental control, and that said child has been left in the care and custody of Mrs. Cornelia Stevens by the father of said child, without any provision for his support, and good cause appearing therefor, it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that said minor child, Damon Edwards, be and remain a ward of this court and be and remain in the care and custody of the said Cornelia Stevens, under the supervision and direction of E. D. Griffin, Probationer of the County of Imperial, State of California, pending the further order of this Court. And it is further ordered that a citation issue and be served upon the parents of said minor child as provided in sections 15a to 15e inclusive of the Juvenile Court Law directing them, the said parents, and each of them, and such other persons as may be interested in the custody and control of said child to appear in court and show cause, if any they have, why the said Damon Edwards should not be adjudged and declared to be free from the custody and control of his parents and deprive them, and each of them, of the right to the custody and control thereof, and show cause, if any they have, why said minor child should not be dealt with in other respects as provided in the Juvenile Court Law."

The return of the respondents further relies upon the order and decision of the District Court of Appeals in a proceeding involving the jurisdiction of said juvenile court over the said minor. This proceeding is entitled Ex parte Edwards, and is reported in 278 P. 910, 911. Respondents therefore justify their detention of said minor by the proceedings had in said juvenile court and also by said order of the District Court of Appeal.

We will first consider the proceedings in the juvenile court of the county of Imperial. They are entitled "In the matter of Damon Edwards, a person coming under the Juvenile Court Law." They were commenced by the filing of a petition by Cornelia Stevens, a copy of which, excepting the title and the verification, is as follows:

"The petition of Cornelia Stevens respectfully shows:

"That there is within the County of Imperial, State of California, a person named Damon Edwards, who has been abandoned by his father, Damon Barrett Edwards, the whereabouts of the mother of the child is unknown.

"That said Damon Edwards is under the age of twenty-one years, to-wit: of the age of five years, or thereabouts, his birthday being May 10, 1921.

"That said Damon Edwards is a person coming within the provisions of subdivision two, section one of that certain act of the legislature entitled:" (Juvenile Court Law, Stats. 1915, p. 1225; Deering's General Laws of 1923, p. 1535.)

"That the facts bringing said person within the provisions of said act are as follows:

"This child has no parent willing to exercise proper parental control; has no parent actually exercising proper parental control and he is in need of such control. The child was abandoned at Calexico in the custody of Mrs. Cornelia Stevens on July 5th, 1925, and since that time the father has sent no money to pay for the child's care, nor made any provisions for the said child's keep.

"That the names and residences of the parents of said Damon Edwards are unknown.

"That the person or persons having the custody or control of said Damon Edwards is Mrs. Cornelia Stevens, Calexico, Cal. Box 1063 or call at 514 Second Street.

"Wherefore, your petitioner prays that this honorable court make an order adjudging and declaring said Damon Edwards to be a ward of the juvenile court, and deal with said person as provided in the act of the legislature above referred to.

"Dated: Sept. 13, 1926. Cornelia Stevens, Petitioner."

The court made no formal or written order upon the filing of this petition declaring said minor a ward of the court. The only action taken, so far as the record before us shows, was an order made on March 29, 1927, to the effect "that the support of this child be continued as provided for in the Juvenile Court Law." The next steps taken therein were those which led up to the order of July 6, 1928, purporting to declare said minor free from the custody and control of its parents. This order, as we have stated above, was set aside by the court by its order of September 11, 1929. Therefore, the only proceedings taken by the juvenile court in said matter were the filing of the original petition, a provisional order for the support of the minor, and the order of September 11, 1929. The petitioner questions the right of said juvenile court to make said last-named order after the issuance of the writ in this proceeding and during the pendency of this proceeding. We think it unnecessary for us to pass upon this question. We will assume that the action of the juvenile court in proceeding during the pendency of these proceedings was regular and legal.

[1, 2] The order of September 11, 1929, in addition to vacating the order of July 6, 1928, made two directions. First, it adjudged said minor to be a ward of said court and placed him in the case and custody of Cornelia Stevens; and, secondly, it directed a citation to be issued to his parents to show cause why he should not be declared free from their custody and control. Was this order sufficient to take said minor from the immediate custody of his parents? In other words, is a mere adjudication by the juvenile court that a minor is a ward of the court sufficient to deprive the parents of the custody of a minor child? Section 9b of the Juvenile Court Law would appear to answer this question in the negative. This section reads as follows: "No ward of the juvenile court as defined in this act shall be taken from the custody of his parent or legal guardian, without the consent of such parent or guardian unless the court shall find such parent or guardian to be incapable of providing or to have failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training and education for said person; or unless said person has been tried on probation in said custody and has failed to reform, or unless said person has been convicted of crime by a jury, or unless the court shall find that the welfare of said person requires that his custody be taken from said parent or guardian."

An examination of the orders of the juvenile court fails to disclose any finding of said court which brings said minor or his parents within the provisions of this section of the act. Without such a finding the court has no jurisdiction to take a minor who has been made a ward of the court from the custody of its parents. In re Daedler, 194 Cal. 320, 331, 228 P. 467. It is not the policy of the Juvenile Court Law to relieve the parents of minors of the responsibility of caring for their minor children nor to deprive them of the right to their custody and control so long as the parents are capable of discharging such responsibility or of exercising said right of care and custody. This policy is clearly enunciated in section 9b of the Juvenile Court Law, and its terms must be strictly complied with before a court can take one who has been made a ward of the court from the custody of its parents.

[3] The only semblance of any finding conforming to the requirements of section 9b of said act is to be found in the order of September 11, 1929, in the form of a recital in the following words: "It further appearing to the court that said minor child has no parent or guardian actually exercising proper parental control over it and that such child is in need of such control." Assuming that a statement in an order in the form of a recital is sufficient as a finding of the fact recited therein, still we think this so-called finding is insufficient to meet the requirements of section 9b of the act. The finding is that the minor has no parent or guardian actually exercising parental control over it and that said child is in need of such control.

Section 9b requires that the court shall find the parent or guardian incapable of providing or to have failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training and education of said person. That these statements are not the same or in any manner similar is strikingly illustrated by the facts in this proceeding as they appear from the record before us and those recited in the decision of the District Court of Appeal. Ex parte Edwards, supra. These facts show that at the time said order of September 11, 1929, was made and for months before, the petitioner, the mother of said minor, a child of only eight years of age, had been endeavoring to secure the care and custody of said minor, but had been prevented from so doing by the respondents. We are not now questioning the right nor the motives of respondents in resisting petitioner's claims. These facts, however, show the truth of the recital made by the court in its order of September 11, 1929; that is, that petitioner had not exercised any parental control over her child and that the child was in need of it. On the other hand, these facts fail to show that petitioner was incapable of providing parental care for her child, or that she failed or neglected to provide such care for her child. They show that at the time of the making of said order, and for some months before, she had strenuously endeavored by legal means, and by means which were not at all times strictly legal, to gain control of her child that she might exercise parental control over him. We are following the court in Re Gutierrez, 46 Cal. App. 94, 188 P. 1004, in holding that "proper parental control" and "proper maintenance, training and education" are so alike in their import as to mean practically the same thing. Yet we cannot hold that a finding that the child has no parent who is actually exercising proper parental control over it is equivalent to a finding that such parent was either incapable or that she failed or neglected to exercise such parental control.

[4-6] It is further contended by respondents that by the filing by Cornelia Stevens of her petition therein, she has set forth, or at least attempted to set forth facts therein, sufficient to give to the juvenile court jurisdiction not only to adjudge said minor a ward of the court, but also to declare him free from the custody of his parents, and that the juvenile court by its said order has directed a citation to be issued to his parents preparatory to a hearing upon that portion of said petition which purports to show that said ward should be declared free from the custody and control of his parents. Undoubtedly the filing of said petition has the effect contended for by respondents. Upon the final hearing on such a petition the juvenile court may, if the evidence warrants such an order, declare a ward free from the custody and control of his parents. Upon the entry of such an order, the parents of said minor will have no right to exercise further custody and control over him. But in the meantime as the court has made no finding of the existence of any of the conditions mentioned in section 9b of said act, the parents of said ward are entitled to his custody. They hold said minor, however, subject to the jurisdiction of said juvenile court to determine finally the question as to whether he shall be declared free from their custody and control. In holding that the juvenile court has no right to withhold the custody of said minor from his parents under the facts in this case as recited above, we have not lost sight of the provisions of section 14 of said act which empowers the court, after the filing of a petition against a minor alleging that such minor comes within the provisions of section 1 of said act, to order said minor, pending the hearing at any time before he is adjudged a ward, or otherwise disposed of, to be detained in a detention home or otherwise temporarily provided for. The provisions of this section evidently refer merely to the detention of the minor pending a hearing of the petition to have him declared a ward of the court. If on such hearing the court adjudges him to be a ward of the court, it may also with the consent of his parents or guardian, or without their consent upon making a finding of the existence of any of the conditions enumerated in section 9b, take said ward from the custody of his parents or guardian. Furthermore, should it thereafter be made to appear to the court that the best interests of the ward would be promoted by his parents being deprived of his custody and control, the court, under section 9b of said act, would be authorized upon proper notice to the parents to make such an order.

[7] There is some intimation of counsel that the original petition of Cornelia Stevens does not state sufficient facts to support an order, if the court should hereafter decide after a hearing to make such an order, declaring said minor free from the custody and control of his parents. Evidently there is an attempted statement of facts which would confer jurisdiction upon the court, and even if the petition is subject to demurrer for an insufficient statement of facts, the question is not one which will be inquired into in habeas corpus proceedings.

In re Gutierrez, supra: Matter of Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 P. 605.

[8-10] However, as there may be further proceedings in the juvenile court under said petition, we deem it only fair to all parties to here state that in our opinion said petition is not sufficient to support an order declaring said minor free from the custody and control of his parents. The only allegations of said petition which would tend to support such an order are as follows: "That there is within the county of Imperial, state of California, a person named Damon Edwards, who has been abandoned by his father Damon Barrett Edwards, the whereabouts of his mother is unknown." "The child was abandoned at Calexico in the custody of Mrs. Cornelia Stevens on July 5th, 1925, and since that time the father has sent no money to pay for the child's care nor made any provisions for the child's keep."

In order for a minor to be declared free from the custody of his parents on the ground of abandonment, said minor must be a person "who has been left in the care and custody of another by his parent or parents without any provision for his support, or without communication from such parent or parents, for the period of one year with the intent to abandon said person. * * *" Section 15, subd. 1, Juvenile Court Law, Stats. 1915, p. 1236. A comparison of the allegations of the petition with the requirements of this section will show that the petitioner failed to allege that there was no communication from the parents for a period of one year, or that the mother had failed to pay for the care of the child, or that she had made no provision for its keep, or that the mother herself had abandoned the child. If a communication had been received from either parent during the year, or if the mother had paid for his care or made provision for his keep, then in the sense used in the act he was not an abandoned child, and the court under those circumstances would have no right to declare him to be free from the custody and control of his parents. Then again, a minor having two parents is not an abandoned child when he is abandoned by one only of said parents. It is true that section 15 of the Juvenile Court Law declares that the words, "persons who shall be declared freed from the custody and control of his parents" shall include any person, "who has been left in the care and custody of another by his parent or parents without any provision for his support * * * for the period of one year with the intent to abandon said person." The use of the words, "parent or parents" in said section was intended to refer to cases where if the minor had but one parent the acts of such parent enumerated in the section would warrant the court in declaring said minor free from the custody and control of said parent. However, when the minor has both parents, each of these parents must either join in the acts of abandonment or the parent not joining therein must be shown either to have given said minor into the custody of the one committing said acts, or in some other manner to have expressly or impliedly consented to said acts, before the court could take from them, or at least from the innocent parent, the custody of said child. Otherwise a father might surreptitiously take from the mother their minor child and leave him in some remote locality where the mother has no means of knowing and does not know of his whereabouts. Yet if such child is left by the father in the care of another under the conditions enumerated in section 15, said child becomes an abandoned child, and the mother, without any fault on her part, has forever lost the control and custody of her own child. Surely the Legislature could never have intended by the enactment of this section of the act to have created a situation which would lead to such dire results.

In these respects we think the petition lacking in those necessary allegations of facts essential to support an order declaring the minor to be free from the custody and control of his parents.

For the reasons above stated the proceedings in the juvenile court fail to show any legal or valid reason for the detention by respondents of said minor from the custody of the petitioner.

[11, 12] We come now to the consideration of the order of the District Court of Appeal made in Ex parte Edwards, supra. In that proceeding said court ordered that said minor "be restored by respondents to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court of Imperial county, and to the custody of petitioner, Cornelia Stevens, * * * subject, however, to such further orders as may or shall be made by the said juvenile court of Imperial county." Of course, this order did not confer upon the juvenile court of Imperial county any jurisdiction over said minor, nor did it purport to do so. The District Court of Appeal by said order simply held that under the facts then before it said juvenile court had jurisdiction over said minor and that said minor was then in the legal custody of Cornelia Stevens. In other words, it conferred no new nor additional jurisdiction upon the juvenile court, but simply confirmed that which the court already possessed. The most that can be claimed for said order of the District Court of Appeal is that it determined the right between the parties then before it to the custody of said minor. So long as the facts and conditions remained the same as they were when the hearing was had and the order was made, said order is binding upon said parties. Ex parte Bruegger, 204 Cal. 169, 267 P. 101. However, the District Court of Appeal had before it the order of July 6, 1928, which purported to adjudge said Damon Edwards free from the custody and control of his parents. It was undoubtedly largely, if not wholly, due to the fact that the juvenile court had made said order that the District Court of Appeal decided that the mother of said minor had no right to the custody of said minor. Since said decision, as we have seen, this order of July 6, 1928, has been vacated and set aside by the respondent court at the request and with the consent of the respondent Cornelia Stevens and this order is no part of the record now before us. There is therefore a different state of facts before this court than was presented to the District Court of Appeal. Under these circumstances it cannot be said that the decision and order of the District Court of Appeal is res adjudicata or conclusive of the rights of the parties to the present proceeding.

The present proceeding must therefore be decided upon the record now before us without reference to the previous order or judgment of the District Court of Appeal. This record, as we have before stated, shows no valid reason for the detention or withholding from the petitioner of the custody of said minor.

It is therefore ordered that the respondents herein restore said Damon Edwards to the petitioner herein, the said Alice Akers, to be held by her subject to the final determination by the juvenile court of the county of Imperial of the proceeding instituted therein for the purpose of declaring said child to be free from the custody and control of its parents.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 705

UNITED DREDGING CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.SAME v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION.★

(S. F. 13634, 13635.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1930.

1. Master and servant ⇨419—Industrial Commission's power to alter award upon good cause after affirmance, if existing, should be limited to exceptional cases, where deception or want of human foresight has deprived party of right (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20(d)).

Where decision of Industrial Accident Commission upon legal point necessarily involved in proceedings before it has been sustained by appellate court, continuing jurisdiction of Industrial Commission under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20(d), St. 1917, p. 850, if existing, to alter award upon good cause based upon incorrect view of law previously adopted should be limited to those exceptional cases in which deception or want of human foresight has deprived party of right under Workmen's Compensation Act.

2. Appeal and error ⇨195(1)—Legal principles necessarily involved and decided by appellate court are binding upon lower court in future proceedings in same case.

Principles of law necessarily involved and decided by appellate court are binding upon lower court in future proceedings in same case.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1097(1)—Appellate court on subsequent appeal will not inquire into correctness of principles formerly laid down, but will only determine whether such principles have been followed.

On subsequent appeal, appellate court will not inquire into correctness of principles of law laid down upon former appeal, but will only consider record to determine if principles laid down have been followed.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1097(1)—Supreme Court on second appeal generally will not inquire into merits of decision by appellate court on first appeal.

Where decision upon appeal has been rendered by District Court of Appeal and case is returned upon reversal, and second appeal comes to Supreme Court directly or immediately, generally Supreme Court, for reasons of policy and convenience, will not inquire into merits of first decision, but will regard it as law of case, since, if appellant was dissatisfied with first decision of District Court of Appeal, he should have applied to Supreme Court for hearing.

5. Master and servant ⇨417(9)—Decisions of appellate courts reviewing orders and decisions of inferior tribunals are mandatory and not advisory.

Decisions of appellate courts reviewing orders and decisions of inferior tribunals, such as Industrial Commission, under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 67 (a), St. 1917, p. 875, are mandatory and not advisory.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1199—Decisions of District Court of Appeal are final unless taken over by Supreme Court.

Decisions of District Court of Appeal are final unless taken over by Supreme Court upon hearing granted.

7. Master and servant ⇨419—Continuing jurisdiction of Industrial Commission to alter award upon good cause held not to include power to annul award sustained on appeal based upon incorrect view of law (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20(d)).

Where decision of Industrial Accident Commission that it had jurisdiction was sustained by District Court of Appeal as only correct conclusion legally deducible from evidence, continuing jurisdiction of Industrial Commission to alter its previous decision upon good cause under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20(d), St. 1917, p. 850, held not to embrace power to amend its order based upon incorrect view of law previously adopted, since to permit Industrial Commission to exercise general powers to reopen case after award has been sustained on appeal and to reach conclusion at variance with original view and law previously stated by appellate court would abrogate doctrine of law of case, in so far as Industrial Commission is concerned, especially where no petition for hearing of original decision was filed in Supreme Court.

In Bank.

Application by the United Dredging Company, employer, and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, insurer, for writs of certiorari and mandamus to compel the Industrial Accident Commission to reopen a proceeding previously determined by it and to annul its award of compensation to Ollie Kopke, surviving widow, for the death of Joseph Kopke, employee. Writs discharged.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and Edward O. Allen, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Petitioners seek by certiorari and mandamus to compel the Industrial Accident Commission to reopen a proceeding previously determined by it under the authority of section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 850) and to annul its award of a death benefit made in said proceeding in favor of Ollie Kopke, the widow of Joseph Kopke, who was drowned while in the employ of petitioner United Dredging Company, for which petitioner Ocean Accident & Guarantee Company is the insurance carrier. The parties have stipulated that the petitions for review and mandamus should be heard, considered, and decided as one proceeding.

The said award which petitioners seek to have annulled was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal upon certiorari on May 22, 1928. United Dredging Co. v. I. A. C., 92 Cal. App. 110, 267 P. 763. No petition for a hearing of said decision by this court was ever filed. On June 3, 1929, petitioners filed an application with the commission, praying that it reopen the case and annul its award theretofore made. The commission denied said application. It is the lawfulness of said order of denial which petitioners seek to have determined in the instant proceedings in certiorari and mandamus. Petitioners contend that the commission and the District Court of Appeal made a mistake of law in deciding that the Workmen's Compensation Act applied to the case and that it was subject to the jurisdiction of the commission, when as a matter of law it was within the exclusive jurisdiction of a court of admiralty, and that this error, made manifest by a decision of the United States Supreme Court (London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., 279 U. S. 109, 49 S. Ct. 296, 73 L. Ed. 632), rendered subsequent to the District Court of Appeal's judgment of affirmance in the instant case, constitutes "good cause," within the meaning of section 20(d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, for the commission's rescission of said award. Said section provides that for 245 weeks from the date of the injury "the commission shall have continuing jurisdiction over all its orders, decisions and awards made and entered under the provisions of sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act and may at any time, upon notice, and after opportunity to be heard is given to the parties in interest, rescind, alter or amend any such order, decision or award made by it upon good cause appearing therefor."

In support of their contention that the commission has made a mistake of law which it may be compelled to correct by annulling the award, petitioners rely upon the recent decision of this court in Bartlett Hayward Co. v. I. A. C., 203 Cal. 522, 265 P. 195. In that case, however, the correctness of the award had not been affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, as it had been in the instant case. The commission in said Bartlett Hayward Company Case computed compensation upon a 25 per cent. disability rating in favor of a workman who had lost the sight of one eye in an industrial accident, but was rendered sightless by said accident by reason of the fact that he had previously lost the sight of the other eye. No application was made for a rehearing by the commission or review by the courts under sections 64-67 of the act. Over three years after the entry of the award, this court held, in Liptak v. I. A. C., 200 Cal. 39, 251 P. 635, that the proper rating in such cases is 100 per cent. or total disability. The injured workman in the Bartlett Hayward Company Case thereupon filed his petition with the commission, praying that it reopen his case and increase his award to conform with the decision in the Liptak Case, citing section 20 (d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act as conferring the power upon the commission to make the change. The commission granted the relief prayed for, and upon certiorari its action was sustained by this court; the mistake of law there made being deemed "good cause" for opening the case and amending the award.

The facts of the case herein are without dispute. For a statement thereof we quote from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal affirming the commission's award (United Dredging Co. v. I. A. C., 92 Cal. App. 110, 267 P. 763):

"* * * It appeared in evidence that the deceased, who was 22 or 23 years of age, was employed as an electrical helper, deck hand, and all-round man on a dredger operated by United Dredging Company, which was dredging in the navigable waters of San Francisco Bay, and particularly in that part known as Richmond Inner Harbor. The dredger was operating in water varying in depth from 21 to 31 feet and was proximately 700 feet from the shore. The dredger was anchored, and was used to suck up the bed of the bay and pump it on the adjacent land. From one corner of the dredger, in the direction of the shore, there ran a line of pontoons, on which lay a pipe through which the dredgings were pumped. On the day the employee met his death he had gone to work about 8 o'clock in the morning, and he was due to quit about 4:30 p. m. Part of the duties of the deceased were to take the men employed on the barge back and forth from the dredger to the shore. The skiff used by the deceased for this purpose was tied on the side of the first pontoon. In order to reach the skiff from the dredger, it was necessary to walk a distance of about 12 feet along a 14-inch plank, which was fastened to the dredging pipe running from the dredger to the first pontoon. On the day in question, Kopke was directed by one Sundeen, his immediate superior, to prepare the boat to take him and another employee to shore. Sundeen remained in the engine room changing some of his clothes, and, when he arrived upon deck, he discovered Kopke missing. The last seen of him alive was when he was leaving the engine room going outside to the outer part of the dredger. At that time he was walking toward the skiff. Investigation was made, and a cap was noticed floating on the water. Further search resulted in the finding of the body about midnight. It was in evidence that death was caused from drowning. On the 28th day of September, 1927, the commission made and entered its findings and award, wherein it granted to respondent Ollie Kopke a full benefit of $4,596 against petitioners herein, and specially found that the accident occurred as follows:

"While proceeding to get ready a skiff which, under order of a superior, he was to row ashore from the dredger upon which he was employed, he accidentally fell overboard into deep water and was drowned."

The District Court of Appeal, in affirming the commission's finding that the case was within the jurisdiction of the commission, cited as authority, among other cases, London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., 203 Cal. 676, 265 P. 825, 826. In that case the decedent was employed as an apprentice navigator and seaman by a company which maintained a small fleet of fishing vessels for the accommodation of the public seeking recreation in deep sea fishing. He was drowned in the navigable waters of Santa Monica Bay when a small boat capsized in which he and other employees of the company had put off in an effort to recapture one of the company's vessels which had broken loose from its moorings in a storm. The commission held the casualty subject to the local law, and its view was sustained by this court, which stated in its opinion that the trend of modern decision is "to permit the state law to operate where the employment has no direct relation to interstate or foreign commerce or navigation," although the accident occurred on navigable waters. (Italics supplied.) Upon a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, our decision in said case was reversed, and the test adopted by this court in that case was declared to be based on a misconception of the law. Petitioners herein contend that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in said cause of London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., supra, rendered after the District Court of Appeal had affirmed the award in the instant case, demonstrates conclusively the error in the decision of the commission and the appellate court, and that this court should now compel the commission to annul its award to conform to the law. The contention that error is apparent is not indisputable.

The District Court of Appeal in the instant case upheld the commission, because in its opinion the work which the deceased was doing was not so directly connected with navigation and commerce that to permit the rights of the parties to be controlled by the local law would interfere with the essential uniformity of the general maritime law. The court cited Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. I. A. C., 191 Cal. 763, 218 P. 561, and Oakland v. I. A. C., 198 Cal. 273, 244 P. 353, as well as the decision in the London Guarantee & Accident Co. Case. A relation to interstate or foreign commerce or navigation is not declared to be an essential to admiralty jurisdiction, as was erroneously held by this court in the overruled decision in London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., supra. The effect of the decision of the federal Supreme Court in that case is not to repudiate the requirement of a direct relation to commerce or navigation as an essential to exclusive admiralty jurisdiction, or to cast doubt upon all decisions of this court in which that test is applied, but only to inveigh against a rule requiring that the connection be with interstate or foreign commerce or navigation.

It is interesting to note that the Supreme Court of Oregon, in Mark v. Portland Gravel Co., 278 P. 986, held that the rights and remedies of an engineer employed on a dredger engaged in scooping up sand from the bed of a navigable river for purposes of sale were to be governed by the Workmen's Compensation Act, and admiralty jurisdiction did not apply. The court there cited the decision of the United States Supreme Court in London Guarantee & Accident Co., supra, but did not regard that case as requiring a decision that the case before it was within the exclusive jurisdiction of an admiralty court.

Attempts to define the limits of admiralty jurisdiction will ever be attended with difficulty. Each case is dependent largely upon its particular facts. The facts in the instant case differ from those in London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., supra, and the case herein presented remains arguable, notwithstanding the pronouncements of the United States Supreme Court in London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. I. A. C., supra. In the Bartlett Hayward Company Case, supra, upon which petitioners rely on the question of continuing jurisdiction, the error corrected by the commission in the exercise of said continuing jurisdiction, was pointed out in the Liptak Case, in which the material facts were identical.

The instant case further differs from the Bartlett Hayward Company Case in the important respect that the proceeding herein had passed beyond the commission to the District Court of Appeal and that court had upheld the commission's decision on the legal issue involved in the case, to wit, whether the case was one for the exclusive jurisdiction of an admiralty court. The recognition of a right in the commission to reopen, upon petition, a case which has been affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, on the theory that it had erroneously decided said case, gives rise to important questions not present in the Bartlett Hayward Company Case.

[1] We are not here considering cases where, after affirmance by the District Court of Appeal, evidence is produced showing that, since the affirmance of the award, the disability has either "recurred, increased, diminished or terminated." Nor are we dealing with a situation where, after an affirmance by the appellate court, new and additional evidence concerning the disability or some other material factor is brought to the attention of the commission of such a nature as to persuade it that its original conclusion, arrived at without the aid of such evidence, is erroneous. Rather, we wish to confine the application of the remarks we here make to the situation presented by the instant case, where a decision of the commission upon a legal point necessarily involved in the case has been sustained by the District Court of Appeal and held by said court to be the only correct conclusion legally deducible from the evidence. In such a case, does the continuing jurisdiction of the commission to alter its awards upon "good cause" embrace the power to amend its orders based upon an incorrect view of the law previously adopted by it and in which it has been upheld by the District Court of Appeal?

We are of the view that such a power, if it exists at all, should be limited to those very exceptional cases in which deception or a want of human foresight has deprived a party of a right given by the act.

[2-4] It is generally accepted that the principles of law necessarily involved and decided by appellate courts are binding upon the lower courts in future proceedings in the same case, such as upon a new trial. Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974; Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 746, 210 P. 259; McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 187 Cal. 144, 201 P. 577; Westerfeld v. New York Life Ins. Co., 157 Cal. 339, 107 P. 699; 2 Cal. Jur. 944; note, 34 L. R. A. 321. Upon a later appeal the appellate court will not inquire into the correctness of the principles of law laid down upon the former appeal, but will only consider the record to determine if said principles have been followed. Where a decision upon appeal has been rendered by a District Court of Appeal, and the case is returned upon a reversal, and a second appeal comes to this court directly or intermediately, for reasons of policy and convenience, this court generally will not inquire into the merits of said first decision, but will regard it as the law of the case. If the appellant was dissatisfied with the first decision of the District Court of Appeal, he should have applied to this court for a hearing. Otten v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 252, 191 P. 11; Hill v. Maryland Casualty Co., 28 Cal. App. 422, 152 P. 953; McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 187 Cal. 144, 201 P. 577; note, 41 A. L. R. 1078. While there is a modern tendency on the part of appellate courts throughout the country not to regard this doctrine of the law of the case as one to be adhered to in all cases, but rather to make exceptions where the decision is manifestly unjust, the doctrine has by no means been abandoned, but is still followed as a general rule of practice and procedure. Johnson v. Cadillac Motor Car Co. (C. C. A.) 261 F. 878, 8 A. L. R. 1023, with note; Cluff v. Day, 141 N. Y. 580, 36 N. E. 182; Mangold v. Bacon, 237 Mo. 496, 141 S. W. 650; Gracey v. City of St. Louis, 221 Mo. 1, 119

S. W. 949; Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co. v. McKell (C. C. A.) 209 F. 514; note, 1 A. L. R. 1267.

[5-7] To permit the Industrial Accident Commission to exercise a general power to reopen a case after the award has been sustained by the District Court of Appeal, and thereafter to reach a conclusion at variance with its original view and the law as stated by the District Court of Appeal, would abrogate the doctrine of the law of the case in so far as the Industrial Accident Commission is concerned. Section 20(d) of the act, as well as other sections, prescribe forms of procedure differing in important respects from the procedure in the trial courts. As pointed out in the Bartlett Hayward Company Case, supra, the effect of section 20(d) is to render the doctrine of res judicata inapplicable in certain respects to causes within the jurisdiction of the commission. But before we would judicially approve an innovation as far-reaching as to hold that the commission may reopen proceedings in which the award has been sustained by the District Court of Appeal for the purpose of re-examining a question of law determined by that court, we would require clearer evidence of legislative intent than we find in section 20(d) or any other section of the act.

The orderly administration of justice, as well as the private interest of the litigants, requires that there be an end to litigation. The reasons upon which the doctrine of the law of the case rests apply to proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission.

The Workmen's Compensation Act provides that any party affected by a decision of the commission may apply to the Supreme Court or to the District Court of Appeal "for the purpose of having the lawfulness" of the decision or award "inquired into and determined." Section 67(a). Decisions of the appellate courts reviewing orders and decisions of inferior tribunals are intended to be followed, not disregarded. Said decisions are mandatory, not advisory. If, after the District Court of Appeal has determined an award to be lawful, the commission may reopen the case and reach conclusions at variance with the law of the case as pronounced in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, the decisions of said court in industrial accident cases would be rendered impotent and unstable. The decisions of said courts are final unless taken over by this court upon hearing granted. If an aggrieved party fails to petition this court for a hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, he should not be permitted to secure the advantages, and subject the other party to the delays and expense, of a second appellate court review by means of petitioning the commission to reopen the case and seeking a review of a second order of denial.

A system of procedure which would tend to encourage successive reviews by appellate courts of questions once passed upon in industrial accident cases would certainly operate to the disadvantage of employees, the class for whose protection the act was adopted, and who, as a class, are much less able to bear the expense and delays incident to such a system than are their employers or their insurance carriers.

As intimated above, there may arise exceptional cases of manifest and far-reaching error where, to prevent injustice and oppression, this court would sustain the action of the commission in reopening a case for further consideration after decision by an appellate court, but this question we need not finally decide here, for such cases will arise infrequently, and the instant case is not one.

The writs are discharged.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

208 Cal. 753

HAIGHT v. MARIN MUNICIPAL WATER DIST. (S. F. 12430.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨351(1)—Purchaser of municipal water district's realty on vendor's breach in bad faith could recover difference between agreed price and value of realty and expenses (Civ. Code, § 3306).

Where breach of contract by municipal water district to sell realty was willful, and in light of all facts warranted conclusion that vendor was guilty of bad faith, purchaser held entitled to recover as damages, under Civ. Code, § 3306, difference between price agreed to be paid and value of estate agreed to be conveyed at time of breach and expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon land.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨183½—Contention that purchaser could not accept secret profit because acting in fiduciary capacity held not available, where vendor water district ratified option with knowledge of purchaser's claims.

Contention that purchaser of realty, suing for damages for breach of contract to sell after exercising option, at inception of negotiations was agent of vendor water district and acting in fiduciary relationship, and therefore could not accept secret profit, held not available, where vendor's board of directors by two resolutions sustained option with full knowledge of purchaser's claims.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨183½—Contention that municipal water district was without power to execute option held without merit, where directors subsequently ratified option.

Contention that municipal water district was without power to execute option to prospective purchaser of land in first instance held without merit, where water district through its board of directors subsequently ratified option with full knowledge of purchaser's claims.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⇨18(3)—Claim that optionee was unwilling and unable to perform held waived by vendor's deliberate default when purchaser had not defaulted.

Claim that purchaser exercising option to purchase land was without ability or willingness to perform held waived by vendor's deliberate failure to carry out agreement when concededly purchaser was not in any respect in default.

Shenk and Langdon, JJ., and Waste, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Charles O. Wellock against the Marin Municipal Water District, wherein Jessie Haight, as administratrix of the estate of Charles O. Wellock, deceased, was substituted as plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 277 P. 525.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for appellant.

William Kehoe, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. The judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $10,500 is hereby affirmed. Plaintiff, Charles O. Wellock, having died during pendency of the action, and his administrator having been substituted in his stead, the use of the word "plaintiff" herein will refer to said Charles O. Wellock, deceased. The defendant has appealed.

The action is one to recover damages for the alleged breach by defendant of a contract to sell and convey to plaintiff a tract of land of 459 acres lying near Fairfax, Marin county, Cal. On April 3, 1925, defendant, upon payment to it by plaintiff of the sum of $500, executed to him a 15-day option to purchase said land for the price of $50,000. On the next day, April 4th, the option was confirmed, but amended to a certain extent by a letter from defendant providing the terms of payment of the purchase price. On or about the same day a proposed draft of the contract of sale and purchase was drawn up by the attorney for defendant and delivered to plaintiff optionee. Evidently it was the belief of defendant that plaintiff would either subdivide said property and sell same himself or would sell the property outright to another, who would subdivide.

On or about April 14th the board of directors of defendant district learned that it was the purpose of plaintiff to resell the lands in question to certain purchasers for the price of $60,000, whereupon a special meeting of the board of defendant was called on April 15th to consider the revocation of said option. Ten of the members of the board attended the meeting, and it was pointed out to them that the optionee would enjoy a profit of $10,000 and would have a possible claim for a 5 per cent. commission in addition thereto upon sale of the property. A resolution to cancel and revoke the option was then introduced, but failed of passage by a vote of five to five, at least eight votes being required for affirmative action. On this day the optionee expressly waived any commission which might accrue to him and stood upon his rights under the option, claiming that he was dealing in his own right as principal.

Theretofore, and on April 6, 1925, plaintiff had sought and found purchasers who had given a check for $22,500, and delivered same in escrow to be finally delivered upon assignment to them of said contract of sale signed by defendant district; they having approved the said form of contract submitted to them by plaintiff.

With matters in this condition the optionee, on April 18th, gave notice in writing to the district of his acceptance of the offer contained in the previous letters of April 3d and 4th. The board again met on April 21st, at which time it reconsidered the whole subject-matter, including the acceptance of the offer that had been made subsequent to its last meeting. Plaintiff and his attorney attended this meeting as did also the purchasers and their attorney. The meeting was thrown open to all present, and, after a general discussion by the parties and their attorneys, the board adopted a resolution by an eight to five vote, expressly confirming said option and directing the executive committee to take up the matter of the agreement of sale between plaintiff and said purchasers and report at the next meeting three weeks later. Plaintiff and said purchasers, all being present, protested against adjournment without authorizing the execution of the said contract of sale. The board, however, adjourned for three weeks. On April 23d the purchasers withdrew their check from escrow. This action followed.

[1] The complaint sets up in detail the successive steps had between the giving of the option on April 3d and the final adjournment of the board on April 21st and charges in a rather inapt but, we think, effective manner, that the market value of the property was at the date of breach $60,000. It also charges facts sufficient to bring it within the purview of that portion of section 3306 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: " * * * But adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach, and the expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land." This is true because the facts detailed in the complaint show that the breach of the contract by defendant was willful and done in the light of all the facts; hence warranting the conclusion that it was done in bad faith. Johnson v. Schimpf, 197 Cal. 43, 48, 239 P. 401.

The court found that all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint were true. This implies that the court found the market value of the property to have been $60,000 at the date of the breach, and that the breach was committed in bad faith. The evidence supports these findings as appears from the above recital of what are really undisputed facts.

[2, 3] This conclusion, either directly or impliedly, disposes of all the defenses urged by appellant, only a few of which need be specially noticed. First is the claim that at the inception of the negotiations plaintiff was the agent of defendant and was acting in a fiduciary relationship to it; hence he could not accept a secret profit. If this was true at that time, the contention is, nevertheless, of no avail against the two corporate acts, by resolution of the board, sustaining the option in the face of full knowledge on its part of all the claims of plaintiff. The further contention that defendant was without power to execute the option in the first instance is also disposed of by said two corporate acts.

[4] The claim that plaintiff was without ability or willingness to perform was waived by the deliberate failure of defendant to carry out the agreement on its part when concededly plaintiff was not in any respect in default. The further contention that plaintiff failed to show damage is answered first by the item of $500 paid out by him for the option, and, second, by our conclusion above announced that the complaint pleaded bad faith on the part of defendant and also the market value of $60,000 of the property at the time of breach, and that the implied finding to this effect is supported by the evidence. Indeed, in defendant's specifications of error there is no contention that the evidence was insufficient to prove this value for the property on the date of breach.

The excess of the market value over the option price and the item of $500 comprise the amount given plaintiff by the judgment. Under our construction of the complaint and the issues, the so-called rule of consequential damages, commonly called the Baxendale rule (Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341), applied in Hunt Bros. v. San Lorenzo Water Co., 150 Cal. 51, 87 P. 1093, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, and other cases, is not involved.

Further discussion is unnecessary.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. The majority opinion affirms a judgment for $10,500 against the defendant district, based on the "bad faith" provisions of section 3306 of the Civil Code without sufficient proof of bad faith, and in the absence of a finding on the allegations of the answer charging the plaintiff with fraud and duplicity in his transactions, a finding which, if made, would necessarily have to be in favor of the defendant. When the word "plaintiff" is used herein it will refer to Charles O. Wellock, the original plaintiff.

During all of the times mentioned herein the defendant was and is a public corporation organized and existing under a statute (Stats. 1911, p. 1290, as amended), and was the owner of a tract of land near Deer Park, Marin county, consisting of 459 acres, and which it was willing to sell. The plaintiff was a duly licensed real estate salesman connected with the Bishop-Carlson Company, duly licensed real estate brokers.

In the latter part of 1924 the plaintiff went to John A. Burt, general manager of the defendant District, stated to him that he thought he had a customer for the Deer Park lands, and requested that the lowest cash figure for the same be quoted to him. The matter was placed before the board of directors of the district, which, on January 20, 1925, adopted resolution number 781 wherein it was "resolved that the board of directors of the Marin Municipal Water District will not consider any offer for said real property for a price less than $50,000; and be it further resolved concerning the granting of options for the sale of said property at said figure that, if deemed advisable by the general manager an option or options may be given which in no event shall exceed a duration of sixty (60) days, the consideration for such option or options to be $500 for a 15-day option, $1,000 for a 30-day option, or $2,000 for a 60-day option, the payment on such option to be applied to the purchase price in case the sale is consummated otherwise to be forfeited."

On April 3, 1925, the plaintiff paid to the district the sum of $500 and received a document, signed only by the general manager, purporting to grant to the plaintiff by name an option to purchase said lands for $50,000 cash. On the day following, to wit, on April 4, 1925, the general manager at the request of the plaintiff wrote a letter to the plaintiff in care of Mr. John A. Prentice, commencing as follows: "Further confirming the option granted to you dated April 3d from the Marin Municipal Water District relating to 459 acres at Deer Park, I beg leave to state that the Marin Municipal Water District will grant the following terms of sale: Twenty-five per cent. of the purchase price to be paid by you upon delivery of an agreement of sale; the balance of the purchase price to be payable in three equal installments, one, two and three years after date. * * * " Then follow provisions appropriate to a contract for the purchase of lands to be placed on subdivision. Below the signature of the general manager a majority of the members of the board of directors appended their signatures to a statement that they affirmed the understanding set forth in the letter and that they "consent to the recommendation of its adoption by the board of directors." On April 7, 1925, the purported option of April 3d and the above letter of April 4th were assigned by the plaintiff to John H. Rice and J. J. Greisen, subdividers of land, who placed in escrow such assignments, together with a check for $22,500, payable to the plaintiff and indorsed by him, with an abstract company in San Rafael, with instructions to surrender said check for $22,500 to the plaintiff when the escrow should be completed. Upon failure to complete the escrow within 10 days the check was to be returned to Rice and Greisen. The defendant in no sense became a party to the escrow matter. On the order of the plaintiff $10,000 of the $22,500 was to be paid to John A. Prentice on behalf of both the latter and the plaintiff, and the balance of $12,500 was to complete the cash payment on the installment contract of purchase and sale which the general manager purported to authorize by his letter of April 4th. The defendant contended at the trial, and now urges, that at all times prior to April 7th the plaintiff was acting as the agent of the district, and that it was not until April 7th when the check for $22,500 was placed in escrow that the district, through its general manager, discovered that the plaintiff expected to make a profit of $10,000 on the deal. When this fact was discovered the attorney for the district was notified thereof. A special meeting of the board of directors was called and held on April 15th, at which meeting the attorney for the district presented the situation to the board and recommended that the option made in the name of the plaintiff be canceled on the ground of the fraud and duplicity of the plaintiff in so maneuvering the transaction as to claim a profit of $10,000, when in truth he was at all times acting as the agent of the district and entitled to a commission only. Rice and Greisen were also represented at that meeting. After hearing the matter a resolution to cancel said option was lost by a tie vote of five to five. An adjournment was then taken to April 21st. On April 18, 1925, the plaintiff addressed a communication to the defendant as follows: "I hereby accept the offer contained in your option to me for the purchase of the hereinafter mentioned property dated April 3, 1925, as modified by your letter dated April 4, 1925, further confirming said option and modifying and extending terms relative to payment." The communication concludes with a description of the property. On April 21st the board met and further considered the matter of the sale of said property. At the meeting the plaintiff and Rice and Greisen were represented by their respective attorneys. After discussion a resolution was adopted reciting that the option of April 3d and the amplifying letter of April 4th had been signed by the general manager and resolving that the same be confirmed. At the same meeting a committee was appointed and "directed to take up the matter of the agreement to be executed between the Water District and purchaser of the Deer Park property and report back at the next meeting of the board." The plaintiff and the proposed purchasers objected to the continuance of the matter, insisting that the contract of purchase and sale in accordance with the terms of the documents of April 3d and 4th, which had not theretofore been approved by the board, be executed before the next meeting of the board. One of the main reasons for the continuance of the matter was that it appeared that street work was to be done by the proposed subdividers, and it was deemed necessary to have the proposed contract so framed that an adequate bond be provided for to protect the district against mechanics' liens. The proposed purchasers refused to pay their money or any thereof in reliance upon the assignments to them from the plaintiff on advice of their attorney that such a transaction would be set aside by a taxpayer because of the relationship of principal and agent between the plaintiff and the district and insisted on a contract direct from the district. The proposed purchasers refused to wait longer and withdrew their money from escrow on April 23d, and this action was commenced on April 29th.

The foregoing facts appear without conflict in the evidence. They do not constitute a statement of all of the facts, but are full and sufficient for the purpose of considering one of the major contentions of the district. The facts relating to the further major contention that the plaintiff was the agent of the district in his activities with reference to the sale of said land will later be elaborated upon.

It is the contention of the district that no contract binding on the district resulted from the signing of the documents of April 3d and 4th by the general manager of the district and the purported exercise of said options by the plaintiff. It may be conceded that, if said documents of April 3d and 4th were the act of the district and binding in all respects upon it, the exercise of the option by the plaintiff on April 18th resulted in a contract sufficient in its details to constitute an agreement of purchase and sale, provided the same was not void or unenforceable by reason of the fiduciary relation of the plaintiff to the district, however inadequate the terms thereof might be as protecting the rights of the district.

It must be remembered that we are herein dealing with a public corporation whose directors are trustees of the taxpayers and inhabitants of the district, and we must measure the acts of the district with the yardstick of the statute of its creation. As stated, the district was organized under the statute of 1911 after an election duly held for that purpose. After providing the elaborate plan for the election and canvass of the vote, the act provides in section 8 that "the board of directors shall be the governing body of such municipal water district." Section 9 provides that "the board of directors shall act only by ordinance or resolution." Section 12, enumerating the powers of the district, provides, among other things, that the district shall have the power "to make contracts." Section 14 as amended (Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 103, § 12), provides: "The president shall sign all contracts on behalf of the district. * * * The secretary shall countersign all contracts on behalf of the district. * * * The general manager shall have full charge and control of the maintenance, operation and construction of the waterworks or waterworks system of said water district, with full power and authority to employ and discharge all employees and assistants at pleasure, prescribe their duties, and shall, subject to the approval of the board of directors, fix their compensation. The general manager shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the board of directors."

From the foregoing it is seen that the statute prescribes the method for the execution of contracts authorized by the board of directors by imposing the duty to sign and countersign the same on the president and secretary. It is elementary in the law applying to public corporations that when the method of contracting is prescribed by statute such method is the measure of the power to contract. Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 97, 81 Am. Dec. 96; Los Angeles Gas Co. v. Toberman, 61 Cal. 199; Frick v. Los Angeles, 115 Cal. 512, 47 P. 250; Foxen v. City of Santa Barbara, 166 Cal. 77, 134 P. 1142; 18 Cal. Jur., p. 1002. If the president and secretary should refuse to execute a contract authorized by the board they could be compelled to do so as a duty especially enjoined by law. Section 1085, Code Civ. Proc. Since the law especially enjoined that duty on the president and secretary, it was not competent for the board of directors to transfer that duty to any other officer or person. Meuser v.

Risdon, 36 Cal. 239. If the statute had not prescribed who should sign contracts on behalf of the district, the situation would have been vastly different. See Hayes v. Handley, 182 Cal. 273, 187 P. 952. Nowhere in the statute is it made the duty of the general manager to sign contracts on behalf of the district. His powers and duties are laid down in the law. He has nothing to do respecting the sale of lands of the district, and the terms of the statute requiring him to perform such other duties as may be imposed on him by the board of directors could by no means be stretched to authorize the board of directors to transfer to him the duty specifically reposed by law in the president and secretary. It may not be disputed that when an option to purchase land, lawful and complete as to its terms, is accepted by the optionee, a binding contract results. But since the board of directors in the present case had no authority to transfer the duties of the president and secretary to the general manager, the purported contract arising out of the documents signed by the general manager on April 3d and 4th, and the purported acceptance thereof, was not a contract binding on the defendant district. It is settled law that language purporting to define the powers of a public corporation is strictly construed against the existence of the power. Ex parte Daniels, 133 Cal. 636, 192 P. 442, 21 A. L. R. 1172; 18 Cal. Jur., p. 801, and cases cited.

Assuming, however, that it was within the power of the board of directors to transfer the statutory duties of the president and secretary to the general manager in the matter of the execution of such an important contract, the record satisfactorily shows, first, that such power was not delegated with such definiteness as to bind the district, and secondly, that, if granted, the power assumed to be exercised by the general manager was not within the scope of the delegated power.

The authority of the general manager to sign the contract is based solely on the terms of resolution No. 781, adopted by the board on January 20, 1925, and on the language italicized in the following paragraph of the resolution: "*Be it further resolved concerning the granting of options for the sale of said property at said figure that, if deemed advisable by the general manager, an option or options may be given which in no event shall exceed a duration, * * " etc. It is apparent that the language so emphasized does not assume to grant, except by the merest inference and conjecture, authority to the general manager to sign a contract on behalf of the district. It amounts to no more than authority to the proper officers of the district, to wit, the president and secretary, to sign the contract in case the general manager should recommend the same. It is quite natural that such an arrangement should be made for the reason that the general manager is more accessible to those interested in buying the land, and would be in a better position to talk with them, and in the event an attractive offer were made to communicate it to those authorized to sign the contract. In any event, the language of the resolution itself is not reasonably susceptible of a construction that it is a grant of any power. But assuming further that said resolution definitely authorized the general manager to sign the option, such authority would necessarily be measured by the terms of the resolution which specified $50,000 as the minimum price, and, as no authority to sell the land on time for subdivision purposes had been given, the language of the resolution plainly means that any option signed thereunder must be for cash. Instead of confining the option to a cash sale as so plainly contemplated by any authority granted him, the general manager assumed by his supplemental letter of April 4th to grant an option for payment of one-fourth cash and the balance in yearly installments and to prescribe the details as to how the land should be handled on subdivision and with conditions and reservations attached which were not approved by resolution of the board of directors or otherwise according to law. Neither the plaintiff nor his assignees Rice and Greisen purported to accept the terms of the option of April 3d, but always and at all times conditioned their acceptance of the offer upon the terms of the unauthorized letter of April 4th. Especially was this true with reference to the plaintiff's action on April 18, 1925, when he purported to accept the offer to sell the property "dated April 3rd, 1925, as modified by your letter dated April 4th, 1925, further confirming said option and modifying and extending terms relative to payment," which acceptance of an unauthorized option forms the basis of the plaintiff's cause of action.

Want of power is always a defense available to a public corporation, and no act of ratification can breathe life into the lack of power. If the rule were otherwise, the public body could, by ratifying a void act, extend its powers without limit. The unvarying rule is that the act of a public body may be subsequently ratified only in case it could theretofore have been authorized. A void act cannot be the subject of ratification or estoppel. Wichmann v. City of Placerville, 147 Cal. 162, 81 P. 537; 18 Cal. Jur., p. 799. Therefore, when the board on April 21st purported to ratify the void acts of the general manager of April 3 and 4, 1925, the effect of the ratification was a nullity and could not form the basis of any right of action.

The next major contention of the defendant is that the plaintiff was acting as the agent of the district at all times in said transactions and as such is foreclosed from making a profit from the sale as against the interest of his principal. The evidence on this point is free from contradiction and is substantially as follows: On June 17, 1924, the board of directors adopted resolution No. 757, reciting that one or more real estate agents had applied for the privilege of attempting to secure a purchaser for the lands which the district desired to sell and to receive a commission for so procuring a purchaser. It was therefore resolved that the district "does hereby authorize the payment of a commission of five per cent of the selling price of any of its lands offered for sale hereafter and sold through the efforts of any bona fide licensed real estate broker or agent; and that such payment be made * * * only upon final confirmation of such sale by the board of directors and not otherwise." The district reserved the right to reject the bids of such real estate agents or any purchaser introduced by them. In the latter part of 1924 the plaintiff called on the general manager and stated that he thought he was in touch with some people who would be interested in the Deer Park lands. On January 19, 1925, the plaintiff wrote to the board of directors of the district as follows: " * * * I have been with interested parties over the tract of 459 acres adjoining Deer Park. I have reason to believe that my people are deeply interested in this tract and that there is a good chance for a sale. I will ask that the Board submit to me in writing the lowest cash price for this tract. I ask that a reasonable time be given me for a general survey and the completion of detailed negotiations. * * * This sale will be handled through an accredited real estate firm and if completed I will expect the commission established by resolution of the board of directors. Assuring the gentlemen of the board that I have a genuine prospect for a sale and asking cooperation, I am, Sincerely and cordially, [signed] C. O. Wellock."

In response to the foregoing letter the board of directors on the following day, January 20th, adopted resolution No. 781, naming $50,000 as the lowest cash price for the lands in question. On January 22d the general manager mailed to the plaintiff a copy of resolution No. 781 and stated in an accompanying letter that it was adopted pursuant to plaintiff's letter of January 19th. In February, 1925, the plaintiff was introduced to John H. Rice and J. J. Greisen by Harold A. Willard. The plaintiff then proceeded to interest Rice and Greisen in the purchase of said lands for subdivision purposes. They would not pay cash, but would agree to pay $60,000, one-fourth down and the balance on terms, provided suitable arrangements could be made for release of individual lots and the customary provisions be incorporated in a contract of purchase and sale. On March 27, 1925, the plaintiff signed a memorandum wherein he agreed to divide the "commissions and profits" from the sale of said lands equally with Harold A. Willard. On April 3d the plaintiff obtained from the general manager the so-called option of that date. On the same day, and in order to be secure in the payment of his commission, the plaintiff exacted and received from the general manager a letter addressed to the plaintiff and signed in the name of the district, by John Burt, general manager, as follows: "In connection with your proposed sale of our property, be informed that the board of directors of the Marin Municipal Water District by resolution number 757 have provided that in the event of sale a commission of five per cent. shall be payable to the party negotiating the sale and in the event that sale is consummated through you a commission upon the full purchase price in the percentage of five per cent. will be paid to you." The defendant offered to prove that the so-called option of April 3d and the foregoing letter of April 3d were a part of the same transaction, and that the plaintiff stated at the time that he was negotiating with other parties as purchasers, but did not want to disclose their names, and therefore desired to take the option in his own name. The plaintiff was charged with fraud in the answer of the defendant in that he was claiming profits from the transaction when in fact he was acting as agent of the district. The court erroneously sustained the objection of the plaintiff's counsel to the offer of proof, but the record otherwise shows beyond cavil that the evidence was sufficient to prove the fact of such agency. As further proof it was in evidence that at the request of the plaintiff the attorney for the defendant prepared a tentative draft of an agreement for use in negotiating with the purchasers headed: "This agreement, made and entered into this ——— day of April, 1925, by and between the Marin Municipal Water District, a public corporation, the party of the first part, and ———, the parties of the second part. * * *" When this agreement was prepared and handed to the plaintiff he refused to disclose the names of the purchasers as "the parties of the second part."

As further evidence of the plaintiff's relation of agent for the district and his claim for commission and on April 10, 1925, he signed the following document: "Whereas I have secured a purchaser for a tract of land of 459 acres of the Marin Municipal Water District at Deer Park on which I will have a commission of $2500 when the sale is consummated; and Whereas I have made a transfer of my right to one-half of said sum to Bishop-Carlson Co. and have still coming to me the other half thereof, or $1250, Now therefore, and for a valuable consideration, I hereby assign and set over to Fairfax Bank my claim and interest in and to said one-half of said commission, being the sum of $1250, and direct payment to be made of said sum to Fairfax Bank, and the receipt of said Fairfax Bank shall operate as a discharge to my claim to said sum." At the request of the plaintiff the general manager signed the following, which was appended to the foregoing assignment: "The original of the above assignment, having been this day filed by the said Charles O. Wellock, is hereby accepted as an assignment pro-tanto, of said commission when the same becomes due, but if the same never becomes due, no obligation to pay is hereby recognized."

On April 7th, the plaintiff assigned to John A. Prentice his interest in said purported contract and in and to the plaintiff's commission in the following language: "I hereby assign to and appoint with like powers set out above, the said John A. Prentice to divide and distribute and take receipts for the commission on said sale due from the Marin Municipal Water District in the amount of five (5%) per cent. of the total purchase price of fifty thousand ($50,000.00) dollars, to-wit: $2,250.00, in connection with all claims, commissions and interests legally due for assistance in connection with said sale." The evidence is overwhelming and without conflict that the plaintiff was acting as the agent of the district at all times prior to and on April 18, 1925. It was not until the check for $22,500 was placed in escrow by Rice and Greisen with the title company in San Rafael on April 7, 1925, that any one connected with the district was apprised of the fact that the plaintiff was claiming a profit of $10,000 in the transaction as well as a commission. When the plaintiff was confronted with the fact that he was so claiming, it was stated by John A. Prentice, who had been authorized in writing to act in all respects in connection with the profits and the commission: "Well, we will withdraw the commission and we are going to hold it for the profit." The discovery of the plaintiff's duplicity provoked the controversy that ensued when the attorney recommended that the so-called option of April 3d be canceled. It is too plain for argument that the plaintiff has no standing in this case either in law or in equity. When the fiduciary relation was established between the plaintiff and the district, as it was in this case, the law stepped in and foreclosed the plaintiff from claiming any secret profit. The proposition is conclusively settled, and there are no exceptions to the rule that an agent is charged in full measure with the duty of good faith in his dealings with his principal touching the subject-matter of his authority. The law exacts perfect good faith on the part of an agent, not only in form, but in substance, and precludes him from obtaining an advantage over his principal in any transaction had by virtue of his agency. Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 P. 486; 1 Cal. Jur. pp. 789, 794, and cases cited. If the sale had been made for $50,000 and the plaintiff's double dealing had not been discovered and the assignees of his commission had collected the commission of $2,500, as they would have the right to do, and the plaintiff had obtained the $10,000 secret profit, as he had planned, no one would have the hardihood to claim that the district could not have recovered a judgment from him for that amount.

The court failed to find on the allegations of the defendant's answer as to the foregoing relation of the plaintiff with the district, but did find that the contract alleged in the complaint had been made and breached, and inferentially found that the district had been guilty of bad faith in the commission of the breach, for it awarded damages in the sum of $10,000 as the difference between the alleged price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate alleged to have been agreed to be conveyed, as provided for in section 3306 of the Civil Code. There was no evidence of bad faith on the part of the district. The evidence shows overwhelmingly that the directors of the district were proceeding in a manner commensurate with the importance of the transaction in hand. There was an offer of proof that before the next regular meeting of the board the committee had gone thoroughly into the terms and conditions which should be incorporated in a contract of purchase and sale and were ready to report the same to the board. The court sustained an objection to the offer on the ground that these transactions took place after the commencement of this action on April 29th. There was no error in law in sustaining an objection to the offer, but the record discloses that the plaintiff hastened to court before the defendant had a reasonable time to protect itself in the customary way by investigation and report of its committee.

On the record the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and judgment as to the item of $10,000 damages. As to the item of $500, it appears that the district still holds the same as the consideration for a void contract, and it should be returned. This court should find from the evidence that the allegations of paragraph X of the defendant's answer relating to the fiduciary relation of the plaintiff with the district are true. On these findings the judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the sum of $10,000, and, as so modified, the judgment in the sum of $500 should be affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.

ARKELIAN et al. v. NATIONAL BANK OF VISALIA et al. (Civ. 90.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Feb. 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 3, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Trial court's finding will not be disturbed, if there is material and competent evidence to support it.

Where there is any material and competent evidence in the record to support finding of fact by trial court, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Sales ⇨181(12)—Finding that raisins tendered buyer complied with requirements of contract for delivery "in good marketable and merchantable condition" held sustained, in buyer's action to recover payment made.

In action by buyer to recover payment made on account of purchase price of raisins delivery of which buyer refused, finding that the raisins tendered by the seller were "properly dried and cured and graded as to size, * * * and in good, marketable and merchantable condition," as required by contract, held sustained by evidence.

3. Sales ⇨92—Seller's disposal of raisins in open market, after buyer's refusal without legal excuse to accept them, held not agreed rescission.

Where buyer refused, without legal excuse, to accept and pay for raisins tendered by seller which complied with quality described in contract, sale of raisins by seller in open market did not amount to rescission; rescission of contract being effected by mutual consent of parties.

4. Sales ⇨391(9)—Buyer who, without legal excuse, rejected goods, which seller thereafter sold on open market, could not recover down payment.

Where buyer, without legal excuse, breached his contract to purchase goods by refusal to accept and pay for them, though goods complied with contract, buyer could not recover down payment on purchase price, in action for money had and received, though seller, after breach, sold the property in the open market.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by Ben H. Arkelian and R. Fair, co-partners doing business under the name of Ben H. Arkelian & R. Fair, against the National Bank of Visalia and L. C. Hyde, individually and as liquidating agent of the bank. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Conley, Conley & Conley, of Fresno, for appellants.

J. A. Chase, of Visalia, for respondents.

MARKS, J. In this action appellants brought suit against respondents for $500 alleged to have been had and received by respondents for the use of appellants. Judgment was rendered in favor of the respondents, and this appeal was taken upon the ground that the findings of the trial court do not support the judgment, and that, upon the findings, judgment should have been rendered for appellants, if not for the full amount claimed, then, at least, for the sum of $250.

The evidence shows that appellants were co-partners engaged in the business of buying dried fruits, that the National Bank of Visalia was a national banking corporation, and that L. C. Hyde was its liquidating agent and acted for it in the transactions involved in this case. The bank owned a vineyard in Tulare county upon which were grown the grapes which were cured into the raisins involved herein.

On June 15, 1926, in a written contract, appellants agreed to buy from the bank, and it agreed to sell to them 25 tons of guaranteed soda dipped Thompson seedless raisins at the price of 6 cents per pound. The bank agreed "to properly dry and cure such fruit and to deliver the same, thoroughly and properly dried and cured, ungraded as to size, choice in quality, of good color, sound, and in original condition, without addition of water, free from defective fruit, slabs or damage of any kind, and in good marketable and merchantable condition," to the appellants at Fresno, Cal., either as a whole or in deliverable lots as soon as possible. Appellants paid the bank $500 on account of the purchase price of the raisins, which is the subject of this action.

When part of the raisins were cured, respondents tendered delivery, which was refused by appellants upon the ground that a large percentage of the raisins were off color and so were not "choice in quality," and therefore not in a "good marketable and merchantable condition." The only question presented was as to the color of the raisins, appellants claiming that they were about 50 per cent. dark, and therefore not of choice quality as soda dipped raisins. Respondents presented evidence to the effect that only 8 or 9 per cent. of the raisins were dark, and that the balance were of the good amber color desired in soda dipped raisins. After the rejection of the raisins by appellants on account of their color, the parties conferred several times in an effort to reach a settlement of the difficulty. Appellants offered to take the raisins and sort them, accepting and paying for only the amber colored ones at the contract price, and either rejecting the others or selling them for the account of the respondent bank at the market price for such fruit. If this offer were not accepted by the bank, appellants advised it to sell the raisins at the market, which was then from 5 to 5½ cents per pound. The bank sold the raisins for 5½ cents per pound, which was the "top market" for soda dipped Thompson seedless raisins at the time. The trial court found that the raisins tendered appellants were of the quality described in the contract, that appellants had refused to accept the same without lawful excuse, and rendered judgment for respondents. Appellants attack the finding of the court as to the quality of the raisins and maintain that there was a mutual rescission of the contract by the parties.

[1-3] Where there is any material and competent evidence in the record to support the finding of a fact by the trial court, it will not be disturbed on appeal. This is too elementary to need citation of authorities. There is ample evidence to support this finding. Respondents produced evidence to show that soda dipped raisins are never uniform in color, as some always fail to take the bleach, and that the percentage of dark raisins in the lot in question was not unusual, that soda dipped raisins were never sorted by the seller, and that those in question were of good color as the trade knew this term, and were choice in quality and in good marketable and merchantable condition as those terms were used by those dealing in this kind of dried fruit. Of course, there was other evidence produced by appellants flatly contradicting this, but it created a conflict which the trial court resolved in favor of the respondents. This finding will not be disturbed here, especially as the raisins were actually sold at the highest market price obtainable for soda dipped raisins at the time. As under this finding the appellants had no legal excuse for refusing to accept and pay for the raisins, the bank could sell them in the open market if it so desired, without subjecting itself to the claim of a rescission of the contract. A rescission of a contract is effected by the mutual consent of the parties, and such a consent on the part of the seller is not shown by the mere sale of the property where the buyer refuses to accept and pay for it. Phillips v. Stark, 186 Cal. 369, 199 P. 509; Phillips v. Stark, 65 Cal. App. 136, 223 P. 443; Cincotta v. Catania, 61 Cal. App. 38, 214 P. 451; Tomboy Gold & Copper Co. v. Marks, 185 Cal. 336, 197 P. 94, 95; Little v. Kennedy, 86 Cal. App. 324, 260 P. 890.

[4] The facts in the case of Tomboy Gold & Copper Co. v. Marks, supra, are so exactly similar to the case at bar that it will be unnecessary to extend this discussion further. In that case the Supreme Court held that a purchaser who had breached his contract of purchase of personal property could not recover money paid on account of the purchase price in an action for money had and received, where there was no mutual rescission of the contract, even though the seller had later sold the personal property involved to another for the same price that was to have been paid by the original purchaser. The other cases hereinbefore cited, especially Cincotta v. Catania, supra, amply support this rule. In the case of Tomboy Gold & Copper Co. v. Marks, supra, the court said: "In the absence of a mutual rescission there can be no recovery by the vendee under such circumstances. No rule is more firmly settled with relation to contracts for purchase, whether concerning real or personal property, than that to the effect that a vendee who without lawful right refuses to go on with his contract, cannot recover from a vendor not in default, who is ready and willing to proceed and fulfill all his obligations, all or any of the money that he had paid to the vendor in accord with the terms of the agreement. This rule has been uniformly applied in California. It was declared in both opinions in Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 10, 19, 20, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, 43 L. R. A. 199, 55 P. 713, 716, 720, the opinion of Mr. Justice Henshaw saying that in such a case the vendor, 'still resting upon the contract, * * * may remain inactive, yet retain to his own use the moneys paid by the vendee, so that it is of no moment whether or not the contract declares that such moneys shall upon the breach be forfeited as liquidated damages,' and the opinion of Mr. Justice Harrison declaring it to be the law of the state that 'the vendee, who was himself in default in the payment of a portion of the money, could not against the will of the vendor repudiate the contract and recover the portion already paid.' Many cases might be cited in which this rule has been applied, but the rule is not disputed, and it is plain that plaintiff has no right of recovery here except upon the theory of mutual abandonment and rescission. Upon the facts of this case there is no other possible foundation for a right of recovery on the part of plaintiff. The single question presented, then, is whether the sale of the machine to another vendee by defendant corporation within a month after the final and definite repudiation of its contract by plaintiff must be taken as a consent to rescission on the part of defendant corporation. We think this question was squarely decided against the contention of plaintiff in Rayfield v. Van Meter, 120 Cal. 416, 52 P. 666."

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; BARNARD, J.

103 Cal. App. 661

KIMBRO v. KIMBRO. (Civ. 3978.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 1, 1930.

Divorce $\S$ 130—Evidence sustained finding that husband was not entitled to divorce on ground of cruelty.

Evidence in action for divorce held to sustain finding that husband was not entitled to divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Action for divorce by Minnette S. Kimbro against Robert L. Kimbro, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment denying either party a divorce and requiring defendant to pay support money, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John L. McGonigle, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action for divorce. The plaintiff alleged extreme cruelty on the part of her husband. He denied the allegations of the complaint and filed a cross-complaint charging extreme cruelty on the part of the plaintiff. Judgment was entered denying either party a divorce and requiring the defendant to pay the plaintiff $20 a month for her support. The defendant has appealed from the judgment.

The appellant contends that he should have been granted a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, specified in his cross-complaint as follows:

"That on or about the 15th day of May, 1919, * * * without reason and without justification, the cross-defendant accused this cross-plaintiff of having sexual intercourse with lewd and fast women."

The answer to the cross-complaint "admits that sometime during the year 1919, cross-defendant accused cross-complainant of having illicit relationship with other women but denies that said accusations so made were without reason and without justification."

At the trial the plaintiff testified that she accused the defendant of having illicit relations with other women "because I think he was. * * * I saw them at the beach and I knew what their character was. * * * He was with two women that I had been told were not of good character, and I had every reason to think they were not. * * * There was one woman there at the beach. * * * They would get away from the crowd and always were so interested talking to each other, and * * * she made little remarks that made me think everything was not all right. * * * He was always hanging around her. * * * I asked him about being so familiar with her, and he said, 'I don't know anything about her. I never had anything to do or say to her,' and he was there all the time."

It appears that the plaintiff's accusation was made during one of the quarrels between them. The defendant was of the age of 76 years at the time of his alleged misconduct and the plaintiff was then 54. It is not deemed necessary to follow the parties through their charges and countercharges, as shown by the evidence, but it is sufficient to say that it does not appear as a matter of law contrary to the findings of the trial court, that the defendant is entitled to a divorce on the ground alleged in the cross-complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 552

KRAFT v. ROOKE. (Civ. 87.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 29, 1930.

1. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 53—Oral contract of employment for year to begin January 1, made on December 24, held within statute (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1973, subd. 1).

Oral contract entered into on 24th of December, 1924, by terms of which period of service was to begin on 1st day of January, 1925, and to continue to December 31, 1925, held within provisions of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1973, subd. 1, as oral contract not to be performed within a year and invalid because not in writing.

2. Frauds, statute of $\S$ 129(2)—Absent fraud or unfairness, rule which makes part performance bar to pleading statute held inapplicable in action for breach of oral employment contract.

In action on oral employment contract, which could not have been performed within year, where there was no evidence or claim of fraud or unfairness in employment, rule which sometimes makes part performance bar to pleading statute of frauds held inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by C. Kraft against B. G. Rooke. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. W. Braswell, of Long Beach, for appellant.

John Preston King, of Lindsay, for respondent.

SLOANE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the stipulated amount of his services upon an alleged contract of employment which he claims was terminated without cause. The evidence discloses, and the trial court found: "That on December 24, 1924, defendant and plaintiff entered into a contract, whereby defendant employed plaintiff to work for defendant at defendant's packing house in Lindsay, California, for a period of one year; said employment to commence on January 1st, 1925, and end on December 31, 1925, said defendant to pay plaintiff for his services the sum of $250.00 per month." And that by said contract defendant further agreed "to pay plaintiff at the end of said year of employment a bonus of $50.00 per month on condition that plaintiff keep straight and fulfil his contract. That by 'keeping straight' was meant by the parties that plaintiff refrain from the use of intoxicating liquor."

It further appears from the findings sufficiently supported by the evidence, that said plaintiff entered upon the performance of said contract of employment on the 1st day of January, 1925, and continued to perform said contract until defendant on the 10th day of July, 1925, discharged plaintiff from said employment. The court further finds, and though the evidence is conflicting, the findings are sufficiently supported by the evidence, that there was no substantial breach of the agreement by the plaintiff, although he did not strictly keep his agreement not to indulge in intoxicating liquors; and that in any event defendant waived any delinquencies of plaintiff in performance of his duties, and finally discharged him because of certain changes in business plans; and that plaintiff was ready, able, and willing to carry out the terms of the agreement, and that his discharge was without sufficient justification.

The court rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $701, together with costs and disbursements amounting to $34.50. An appeal from the judgment was taken to the Supreme Court and afterwards transferred to this court for decision. The defendant in answer pleaded that the discharge of plaintiff was for sufficient cause to defeat plaintiff's claim, and that there was an accord and satisfaction between the parties. As we have stated, the evidence on these points was in substantial conflict, and the findings of the trial court will have to be sustained.

[1] The answer, however, sets up the further defense that the agreement of employment in question was entirely oral, and not supported by any contract or memorandum in writing, and comes within the provisions of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subd. 1, which provides that an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof is invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party charged, or by his agents. That the agreement herein relied upon was entirely a verbal agreement, and was entered into on the 24th day of December, 1924, is not disputed, and by its terms the period of service was to begin on the 1st day of January, 1925, and to continue to December 31, 1925, covering a period of more than one year from the date of the agreement.

We are entirely without the aid of respondent in solving the question as to whether or not evidence in support of this alleged contract is barred by section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure, respondent's counsel having declined to file a brief on appeal and stipulated to the submission of the case without oral argument. This failure is explained by counsel for respondent on the ground that his client refused to pay for printing the brief on appeal.

We have, however, examined the authorities on the point involved, and are satisfied that the objection as to the sufficiency of the oral contract to support the judgment is well taken.

It is clear that this agreement of employment is one which was not to be consummated within a year from the date thereof, and although the excess period only covers a few days, it is not within the province of the courts to extend the limitations of the statute.

While the language quoted from an opinion of Lord Ellenborough that, "if we were to hold that a case which extended one minute beyond the time pointed out by the statute did not fall within its prohibition, I do not see where we should stop, for in point of reason an excess of twenty years will equally not be within the act," may be somewhat extreme, certainly a lapse of several days is a sufficiently obvious extension of the time of performance to bring the case within the statute.

The rule is laid down in 25 Ruling Case Law, page 477, as follows: "It has been held in this country, in at least one jurisdiction, that where the period of service is to commence on the day following the making of a contract, though the period is for a year, the contract is not within the statute"—citing Dickson v. Frisbee, 52 Ala. 165, 23 Am. Rep. 565. And the same rule has been laid down in a recent English case, citing 17 English Ruling Cases, 182. Other cases, however, take the view that a contract for a year's service, the period of service to commence on the day following the making of a contract, is within the statute. Chase v. Hinkley, 126 Wis. 75, 105 N. W. 230, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 110 Am. St. Rep. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 328.

On the other hand, though the period of service is only for a year, still, if the period is to commence in futuro and not on the day following the inception of the contract, it is held that the contract is within the statute. 25 R. C. L., p. 477; Diamond v. Jacquith, 14 Ariz. 119, 125 P. 712, L. R. A. 1916D, 880; Gulfport Cotton Oil, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Reneau, 94 Miss. 904, 48 So. 292, 136 Am. St. Rep. 607.

[2] Neither can this be said to be a transaction that comes within the equitable rule which sometimes makes a part performance a bar to pleading the statute of frauds, where there are elements of fraud involved. There is no evidence or claim of any fraud or unfairness in this employment to estop either party from taking advantage of the statute of frauds. As is said in Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 793, 106 P. 88, 93, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154: "The claim of plaintiff is not that mere part performance of a contract for personal services which by its terms is not to be performed within a year, 'invalid' under our statute because not evidenced by writing, renders the same valid and enforceable. Such a claim would, of course, find no support in the authorities. Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 448. He necessarily is compelled to rely solely on the claim that the defendants by their conduct and promises, on which he was entitled to and did rely, having induced him to give up his life position in the police department in order to enter their employ for a term of years at $300 a month, on the assurance from them that they would give him a written contract for such time and amount, and it being impossible for him to be placed in statu quo are estopped from now setting up the statute of frauds as a defense to his action on the contract. Under this claim, the fact of part performance by plaintiff plays no part whatever. It was the change of position caused by his resignation from the police department upon which his claim wholly rests, and this resignation was, of course, no part of the performance of the contract of service, but was something that must be done by plaintiff before he could begin to perform, as was known to the defendants. * * * The right of courts of equity to hold a person estopped to assert the statute of frauds, where such assertion would amount to practicing a fraud, cannot be disputed. * * * It was said in Glass v. Hulbert, 102 Mass. 24, 35, 3 Am. Rep. 418: "The fraud most commonly treated as taking an agreement out of the statute of frauds is that which consists in setting up the statute against its enforcement, after the other party has been induced to make expenditures, or a change of situation in regard to the subject-matter of the agreement, or upon the supposition that it was to be carried into execution, and the assumption of rights thereby to be acquired; so that the refusal to complete the execution of the agreement is not merely a denial of rights which it was intended to confer, but the infliction of an unjust and unconscientious injury and loss. In such case, the party is held, by force of his acts or silent acquiescence, which have misled the other to his harm, to be estopped from setting up the statute of frauds.' This statement has been accepted as setting forth a plain and satisfactory ground for equitable jurisdiction, together with a clear indication of the proper limitation of its exercise."

In Long v. Long, 162 Cal. 428, 122 P. 1077, 1078, dealing with a contract not to be performed within a year, the court says: "The principal point made by the respondents in favor of the judgment is that the oral contract was partly performed, and that, in consequence thereof, it was taken out of the statute of frauds. This contention cannot be maintained. The case, in this particular, is not distinguishable from the case of Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 793, 106 P. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154. In that case, the effect of an oral contract between Seymour and the defendants, whereby they agreed to employ him for the period of 10 years, and to put the contract in writing, was considered. Seymour had commenced the employment, and had served a number of months thereunder, for which he had received the stipulated compensation. The court declared that such part performance was not sufficient to make a case in equity for the enforcement of a contract of that character. This is the general rule laid down in all the authorities."

This statement of the rule in California is recognized in Standing v. Morosco, 43 Cal. App. 244, 184 P. 954; Edgar Bros. Co. v. Schmeiser Manufacturing Co., 33 Cal. App. 667, 166 P. 366; Herspring v. United Canneries Co., 54 Cal. App. 402, 201 P. 966.

Under the statute of frauds, the plaintiff could only enforce his contract by virtue of the oral agreement as an employment from month to month, and therefore cannot rely upon terms of the agreement not in writing as a basis for recovering the value of his services beyond the date of his discharge.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 297

McPHEETERS v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA. (Civ. 6616.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1930.

1. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Phrase "willful betrayal of professional secret," in Medical Practice Act, does not apply to all disclosures physician may intentionally make (Medical Practice Act, § 14, subd. 2, as amended).

Phrase "willful betrayal of professional secret," in Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 732) § 14, subd. 2, as amended, cannot be held to apply to any and all disclosures that physician may intentionally make.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Statute authorizing revocation of license of physician for unprofessional conduct must be strictly construed in favor of accused (Medical Practice Act, § 14, subd. 2, as amended).

Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 732) § 14, subd. 2, as amended, authorizing revocation of license of physicians for unprofessional conduct, being in its nature penal, must be strictly construed in favor of an accused.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Statute authorizing revocation of license of physicians for unprofessional conduct should be so construed as to carry out Legislature's intent and be given reasonable construction (Medical Practice Act, § 14, subd. 2, as amended).

Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 732) § 14, subd. 2, as amended, authorizing revocation of physicians' licenses for unprofessional conduct, should be so construed as to carry out obvious intent of Legislature, and, with this end in view, it should be given a reasonable construction.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Word "willful," in statute authorizing revocation of physician's license for willful betraying of professional secret, means deliberately and with intent to do injury (Medical Practice Act, § 14, subd. 2, as amended).

Word "willful," in Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 732) § 14, subd. 2, as amended, authorizing revocation of license of physician for unprofessional conduct in willful betraying of professional secrets, means deliberately and intentionally and with design and purpose, and implies deliberate intention for which no reasonable excuse can be given to do or refrain from doing some action, which good faith in performance of some duty requires, and it further implies that there must be some design or purpose and intent to do an injury and means an actual and conscious infraction of duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Willful; Willfully.]

5. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(1)—Power conferred to revoke license of physician must be under provisions of law which are reasonable and declared with certainty.

Power to revoke license of physician must be under provisions of law which are reasonable and declared with such certainty and definiteness in act that physician may know exactly what they are.

6. Physicians and surgeons ⇨11(2)—Physician's writing to former office assistant regarding operations of ordinary character performed on patients and other matters held not unprofessional conduct warranting revocation of license (Medical Practice Act, § 14, subd. 2, as amended).

Physician's writing letters to former office assistant acquainted with his patients and familiar with their ailments, containing information that physician had performed operations of an ordinary character on certain patients and describing condition of patients and nature of operations and revealing that particular patient who was contemplating marriage had made certain inquiries concerning sex relations generally, held not to be unprofessional conduct by willful betraying of professional secrets so as to warrant revocation of license under Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 732) § 14, subd. 2, as amended.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

The Board of Medical Examiners of California revoked the license of G. Carl McPheeters to practice medicine, but the court annulled and set aside the judgment and order of the board, and it appeals. Affirmed.

Melvin & Sullivan, Bradford M. Melvin, and Wm. J. De Martini, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur Allyn, of Fresno, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Appeal from a judgment of the superior court annulling and setting aside a judgment and order of the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California, revoking the license of respondent herein to practice medicine and surgery.

The complaint filed with the clerk of the Board of Medical Examiners alleged that respondent had been guilty of unprofessional conduct in violating section 14, subdivision 2 (St. 1913, p. 732), and acts amendatory thereof, authorizing the revocation of the license of a physician for unprofessional conduct. This section is commonly known as the Medical Practice Act. It declares "unprofessional conduct" to mean "the willful betraying of a professional secret." The misconduct complained of by the board consisted in the writing of certain letters by respondent to a young lady who had formerly been employed in his office as an assistant, and who was acquainted with his patients and familiar with their ailments and physical disabilities. These letters reveal the fact that respondent and his former office assistant were on very intimate terms with each other. Some of these letters contained the information that the accused had performed operations of an ordinary character upon certain of his patients, and they described the condition of such patients and the nature of the operations. Another letter revealed the information that a particular patient, who was contemplating marriage, had made certain inquiries concerning sex relations generally, with which she was apparently unfamiliar. Respondent described in this letter the nature of the inquiries and the knowledge he was able to impart to her upon the subject. The charges made were not filed or pressed by any of the persons whose secrets are alleged to have been willfully betrayed, but were filed by the medical examiners who acquired possession of the letters after the death of the recipient. The letters contained nothing which would in any manner tend to disgrace, embarrass, or incriminate any of the patients, as they referred to ordinary operations, one of which was the delivery of a child. It was stipulated at the hearing before the board that the patients would not, if called to testify, make any objection whatsoever to the disclosures made by the accused. Under all the facts, the trial court was of the opinion that no evidence was adduced at the trial of respondent before the board proving or tending to prove that he was guilty of unprofessional conduct in willfully betraying any professional secrets. It was the further opinion of the court that the portion of the statute upon which said accusation was based is contrary and repugnant to and in violation of section 1, article 1, and section 13, article 1, of the Constitution of the state of California, and that it was likewise violative of section 1, article 14, of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

[1-6] Assuming that portion of the act in question to be constitutional, we are of the opinion that the acts complained of do not come within the ban of the statute. The phrase "willful betrayal of professional secrets" cannot be held to apply to any and all disclosures that a physician may intentionally make. If this were so, it would be a transgression under the act to divulge the fact that a patient was suffering from a bruise or fracture or of one of the many common diseases that human flesh is heir to. The statute is in its nature penal, and such laws are to be strictly construed in favor of an accused. Nothing is regarded as intended that is not within the letter as well as the spirit of the act; nothing that is not clearly and intelligibly described in the very words, as manifestly intended by the Legislature. Crimes built up by courts or boards with the aid of inference, implication, and strained construction are repugnant to the spirit and letter of the law. It would be extremely wrong that one should be reasoned into a penalty when the words of an act do not warrant or justify it. Statutes of this character should be so construed as to carry out the obvious intent of the Legislature, and with this end in view they should be given a reasonable construction. No rule of statutory construction is violated by adopting the common sense meaning of words which best harmonize with the object and intent of the Legislature. By the use of the word "willful" the Legislature without doubt intended to mean an act that implied an actual and conscious infraction of duty, and it would be a harsh and unreasonable construction to hold otherwise and to say that the disclosures here involved were of that character intended to be remedied by the prohibitory enactment, and common humanity requires that it should not be construed in this limited and strict sense. If such a construction was imperative any disclosures, though harmless, and innocently made without objection from the patients and regardless of their nature, would deprive a physician of his right to practice medicine, a right which has taken him years of study and a large expenditure of money to acquire. Legislation of the character embraced within the general scope of the act in question, in so far as it provides for the revocation of the certificate of a physician, can be sustained only upon the ground that the Legislature has authority under its general police power to provide all reasonable regulations that may necessarily affect the public health, safety, and morals. The power thus conferred must be under provisions of law which are reasonable and declared with such certainty and definiteness in the act that a physician may know exactly what they are. Hewitt v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 84 P. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315. That the Legislature did not intend the restriction to apply to all disclosures is evidenced by its use of the word "willful." It has been held that such word means "deliberately and intentionally, and with design and purpose." State v. Smith, 199 N. W. 427, 159 Minn. 429, 511. It implies a deliberate intention for which no reasonable excuse can be given to do or refrain from doing some act which good faith in the performance of some duty requires, as the case may be. It further implies that there must be some design or purpose and intent to do an injury. The word sometimes means "with a bad purpose and with the intention designedly and purposely to cause injury." So it has been held that an act, though intentional, is not willful unless done with a wrongful purpose, or with the design to injure another, or committed out of mere wantonness or lawlessness. People v. Martinitis, 168 App. Div. 446, 153 N. Y. S. 791; Ex parte Cote, 93 Vt. 10, 106 A. 519. It means "bad motive or purpose with the direct effect of injuring another" and involves the idea of premeditation and determination to do the act, though known to be forbidden. King v. Empire, etc., Co., 148 Va. 585, 139 S. E. 478, 58 A. L. R. 193; Gildersleeve v. Newton Steel Co., 109 Ohio St. 341, 142 N. E. 678. Given a rational and reasonable construction, we do not think that the acts complained of come within the ban of the statute. The act was never designed or intended to seal the lips of a physician against any and all disclosures, irrespective of their harmless character, nor was it designed to embrace facts not connected with the practice of the profession.

This conclusion renders unnecessary a discussion and decision upon the question of the constitutionality of the act.

The judgment annulling the order of revocation of respondent's license made by the Board of Medical Examiners is affirmed.

I concur: CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 572

Ex parte MAGUTH. (Cr. 1870.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Criminal law ☞1192—Generally, appellate court's judgment in criminal case, accompanied by directions regarding further proceedings in matter, is mandatory.

Generally, judgment of appellate court, accompanied by directions to lower court as to further proceedings in matter, is mandatory in character, admits of no deviation therefrom, and any proceedings by lower court contrary to directions contained in remittitur are of no validity.

2. Criminal law ☞1192—On receipt of remittitur from superior court after affirmance of conviction, jurisdiction of municipal court, except as limited by remittitur, is restored.

On receipt by municipal court of remittitur from superior court after appeal from conviction on charge of reckless driving, jurisdiction of municipal court is restored, except as limited by terms of remittitur, and thereafter, unless affected by appeal or some proceeding of analogous effect, its orders within its jurisdiction are binding and conclusive.

3. Criminal law ☞1192—Trial court having jurisdiction may pass on application for probation after affirmance of conviction any time prior to execution of judgment.

Trial court may hear and determine defendant's application for probation after affirmance of conviction by appellate court at any time prior to execution of judgment so long as it has jurisdiction.

4. Criminal law ☞1001—Defendant having been placed on probation before execution of judgment and not having violated terms thereof held not subject to arrest under same judgment.

Where municipal court, after affirmance of conviction in superior court for reckless driving, and before execution of sentence in whole or in part, released defendant on probation, and terms thereof had not been violated in any respect, defendant held not subject to arrest and detention on account of judgment and sentence theretofore imposed.

Original application by Edward Maguth for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles to secure release of petitioner from custody. Petitioner discharged.

Ivan Kelso, J. Allen Davis, L. D. Stahl, and Thomas J. White, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Lloyd S. Nix, City Prosecutor, F. W. Fellows and Joe W. Matherly, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The record herein discloses that, pursuant to the conviction of Edward Maguth in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, on a charge of reckless driving of an automobile, and following a judgment and sentence of the defendant to a term of ten days in the city jail of said city, he appealed from said judgment to the superior court, where the judgment was affirmed. As a part of said judgment of affirmance, by order of the superior court, a five-day stay of execution was granted to the defendant, at the termination of which time he was ordered to appear before the municipal court for further proceedings. Before the expiration of the five-day stay of execution granted to the defendant, the municipal court issued a commitment of the defendant to said city jail "for the term of ten days, and the said defendant be discharged at the expiration of said term." On the day following the date of such commitment, and before the judgment had been executed either wholly or in part, the defendant appeared before the municipal court and was granted a further stay of execution for a period of ten days, with leave also granted to him to file an application for probation. At the same time the defendant was ordered to appear in said court eight days later for hearing on said application for probation. When said application came on for hearing, the court sentenced the defendant to serve ten days in the city jail of the city of Los Angeles, and then and there granted him probation by suspending the execution of the sentence thus imposed upon him. Thereupon the defendant was released from custody. More than five months later on a second commitment issued by the municipal court on the judgment theretofore rendered against the defendant, he was arrested and placed in the city jail of the city of Los Angeles to serve the term of ten days specified in the said judgment. It is because of such last-named consequence, arising from the facts hereinbefore set forth, that, through the medium of a writ of habeas corpus, the defendant has sought his release from custody. No claim is made that at any time following the date of the order by which the defendant was granted probation he violated the terms of his probation; nor is it shown that for any reason or cause not appearing from the foregoing facts was the defendant restrained of his liberty.

[1, 2] From a consideration of the facts in the case, the first situation to which attention becomes directed is that, as a part of the judgment or order rendered by the superior court in affirmance of the judgment rendered by the municipal court, an order was made by which the execution of the judgment in the municipal court was stayed for a period of five days. The general rule is that a judgment rendered by an appellate court, which is accompanied by directions to the lower court as to further proceedings in the matter, is mandatory in character, admits of no deviation therefrom, and that any proceedings by the lower court contrary to the directions contained in the remittitur from the appellate court are of no validity. 2 Cal. Jur. 1051; 8 Cal. Jur. 640, and cases there cited. Applying such rule, and remembering that, before the expiration of the five-day stay of execution of the judgment granted by the superior court, the municipal court issued its commitment of the defendant, at once it appears that such order of commitment, having been issued in violation of the order of the superior court, if not a nullity, at least was incapable of legal enforcement. But aside from and irrespective of the effect of such order by the municipal court, on receipt of the remittitur from the superior court, except as limited by its terms, the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the action was restored to it. Thereafter, unless affected by appeal, or some proceeding of analogous effect, its orders, within its jurisdiction, were binding and conclusive.

[3] In the case of Lloyd v. Superior Court, 283 P. 931, the Supreme Court of this state has unqualifiedly recognized the legal right and authority of the trial court to hear and determine an application by a defendant for probation after an affirmance of its judgment by an appellate court of his conviction, at any time prior to the execution of the judgment, and so long as the trial court has jurisdiction of the case.

[4] As from the statement of facts in the instant case it is apparent that at the time probation was granted to the defendant the judgment had never been executed either wholly or in part, and that in hearing and determining the application of the defendant for probation the municipal court was acting within its powers, it follows that, in the absence of any violation of the terms of his probation, the defendant was not properly and legally subject to arrest and detention on account of the judgment and sentence which theretofore had been imposed upon him. Accordingly, without consideration of other pertinent reasons urged by petitioner in the matter, it is ordered that petitioner be, and he is hereby, released from custody.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

In re FINLEY.

103 Cal. App. 694

FINLEY v. FINLEY et al.

(Civ. 6270.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1930.

1. Husband and wife ⇨14(3)—Spouses held not owners in joint tenancy of money deposited in escrow with instructions to assign land purchase contract to them as joint tenants (Civ. Code, § 683; Land Title Act).

Husband and wife depositing money saved by their joint efforts in escrow with instructions to assign contract for purchase of realty to them as joint tenants held not owners of fund in joint tenancy within Civ. Code, § 683, so as to vest fee-simple title to realty in wife on husband's death and entitle her to registration of equitable title under Land Title Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8589).

2. Life estates ⇨8—Widow devised life estate in realty covered by contract to purchase, assigned to spouses partly in consideration of their assuming payments, which continued after husband's death, held not owner by adverse possession.

Widow to whom husband's will devised life estate in realty covered by contract to purchase, assigned to them partly in consideration of their assuming payments to vendor, which continued for some time after husband's death, held not owner thereof by adverse possession.

3. Life estates ⇨8—Life tenant's possession is not adverse to that of remaindermen.

The possession of the life tenant cannot be considered adverse to that of the remaindermen, who have no right of entry during continuance of life estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Application by Ellen Genevieve Finley for initial registration of land, contested by Frank Finley and another. From a judgment denying the application, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hewitt, Ford, McCormick & Crump and J. F. Moroney, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The petitioner sought initial registration of a parcel of property which she alleged to own in fee. The court below denied her application, and she is here on an appeal from that judgment.

The facts appearing from the record before us are as follows: On and prior to June 7, 1920, the property was owned by one Rosalie C. Fuller, who on that date contracted to sell it to H. C. Frederick for $3,362.50, payable in installments. Thereafter and on January 7, 1921, Frederick, in consideration of $2,650 paid to him and the assumption by the assignees of the payments to Rosalie C. Fuller, assigned the contract to Thomas Finley and Ellen Finley, who entered into possession of the property on February 1, 1921. Thomas Finley died on June 22, 1921. The escrow instructions of Thomas Finley and his wife, Ellen Finley, the appellant, to the escrow holder of the papers and funds involved in the assignment from Frederick to them, called for the assignment to be made to them as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, but for some reason not appearing from the meager record before us this was not done. The money paid to Frederick was taken from funds brought into this state from an eastern state and represented savings from their joint efforts. After payment of the balance to Rosalie C. Fuller, the appellant demanded of her a deed which the former refused to execute in favor of petitioner. By the terms of the last will of Thomas Finley, deceased, a life estate in the property was devised to the appellant and the remainder to the respondents, who are children of appellant and deceased. One further item should be noted. The appellant was appointed, and the trial court found that she had continued at all times to act as executrix of the last will and testament of the deceased, Thomas Finley.

Under these facts the appellant asserts that she established the existence of a joint tenancy and therefore, as the survivor, owns the property in fee simple. Assuming otherwise, she claims to have established title by adverse possession, and finally, though she did not prove a deed from the former record owner, that she is the equitable owner of the fee, and the provisions of the Land Title Act (Deering, Gen. Laws, 1923, p. 3611) are sufficiently comprehensive to allow the registration of an equitable as well as a legal title.

[1] The argument that appellant proved the existence of an estate in joint tenancy is based upon the proposition that she succeeded in establishing that the first payment of $2,650 was a fund, title to which was held by herself and her husband in joint tenancy. The only evidence contained in the record in any way supporting this contention consists of the instruction calling for the assignment of the contract of purchase to be made in their names as joint tenants. We are not unmindful of the authorities which declare that where a fund is owned by two people as joint tenants and it is used for the purchase of real property that the real property is held in like tenure. We must, however, deny the sufficiency of the evidence to establish that title to the money deposited in escrow was held in joint tenancy. Certainly it was not so held at the time it was deposited by the parties in the escrow, and unless the instructions can be construed to operate as or constitute a transfer, the title to the money was not altered. In our state the common-law rule respecting the creation of estates in joint tenancies has been abrogated by section 683 of the Civil Code, which at the time of the transaction here in question read as follows: "A joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or *transfer, when expressly declared in the will or * * * transfer to be a joint tenancy*, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants." (Italics ours.) Very early in California jurisprudence the substance of the section just quoted was under the scrutiny of the Supreme Court. In Bowen v. May, 12 Cal. 348, decided in 1859, it was said: "Joint tenancies are not favored by our system—the statute having abrogated the common law rule of conveyances in this respect—so that in order to constitute a joint estate in lands in two or more persons, such estate must be expressly declared in the conveyance itself, otherwise the estate conveyed will be held by the grantees as tenants in common." We have been unable to find an instance where this declaration has ever been questioned or disputed. In fact, in Denigan v. San Francisco Savings Union, 127 Cal. 142, 59 P. 390, 391, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35, it is affirmed in substance. There the contest revolved around an account in the defendant bank "in the name of Francis and Ellen Denigan, payable to either." The court, after referring to the section we have quoted, said: "The money deposited by Ellen was up to that time her separate property, and it cannot be said that she then acquired any interest therein; and, if it could be assumed that by reason of the form in which the deposit was made Francis acquired any interest therein, it was acquired at a different time and by a different title from that of Ellen. There was no declaration that the money should be held in joint tenancy, and the words, 'payable to either,' placed in the account, take away the claim of a joint interest." So here, in so far as the money is concerned, there was no transference of title from the appellant to her husband, or vice versa, nor was there a declaration that the fund should thereafter be held by them as a joint tenancy. To put the question beyond the bounds of legitimate debate, let us assume that for some reason the escrow had failed and the sum of $2,650 had been returned to the depositors. Can it be seriously argued that the parties would not have owned the sum under the same title by which they held it prior to the time it was placed in escrow?

[2, 3] It is of course obvious that appellant has not established a title by adverse possession, at least by the facts which are brought to us in the record. Her possession was not adverse to that of her husband prior to his death. Nor was it adverse to Rosalie C. Fuller, the seller of the property, until after the payments to her had been completed, the date of which does not appear; it being fairly inferable, however, from the findings that they continued for some time after the death of Thomas Finley. By the will of the deceased the petitioner became a life tenant as to the undivided one-half interest owned by decedent, and the contesting children occupied the position of remaindermen. Under the authority of Pryor v. Winter, 147 Cal. 554, 82 P. 202, 109 Am. St. Rep. 162, and cases there cited, the possession of the life tenant cannot be considered adverse to that of the remaindermen. In other words, no right of entry exists in the remainderman during the continuance of the life estate. The third and last point advanced by appellant, that she is entitled by reason of being the equitable owner of the property to have the title registered, is founded upon the assumption that the title was held by her and her husband as joint tenants. Our disposition of the first point makes further comment unnecessary.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; BURNELL, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 607

STATE COMPENSATION INSURANCE FUND et al. v. ROTHWELL.
(Civ. 3984.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨728(1)—Exceptions to rulings upon admissibility of unfavorable evidence and specifications that no evidence supported findings and decision held too general (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Bill of exceptions, specifying as errors of law occurring at trial of action for personal injuries and excepted to by plaintiffs each and every ruling of court upon admission or rejection of evidence applicable to defendant, specifying absence of evidence to support any of findings, and that decision is against law because findings do not support judgment, held to set forth specifications too general in nature to permit District Court of Appeal to go into the subject, since Code Civ. Proc. § 648, provides that objection must specify particulars in which evidence is alleged to be insufficient.

2. Judgment ⇨256(2)—Findings that State Compensation Insurance Fund paid coplaintiff suing for injuries compensation and $144.40 for medical expense supported judgment for Fund of over $144.40.

Where complaint, in action by State Compensation Insurance Fund and injured person for injuries, alleged in appropriate terms that Insurance Fund had paid and become obligated to pay coplaintiff amount due him for compensation, and court found that plaintiff had paid to coplaintiff compensation in sum of $537.08 and for X-ray medical treatment the sum of $144.40, findings supported judgment in favor of State Compensation Insurance Fund in excess of $144.40.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action by the State Compensation Insurance Fund and M. F. Tillery against Dr. V. D. Rothwell. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Moore, of Long Beach, for appellant.

A. G. Ritter, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff M. J. Tillery by reason of the alleged negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant. It is also alleged in the complaint that at the time of the accident the plaintiff Tillery was working as a watchman for the Atkinson Merchants' Police and Fire Patrol and that said organization was at the time of the accident insured by the State Compensation Insurance Fund, the other plaintiff herein.

The court awarded the plaintiffs a judgment in the sum of $1,750. The defendant appeals. The case has been brought to this court by a bill of exceptions, and defendant seeks to review the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the court's findings of fact.

It is the contention of the respondent that the bill of exceptions does not contain any specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. In this behalf the bill of exceptions reads as follows: "Defendant now specifies as errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by plaintiffs, each and every ruling of the court upon the admission or rejection of evidence offered which was unfavorable to defendant as set forth in the foregoing bill of exceptions and defendant specifies that there is no evidence to support any of the findings above mentioned and further specifies that the decision is against law in this, that the findings do not support the judgment." Such specifications have many times been held to be too general in their nature to permit a court to go into that subject. Section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the objection must specify the particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient. In Mills v. Brady, 185 Cal. 317, 320, 196 P. 776, 777, in construing section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and holding that general specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence similar to the specifications in the case at bar are insufficient, the court says: "The only pertinent specifications are the general ones that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment and the judgment is contrary to it, and that it 'is insufficient to justify the findings' and 'the findings of the court are contrary to the evidence.' Where, as here, there are specific findings, the Code has been construed to require no more than a specification of the particular finding or findings which it is claimed are not supported, but this at least must be done, and a general specification that the evidence does not support 'the findings' is not a compliance with the Code requirement that the particulars wherein it does not support them must be stated, and is wholly insufficient." In the case of Crow v. Crow, 168 Cal. 607, 143 P. 689, it is held that particular specifications are necessary to convey fair and correct knowledge both to the adverse party and to the trial court the precise findings excepted to as not being sustained by the evidence. It is further held in the case last cited that the court cannot consider the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, unless there has been a substantial compliance with the terms of the law to bring the question to the attention of the court. The latest expression of our courts upon this subject, to which our attention has been called, are Schultz v. City of Venice, 200 Cal. 50, 251 P. 913, and Mazuran v. Stefanich et ux. (Cal. App.) 272 P. 772. Both of these cases are in harmony with the rule enunciated by the cases above cited.

[1] In the instant case, there being a lack of proper specifications to review the evidence, we may not go into that question.

[2] One other question is presented for determination. Appellant claims that the findings do not support the judgment in favor of the State Compensation Fund in excess of the sum of $144.40. The complaint alleges, in appropriate terms, that the said plaintiff had paid and become obligated to pay its coplaintiff the amount due him for compensation. The court found that said plaintiff had paid to its coplaintiff compensation in the sum of $537.08, and in response to another allegation of the complaint, had paid for X-ray and medical treatment for its coplaintiff the further sum of $144.40. We are of the opinion that the findings do support the judgment. The prayer of the complaint asked for a judgment of $5,144.50. The judgment was in the sum of $1,750, and was less than the amount of the judgment which the court was legally entitled to render.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 738

Ex parte GURY. (Cr. 1902.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1930.

1. Habeas corpus $\Rightarrow$ 34—Prior adjudication is conclusive in habeas corpus involving minor's custody.

In habeas corpus, in which custody of minor child is involved as between or among the same parties, and especially where no new facts are presented, prior adjudication by court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive.

2. Habeas corpus $\Rightarrow$ 117(1)—Judgment of superior court denying habeas corpus to secure child's custody held res judicata of similar application, where facts were same except for record entry as to modification of judgment affecting custody.

Judgment of superior court denying mother's application for writ of habeas corpus to secure child's custody held res judicata of subsequent application for habeas corpus in District Court of Appeal, where the facts presented were identical, except that in the second application there appeared minute entry of trial court by which judgment affecting child's custody was modified and stay of execution granted.

Application by Zaida Gury for writ of habeas corpus to secure the custody of a minor child, opposed by the child's father. Writ denied.

Ida May Adams, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Marion P. Betty and John L. Bland, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. In substance, the facts herein appear to be as follows: By an interlocutory decree rendered in a suit for divorce, the custody of an infant son of the parties to the action was awarded to the husband. Pursuant thereto the mother voluntarily executed the judgment by surrendering possession of the child to the father. No appeal from that judgment was ever taken by either of the parties to the action. One week after said interlocutory judgment was rendered, the mother filed a notice of motion to modify "the interlocutory decree and judgment of divorce." When the motion came on for hearing, although two witnesses were sworn and testified in the matter, no "new evidence" was introduced, nor any relevant circumstances shown, differing in any material degree from what appeared on the trial of the action. With reference to such motion, the amended minutes of the court show that "judgment heretofore entered is now modified by the court, and the findings are modified by the court. Custody of minor child, David Gury, is awarded to the plaintiff. The defendant is hereby granted a stay of execution on said judgment for the period of ten days in which to start his appeal." Nearly a month thereafter a so-called "amended interlocutory decree of divorce" was signed by the court and regularly entered, which decree contained a provision by which the custody of the child was awarded to the mother.

Following the entry of such "amended" decree, the father appealed to the Supreme Court therefrom, and said appeal is still undetermined. After the rendition of said latter decree, and before the expiration of the ten days' stay of execution from the date of the entry of the "judgment" ordered by the trial court (however, not within ten days from the date of the minute order thereof), but preceding the date of the appeal therefrom, the mother, aided by two strangers, "without legal authority, without any execution issued on account of said order, or legal process of any kind or nature whatever," forcibly took the child from the possession of the father; and some weeks thereafter the father peaceably regained the possession of the child. Thereupon, through the medium of a writ of habeas corpus issued out of the superior court, the mother sought to obtain the possession of the child. On the return to the writ and a hearing in said matter, the superior court denied any relief to the mother, but affirmed the legal right of the custody of the child in the father. It is in such circumstances, as shown by the records and files herein, and (on stipulation of the parties) as produced from a like source in the superior court, that again, through the offices of a writ of habeas corpus, the mother seeks from this court an adjudication by which the child may be restored to her possession and custody.

[1, 2] From a consideration of the foregoing facts it at once becomes apparent that several important legal questions may be presented; but, whatever may be the correct conclusions of law with reference to each of the various questions which in this matter might be submitted to this court for determination, the authorities are in practical accord that in proceedings of this character, and particularly where the custody of a minor child is involved as between or among the same parties, especially where no new facts are presented, a prior adjudication by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive. In re Beers (Cal. App.) 280 P. 1033; Ex parte Marshall (Cal. App.) 279 P. 834; In re McDaniel, 90 Cal. App. 307, 265 P. 884; In re Gille, 65 Cal. App. 617, 224 P. 784; In re Frazier, 50 Cal. App. 45, 194 P. 510; In re Holt, 34 Cal. App. 290, 167 P. 184.

A review of the respective facts which were introduced in the habeas corpus proceeding before the superior court, and what are presented in this court, shows that the only possible difference was that, in addition to what was before the superior court, in this court there appeared the minute order of the trial court (heretofore quoted herein) by which the interlocutory judgment originally rendered by the latter court and its findings of facts were "modified"; the custody of the child "awarded to the plaintiff"; and the defendant granted "a stay of execution on said judgment for the period of ten days in which to start his appeal." That such fact or facts could have no bearing on the "res adjudicata" rule is well established.

In the case entitled In re Frazier, 50 Cal. App. 45, 194 P. 510, it is held that, in an original habeas corpus proceeding in an appellate court, the conclusiveness of a former judgment in a similar proceeding in the superior court is not affected by the presentation in the appellate court of facts which existed at the time of the hearing of the habeas corpus proceeding in the superior court, but which were not there introduced in evidence. To the same effect, see: Ex parte Marshall (Cal. App.) 279 P. 834; In re McDaniel, 90 Cal. App. 307, 265 P. 884; In re Gille, 65 Cal. App. 617, 224 P. 784; Borland v. Borland, 56 Cal. App. 638, 206 P. 478.

It follows that the petitioner is entitled to no relief, and that the writ should be discharged. So ordered.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

103 Cal. App. 518

SHERMAN v. CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 6641.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1930.

1. Insurance $\S$ 524.—To constitute "total disability" within accident policy, it is sufficient if injuries are such that common prudence requires insured to desist from employment so long as reasonably necessary to effect speedy cure.

To constitute total disability within accident insurance policy, insured need not be absolutely helpless, and attempt to perform few occasional trivial acts relating to duties of employment does not deprive insured of right to claim total disability; it being sufficient if injuries are of character and degree that common kind and prudence requires him to desist from labors so long as reasonably necessary to effect speedy cure.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Total Disability.]

2. Insurance $\S$ 668(13).—Whether insured falling down cement steps was totally disabled within accident policy held for jury to determine from circumstances.

In action upon accident insurance policy, whether insured falling down five cement steps to pavement was totally disabled held question of fact for jury to decide from all circumstances surrounding employment.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 1091(1).—Evidence being legally sufficient to sustain jury's finding on fact question, appellate court cannot interfere therewith.

Where evidence is legally sufficient to sustain jury's finding on question of fact, appellate court cannot interfere therewith on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Anna Sherman against the Continental Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco (M. Bourquin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Defendant appeals from a judgment in an action to recover on a policy of insurance issued in the year 1921, insuring plaintiff against loss of time resulting from accident or sickness.

On July 20, 1925, and while the policy was in force, plaintiff was injured by falling down five cement steps to the pavement, following which she was sick for a long period of time. Indemnity was claimed under each feature of the policy, the complaint containing two counts; the first relating to the accident indemnity, whereunder the amount sued for was $1,575; and the second relating to the health indemnity, whereunder the amount sued for was $1,370. The action was tried before a jury and a verdict rendered in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $1,575, the verdict being evidently based on the first count. If, therefore, no grounds for reversal exist as to the first count, it is unnecessary to consider the points raised as to the second.

With respect to the payment of accident indemnity, the policy provided as follows: "If injury * * * shall at once and continuously after the occurrence of the accidental event wholly disable the insured from performing each and every duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay said accident indemnity (of $105 a month) for such period, not exceeding five years, as the insured shall be so disabled." Also that: "If injury as is before described shall not at once wholly and continuously disable the insured but shall thereafter within ninety days wholly disable him, or shall, either at once after the injury or at once after a period of total disability, prevent him from performing work substantially essential to his duty or duties the company will pay one-half said accident indemnity (amounting to $52.50 a month) for such period not exceeding six months as he shall be so disabled. * * *" It was alleged in the first count that in falling down the steps plaintiff injured "her chest, side and back and herself internally; that said injuries induced and produced a pleurisy of plaintiff's left side and a persistent metrorrhagia," and that as a result of the accident she "was at once and continuously thereafter for a period of one year, wholly disabled from performing each and every duty pertaining to her said occupation; and thereafter and for a further period of more than six months was prevented from performing work substantially essential to the duty and duties of her said occupation."

The evidence adduced at the trial discloses the following facts: Plaintiff was 39 years of age and was employed as an automobile saleswoman in Burlingame, working on commission. Immediately following the accident she was confined to her bed for two days, after which she arose and remained about the house for a day or two. For the next few days she visited her place of business daily, for an hour or two, for the purpose of looking after her commissions and meeting prospective buyers; but on July 29th she was compelled to give up entirely. Shortly afterwards she called in a physician and was under his care from August 14th to September 10th, at which time she went to live with her parents near Bakersfield and was placed under the care of three physicians. She remained there until September, 1926, and then came to San Francisco, where she endeavored to work as a "food checker" in a hotel, but after working 10 days was compelled to quit because of her impaired physical and mental condition. On cross-examination of plaintiff it was disclosed that on Sunday morning, July 26th, she drove an automobile to the residence of a Mr. Snyder, in Burlingame, for the purpose of interesting him in the sale of it, and that she drove around with him for an hour and a half, part of which time she drove the automobile; also that about the same time she gave Mrs. Snyder and her daughter each a lesson in driving. It was also shown that during the same week she drove an automobile to the home of a Mrs. Lynes, in Burlingame, and made an appointment for a demonstration.

[1] Appellant contends that because of plaintiff's activities above mentioned she was not entitled to full indemnity for one year under the total disability clause of the policy, and that therefore the verdict which is based thereon is excessive. While there appears to be some conflict in the authorities as to what shall constitute total disability within the meaning of a clause of insurance such as we have here, there is ample authority to be found both in the decisions and the textbooks to the effect that, in order to constitute total disability, it is not necessary that the insured be absolutely helpless, and that an attempt by the insured to perform a few occasional trivial acts relating to the duties of his employment, though in fact he ought not to have made such attempt, does not deprive him of the right to show that he was totally disabled (Cooley's Briefs on Insurance [2d Ed.] pp. 5538, 5539, citing United States Casualty Co. v. Perryman, 203 Ala. 212, 82 So. 462); it being held sufficient if the injuries are of a character and degree that common kind and prudence requires him to desist from his labors so long as it is reasonably necessary to effect a speedy cure (Kerr on Insurance, p. 385; Joyce on Insurance, vol. 4, p. 303; Continental Casualty Co. v. Mathis, 150 Ky. 477, 150 S. W. 507; Harasymczuk v. Mass. Accident Co., 127 Misc. R. 344, 216 N. Y. S. 97; Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Branham, 34 Ind. App. 243, 70 N. E. 174; Booth v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 130 A. 131, 3 N. J. Misc. R. 735; American Liability Co. v. Bowman, 65 Ind. App. 109, 114 N. E. 992; Jones v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 166 Minn. 100, 207 N. W. 179, 182). In the case last cited, in dealing with the question of total disability, it was said:

"Should the insured be penalized because, in total ignorance of the serious character of the injury he had received, he undertook to perform, as best he could, under distressing conditions, some of his professional duties, when he might reasonably not have attempted to do any work at all, and thus, without question, have held the insured liable for loss from disability?" * * *

Cal. Rep. 284-286 P.—17

"We think it may be said to be a matter of common knowledge that in a great many, perhaps in a large majority of, instances in which bodily injuries are received, the real nature and extent of said injuries do not reveal themselves until a greater or less time in the future and after the first pains from the hurt shall have passed away. The injured part often lies dormant for an indefinite period, with but little or no consciousness of its existence by the person injured, although from the very moment of the accident, perhaps, the processes of nature may be busily engaged in developing what may have seemed to be but a slight hurt into a most serious and perhaps fatal injury. In such a case it cannot be said that the injury is not continuous and from the date of the accident, * * * because the injured party enjoys a brief respite from pain and suffering, only to be endured to a greater degree when perverted nature again asserts itself."

[2, 3] In the present case plaintiff testified that from the time of the accident she suffered from severe headaches and pain in her chest and left side; that she could not eat or sleep; that her body was numb and that in 20 days she lost 21 pounds in weight. She further stated that after making desperate effort for a few days to resume some of her duties, she could not "stick it out any longer" and therefore quit. Under such circumstances we think her case was brought within the total disability clause of said policy. In any event it was a question of fact for the jury to decide from all the circumstances surrounding the employment (Provident Life Ins. Co. v. Anding, 144 Miss. 277, 109 So. 670), and, the evidence being legally sufficient to sustain its conclusion thereon, it is beyond the power of this court on appeal to interfere therewith.

Further contention is made that the disability from which plaintiff suffered did not result from the accident, but from natural causes peculiar to her sex. It is sufficient to say, however, that there is ample evidence in the record to support a contrary conclusion.

Instruction V, given at the request of plaintiff, to which objection is made, amplifies the provisions of section 1654 of the Civil Code; and while, as appellant claims, the construction of the insurance contract is to be left to the court, we think that, in view of the disputed question of fact arising under the total disability clause of the policy, the giving of the instruction complained of was justified. Nor is there any merit in appellant's point relating to the exclusion of the so-called McNamara report, for the reason that the report was not sufficiently identified.

In view of the conclusions we have reached as to the first cause of action, it becomes unnecessary to consider the merits raised as to the second.

The judgment is affirmed.

RINALDI v. BARASCH et al. (Civ. 7095.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

Brokers ⇐4—Surety on real estate broker's bond was not liable under statute, where broker sold his own property; "real estate transaction" (Real Estate Brokers' Act, § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 600, § 1).

Plaintiff directed defendant, a real estate broker, to apply some of plaintiff's money in defendant's possession to purchase of a one-sixth interest in the real estate business owned and operated by defendant. Plaintiff thereafter demanded return of his money, and a settlement was agreed upon in accordance with which defendant gave a note which he failed to pay. Held, in action for money had and received, this was not a "real estate transaction" within Real Estate Brokers' Act (St. 1917, p. 1579), § 2, as amended by St. 1925, p. 600, § 1, which provides that the act shall not apply to any person selling property owned by himself, and therefore the surety on defendant's real estate brokers' bond was not liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Matthew Rinaldi against Harry D. Barasch and others for money had and received. From a judgment granting insufficient relief to plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. More and E. B. Mering, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. G. De Forest, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff obtained judgment for damages for $900 against defendant Barasch, a real estate broker, but was denied judgment against defendant American Surety Company, the surety on Barasch's real estate brokers' bond. Plaintiff appeals.

The finding of the court was that this action was not upon a real estate transaction within the meaning of the Real Estate Brokers' Act, and that therefore the defendant surety was not liable in this action.

The evidence shows that: On June 1, 1926, the defendant Barasch sold to appellant an undivided one-quarter interest in the furniture business of one of appellant's clients for $1,850. Appellant paid $1,500 on account of the purchase price. On June 3, 1926, appellant withdrew from said transaction and agreed to the purchase of an undivided one-sixth interest of the Golden Gate Sales & Rental Bureau, which was the real estate business owned and operated by Barasch, and directed Barasch to apply the $1,500 in his possession to the purchase price of the said real estate business. Thereafter appellant demanded the return of his $1,500. A settlement and compromise was then made between the parties. Appellant agreed to accept $1,200 in full settlement; Barasch paid appellant $600 in cash; gave his note for the further sum of $600; and further agreed to pay the full sum of $900 if the note was not paid. Barasch having defaulted in the payment of his note, appellant brought this action to recover the $900.

The Real Estate Brokers' Act (St. 1917, p. 1579, as amended in 1925, p. 600, § 1) provides in section 2 that the provisions of the act shall not apply to any person selling property owned by himself.

Barasch in selling his own property to appellant was not acting as a real estate broker within the terms of the act, and therefore his surety was not liable upon his bond. St. 1923, p. 96, § 4, adding § 9a to St. 1919, p. 1252, as amended.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

104 Cal. App. 15

In re LEE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 7254.)†

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 11, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 12, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 10, 1930.

1. Wills ⇐675—Precatory expressions are presumptively indicative of nothing more than request, unless context shows intention to create trust (Civ. Code, § 1322).

Mere precatory expressions in will are presumptively indicative of nothing more than request or expectation, unless context or circumstances surrounding testator at time of making will show that testator intended to create trust and to leave legatee no option in the matter, especially under Civ. Code, § 1322.

2. Wills ⇐675—Will leaving one-fifth of estate to each of four brothers and sisters, with instructions to take care of brother, did not create trust.

Holographic will, leaving one-fifth of estate to each of four brothers and sisters, with instructions to "take care of brother Will," held not to create trust in favor of Will, especially in view of fact that deceased left seven brothers and sisters beside Will.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Milton A. Lee, deceased. From an order sustaining a demurrer to objections to the petition of the executor for final distribution of the estate, William F. Lee appeals, opposed by Ernest A. Lee and others. Affirmed.

Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco (J. H. Sapiro and Frank J. Mahoney, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Raymond Perry, Olin L. Berry, and Delbert L. Berry, all of San Francisco, for respondents Hattie Larkins and Maud Larkins.

NOURSE, Acting P. J. Written objections to the petition of the executor of the last will and testament of Milton A. Lee for the final distribution of the estate were filed. The probate court sustained a demurrer to these objections, and this appeal is taken from that order.

The will, which was olographic in form, reads as follows:

"San Francisco, 4/1/1925.

"I, Milton A. Lee, do make this will in my own handwriting. At my death I leave the following to each named.

Minnie Lee	my wife one fifth of my estate.
Earnest Lee	" brother one fifth of my estate.
James Lee	" brother one fifth of my estate.
Maud Larkins	" sister one fifth of my estate.
Hattie Larkins	" sister one fifth of my estate.

"Instructions to Brothers & Sisters. Take care of Brother Will.

"I appoint as administrator the Master of my Lodge Oriental #144 F.A.M.

"Sig. Milton A. Lee."

[1, 2] The sole question involved on this appeal is whether the precatory words addressed to the brothers and sisters of deceased, "take care of Brother Will," are such that they would create a trust in favor of Will over the four-fifths of the estate devised to the brothers and sisters named in the will. The subject of precatory trusts is fully discussed in an elaborate note found in 49 A. L. R. pp. 10 to 103, wherein it is said (page 22): "The crucial test, then, is whether the wish, desire, or recommendation expressed by the testator, is meant to govern the conduct of the one to whom it is addressed, or whether it is merely an indication of that which he thinks would be a reasonable exercise of the discretion of such person, leaving it, however, to the person to exercise his own discretion. Where a bequest is given, coupled with precatory words which leave the legatee free to act or not to act, such words are to be treated as an appeal to the conscience and affections of the legatee, and nothing more." In the same note, reference is made to the history of the two rules: The early English rule, which has been followed to some extent in the courts of this country, held that mere precatory expressions were deemed to raise a trust unless it appeared from the context to be to the contrary. In other words, the use of precatory words was held to create a presumption that a trust was intended. This rule, it is explained, is based upon the historical fact that all trusts, no matter how expressed, were only of precatory force, and imposed no binding obligation. The other rule, which is based upon later English cases and most of the American cases, reverses this presumption, and holds that mere precatory expressions are presumptively indicative of nothing more than request or expectation, unless the context, or the circumstances surrounding the testator at the time of the making of the will, show that the testator intended to create a trust and to leave the legatee no option in the matter. Though the early English rule is still followed in some American jurisdictions, the instances in which a trust has been held to exist have been decidedly outnumbered in the cases in which it was held that no trust was created.

The California courts have adopted the later rule in line with the great weight of authority. The cases following the rule are so numerous that the only difficulty is in selecting the citations. The opinion in Estate of Browne, 175 Cal. 361, 362, 165 P. 960, 961, aptly states the situation as follows: "Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, 'it is the settled law in California that precatory words are not to be regarded as creating a trust unless it appear that the testator intended to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion on the part of the person to whom the recommendatory words are addressed.' Estate of Purcell, 167 Cal. 176-179, 138 P. 704, 705. This rule is derived from and supported by numerous authorities, including Estate of Mitchell, 160 Cal. 618, 117 P. 774; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 61 P. 964, 64 P. 1071; and Kauffman v. Gries, 141 Cal. 295, 74 P. 846. It is to be observed that the testator's desire is expressed not to his executor, but to one of the beneficiaries under his will. Under such circumstances it may only be regarded as a mere request, and not as partaking of the nature of a command. Estate of Marti, supra; Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 P. 825."

Appellant relies upon Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 S. Ct. 1164, 1167, 32 L. Ed. 138, where the testator after making a gift of all his property to his wife, recommended to her "the care and protection of my mother and sister, and request her to make such * * * provision for them as in her judgment will be best." In interpreting the will, the Supreme Court held that it created a trust over all the property of the decedent in favor of the mother and sister of the testator. The Colton Case has been cited in numerous decisions, both in our courts and in other jurisdictions where the later rule of construction is followed. It repeatedly has been rejected in these jurisdictions as out of harmony with this later rule, and in some of the cases it has been distinguished on the narrow ground that the precatory expressions were joined in the same sentence with the words of conveyance, and this was taken as an indication of the intention of the testator to create a trust. Any uncertainty as to the authority of the Colton Case in this state was set at rest in the Estate of Mitchell, 160 Cal. 622, 117 P. 774, 776, where the Supreme Court said: "If that decision was in any particular inconsistent with our own decisions on the subject, it would not be binding authority. The interpretation of wills is not a question upon which the federal courts control the state courts."

This rule of decision is recognized and approved in section 1322, Civil Code, which provides: "A clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any reasons assigned therefor or by any other words not equally clear and distinct. * * *" Here the unconditional devise of one-fifth of the estate to each of the brothers and sisters was clear and distinct, whereas the instructions to his brothers and sisters "to take care of Brother Will" were not equally clear and distinct, and they cannot, therefore, under the provisions of this section, affect the unconditional devises found in the will. This is emphasized by the admitted fact alleged in the petition that the deceased left seven brothers and sisters beside his brother Will; that the admonition to take care of Will was addressed to his brothers and sisters generally, whereas devises were made to but four of them. It may be added that here lies the distinction in a large number of cases cited by appellant. Where the precatory expressions are found in the same sentence or clause with the words of devise or gift, this frequently has been taken as indicating the intention of the testator to make a conditional gift. But in examining those cases it will be found that almost invariably the precatory expressions are directed to the executor or administrator, who is also made a devisee under the will.

Without analyzing these cases at length, we are satisfied that the rule applicable here is that found in Estate of Browne, supra, and for that reason the order is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 583

BITTER v. BITTER. (Civ. 7105.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

1. Divorce $\S$ 182—Final judgment entered prior to disposition of appeal from interlocutory judgment must be reversed (Civ. Code, $\S$ 132).

In divorce suit, final judgment must be reversed where made and entered prior to disposition of appeal from interlocutory judgment contrary to provisions of Civ. Code, $\S$ 132.

2. Divorce $\S$ 27(1)—To support judgment for divorce for extreme cruelty, court must find that conduct wrongfully inflicted on innocent party grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering or both.

To support judgment for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, it is essential that court find that conduct characterized by findings as cruel wrongfully inflicted on innocent party grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering or both, since injury or suffering is ultimate fact, entitling injured party to severance of marital ties.

3. Divorce $\S$ 27(12)—Refusal of sexual intercourse cannot be regarded as cruelty, except where without cause, and when condition of both spouses justifies intercourse.

In divorce suit, defendant husband's refusal of sexual intercourse cannot be regarded as cruelty, unless without just or proper cause, and when health and bodily condition of both spouses would justify such intercourse.

4. Divorce $\S$ 27(8)—Accusations of improper conduct cannot amount to cruelty, unless unwarranted.

In divorce case, accusations by one spouse of improper conduct on part of the other cannot amount to cruelty, unless unwarranted.

5. Divorce $\S$ 150(2)—Findings held not to justify divorce for desertion for persistent refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse (Civ. Code, $\S$ 96).

In divorce case, findings held insufficient to justify divorce for desertion for refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse within Civ. Code, $\S$ 96, where there was no finding that refusal was persistent, that health or physical condition of plaintiff did not make such refusal reasonably necessary, or that there was no just cause for such refusal.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 662(3)—Bill of exceptions, settled and allowed by trial judge, is deemed correct statement of what took place (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650).

When bill of exceptions has been settled and allowed by judge before whom proceedings were had, it must, for all purposes of reviewing action of court, be deemed to be correct statement of what took place, it being assumed that bill as originally drafted was served on respondent, and that respondent, if dissatisfied with statement of evidence, had opportunity to propose amendment under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 650.

7. Divorce $\S$ 127(4)—Testimony of children of parties as to occupancy of separate rooms held insufficient corroboration in proving refusal of intercourse in divorce suit.

In proving defendant husband's refusal of intercourse in action for divorce, testimony of children of parties as to occupancy of separate rooms was not character and degree of evidence required with regard to corroboration in divorce cases.

8. Divorce $\S$ 127(4)—Testimony of one party cannot be taken to corroborate other's to prove cause of divorce.

Testimony of one party cannot be taken in corroboration of that of the other for purpose of proving cause of divorce.

9. Divorce $\S$ 182, 227(2)—\$750 attorney's fees and \$250 on account of costs on appeal held not excessive in divorce case.

$750 attorney's fees and $250 on account of costs on appeal in divorce case held not excessive.

sive, where bill of exceptions did not set forth any of evidence on which court acted.

10. Divorce ⇨223, 286—Trial court has wide discretion as to amount allowed wife, and its rulings are reversed only for abuse of discretion.

Wide discretion is vested in trial court as to what amount, if any, is to be allowed wife to enable her to prosecute action for divorce or to defend against appeal prosecuted by husband, and it is only plain abuse of such discretion which warrants appellate court in setting aside order made for such purpose.

11. Continuance ⇨20(1)—Refusing continuance and proceeding with hearing respecting attorney's fees and costs of appeal in divorce case, in absence of defendant's attorneys, held not abuse of discretion.

In divorce suit, refusal of continuance because defendant's attorneys were engaged in trial in another department of court and action of court in proceeding with hearing respecting allowance for attorney's fees and costs of appeal, in absence of defendant's attorneys, held not abuse of discretion; such matter being within sound discretion of trial court.

12. Divorce ⇨225—Allowance of $25 attorney's fee for appearance of plaintiff's counsel at contempt hearing for defendant's failure to pay alimony held proper, notwithstanding payment before hearing.

In divorce case, allowance of $25 attorney's fees for appearance of plaintiff's counsel at hearing of order to show cause why defendant should not be adjudged in contempt for failure to comply with previous alimony order held not improper, though defendant made up payment before matter came on to be heard.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Mabel E. Ritter against Clyde E. Ritter. From an interlocutory decree and final judgment, and from orders requiring payment of alimony and counsel fees, defendant appeals. Judgments reversed, and orders affirmed.

James R. Jaffray and LeRoy Reames, both of Los Angeles, and John T. Houser, of Long Beach, for appellant.

William E. Fox and Brooks Gifford, both of Pasadena, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. [1] This appeal is from an interlocutory judgment of divorce, from certain orders thereafter made, and from the final judgment. As to the last mentioned, it is evident that the same must be reversed, for the reason that it was made and entered prior to the disposition of the appeal from the interlocutory judgment, contrary to the provision of section 132 of the Civil Code that, "if any appeal is taken from the interlocutory judgment or motion for a new trial made, final judgment shall not be entered until such motion or appeal has been finally disposed of. * * *" Carp v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. App. 481, 245 P. 459; Newell v. Superior Court, 27 Cal. App. 343, 149 P. 998. The interlocutory judgment must also be reversed, for reasons which we shall now elucidate.

[2-5] The plaintiff set up three causes of action: Willful neglect, extreme cruelty, and desertion. As to the first of these, the court found against the plaintiff. The findings as to cruelty were as follows: "[T]he court finds that the defendant, Clyde E. Ritter, has treated the plaintiff in an extremely cruel and inhuman manner and in particular as follows: That said defendant has refused to have sexual intercourse with plaintiff since the 1st day of February, 1927, and that said defendant had the ability to have such sexual intercourse; that said defendant accused plaintiff with improper conduct with Dr. Frank Ashmore and that defendant told plaintiff that he would castrate the said Dr. Frank Ashmore; and that said defendant showed plaintiff the knife with which he would do the act; that said defendant accused plaintiff with improper conduct with William E. Scotten; that said defendant has belittled plaintiff's mother frequently stating that she was narrow-minded and tricky and that plaintiff was just like her; that said defendant has never taken plaintiff to a place of entertainment, with the exception of two or three times, during their whole married life; that for more than two years last passed [sic] defendant has never shown any love and/or affection for plaintiff and that said defendant has not kissed plaintiff more than three times during the last year passed and prior to the bringing of this action." The findings as to desertion were: "[T]he court finds that said defendant willfully and without cause deserted and abandoned plaintiff for over a period of one year prior to the bringing of this action, in that said defendant refused to have sexual intercourse with plaintiff since the first day of February, 1927, although having the ability to have such sexual intercourse. * * * [T]he court finds that the defendant, Clyde E. Ritter, would stay in Buena Park, California, during the week, returning to his home in Pasadena generally for the week-end, but that on such occasions said defendant and said plaintiff would not have sexual intercourse; and that this condition existed ever since the first day of February, 1927, and up to the time of filing this action."

Directing our attention first to the findings as to cruelty, it is to be noted that the court did not find that the conduct of the defendant had caused plaintiff either bodily injury or mental suffering. Neither did it find that defendant's refusal to have sexual intercourse with plaintiff was without just cause, or that the accusation of improper conduct on plain-tiff's part was without foundation, or was falsely and maliciously made by defendant, or that the failure to take her to places of entertainment or to kiss her was without cause or contrary to plaintiff's desires. To support a judgment for divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, it is essential that the court find that the conduct characterized by the findings as cruel, "wrongfully inflicted upon the [innocent party] grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering, or both." Nelson v. Nelson, 18 Cal. App. 602, 123 P. 1099, 1102; and this is so because the injury or suffering is the ultimate fact entitling the injured party to a severance of the marital ties. Sallee v. Sallee, 63 Cal. App. 54, 218 P. 69, 70; Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 P. 573.

The other omissions above noted are equally fatal. A refusal of intercourse can be regarded as cruelty only when without just or proper cause, and when the health and bodily condition of both spouses would justify such intercourse. Accusations by one spouse of improper conduct on the part of the other cannot amount to cruelty, unless unwarranted. Brandt v. Brandt, 178 Cal. 548, 174 P. 55. "Of course, if they were true, and justified, it was not cruelty to make them." Sallee v. Sallee, supra. It is true that the court found certain allegations of the cross-complaint as to specific instances of improper conduct on the part of the plaintiff and the two men mentioned in that portion of the findings which we have quoted to be untrue, but this is not tantamount to finding that the general accusation of improper conduct which it was found defendant had made was untrue or unwarranted.

As to the findings on the issue of desertion, it is apparent that the court intended to find that the defendant had been guilty of that form of desertion manifested by a persistent refusal to have reasonable matrimonial intercourse as defined by section 96 of the Civil Code. But here again the findings lack certain essential elements. For instance, there is no finding that the refusal was persistent, or that the "health or physical condition" of the plaintiff did "not make such refusal reasonably necessary," or that there was no just cause for such refusal. In Fink v. Fink, 137 Cal. 559, 70 P. 628, the court found, on the issue of desertion, "that for more than one year immediately preceding the suit the plaintiff refused to have matrimonial intercourse with the defendant and that the refusal was not on account of health or physical condition of either party, nor was it reasonably necessary on such account," and as a conclusion of law "that the plaintiff has been guilty of willful desertion of the defendant." We quote further from the opinion: "One of the grounds urged for reversal is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding of 'willful desertion'; but we do not perceive there is any such finding. The supposed finding is merely a legal conclusion from the specific facts found, as to which there is no specification. The question involved is, therefore, as to the sufficiency of the specific facts found on the issue of desertion to justify the conclusion inferred from them by the court. With regard to this, we are of the opinion that the qualifying clause in section 96 of the Civil Code (reading, 'when there is no just cause for such refusal') equally applies to either of the refusals therein specified. The language of the section is, indeed, in this respect ambiguous, or rather amphibolous; but the reason of the qualification applies equally to both of the cases provided for in the statute, and the maxim applies: 'Idem ratio idem lex.' The finding must, therefore, be regarded as insufficient." The necessity for a finding as to absence of just cause was reiterated in Mayr v. Mayr, 161 Cal. 134, 118 P. 546, and in Ingraham v. Ingraham, 40 Cal. App. 578, 181 P. 234.

[6] The findings are manifestly insufficient to support the conclusion of law that the respondent-plaintiff is entitled to a divorce or to support the judgment in her favor, but she suggests that this court may make additional findings as permitted by section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The evidence as contained in the bill of exceptions would not, should we feel desirous of availing ourselves of this provision, justify us in supplying the omissions from the findings above noted. Respondent refers to certain evidence as having been given at the trial, and says: "Appellant does not include this evidence in his appeal but, on the contrary, leaves it entirely out of the record." The transcript contains a bill of exceptions settled by the trial judge, and reciting that as to the several specifications in the findings therein mentioned "the following evidence and none other was given." In the absence of anything in the record to the contrary it must be assumed that the bill, as originally drafted by appellant, was served on respondent and that the latter, if dissatisfied with the statement of the evidence therein contained, had the opportunity provided by the statute to propose amendments thereto setting forth such evidence, or a statement thereof, as had been omitted from the proposed bill. Section 650, Code Civ. Proc. "When the bill of exceptions has been settled and allowed by the judge before whom the proceedings were had, it must, for all purposes of reviewing the action of the court, be deemed by this court to be a correct statement of what took place." Hyde v. Boyle, 89 Cal. 590, 26 P. 1092; Estate of Marre, 127 Cal. 128, 59 P. 385. We must therefore accept as the evidence in the case, for all purposes of this appeal, the statements contained in the settled bill of exceptions.

[7, 8] From these it appears that, as to the refusal of intercourse, both as an element of the charge of cruelty and as amounting to desertion, the testimony was as follows: Plaintiff testified that the defendant "did not have sexual intercourse with her since the first day of February, 1927." The defendant admitted this fact, and testified that he neither requested nor was refused such intercourse, and that he was not physically incapacitated from having the same. A daughter of the parties testified that she had slept with her mother, the plaintiff, continuously from the 1st day of February, 1927, and that her father had occupied a separate room. A son testified that his sister and mother occupied one room and his father another, while it was stipulated that another son "slept with his father in a room separate from that of his mother at the times and occasions when the defendant * * * would be at the home of plaintiff." The testimony of the children of the parties as to their occupancy of separate rooms "was not the character and degree of evidence required by the Code with regard to corroboration in divorce cases." Lemberger v. Lemberger, 55 Cal. App. 231, 203 P. 786, 787; Ingraham v. Ingraham, supra. Further, and apart from the insufficient attempt at corroboration by the testimony of the children, there was no testimony on the part of any witness corroborating that of the plaintiff other than that of the defendant; and in denying a petition for a hearing after judgment in this court the Supreme Court, in Lemberger v. Lemberger, held unequivocally that "the testimony of one party cannot be taken in corroboration of that of the other for the purpose of proving a cause of divorce."

As to the issues with regard to cruelty other than the refusal of intercourse, there was no testimony as to the falsity of the charges of improper conduct on the part of the respondent, and, as to two instances at least, no corroborating evidence other than the admission of the defendant that he had made such charges. Without going into the matter at length, suffice it to say, that the balance of the evidence as set forth in the record is in an equally unsatisfactory condition and entirely insufficient as a foundation upon which to base any findings to support the judgment of divorce.

[9-11] Appellant also seeks a reversal of two orders made after the entry of the interlocutory judgment. By the first of these he was required to pay to respondent $750 as attorneys' fees and $250 on account of costs on appeal. It appears from the engrossed bill of exceptions that respondent filed an affidavit reciting the entry of judgment in her favor, the making and denial of a motion for new trial, the taking of an appeal and the lack of funds on her part with which to compensate her attorneys for representing her on said appeal and with which to defray the costs thereof. On this affidavit the court issued an order for the defendant to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay a designated sum to plaintiff for costs and counsel fees. On the return day specified in the order defendant served and presented to the court an affidavit to the effect that his attorneys were engaged in a trial in another department of the court, and requesting a short continuance of the hearing on the order to show cause. The court, however, proceeded to hear the same, the defendant himself being present, and made the order above referred to, considerably reducing the amount asked for. Appellant's objection thereto is that the amount allowed is excessive, and that it was error to have refused the continuance and to have proceeded with the hearing, in the absence of his counsel. Neither of these points is well taken. As to the amount allowed, the bill of exceptions does not set forth any of the evidence on which the court acted, and we cannot say as a matter of law that the allowance of the sums specified was excessive. A wide discretion must of necessity be vested in the trial court as to what amount, if any, is to be allowed the wife to enable her to prosecute an action for divorce or to defend against an appeal prosecuted by her husband, and it is only a plain abuse of such discretion which warrants an appellate court in setting aside an order made for such purpose. Stewart v. Stewart, 156 Cal. 651, 105 P. 955; Rose v. Rose, 109 Cal. 544, 42 P. 452; Whiting v. Whiting, 62 Cal. App. 157, 216 P. 92. As to the refusal of a continuance and the action of the court in proceeding with the hearing in the absence of defendant's attorneys, that also was a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge. Berentz v. Belmont Oil Min. Co., 148 Cal. 577, 84 P. 47, 113 Am. St. Rep. 308; Peachy v. Witter, 131 Cal. 316, 63 P. 468; Corbin v. Howard, 61 Cal. App. 715, 215 P. 920; Flynn v. Fink, 60 Cal. App. 670, 213 P. 716.

[12] The other order of which appellant complains was one directing him to pay $25 attorneys' fees for the appearance of plaintiff's counsel at the hearing of an order to show cause why defendant should not be adjudged in contempt for failure to comply with a previous order for the payment of alimony for the support of the minor children of the parties. At the time the order to show cause was issued, October 5, 1928, the defendant was in arrears two months, but, when the matter came on to be heard on the return day specified therein, it appeared that he had made up his payments after being served with the order to show cause. Plaintiff's attorneys had drawn up the affidavit, prepared the order, and appeared in court on the return day, and the allowance of a small attorneys' fee was, under the circumstances, proper.

The judgments are reversed, and the orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 775

BACKUS v. DUFFY. (Civ. 6992.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 8, 1930.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨79(3)—Tenure of tenant's assignee must be identical with tenant's tenure to terminate privity with landlord.

To terminate tenant's privity of estate with his landlord, term transferred by tenant to his assignee must be for period of time equal to remainder of term of original lease, and cover all of premises demised by original lease, and must include all of estate and interest of tenant under the original lease.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨79(1), 204—Lessee's assignment reserving smaller rental than original lease, with privilege of installing side line in store and of re-entry, held sublease, permitting suit for rent by original lessee.

Lessee's transfer of term under instrument which reserved rental in less amount than that reserved by original lease, and provided that the assignor of the term should have privilege of installing certain side line in store, which line was to be sold by assignee on division of profits, and which provided that assignee should be governed by covenants and agreements contained in original lease, and thus adopted reversionary clause of original lease, giving lessor right to re-enter on breach of condition, held not an assignment of the full term of the original lease, but merely a sublease, and therefore original lessee could maintain suit thereon for rent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by W. Orrin Backus against Agnes Duffy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fred A. Watkins, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur L. Shannon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an action brought to recover rent. On the 26th day of February, 1923, R. L. Collins leased to W. O. Backus the premises known as 667 Geary street. By the provisions of the lease the term commenced May 1, 1923, and ended May 1, 1928. The rental reserved was $150 per month during the time from December 1, 1924, to the end of the lease. It contained many covenants. One of those covenants was to pay the rent promptly, and continuing it provided: " * * * And in the event of the failure of the lessee so to do, or in the event of a breach of any of the other covenants or agreements herein contained, on the part of the lessee to be kept or performed, or in the event the lessee shall abandon or vacate the said premises, the lessor may, without demand or notice, declare the said term ended, and may reenter into and upon said premises and remove all persons and things therefrom, and repossess the said premises as in the first and former estate of the lessor, or the lessor may, at the lessor's option, pursue any other remedy which he may have, either at law or in equity, for collection of rent or breach of covenant."

On December 1, 1924, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant a letter as follows:

"San Francisco, Calif., December 1st, 1924.

"Miss Agnes Duffy, 330 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Calif. Dear Madam: Confirming our conversation of this afternoon regarding your renting of all that certain store and basement contained in that certain one-story and basement concrete building, situate on the southerly line of Geary Street, between Jones and Leavenworth Street, and known and designated as #667 Geary Street, size approximately 12:6x69; we wish to advise that the following conditions will be acceptable to us:

"This article to act as an agreement of tenancy between us, under which the lessee shall be governed by all the covenants and agreements contained in that certain lease, made and entered into on the 26th day of February, 1923, by and between Roy L. Collins and W. Orrin Backus.

"The term of tenancy to be the unexpired portion of the above mentioned lease at a rental of $100 per month for the first twelve months and $125 per month for the balance.

"It is further understood that the lessee shall deposit no security on the above tenancy. It is also understood that the lessor shall have the privilege of installing certain side-lines, such as ready-made dresses, furs, lingerie, etc., which the lessee agrees to sell upon a division of the profits.

"Very truly yours,

"W. Orrin Backus Lessor.

"W. F. Murphy Witness."

Under the terms stated in said letter, the defendant entered into possession of the premises mentioned therein, and continued to occupy the premises until the end of the term. During that period of time she paid to the plaintiff rent in the total sum of $3,250. The plaintiff gave her credit for the payments made, and in this action sought to recover an alleged balance, $1,575. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and awarded him judgment for the amount prayed, and the defendant has appealed, bringing up a typewritten transcript.

[1, 2] The defendant makes one point. She claims that the letter above set forth was an assignment of the full term, and therefore the original lessee could not sue, but that the original lessor could have sued her as for rent. Salisbury et al. v. Shirley, 66 Cal. 223, 5 P. 104; Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 P. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151; Jefferis v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 45 P. 680; Lutton v. Rau, 37 Cal. App. 429, 173 P. 1111; Cross v. Thiele, 51 Cal. App. 780, 197 P. 974. In this connection she claims that the letter above quoted, although in form a sublease, was a transfer of the entire term, and contained no reversion, and was therefore in law an assignment. Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 605; Jordan v. Scott, 38 Cal. App. 739, 744, 745, 177 P. 504. That claim is not quite exact, as it involves a misconception of the technical meaning of the word "term" as applied to leases. 38 Cyc. 185, note 39. The authorities cited support the claim when the period of time for which the lessee holds coincides with the period of time which the sublessee holds, and the other provisions in the contract do not show that the parties intended to create a sublease. In Barkhaus v. Producers' Fruit Co., 192 Cal. 200, at page 206, 219 P. 435, 437, Mr. Justice Myers said: "The term which a tenant must assign, in order to terminate his privity of estate with the landlord, may be regarded as having three dimensions analogous to the special dimensions of length, breadth, and thickness. The term to be transferred to his assignee by such a tenant must be for a period of time at least equal to the remainder of the term of the original lease. It must cover all of the premises demised by the original lease, and it must include all of the estate and interest in said premises possessed by the lessee under the original lease. 'To constitute an assignment of a leasehold interest, the assignee must take precisely the same estate in the whole or in a part of the leased premises which his assignor had therein. He must not only take for the whole of the unexpired time, but he must take the whole estate, or, in other words, the whole term; for, in the language of Blackstone, "the word 'term' does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate also and interest that passes by that lease. * * *"' If by the terms of the conveyance, be it in the form of a lease or an assignment, new conditions with a right of entry, or new causes of forfeiture are created, then the tenant holds by different tenure, and a new leasehold interest arises, which cannot be treated as an assignment or a continuation to him of the original term.' Dunlap v. Bullard, 131 Mass. 161, 162. See, also, United States v. Hickey, 17 Wall. (84 U. S.) 9, 21 L. Ed. 559 [see, also Rose's U. S. Notes]; Davis v. Vidal, 105 Tex. 444, 42 L.

R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 151 S. W. 290; 1 Taylor, Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 16."

One of the questions involved is, Was the tenure of the plaintiff under his lease the same as the tenure of the defendant under her contract? A comparison of the two instruments shows that it was not. The plaintiff was bound to pay the landlord $150 per month. The defendant contracted to pay the lessee $100 per month during a part of the time and $125 per month during the rest of the time, and she also agreed "that the lessor shall have the privilege of installing certain side-lines, such as ready-made dresses, furs, lingerie, etc., which the lessee agrees to sell upon a division of the profits." It thus appears that the rent reserved in the one instrument and the tenure of the plaintiff was not identical with the tenure of the defendant. Furthermore, under the terms of her contract, the defendant adopted the reversionary clause contained in the original lease. That instrument retained the right to re-enter before the expiration of the term on the breach of condition. The right of reversion was continued, but on conditions quite different as to the amount of rent and carrying plaintiff's "lines." When the lease contains such a covenant, there is a conflict of authorities as to the effect. One line of cases holds that the insertion of such a covenant deprives the instrument of its character as an assignment. Essex Lunch, Inc., v. Boston Lunch Co., 229 Mass. 557, 118 N. E. 899; Davis v. Vidal, 105 Tex. 444, 151 S. W. 290, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084; H. L. Null & Co. v. J. S. Garlington & Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 242 S. W. 507. In Saling v. Flesch, 277 P. 612, the Supreme Court of Montana cites and follows those cases. Continuing, on page 614 of 277 P., the court says: "We agree with the conclusion stated by the court in Wilson v. Cornbrooks, 137 A. 819, 5 N. J. Misc. R. 614, where it is said: 'The better view, it seems to me, is that, where the tenant reserves the right of re-entry upon failure of his transferee to pay rent or upon violation of covenants, he does not part with his entire term or estate, and that the retention of such contingent reversionary interest creates a subtenancy.'" The claim of the defendant as stated by her is not applicable to the facts. It cannot be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 783

PETERSON v. CHORLEY et al. (Civ. 6091).

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 10, 1930.

- 1. Interpleader $\S$ 29—In interpleader action, evidence supported finding that attorney was to be paid from fund held by plaintiff for protecting defendants' interests.

In action to determine respective interests of defendants in fund in possession of plaintiff obtained from estate of deceased, evidence held to support finding that attorney employed to protect interests of some of defendants with knowledge of other defendant was to be paid therefrom reasonable value of his services.

- 2. Interpleader $\S$ 29—Evidence held to support finding that attorney was entitled to commission under compromise agreement on funds collected from deceased's estate.

Where heir executed to another power of attorney to act for her in matter of deceased's estate and assigned to the other one-third of her interest therein and the other assigned his power of attorney to third individual, and thereafter compromise agreement was executed in satisfaction of their interests in heir's share of estate, evidence held to support finding that plaintiff, in action to determine respective interests of parties in fund in his possession collected from estate, was entitled under compromise agreement to commission on funds collected.

- 3. Interpleader $\S$ 35—Attorney collecting fund from estate for others held agent and bailee and not trustee, and hence not entitled to attorney's fees in interpleader action brought by him (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 2250, 2273).

Where attorney collecting fund from deceased's estate for defendants brought action of interpleader to determine respective interests of defendants, attorney held to have acted as agent and bailee of defendants and not as trustee within meaning of Civ. Code, $\S$ 2250, and hence was not entitled to attorney's fees under section 2273.

- 4. Interpleader $\S$ 35—Attorney bringing interpleader to determine claims to fund held by him held not entitled to allowance for attorney's fees (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1021).

Where attorney brought suit in interpleader to determine respective interests of defendants in fund he had collected from deceased's estate, attorney held not entitled to fees, since in suits in interpleader attorney's fees cannot be allowed under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1021.

- 5. Interest $\S$ 11—Absent agreement, bad faith, or unreasonable delay, one receiving money for use of another is not chargeable with interest.

One who has received money for use of another, and is charged merely with duty of holding same and paying it over to proper person, is not, in absence of agreement, chargeable with interest unless guilty of bad faith or unreasonable delay.

- 6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1035—Objection that interpleader could not be maintained because plaintiff claimed interest in fund held not basis for reversal, where nothing showed error resulted in miscarriage of justice.

Judgment in interpleader suit will not be reversed merely because plaintiff bringing action of interpleader claimed interest in fund, there being nothing to support conclusion that error resulted in miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Fred C. Peterson against Ross R. Chorley, R. McColgan, and others. From an unsatisfactory judgment, the named defendants appeal. Modified, and as thus modified affirmed, and judgment rendered for the named defendants.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison and George B. Keane, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Stanley R. Sterne, of Oakland, for respondent Fred C. Peterson.

PER CURIAM. An action to determine the respective interests of the defendants in a fund in the possession of the plaintiff.

The facts are as follows: Peter J. McGovern, who died on March 15, 1922, by his last will disposed of a portion of his estate; the residue passed by the law of succession to his heirs, among whom was his sister Bridget Cullen. The latter executed to E. A. Platt a power of attorney to act for her in the matter of the estate, and also assigned to him one-third of her interest therein. In June, 1922, Platt executed his power of attorney to defendant McColgan, giving him full power to act under the Cullen assignment and power of attorney; the purpose being to secure the repayment to McColgan of sums loaned to Platt. Defendant Ford, an attorney representing Mrs. Cullen, Platt, and one Blakemore, appeared in the proceeding and procured a partial distribution of the estate. Shortly thereafter Isidor Golden, an attorney, was substituted for Ford as the attorney for Mrs. Cullen, and the latter thereupon instituted an action against Platt and all those to whom he had given powers of attorney or assignments, including defendant McColgan, to cancel and annul her assignment to Platt and to quiet the title to her interest in the McGovern estate against the various claimants. The plaintiff, who was also an attorney, appeared in the action upon behalf of several of the defendants, including Ford and McColgan. The action was compromised, and all claimants under the assignment to Platt, including defendant Ford, agreed to accept in satisfaction of their claims the sum of $500 and 5 per cent. of Mrs. Cullen's distributive share of the estate.

The plaintiff claimed, and the court found, that by agreement with the parties he was to receive as compensation for his services in the litigation 5 per cent. of all sums collected by him under the compromise agreement. In accordance with the latter agreement the executor of decedent's will paid to the plaintiff by check the sum of $2,000, which check he in turn indorsed to McColgan, who thereupon paid him 5 per cent. thereof, or $100. Subsequently, the executor paid plaintiff the further sum of $2,161.46, which, after deducting the percentage claimed by him, namely, $108.07, he deposited in his commercial bank account. Thereafter defendants asserted conflicting claims thereto, and the present action was brought to determine these claims.

The compromise agreement was evidenced by a letter signed by the defendants and directed to the executor, its material portions being as follows: " * * * It is the express understanding and agreement of the parties signatory hereto that the said sum of $500 plus the said five (5%) per cent. is a payment in full to all of the persons who have filed notices of assignment or who have made claims adverse to the rights and interests of said Bridget Cullen in said estate, or on whose behalf such notices have been filed or claims made; and it is further understood that it is likewise in full payment of all moneys coming to the undersigned George K. Ford for services rendered by him on behalf of Bridget Cullen herein."

The court found that defendant Ford had at the request of Platt and Mrs. Cullen rendered services in securing a partial distribution of the estate, and that the services were reasonably worth $1,050. It also found that plaintiff necessarily expended $275 as attorneys' fees and $56 as costs in the present case, but should be charged with interest in the sum of $130.69 upon the balance remaining in his hands. The judgment directed that after deducting the difference between the amounts allowed as attorneys' fees and costs and the sum charged as interest the balance should be paid as follows: To defendant George K. Ford $1,050, and to defendants R. McColgan and Ross R. Chorley the sum of $803.08.

McColgan and Chorley have appealed from portions of the judgment. They contend that plaintiff was not entitled to attorneys' fees or a commission, and that the court erred in awarding defendant Ford any part of the fund.

[1, 2] It is undisputed that McColgan and Platt shared in the interest in the estate acquired by the latter from Mrs. Cullen, and that Ford—who had frequently acted in similar transactions for McColgan—was employed to protect the interests of Platt and Mrs. Cullen, all of which McColgan knew.

These circumstances taken with the compromise agreement, which impliedly recognized Ford's claim to a part of the fund, sufficiently supported the conclusion of the trial court that he was to be paid therefrom the reasonable value of his services; and the evidence also supports the finding that the plaintiff by agreement of the parties was entitled to the commission claimed by him. Plaintiff's testimony shows that he was either paid his commission when the collection was made or that the amount was deducted by him at the time, and that when the action was brought there remained in his hands a balance of $2,053.39, upon which he was entitled to no further commissions.

The original complaint was filed by a firm of attorneys of which plaintiff was a member. Thereafter an amended complaint praying for additional compensation was filed by another attorney, for whose services an allowance from the fund was asked. The pleadings alleged that plaintiff was threatened with litigation by the defendants, that their claims were conflicting, and that the present suit was necessary in order to determine the same.

It was shown that plaintiff had no duties to perform other than to collect the amounts paid by the executor, and the trial court denied the extra compensation sought, but allowed an attorney's fee.

[3, 4] It is clear from the evidence that plaintiff was acting as defendants' agent and bailee. While his duties were in some respects analogous to those of a trustee, he was not such within the meaning of section 2250 of the Civil Code, and was not entitled to attorney's fees under section 2273 of the same Code. Los Angeles Trust & Sav. Bank v. Ward, 197 Cal. 103, 239 P. 847. Notwithstanding there was no denial of certain allegations in the complaint to the effect that plaintiff was a trustee, and that he was so described in a communication from defendant McColgan, the facts show that as to the amounts collected he was but a stakeholder, and the finding that he was a trustee is unsupported. The action in legal effect was but a suit in interpleader, in which cases attorney's fees cannot be allowed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1021; Los Angeles Trust & Sav. Bank v. Ward, 197 Cal. 103, 239 P. 847.

[5] It is also the rule that one who has received money for the use of another and is charged merely with the duty of holding the same and paying it over to the proper person, is not, in the absence of an agreement, chargeable with interest unless guilty of bad faith or unreasonable delay. 33 Cor. Jur., Interest, § 58, p. 202. In the present case no such contentions are made, nor is it claimed that plaintiff received any benefit from the fund; and not being a trustee with-

In the above section of the Code, the conclusion that he was legally chargeable with interest cannot be sustained.

[6] It is further contended by appellants that plaintiff having claimed an interest in the fund, the action of interpleader could not be maintained. The action, however, was tried on that theory; all questions between the parties were fully litigated, and the error, if any, was in a matter of procedure. Under such circumstances a judgment cannot be set aside unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice; and in the present case there is nothing to support that conclusion. Baker v. Miller, 190 Cal. 263, 212 P. 11.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the following paragraphs:

"It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that on the 7th day of August 1924 plaintiff received two thousand one hundred sixty-one and 46/100 ($2,161.46) dollars in trust for the uses and purposes set forth in the findings; that he was entitled to immediately deduct therefrom five per cent thereof, to wit, one hundred eight and 07/100 ($108.07) dollars as compensation to himself for services theretofore rendered; that thereupon he became chargeable with the sum of two thousand fifty-three and 39/100 ($2,053.39) dollars as trustee.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiff is entitled to deduct from said sum of two thousand fifty-three and 39/100 ($2,053.39) dollars the sum of two hundred and seventy-five ($275.00) dollars, attorney's fees paid to Stanley R. Sterne, and the sum of fifty-six ($56.00) dollars, costs incurred in this suit.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiff held as trustee out of such fund for and on behalf of George K. Ford one thousand and fifty ($1,050.00) dollars.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that plaintiff is chargeable with interest at seven per cent per annum on one thousand three and 39/100 ($1,003.39) dollars from the 7th day of August 1924 to the date of judgment, which said interest is one hundred thirty and 69/100 ($130.69) dollars.

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendants and cross-complainants R. McColgan and Ross R. Chorley take the balance of the trust fund conveyed, deducting from the said fund the amount herein adjudged to plaintiff as compensation for trustee and for costs of suit and for attorneys fees, and the amount herein adjudged to cross-complainant George K. Ford, to wit, the balance of such sum, viz., eight hundred three and 08/100 ($803.08) dollars."

And it is ordered that in lieu thereof the following be inserted therein: It is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that on the 7th day of August, 1924, plaintiff received $2,161.46 for the use of defendants McColgan, Chorley, and Johnson; that he was entitled to deduct therefrom 5 per cent. thereof, to wit, $108.07 as compensation for services theretofore rendered; and that he thereupon became chargeable with the sum of $2,053.39.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that plaintiff is entitled to deduct from said sum of $2,053.39 the sum of $56, costs incurred in this suit.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that defendants George K. Ford, R. McColgan, and Ross R. Chorley have judgment against plaintiff for the balance of said fund in accordance with their respective interests therein, namely, George K. Ford in the sum of $1,050, and R. McColgan and Ross R. Chorley in the sum of $947.39, and that they have execution therefor unless the plaintiff shall within 10 days pay said amounts to the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, to be applied in satisfaction of said judgments, in which event he shall be discharged from liability to the defendants or any of them.

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed; and it is further ordered that the plaintiff and defendants McColgan and Chorley each bear his own costs on appeal.

103 Cal. App. 433

DUDLEY v. CITIZENS' STATE BANK OF SANTA MONICA. (Civ. 3972.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Contradictory testimony in action for money had and received only raising conflict furnishes no ground for reversal.

On defendant's appeal in action for money had and received, contradictory testimony only raising conflict in evidence furnishes no ground for reversal.

2. Banks and banking ⇨54(1)—Directors of state bank are required to maintain sufficient money therein to meet obligations, and that duty devolves upon executive officer (Bank Act 1909).

Under Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87), directors of state bank are charged with duty of maintaining sufficient sum of money in bank to meet its obligations, and this duty devolves upon executive officer thereof.

3. Banks and banking $\S$ 54(1)—While executive officer of state bank need not supply funds to keep surplus account intact, such duty is chargeable against bank (Bank Act 1909, $\S$ 21, as amended by St. 1913, p. 147, $\S$ 20).

While executive officer of state bank is not under duty to supply funds to keep surplus accounts intact, such duty is chargeable against bank under Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87) $\S$ 21, as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 147, $\S$ 20), requiring maintenance of surplus and providing method for raising and maintaining such surplus.

4. Banks and banking $\S$ 54(1)—If executive officer of state bank advanced money covering worthless checks temporarily until directors could take proper action, advancement would constitute loan entitling executive officer to recover same (Bank Act 1909, $\S$ 21, as amended by St. 1913, p. 147, $\S$ 20).

If executive officer of state bank advanced money temporarily to take care of worthless checks until they could be otherwise taken care of by directors, thereby making it only an expedient to maintain funds of bank unimpaired until Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87) $\S$ 21, as amended by St. 1913, p. 147, $\S$ 20, could be complied with, advancement of money would constitute loan and not gift, entitling executive officer to recover money advanced.

5. Banks and banking $\S$ 54(1)—Executive officer voluntarily paying money to state bank to cover worthless checks under circumstances implying gift cannot recover money advanced.

If circumstances under which executive officer of state bank advanced money to take care of worthless checks show voluntary payment or payment under circumstances where law implies a gift, executive officer cannot recover money so advanced.

6. Banks and banking $\S$ 55(5)—Evidence held to sustain finding that money advanced to state bank by executive officer covering worthless checks was paid under circumstances implying promise to repay.

In action by executive officer of bank for money had and received, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding to effect that money advanced by executive officer covering worthless checks was paid under circumstances where law would imply promise to repay same, and not as a gift.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Hazlett, Judge.

Action by P. J. Dudley against the Citizens' State Bank of Santa Monica. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel J. Crawford, of Ocean Park, and Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Miller & Ellis and Fredericks & Hanna, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment in an action prosecuted against the defendant to recover the sum of $10,400. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The complaint in this action is in nine counts. The first count is for the sum of $10,400, alleged to be for money had and received from the plaintiff for the benefit of the defendant, this sum being made up of the following items, to wit: The sum of $3,000, alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, for its use and benefit, on or about the 1st day of November, 1923; the sum of $1,400, alleged to have been paid to the defendant by the plaintiff, for its use and benefit, on or about the 6th day of February, 1924; the sum of $5,000, alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, for its use and benefit, on or about the 11th day of February, 1924; and the further sum of $1,000, alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, for the latter's use and benefit, on or about the 2d day of March, 1924. The next four counts are for the sums respectively mentioned, alleged to have been loaned to the defendant by the plaintiff at the defendant's special instance and request. The last four counts in the complaint relate to the separate items herein mentioned, and each is in the form of a count for money loaned and advanced the defendant, without consideration, to plaintiff, and for the use and benefit of the defendant. The answer consists of specific denials to each count. No affirmative defense is pleaded in the answer. The trial court made a general finding to the effect that all the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint are true and correct and likewise a general finding to the effect that the denials in the answer were and are untrue. The specifications of error simply raise the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of the court that the respective allegations of plaintiff's complaint are true. Neither the answer of the defendant nor the specifications of error raise any question as to the voluntary character of the payments made or of the money advanced by the plaintiff to and for the uses and benefit of the defendant. While the argument of the appellant is devoted chiefly to what the appellant calls the "voluntary character of the payments and advancements of money made by the plaintiff," the question of voluntary payment does not otherwise arise unless the testimony introduced by and on the part of the plaintiff establishes such fact in such a conclusive manner as compels this court to overturn the findings of the trial court to the effect that the money involved in this action was loaned by the plaintiff to the defendant, or that the money was advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant for its uses and benefit, without consideration. If all the other allegations of the complaint, found to be true by the court, are unsupported by the testimony, yet the finding of the court that the plaintiff advanced money to the defendant for its uses and benefit, without consideration, the law implies a promise to repay the same, and such finding, if supported by the testimony, would be sufficient to support the judgment.

[1] As we have stated, the defendant tendered no issue of voluntary payment by its pleadings, and introduced no evidence of such voluntary character of the payments, and bases its appeal wholly upon the testimony of the plaintiff. Reference is made to some contradictory testimony, but this only raises a conflict, and furnishes no ground for reversal. Not having tendered any issue as to the alleged voluntary character of the payments or advancements of money by the plaintiff to the defendant, and not having raised any such question by specification of errors, it is a very doubtful question whether, under section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the contention of the appellant can be considered. 21 Cal. Jur. 136; 2 Cal. Jur. 705-712; Mills v. Brady, 185 Cal. 317, and cases cited on page 321, 196 P. 776, 778. However, we will not base our decision upon any technical rules of pleading, but will confine ourselves to a consideration of whether the money was advanced, as alleged by the plaintiff, to the defendant for its uses and benefit, without consideration and under such circumstances that the law would imply a promise of repayment and an obligation to repay the same upon demand.

The transcript shows that the Citizens' State Bank of Santa Monica was organized some time during the year 1922, and opened its doors for the transaction of business in January, 1923. The par value of the capital stock of the bank was fixed at the sum of $100,000, the stock being sold at $110 per share—$100 as the par value of the stock and $10 on each share sold being credited to what was called the "surplus account," this account being created in this manner for the evident purpose of paying organizing and operating expenses until the business of the bank was sufficient to put it upon a paying basis. Shortly after the bank began business, it organized and established a branch at a place called "Ocean Park," a suburb of Santa Monica. The plaintiff in this action was, during all the time covered by this testimony, the vice president and executive officer of the Citizens' State Bank of Santa Monica. The plaintiff's son, Arthur Dudley, was first assistant manager, and for a while served as manager of the Ocean Park branch. During the latter part of the year 1923, the plaintiff, P. J. Dudley, having had introduced to him a man by the name of Hurd, cashed a check in favor of Hurd and drawn by Hurd on the Citizens' State Bank of Santa Monica for the sum of $3,000. This transaction may be summarized as follows: On or about the 21st day of October, 1923, a man by the name of Hurd came into the bank of which the plaintiff was the manager, accompanied by one Homer Johnson, an acquaintance of the plaintiff; Johnson introduced Hurd, stating that they were associated in some deal, and that Hurd desired to make a deposit and open an account; thereupon Hurd presented three different checks aggregating approximately $40,000, all of which were signed by third parties in favor of Hurd; two of the checks were drawn upon banks in the neighboring town of Inglewood; the third purported to be a check certified by the cashier of the American National Bank of Pomona; the checks were received by Dudley and an account opened by the bank in the name of Hurd; thereupon Hurd immediately drew against the account in the sum of $3,000, writing a check therefor, which the plaintiff directed the teller in the bank to pay; this sum was paid by the teller to Hurd in currency; no investigation was made of Hurd, nor as to the genuineness of the checks deposited by him; Hurd gave as an explanation for drawing out so much currency that he was going to buy some real estate; the plaintiff, upon cross-examination, was not able to tell just what reasons Hurd assigned for drawing the cash instead of using checks; in a short time it developed that the checks aggregating the aforesaid sum of $40,000 were all forgeries; Hurd was arrested, convicted, and sent to prison.

On or about the 1st day of November, 1923, the plaintiff deposited in the defendant bank the sum of $3,000, making the deposit in the form of a check signed by him, payable to the order of Citizens' State Bank, in said sum, with the words, "for to take up Hurd check." This money was paid into the defendant bank on or about November 21, 1923. No report was made of this transaction to the directors by the plaintiff, and it does not appear that any of the directors knew of the transaction with the exception of Mr. McClellan, who was the president of the bank, and Mr. Miller, who was one of the directors. The plaintiff testified that he had a conversation with McClellan in relation to this transaction, and that McClellan requested him not to report the transaction to the directors. The plaintiff, among other things, testified that his idea was that he was extending a credit to the bank because the money went into the bank; that he put up the money to take care of the situation until either the directors or the bank could arrange the matter; that he had the interest of the bank at heart, and put up the money in good faith. The plaintiff further testified that in his conversation with McClellan, the president of the bank, that it came to the question of taking care of the loan temporarily, the plaintiff's language being as follows: "Then it came to the question of taking care of the loan temporarily. I would be willing to furnish the funds temporarily, provided I would get it back again. He said that would be agreeable to him. I suggested that I was ready to make a report to the Board of Directors. He asked me not to do that; he said, 'Leave it to me.' The plaintiff further testified as follows: "I didn't consider myself in anyway obligated to pay any of this $3,000.00. I had the interest of the bank at heart, and I put the money up in good faith. If I had known that it was not going to be paid back, that he was not going to take the matter up and see that I got it back, I would not have put up my check." This testimony was contradicted by Mr. McClellan, but it appears from the testimony of the witness Miller that the plaintiff and McClellan did have a conversation which in substance was practically the same as the conversation related by the plaintiff, and sufficient to justify the trial court in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff had given a correct version of the conversation he had had with the president of the bank relative to the $3,000 transaction. The minutes of the board of directors show that at a meeting held on the 20th day of November, 1923, the loss of $3,000 by the bank was discussed by the board.

The remainder of the money claimed by the plaintiff as due him from the defendant is based upon a transaction had with a man by the name of W. F. Sharpless, otherwise known as L. J. Mills. It appears from the transcript that a man by the name of "Sharpless" did business with the Ocean Park branch of the defendant bank, under the name of Sharpless, and also under the name of L. J. Mills; that Sharpless was engaged in selling automobiles, and the branch bank handled a great deal of his paper. During most of the time the bank was handling Sharpless' paper, his account was overdrawn. Finally it appears that during the early part of the year 1924 Sharpless deposited several checks with the Ocean Park branch bank of the defendant and drew thereon various sums, so that, unless the checks just referred to were genuine, his account would stand overdrawn in the sum of $7,400. As subsequent events proved, the checks which we have just referred to as deposited by Sharpless were all returned to the Ocean Park branch bank of the defendant as worthless, he having no funds in the bank upon which they were drawn. Upon being informed by his son of the worthless character of the checks drawn by Sharpless, and that they were being returned, the plaintiff deposited the various sums mentioned in his complaint, aggregating a total of $7,400, in the Ocean Park branch bank of the defendant. His testimony was that he directed his son to hold the money until the whole matter was fixed up. A. V. Dudley, as manager of the branch bank, turned the money into the bank and carried it upon the books as so much cash. The deposit slips in the handwriting of the plaintiff show that the money just referred to was deposited at various times to the credit of, or on account of, Sharpless and Mills. It does not appear from the records of the defendant bank that any report of these transactions was made by the plaintiff, or by A. V. Dudley, or that the directors of the bank understood the same until after the plaintiff had severed his connection with the defendant bank. The plaintiff, upon cross-examination, testified as follows: "I put in this money in the hope that Sharpless would later come along and make good the amount he had received from the draft which had been dishonored, and that if he did not do it, I would go to the Board of Directors and lay the situation before them to see if I could not get my money back, and, further, as to one of the transactions my idea was that if the bank did not repay me, the Directors would, and that if the Directors wouldn't, that the bank would; I had nothing definite as to which would. My idea was that I was extending a credit to the bank because the money went into the bank."

Upon this testimony, and more along the same line which does not change the effect of what we have set forth, it is contended by the appellant that a voluntary gift, and not a loan is established; that, while the money was advanced without any consideration on the part of the plaintiff, and went into the funds of the bank, the plaintiff was simply replacing in the bank funds which had been improperly paid out either by himself, from the defendant bank, or by his son from the Ocean Park branch bank. Without further consideration, or without regarding the official character of the plaintiff, and the fact that he was charged with the management of the bank and the control of its funds, and the law relating to the maintenance of a surplus by banking corporations, it might be that we would have to state, as a matter of law, that the transaction disclosed constituted voluntary gifts, and that none of the money could be recovered.

[2-4] Under the law, the directors of the bank were charged with maintaining a sufficient sum of money in the defendant bank to meet its obligations, and this duty, as the executive officer of the bank, devolved upon the plaintiff. While it was not his duty to supply funds to keep the surplus account intact, it was a duty chargeable against the bank. Section 21 of the California Bank Act (St. 1909, p. 87) as amended in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 147), and as it was in force at the time of the transactions considered herein, required the maintenance of a surplus, and provided a method for raising and maintaining a surplus. The procedure there set forth would ordinarily consume considerable time. The surplus of the defendant bank, as disclosed by the testimony, amounted to the sum of $10,000. The losses incurred, as disclosed by the record, aggregated $10,400. The testimony of the plaintiff is to the effect that the bank needed or required the money, although the bank was not shown to be insolvent. Insolvency, however, is a different matter from not having ready cash, and, if the testimony of the plaintiff is true, that he put up his money temporarily until it could be otherwise taken care of by the directors of the bank, then and in that case it was only an expedient to maintain the funds of the bank unimpaired until section 21 of the Bank Act could be complied with. This would amount, in law, to a loan to the bank, and at least to an advancement of money to the bank, not as a gift, but without any binding obligation upon the plaintiff, and in such manner as would entitle him to recover the same. It is argued by the appellant that, if the plaintiff deposited the $10,400 in the bank, as claimed by him, to maintain its reserves, then and in that case the repayment to the plaintiff of the amount which he had so deposited would leave the reserves of the bank in the depleted condition existing just prior to plaintiff making deposit of the money as alleged. This is true, but section 21 of the Bank Act and other sections of the Bank Act provide the procedure for taking care of just such situations. The fact that the plaintiff did not report the Sharpless transactions to the board of directors constituted a circumstance which the trial court was authorized to take into consideration in determining the credibility of the plaintiff as a witness in this case, and, if the court resolved this incident in favor of the plaintiff, and as not affecting his credibility, we are not in a position to overthrow the holding of the trial court simply because it is strongly urged that such fact does materially affect the credibility of the witness, even though we might agree with the contention of the appellant in this particular. The appellant cites a number of authorities relative to voluntary payments, which we need not consider, for the reason that the court has held otherwise upon testimony sufficient to sustain its findings, even though we might conclude differently upon the same testimony. The cases cited by appellant, based upon the text found in 7 C. J. 492, are not controlling here. The text in Corpus Juris, relative to this subject, reads as follows: "The capital stock of a bank is a trust fund for the benefit of depositors and creditors, and must be kept unimpaired, for which purpose an assessment may be levied on the stockholders in case a deficiency arises through losses or otherwise. Where the directors of a bank, in response to a demand of the state bank examiner, that they make good an impairment of the capital stock, sign and discount their personal note and deposit the proceeds to the credit of the bank, the transaction is a donation or gift to the bank"—citing Interstate Trust, etc., Co. v. Irwin, 138 La. 325, 70 So. 313; Wright v. Gurley, 133 La. 745, 63 So. 310. An examination of these cases shows that the directors had entered into an agreement with the bank examiner to pay so much money into the bank to make up a deficit in its assets in lieu of levying an assessment, and that the various sums contributed were contributed unconditionally and as a gift to the bank.

[5, 6] A review of the authorities cited by the respective counsel would serve no useful purpose. It is sufficient to say that, if the circumstances show a voluntary payment, or a payment under circumstances where the law implies a gift, no recovery can be had. On the other hand, if the money is advanced, under such circumstances, by one having charge of the management of the affairs and business of the corporation, as to raise an implied contract to repay the same, judgment for repayment will be entered, and thus, if the court, upon sufficient testimony to sustain its findings, concludes that the money was paid under circumstances where the law would imply a promise to repay, further argument is foreclosed.

While we appreciate the force of the appellant's argument, it comes down to a question of fact, and that, having been found by the trial court against the contentions of the appellant, we have no recourse but to affirm the judgment, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 750

CITY OF TURLOCK v. BRISTOW et al. ★
(Civ. 3865.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 8, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1930.

1. Nuisance ⇨84—Evidence held to show pollution of water in irrigation ditch, within city limits, constituting nuisance under statute (Civ. Code, § 3479).

In action by municipality to abate a nuisance caused by pollution of water in an open irrigation ditch traversing a populous section of the city in vicinity of two school buildings, evidence held sufficient to show existence of nuisance as defined in Civ. Code, § 3479.

2. Nuisance ⇨70—Although continuing nuisance was created by former owner of property, his successor is liable for neglect to abate it.

Every successive owner of property who neglects to abate a continuing nuisance upon or in use of his property, although created by former owner, is liable therefor in same manner as the one who first created it; regard being had to Civ. Code, § 3483.

3. Nuisance ⇨64—Owner of easement for use of water in irrigation ditch constituting public nuisance may be enjoined from using it.

One who owns an easement for the continuous use of water conveyed to his premises through an irrigation ditch may be enjoined from using it, if he fails to maintain it in such condition as not to amount to a public nuisance.

4. Nuisance Ⓒ84—Evidence held to prove that unhealthful condition was caused throughout neighborhood by irrigation ditch, which was therefore public nuisance under statute (Civ. Code, § 3480).

In action to abate a nuisance arising from unsanitary and dangerous condition of open irrigation ditch traversing populous section of city, evidence held sufficient to show that entire neighborhood was injuriously affected by the ditch, which was therefore a public nuisance as defined in Civ. Code, § 3480.

5. Nuisance Ⓒ78—Municipality was authorized under statute to abate public nuisance caused by accumulations of vegetation and debris in irrigation ditch within city limits (Civ. Code, § 3494).

Where a public nuisance resulted from maintenance of unsanitary and dangerous irrigation ditch within city limits, the municipality was authorized to maintain an action to abate the public nuisance, in view of Civ. Code, § 3494.

6. Nuisance Ⓒ78—City in exercise of its police power may abate public nuisance injurious to health.

A manifest public nuisance affecting health may be abated by municipality under its police power.

7. Nuisance Ⓒ84—Persons who permitted continuing, visible, public nuisance to exist over considerable period would be deemed to have had knowledge and notice.

In action by municipality to abate a nuisance caused by pollution of irrigation ditch, contention that defendants were not served with notice to abate the nuisance was without merit, since they had maintained for many years a continuing, visible, public nuisance, and hence would be deemed to have had knowledge and notice thereof.

8. Nuisance Ⓒ84—Specific notice to abate nuisance was unnecessary, where notices to abate had been mailed to defendants before beginning of action.

In action by city to abate a nuisance caused by irrigation ditch, where evidence showed that complaints had been often made to municipal authorities, and that protests were given to some of defendants, and that notices to abate the nuisance were mailed to defendants before institution of action, no specific notice to abate the nuisance was necessary.

9. Nuisance Ⓒ84—In action to abate nuisance caused by pollution of irrigation ditch, allegation that defendants owned prescriptive rights to water therein raised immaterial issue.

In action by municipality to abate nuisance resulting from unhealthful irrigation ditch within city limits, a cross-complaint on ground that defendants owned prescriptive rights to use of water therein raised no material issue.

10. Nuisance Ⓒ66—No lapse of time can legalize public nuisance (Civ. Code, § 3490).

Neither prescriptive right, laches, nor the statute of limitations is a defense in action to abate a public nuisance, which cannot be legalized by mere lapse of time, in view of Civ. Code, § 3490.

11. Jury Ⓒ14(11)—Jury trial was properly denied in action to abate nuisance, involving only injunctive relief against maintenance of irrigation ditch in city.

In action by city to abate a nuisance arising from maintenance of irrigation ditch within city limits, a trial by jury was properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by the City of Turlock against Clarence Bristow, A. N. Crow, and others to abate a nuisance. From a decree awarding mandatory relief, A. N. Crow and others appeal. Affirmed.

William N. Graybiel, of Turlock, for appellants.

James C. Nichols, of Turlock, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a decree awarding mandatory relief from a public nuisance caused by the pollution of the water of an irrigation ditch which extends through a portion of the city of Turlock.

For more than 20 years the defendants held an easement in the use of water for irrigation purposes which flowed in a ditch extending through the westerly portion of the city of Turlock. Originally this ditch, which was constructed with dirt embankments, was entirely uninclosed by culverts or conduits. The ditch was 10 or 15 feet in width and several feet in depth. It extended through a somewhat populous portion of the city for a distance of 16 blocks. At points where it intersected or traversed streets the city authorities at great cost constructed concrete culverts, installed 30-inch water pipes, and inverted siphons beneath the pavements. Nevertheless, this ditch for nearly one-half the distance traversed within the city limits remained open and unprotected. These uncovered portions became overgrown with vegetation and obstructed by an accumulation of debris so that the water was polluted and unsanitary.

The complaint alleged facts constituting a public nuisance and prayed for abatement thereof. The answer controverted these allegations, and a cross-complaint was filed setting up a claim on the part of the defendants to prescriptive rights to the use of the ditch for irrigation purposes and affirmatively charged the city of Turlock with wrongfully installing concrete culverts, conduits and siphons so as to obstruct and diminish the flow of water to which they were entitled. From this interference with their alleged prescriptive rights the defendants prayed for equitable relief.

Upon trial of the cause the court found that the ditch was maintained by the defendants along the open portions thereof within the city limits of Turlock in such a manner as to permit the accumulation of foul and stagnant water, refuse matter, filth, and garbage which became a breeding place for typhoid and other disease germs and permeated the air with noxious, unwholesome, and offensive vapors and odors, rendering the ditch unsanitary, causing the neighborhood to become unhealthful, and destroying the comfort and enjoyment of the homes and property of the citizens of that vicinity. The court further found that the concrete culverts, pipe system, and siphons which were installed by the city were not constructed so as to obstruct or reduce the flow of water in the ditch, but, upon the contrary, that "said culverts are large enough to carry all water that has been carried through said ditch for the past ten years," and that the defendants were not damaged thereby. The court thereupon ordered that the defendants be "enjoined and restrained from conveying water through the said last above described portion of said ditch within the corporate limits of the City of Turlock unless and until all the open and uncovered portions thereof lying north of the said Tidewater-Southern Railroad tracks on Castor Street in said city are covered, tiled or piped in a substantial and permanent manner in concrete, iron or other durable and permanent substance so as to effectively prevent the escape or leakage therefrom of water or odors." These findings are amply supported by the evidence.

[1] There can be little doubt the irrigation ditch, complained of in this action, maintained in the manner in which the record discloses it to have been operated, constitutes a nuisance subject to abatement. Since 1906 the defendants availed themselves of an easement in the use of this ditch to periodically convey water to their respective lands for irrigation purposes. It may be conceded they thereby acquired prescriptive rights to the lawful use of the ditch and water flowing therein. The ditch traversed the westerly portion of the city of Turlock in the vicinity of two school buildings, along and across streets and through city blocks, a distance of some 6,000 feet. This portion of the city is now quite thickly populated. As the city developed, it improved this waterway in places where it was most required, by constructing culverts, installing concrete pipes, placing siphons beneath the crossings, and paving the streets. After thus inclosing the ditch at intervals, nearly one-half of it still remained unprotected within the city limits. Along these uninclosed portions of the ditch vegetation and debris were permitted to accumulate so as to become a menace to health, comfort, and the reasonable enjoyment of home life among citizens who live in that vicinity and to those who have occasion to visit the neighborhood of that ditch. While the record does not disclose an extremely offensive condition of this waterway, there is ample evidence upon which to support the findings of the court to the effect that a nuisance was permitted to develop and exist by those in control thereof, according to the definition of a nuisance as that term is defined in section 3479 of the Civil Code.

[2, 3] It would be an arduous and useless task to select evidence which is scattered throughout a somewhat lengthy record to demonstrate the existence of this nuisance. The city engineer, a physician who was also the health officer of Turlock, and other witnesses furnish satisfactory proof of the presence of large quantities of bamboo, willows, rank grass, weeds, and vegetation which were permitted to grow and remain in dense masses within the ditch and along its borders, obstructing the flow of the ordinarily sluggish stream. The grass and vegetation were permitted to lie in masses along the borders of the stream or to decay upon its banks, creating danger of fire, menacing the health of citizens by fostering breeding places for mosquitoes, bacteria, colon and typhoid bacilli, and creating unsanitary and offensive odors. The grade of this ditch was not uniform. Holes were dug in the bed of the stream and miniature pools formed, where the water became stagnant and covered with a thick coating of green scum in which dead frogs and fish remained to decay. The presence of miasma and noxious effluvium resulted. The stream also became the dumping ground for tin cans, old boilers, discarded tires, and debris of all sorts, creating an unsightly, unhealthful, and unwholesome situation. Occasionally the banks washed out and the adjoining land was flooded. Moreover, the ditch became the playground for children who, during periods of high water, were in danger of being drowned. This condition unquestionably constitutes a nuisance. McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge Mill Co., 144 Cal. 542, 78 P. 7; 20 R. C. L. 443, §§ 58-61; 20 Cal. Jur. 294, § 29. But appellants assert that the evidence fails to prove they created this situation. It was, however, a continuing nuisance which they suffered to exist. 20 Cal. Jur. 271, § 9. Every successive owner of property who neglects to abate a continuing nuisance upon, or in the use of such property, created by the former owner, is liable therefor in the same manner as the one who first created it. Section 3483, Civ. Code. It was the duty of the defendants to maintain the ditch in a reasonably sanitary condition. One who owns an easement for the continuous use of water which is conveyed to his premises through an irrigation ditch may be enjoined from using it except upon condition that he shall maintain it free from an existing state which amounts to a public nuisance. This is precisely the effect of the court's mandate in the present case, which seems to accord with equitable principles.

[4-6] The evidence is also sufficient to show that the entire neighborhood through which the ditch ran within the city limits was injuriously affected by the unsanitary and dangerous condition of this irrigation ditch, and that it therefore constituted a public nuisance as that term is defined in section 3480 of the Civil Code. The city of Turlock was clearly authorized to maintain this action to abate the public nuisance. Section 3494, Civ. Code; San Francisco v. Buckman, 111 Cal. 25, 43 P. 396; 20 Cal. Jur. 307, § 38. Indeed, where the existing condition clearly constitutes a public nuisance which affects the health or sanitation of a city, it may be abated by the municipality under its police powers without liability on its part and independently of its equitable remedies. 20 R. C. L. 487, §§ 100, 101; 2 Wood on Nuisances (3d Ed.) 973, § 743; McMahon v. Telluride, 79 Colo. 281, 244 P. 1017, 46 A. L. R. 358, note.

[7, 8] The appellants contend that the record is devoid of evidence that the defendants were served with notice to abate the nuisance, and that such notice is a prerequisite to the instituting of this action for abatement. This was a continuing, visible, public nuisance which was permitted by the defendants to exist for many years. Under such circumstances they will be deemed to have had knowledge of the nuisance and notice thereof. 46 C. J. 743, § 325. The evidence, however, does show that complaints had been frequently made to the city authorities regarding the unsanitary condition of this stream; that protests were given to some of the defendants; and that notices to abate the nuisance were mailed to the defendants before the action was commenced. No specific notice to abate the nuisance in this case was necessary.

[9, 10] It is claimed the court erred in failing to adopt findings upon the claim alleged in the cross-complaint that the defendants owned prescriptive rights to the use of the water flowing through this irrigation ditch and that these prescriptive rights are a valid defense to the charge of maintaining a public nuisance. This, however, was an immaterial issue, which required no finding. Neither prescriptive rights, laches, nor the statute of limitations is a defense against the maintenance of a public nuisance. In the case of Strong v. Sullivan, 180 Cal. 331, 334, 181 P. 59, 60, 4 A. L. R. 343, it is said: "No lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance and a prescriptive right cannot be maintained against a public nuisance." Nor may the maintenance of a public nuisance be defended on the ground of laches or the statute of limitations. Section 3490, Civ. Code; Cloverdale v. Smith, 128 Cal. 230, 60 P. 851; Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 91, 25 P. 258; 46 C. J. 751, § 349; Bowen v. Wendt, 103 Cal. 236, 37 P. 149; City of Santa Ana v. Santa Ana Valley Irr. Co., 163 Cal. 211, 124 P. 847; Pennsylvania Ry. Co. v. Sagamore Coal Co., 281 Pa. 233, 126 A. 386, 39 A. L. R. 882. The foregoing rule respecting the defense based upon the grounds of prescriptive rights, laches, or the statute of limitations is equally applicable even though the defendants may have enjoyed these rights before the city of Turlock was incorporated. Prescriptive rights to the use of water in an open irrigation ditch extending through the boundaries of a city must be enjoyed with due regard and subject to the superior regulatory rights of the municipality to protect its citizens against the maintenance of a public nuisance.

[11] A trial by jury was properly denied. The issues of this cause were all equitable, involving injunctive relief only. The defendants were therefore not entitled to a jury trial. 15 Cal. Jur. 342; 1 Wood on Nuisances (3d Ed.) p. 45, § 22; People v. McCaddon, 48 Cal. App. 790, 192 P. 325, 326. In Wood's text on Nuisances, supra, the author says: "As to what constitutes a nuisance, as well as the question of convenience, are questions to be determined by the court, not by a jury; also (the question as to) whether the facts, if proved in a given case under all the circumstances, produce such result as amounts to a nuisance." In the case of People v. McCaddon, supra, which was a suit to abate a public nuisance, the court said: "This being an action for an injunction, neither the Constitution nor the statute requires the submission of the issues to a jury. It is not error to deny a jury in any case where such right was not granted at common law." In McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge Mill Co., 144 Cal. 542, 545, 78 P. 7, 8, it is said: "The prevention or abatement of a nuisance is to be accomplished by means of an injunction either prohibitive or mandatory, and an action therefor is within the equitable jurisdiction of the court, and is to be governed by the principles prevailing in that jurisdiction. Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 P. 655, 1 Am. St. Rep. 51; Richardson v. City of Eureka, 110 Cal. 441, 42 P. 965. The Constitution does not give to a party the right to have the issues in such action tried by a jury, nor is the action within those in which the Legislature has authorized a jury trial."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 647

A. H. BUSCH CO. v. STRAUSS et al.*
(Civ. 3971.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 31, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1930.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨237—On appeal by landlord from judgment awarding rent until premises were vacated, absence of notice to quit was sufficient ground for affirmance.

In an action for rent, it appeared that landlord had served his tenant with copy of a notice to pay rent or quit, which was claimed to have been served upon a sublessee in possession. Held, on landlord's appeal from judgment awarding him rent until surrender of premises, but denying him rent thereafter, failure to include in record the notice served on sublessee was sufficient reason for affirming judgment.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨94(3)—Notice that landlord would institute action for unlawful detainer, unless rent were paid, clearly showed intention to terminate lease under statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1174).

Where landlord, after default in payment of rent, served both the tenant and his sublessee with notice, which not only demanded payment of rent or surrender of premises, but also threatened proceeding for unlawful detainer, contention that notice was not intended to terminate lease could not be sustained, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, which provides that, in action for unlawful detainer, after default in payment of rent, a judgment in favor of landlord shall declare that lease is forfeited.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by the A. H. Busch Company against M. N. Strauss and another. From a judgment granting partial relief to plaintiff, he appeals; the defendant named being respondent therein. Affirmed.

Young & Young, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sam Wolf, of Los Angeles (Leo Shapiro, of Venice, of counsel), for respondent.

Harry M. Irwin, of Los Angeles, for defendant Connally.

FINCH, P. J. While in possession of one of the rooms of a building as the plaintiff's tenant, the defendant Strauss sublet the room, with the plaintiff's consent, to the defendant Connally. Thereafter, on January 13, 1925, the plaintiff served upon Strauss a notice reading as follows:

"Enclosed you will find copy of notice to pay rent or quit, served upon Mr. W. W. Connally, who was the last party to occupy 650 So. Vermont avenue. I am sending you this notice to call the matter to your attention inasmuch as you, by virtue of the consent to sublet which you and Mr. Connally signed, are jointly liable under the obligations of the lease. If we do not receive either from you or from Mr. Connally or both of you, the $400 which is now due in unpaid rental, we will be obliged to immediately proceed as per last paragraph of the notice."

[1] The record does not contain a copy of the notice served upon Connally. Since error is not to be presumed, the failure to include such notice in the record is a sufficient reason to warrant the affirmance of the judgment. The respondent, however, has printed in his brief what he states is a copy of a part of the omitted notice, dated January 9, 1925, which reads as follows:

"Now therefore, you will please take notice; that you are required to pay the said December, 1924, and January, 1925, installments of said rent, to-wit, the aggregate sum of four hundred ($400.00) dollars to the undersigned, or deliver up possession of said premises on or before three (3) days after the date of the service of this notice upon you. You are further notified that in the event you fail to make said payment or deliver up possession of said premises within the said three (3) day period, the undersigned will institute legal proceedings for unlawful detainer against you for the recovery of said premises and treble rents."

In response to the notice served upon Strauss, he caused the room to be vacated and turned over the keys to the plaintiff. A few days thereafter this action was commenced to recover the rents mentioned in the notice. February 13, 1926, the plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint for the additional sum of $2,600 as rents from February 1, 1925, to February 28, 1926. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for only the rents accrued at the time the premises were surrendered. The plaintiff has appealed. The lease contains the following clause:

"That in case of the violation by the lessee of any of the terms and conditions of this lease, the lessor may either terminate this lease without notice and take possession of the premises, or may enter and possess the premises as the agent of the lessee and for his account."

[2] Appellant contends that its notice served on Strauss was not given with the intention of terminating the lease, but that it intended to "enter and possess the premises as the agent of the lessee and for his account." In support of this contention the appellant relies on Burke v. Norton, 42 Cal. App. 705, 184 P. 45, and Security Realty Co. v. Kost (Cal. App.) 274 P. 608. It appears that the notice served upon the lessee in each of those cases merely demanded payment of the unpaid rent or the surrender of possession of the premises, and did not indicate an intention to terminate the lease. In this case the notice expressly provides that, upon the lessee's failure to pay the rent demanded or to deliver possession, the lessor "will institute legal proceedings for unlawful detainer against you for the recovery of said premises and treble rents." This language clearly evinces an intention to terminate the lease, for section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, in an action for unlawful detainer, "if, upon the trial, * * * the finding of the court be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant judgment shall be entered for the restitution of the premises; and if the proceedings be for an unlawful detainer * * * after default in the payment of rent, the judgment shall also declare the forfeiture of such lease." The judgment entered herein is supported by Wickstrom v. McGrath, 86 Cal. App. 651, 261 P. 326, and Costello v. Martin Brothers, 74 Cal. App. 782, 241 P. 588.

Appellant argues no other grounds for a reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: R. L. THOMPSON, J.; PLUMMER, J.

=====

COHN et al. v. KLEIN et al. (Civ. 102.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Feb. 6, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 3, 1930. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court April 7, 1930.

1. Pleading ⇨125—In action to quiet title, answer need not deny allegation of possession (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

In action to quiet title brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, and not under Civ. Code, §§ 3412 and 3413, there is no necessity of denying allegation of possession contained in complaint, as matters of possession need not be alleged.

2. Quieting title ⇨43—Controlling issue in action to quiet title is as to ownership of property.

Particular and controlling issue in action to quiet title is as to ownership of property in controversy.

3. Quieting title ⇨43—Denial of allegation that plaintiff is owner is sufficient to put question of title in issue.

Denial in answer of an allegation in complaint that plaintiff is owner of particular land is sufficient to put in issue question of title.

4. Quieting title ⇨43—Complaint alleging that plaintiff's deceased was owner, and answer alleging that deceased had conveyed property, held to put question of ownership in issue.

Complaint, in action to quiet title, alleging that plaintiff's deceased was owner of certain property at his death, and answer alleging that deceased conveyed property to defendant during his lifetime, held to put question of ownership in issue.

5. Quieting title ⇨10(1)—Plaintiff, in action to quiet title, must prevail, if at all, on his own title, and not weakness of opponent's claims.

Plaintiff, in action to quiet title, must prevail, if at all, on strength of his own title, rather than on weakness in claims of his opponent.

6. Quieting title ⇨37(1)—Defendants' denial of allegations of ownership raised issue which should have been heard on merits, even if instrument relied on by defendants did not constitute deed.

In action to quiet title, defendants' denial of allegations in complaint raised an issue of ownership which should have been heard on merits, even if instrument under which defendants claimed did not constitute deed, since it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove his own title.

7. Pleading ⇨345(1)—Judgment on pleadings cannot be granted where answer raises an issue as to material allegations of complaint.

While judgment on pleadings may be appropriate remedy where no material issues are raised by complaint and answer, it cannot be granted where answer raises issue as to any of material allegations of complaint.

8. Pleading ⇨345(2)—Judgment cannot be rendered on pleadings, even though matter denied in one defense be admitted in another defense.

Defendant has right to plead inconsistent defenses, and, if one of them denies material allegations of complaint, judgment on pleadings cannot be rendered, even though matter thus denied may be admitted in another defense.

9. Pleading ⇨345(1)—Defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings held properly denied where answer set up affirmative allegations as to new matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 462).

Defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings held properly denied where answer set up affirmative allegations as to new matter which were, under Code Civ. Proc. § 462, deemed to be denied by plaintiffs.

10. Pleading ⇨345(1)—In action for cancellation of instrument under statute, plaintiffs would not be entitled to judgment on pleadings (Civ. Code §§ 3412, 3413).

If action be considered as one under Civ. Code §§ 3412 and 3413, to cancel instrument which defendants claimed to be deed rather than under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, to quiet title, plaintiffs would not be entitled to judgment on pleadings, since holding that instrument was invalid on its face necessary to such judgment would conclusively show no cause of action was alleged under such section.

11. Pleading ⇨345(1)—Judgment for defendants on pleadings would not be justified merely because validity of deed under which defendants claimed appeared on its face (Civ. Code §§ 3412, 3413).

In action under Civ. Code, §§ 3412 and 3413, to cancel instrument, judgment for defendants on pleadings would not be justified merely because validity of deed under which defendants claimed appeared on face of instrument.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by Levi Cohn and another, special administrators of the estate of Charles Cohn, deceased, against E. A. Klein and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs on pleadings, and an order denying defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings, defendants appeal. Reversed, and order denying defendants' motion on pleadings affirmed.

Emmons, Aldrich & Mack, of Bakersfield, and W. W. Kaye and Bruns & Mooney, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, for respondents.

BARNARD, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, on the pleadings. The complaint was filed by the plaintiffs, as special administrators of the estate of Charles Cohn, deceased. It alleges that the said Charles Cohn died on June 22, 1926, and that, at the time of his death, "the said Charles Cohn was the owner in fee and entitled to the possession and in possession of that certain property, situate in the City of Bakersfield, County of Kern, State of California, and commonly known as the Midland Hotel on 19th Street in said city, including the building and the lot or parcel of land upon which said building stands, and was also the owner in fee and entitled to the possession and in possession of that certain property in the City of Bakersfield, County of Kern, State of California, located on 19th Street and commonly known as the Vernon Hotel, including the building and the parcel of land upon which said building stands." It then alleges that on June 25, 1926, one of the defendants caused to be recorded in the county of Kern a certain written instrument, dated August 2, 1926, a copy of which is set out in full in the complaint. This instrument, although in the form of an agreement between the said Cohn and one of the defendants, purports to convey the properties in question to the other defendant herein, the same to take effect upon the death of Cohn. It is then alleged that the defendants have no interest in the real property involved, other than such as arises by and through the said instrument. It is further alleged that the defendants have served notice upon the tenants on the properties involved, claiming and asserting themselves to be the owners of said properties.

The amended answer contains the following: "Said defendants deny that at the time of the death of Charles Cohn as alleged in paragraph two of the complaint, he was the owner in fee or otherwise or at all of either the Midland Hotel as described in said complaint or the Vernon Hotel as described in said complaint or of the buildings or either of them, or the lots or parcels of land upon which said hotels or either of them then stood and now stand or any of the said property."

There is also included a further special defense and counterclaim, in which the instrument mentioned in the plaintiffs' complaint is set out in full, and the same is alleged to be a deed, with allegations that the same was delivered to one of the defendants during the lifetime of the said Charles Cohn, and that the plaintiffs are wrongfully withholding from the defendants the possession of said properties. There is then set forth another separate affirmative defense, practically to the same effect, but with slightly different averments in regard to the delivery of the instrument in question.

The trial court granted the plaintiffs' motion for a judgment upon the pleadings, and the defendants have appealed. Apparently the trial court was of the opinion that the instrument in question showed upon its face that it was not a deed, and therefore concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment on the pleadings. Respondents in their brief present the argument thus: "Here the complaint alleges and the amended answer accepts and asserts that the sole claim of defendants is under the instrument in dispute. The instrument is fully before the court in both pleadings, and if, as respondents claim, it bears upon its face the incontrovertible evidence of its complete invalidity, respondents were entitled to judgment on the pleadings, unhampered by any general rule of pleading." As the court said in Patchett v. Webber, 198 Cal. at page 451, 245 P. 422, 426: "The difficulty with respondents' position on this phase of the case is that they have overlooked the well-known rule that in actions of this nature a party must prevail upon the strength of his own title and not upon the weakness of another's."

[1-5] This action was apparently not brought under sections 3412 and 3413 of the Civil Code, as it is based, and the motion under consideration was made and granted, upon the theory that the instrument, a copy of which is set up in the complaint, is void upon its face. We take it, the action is one under the provisions of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, as such, is subject to the usual rules of quiet title actions. While it is true that the allegation in the complaint as to the possession of the property is not denied in the answer, it is also true that the matter of possession need not be alleged. Hyatt v. Colkins, 174 Cal. 580, 163 P. 1007; Davis v. Crump, 162 Cal. 513, 123 P. 294. This being true, there was no necessity for denying that allegation. The particular and controlling issue in an action to quiet title is as to the ownership of the property in controversy. Flood v. Templeton, 152 Cal. 148, 92 P. 78, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579. It has been held that a denial in the answer of an allegation in the complaint that a plaintiff is the owner of particular land is sufficient to put in issue the question of title. Casci v. Ozalli, 158 Cal. 282, 110 P. 932; Peterson v. Plunkett, 4 Cal. App. 302, 88 P. 283. The issue as to plaintiffs' ownership of the premises here involved was directly raised by those portions of the complaint and the amended answer, which are above quoted. The issue having been thus raised, the general rule of law that a plaintiff in a quiet title suit must prevail, if at all, on the strength of his own title, rather than on any weakness in the claims of his opponent, must prevail. Rocky v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712; Patchett v. Webber, supra; Biaggi v. Mainero, 60 Cal. App. 608, 213 P. 541. In Williams v. City of San Pedro, etc., Co., 153 Cal. at page 49, 94 P. 234, 236, the court said:

"It is elementary that a plaintiff in an action to quiet title cannot prevail unless he shows title in himself. If he has no title he cannot complain that some one else, also without title, asserts an interest in the land. Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 22 P. 398; United Land Ass'n, etc., v. Pac. Imp. Co., 139 Cal. 370, 69 P. 1064, 72 P. 988; City of San Diego v. Allison, 46 Cal. 162; City and County of San Francisco v. Ellis, 54 Cal. 72; Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 22 Am. St. Rep. 243, 25 P. 407; Heney v. Posoli, 109 Cal. 58, 41 P. 819; McGrath v. Wallace, 116 Cal. 551, 48 P. 719; McKenzie v. Budd, 125 Cal. 602, 58 P. 199; Schroder v. Aden G. M. Co., 144 Cal. 630, 78 P. 20. A defendant in such an action may always effectually resist a decree against himself, by showing simply that the plaintiff is without title."

[6] In the instant case, defendants had a right to attack the plaintiffs' title to the real property involved, irrespective of whether or not the instrument, which seems to be the principal ground of controversy, was, in fact, a valid deed, or not. Under defendants' denial of the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint that the said Charles Cohn was the owner in fee of the property many other defenses were available to the defendants other than their reliance upon the instrument in question. If it be assumed that the instrument in question did not constitute a deed, and that the defendants' claims under said instrument were worthless, it was still incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove his own title, and, this having been flatly denied in the answer, an issue was raised which should have been heard on its merits.

[7, 8] While a judgment on the pleadings may be an appropriate remedy where no material issues are raised by the complaint and the answer, it cannot be granted where the answer raises an issue as to any of the material allegations of the complaint. Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 358, 163 P. 212, 213; Neale v. Morrow, 174 Cal. 49, 161 P. 1165. Nor is the rule any different where, as here, the two separate defenses relate more particularly to the instrument set forth in both the complaint and the separate defenses in the answer. These separate defenses merely set up additional matters, other than the previous denial of the plaintiffs' title. In any event, as is stated in Cass v. Rochester, supra:

"* * * A defendant has the right to plead inconsistent defenses, and, if one of them denies material allegations of the complaint, judgment cannot be rendered on the pleadings, even though the matter thus denied may be admitted in another defense. Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39; Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 332, 7 P. 753."

[9] The defendants also filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which was denied by the court, and an appeal is also taken from that order. It is a sufficient answer to this portion of the appeal to call attention to the fact that the answer of the defendants sets up affirmative allegations as to new matter, including the allegation that the instrument in question is a deed, that it was delivered by the said Charles Cohn, in his lifetime, to the said Ethel Klein, and that it was delivered with the intent that it take effect immediately. All of these allegations, and others, under section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure, are deemed to be denied by the plaintiffs. Assuming the instrument in question to have been a valid deed, upon its face, such defenses as fraud, undue influence, incompetency, and the like, were available to the plaintiffs, and it is possible that some such defense might have successfully prevailed against a deed that was otherwise valid.

[10, 11] If this action be considered as one under sections 3412 and 3413 of the Civil Code, rather than under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the result is the same. In that event, a holding that the instrument was invalid upon its face, necessary for a judgment for the plaintiffs on the pleadings, would conclusively show no cause of action was alleged, under these two sections. Nor would a judgment for the defendants, on the pleadings, be justified, merely because the validity of the deed appeared upon the face of the instrument, for the reasons above stated.

We cannot escape the conclusion that there were issues here that required a hearing on the merits, and that the judgment on the pleadings in favor of the plaintiffs, was improperly entered. It therefore becomes unnecessary to take up the other questions raised. The order granting plaintiffs' motion for a judgment on the pleadings is reversed, and the order denying defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings is affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 621

WORSLEY v. SEELIG et al. (Civ. 6342.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Jan. 31, 1930.

Usury $\Rightarrow$ 78—Interest on usurious loan was forfeited under statute, but remainder of contract was valid.

Where beneficiary of deed of trust upon real property sought to enjoin trustee under another deed of trust upon same property from selling under the latter deed which was alleged to be usurious, judgment enjoining trustee from selling for amount in excess of principal and expenses of sale was proper, since under usury law the whole contract was not void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by E. R. Worsley against Harry B. Seeling and others. From a portion of a judgment for plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Milton M. Cohen and Jerome H. Kann, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, Justice pro tem. As stated in plaintiff's notice of appeal, this appeal is only "from that portion of the judgment heretofore rendered and entered in the above-entitled action enjoining the defendant Title Insurance and Trust Company from selling the property described in the complaint on file herein under the trust deed referred to in the said complaint, upon any notice or proceeding wherein the amount stated to be in default or the amount for which said property is to be sold is in excess of $2,325.00."

The complaint alleges: That plaintiff is the beneficiary under a deed of trust upon certain real property; that defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee under another deed of trust upon the same real property, has given notice of sale under the latter trust deed, and, unless enjoined, will make such sale; that said latter trust deed was given upon a loan purporting to be of $3,500, but in fact of only $1,800, and that the loan was usurious, and prays that the note and deed of trust be adjudged to be void, or, alternatively, that they be adjudged "void as to any stipulation therein contained to pay interest and further void as to any stipulation to pay any sum in excess of $1,800.00 and that it be determined that plaintiff's trust deed is a prior security to said trust deed to the Title Insurance and Trust Company," and that defendants be enjoined from any sale thereunder. Before trial plaintiff became the owner of said real property as purchaser at a sale under his deed of trust, and thereupon filed a supplemental complaint asking that his title be quieted as against all defendants.

The court found that "the loan was in the sum of $3500.00, which thereafter was reduced to $2325.00 and no more, and that the rate of interest exceeded the rate of $12.00 upon $100.00 for one year and therefore the said agreement for the payment of interest contravenes the usury law of the state of California." By its judgment the court permanently enjoined said Title Insurance & Trust Company from selling the real property under said deed of trust for an indebtedness in excess of the unpaid principal of $2,325 and expenses of sale. The appeal was on the judgment roll, hence the evidence is not before us.

The appeal was taken on February 7, 1927. Thereafter, on March 4, 1927, the Supreme Court of this state, in the case of Haines v. Commercial Mortgage Company, 200 Cal. 609, 622, 255 P. 805, 806, 53 A. L. R. 725, said: "Even a casual reading of the statute itself shows that the legislative intent was not to declare the whole contract void, but only the portion thereof relating to interest." That the principal is not forfeited by a usurious loan was again declared by the Supreme Court in Curtis v. Thaxter, 204 Cal. 439, 268 P. 630.

The forfeiture of interest and the allowance of sale for the principal were therefore proper adjudications.

Appellant contends that the findings of fact do not support the judgment, and that the judgment does not dispose of all of the issues in the case. In this connection appellant advances several propositions which we need not discuss, for the reason that the appeal is from only that portion of the judgment as fully set forth at the beginning of this decision. The findings are incomplete in many particulars, but, when considered with the admissions of the pleadings, are sufficient to support "that portion of the judgment" appealed from.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

MADERA CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. K. ARAKELIAN, Inc., et al. (Civ. 3842.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨931(1)—For purpose of supporting judgment, every intendment should be resolved in favor of findings.

For the purpose of supporting the judgment, every intendment should be resolved in favor of the findings.

2. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Bare finding that decree reduced quantity of water to which defendant sued for water rental was entitled means that water called for by contract was furnished.

Where court found that decree reduced quantity of water to which defendant sued for contract price of water furnished for irrigation purposes was entitled under contract, and court did not find that that amount was not in fact furnished to defendant in each season, finding held to mean that, while by virtue of injunction as basis for decree defendant was not entitled thereto, yet in fulfillment of covenants of agreement plaintiff actually did supply water which contract called for.

3. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Under contract providing that, if water in irrigation company's canals should be less than certain amount, landowners should be entitled to proportionate quantity, company fulfilled covenant by supplying amount decree found landowners entitled to.

Under contract for furnishing of irrigation water providing that, if at any time aggregate quantity of water in canal should fall short of 250 feet flowing per second, then landowners shall be entitled to only relative quantity which their stipulated amount bears to total amount contained in canal, irrigation company performed covenant respecting quantity of water to which defendant sued for price was entitled by delivering to defendant that amount of water which decree of former action found defendant was entitled to, since rights of water consumer are measured by terms of contract.

4. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Landowner's refusal to accept water justified failure of irrigation company to deliver it that season (Civ. Code, § 1511, subd. 1).

Where contract between irrigation company and landowner provided that water for irrigation purposes should be furnished each year, refusal of landowner to accept water for one of years in term was sufficient justification for failure of irrigation company to deliver water in that season under Civ. Code, § 1511, subd. 1.

5. Waters and water courses ⇨254—Under contract conditioning water rate on supplying specified quantity of water, failure to furnish water during year relieved consumer from paying rental for season.

Where contract between irrigation company and landowner specifically provided that company should not be responsible for deficiency of water caused by drought, insufficient water in river, etc., and under which stipulated water rate was conditioned on supplying land with specified quantity of water each year, total failure of irrigation company to furnish water during entire year relieved landowner consumer from obligation to pay water rental for that season.

6. Vendor and purchaser ⇨228(7)—Under recorded contract creating lien for irrigation water, lien was binding on land in hands of subsequent grantee (Civ. Code, §§ 2872, 2881, 2890).

Where contract between irrigation company and landowners specifically created lien on land for payment of charges for water furnished for irrigation purposes, purchaser of land had constructive notice of lien, where contract was duly recorded so that lien was binding on land in hands of subsequent grantee with notice thereof, and could be enforced by foreclosure with same effect under Civ. Code, §§ 2872, 2881, 2890, as though title had not been transferred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Madera Canal & Irrigation Company against K. Arakelian Inc., and others, in which the named defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, the named defendant appeals. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

See, also, 279 P. 201.

Lindsay & Gearhart, of Fresno, for appellant.

Walter C. Maloy, of Covina, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the contract price of water furnished for irrigation purposes, together with a decree foreclosing a lien for the security thereof. The appeal is based upon the judgment roll alone, and a reversal is sought upon the grounds that the findings are inconsistent, and that they do not support the judgment.

The plaintiff is a corporation engaged in supplying water for irrigation purposes. The defendant is also a corporation engaged in an agricultural enterprise. October 27, 1890, the German Savings & Loan Society, a corporation, was the owner of 960 acres of farm land in Madera county. On the last-mentioned date the savings and loan society entered into a written contract with the plaintiff, which was duly recorded, to supply said land for a term of 38 years during each season until 1938, with "all the water that may be required by the said party of the second part (Savings and Loan Society) not exceeding at any time six cubic feet per second," in consideration of $2,000, which was paid, and $1 per acre payable on the 1st day of September of each year during the term of the contract. It was also provided that this water service was appurtenant to and transferable with the land. The contract also provided that: "The party of the first part shall not be responsible for a deficiency of water caused by drought, insufficient water in the river, * * *" etc., that the first party was authorized to sell and supply water for the use of 40,000 acres of farm lands, aggregating 250 cubic feet per second, and that, "If at any time the aggregate quantity of water in its canals shall fall short of 250 feet flowing per second, then each water right shall represent the 250th part of said aggregate quantity and the party of the second part shall be entitled to receive water in that proportion." Finally, the contract created a lien upon the land for the security of said water rate.

On January 2, 1923, the defendant acquired title to 320 acres of said 960-acre tract of land, together with the water rights appurtenant thereto, consisting of two cubic feet per second, subject to the terms and conditions of said contract. Upon trial the court adopted the entire contract as a part of its findings which was adjudged to be valid and binding. It was further found that the plaintiff had supplied said land with water pursuant to said contract for each season from 1911 to 1924, inclusive, except that by reason of an injunction duly issued in an action in the superior court of Madera county in 1916 the plaintiff's sole available water supply from the Fresno river was permanently reduced from 250 cubic feet per second to 200 cubic feet per second, and in the season of 1924, by virtue of a drought which prevailed, the plaintiff was without any water with which to fulfill the contract. It was then found there was due and owing from the defendant the principal sum of $1,503.53 and interest, amounting to $533.71, for which sum judgment was rendered, together with $400 attorneys' fees, which were provided for by the contract. A lien was adjudged against the land to secure the payment of these sums, and a sale was ordered to satisfy the judgment.

The appellant contends that the findings are inconsistent with respect to the performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiff, and that the findings adopt facts which are insufficient to excuse the failure on the part of the plaintiff to furnish the appellant's land with the full amount of 2 cubic feet of water per second each year, as provided by the contract.

It is asserted that the following findings of the court are conflicting and irreconcilable. In the language of the complaint the court first found: "That plaintiff and cross-defendant has at all times duly done, kept and performed each and all and every one of its covenants in said water right contract contained." The court further found that on January 31, 1916, a judgment was duly entered in an action in the superior court of Madera county in which this plaintiff was a party defendant, restraining this plaintiff from diverting from the Fresno river, which was its sole source of water supply, more than 200 cubic feet of water per second, and that the decree in that case reduced the quantity of water to which the defendant was entitled under the contract from 2 cubic feet to 1% cubic feet per second. The court, however, did not find that 2 cubic feet of water per second was not in fact furnished to the defendant each season. It was further found that in 1923 the plaintiff offered to deliver water to the defendant pursuant to the contract which it refused to accept. It was further found: "That in the year 1923 no demand was made by said cross-complainant for water under the said water right contract or at all for the said lands; that in the year 1924, by reason of drought and insufficiency of water in the river and in the canals of plaintiff and cross-defendant, said plaintiff and cross-defendant was prevented from delivering any water to said lands of defendant and cross-complainant, by reason of the said drought, and that no demand was made at any time in said year 1924 for water to be delivered under said contract by said defendant and cross-complainant upon plaintiff and cross-defendant."

[1-3] There is no inconsistency between the general finding that the plaintiff fully performed the covenants of the contract on its part and the finding with relation to the injunction which was issued in the former action restraining the plaintiff from diverting more than 200 cubic feet of water from the Fresno river or the further finding that, as a result of that injunction, the water rights of the defendant in this case were thereby reduced 20 per cent. from the maximum amount specified by the contract. For the purpose of supporting the judgment, every intendment should be resolved in favor of the findings. Applying this rule of construction, the findings may reasonably be held to mean that while, by virtue of the injunction, the defendant was not entitled to more than 1% cubic feet of water per second, yet in fulfillment of the covenants of the agreement (assuming that the contract required that amount) the plaintiff actually did supply 2 cubic feet of water per second. Moreover, the contract which was attached to the complaint as an exhibit, and found to be valid and binding, specifically provided that the quantity of water to which defendant was entitled was determined by the ratio which defendant's 320-acre tract of land bore to the entire 40,000 acres which the plaintiff was authorized to supply. Otherwise expressed, the defendant's portion was to be determined by the ratio which 2 cubic feet of water bears to the aggregate quantity of 250 cubic feet per second. The contract provides that, "if at any time the aggregate quantity of water in its canals shall fall short of two hundred and fifty feet flowing per second," then the land-owners shall be entitled to only the relative quantity which their stipulated amount bears to the total amount contained in plaintiff's canals. Under this provision, we are of the opinion the plaintiff fully performed the covenant respecting the quantity of water to which the defendant is entitled by delivering to it 1½ cubic feet per second. The rights of a water consumer are measured by the terms of his contract. When a water company enters into a contract to furnish water to a consumer for irrigation purposes, the extent of the legal claims of the consumer is limited by the terms of his contract. He acquires only such rights as he bargains for. 3 Kinney on Irrigation and Water Rights (2d Ed.) 2727, § 1514.

[4] The further contention of the appellant that the findings which excuse the plaintiff for failure to supply water for the season of 1923 is without support in the record is equally devoid of merit. Regarding the furnishing of water for 1923, the court found: "In the year 1923, and on or about the 12th day of March * * * and (also) on or about the 12th day of April in said year, plaintiff * * * offered to deliver water to said land as provided in said contract, but that defendant and cross-complainant refused to receive the same." This refusal to accept water for the year 1923 was a sufficient justification for the failure to deliver it that season. Section 1511, subd. 1, Civ. Code.

Respecting the plaintiff's failure to supply the defendant's land with water during the season of 1924, the court found: "In the year 1924, by reason of drought and insufficiency of water in the river and in the canals of plaintiff * * * (the) plaintiff * * * was prevented from delivering any water to said lands. * * *"

[5] While the contract specifically provides that the plaintiff "shall not be responsible for a deficiency of water caused by drought, insufficient water in the river," etc., it does not seem reasonable to hold this means the consumer must, nevertheless, pay for water which he did not receive. The foregoing cause certainly does relieve the plaintiff from a claim of damages for nonperformance of the contract on account of drought. The failure to supply water on account of drought would furnish no ground for rescission of the contract. This clause clearly relieves the plaintiff from liability for damage to crops resulting from drought or other cause over which it has no control. 15 R. C. L. 481, § 34. There is, however, a clear distinction between relieving the plaintiff from the legal responsibility of a failure to supply water for irrigation purposes and the imposition of a liability on the part of the defendant to pay for what he did not receive. It is true that the contract provided that, when the plaintiff delivered the supply of water in its main canal at the gate communicating with the lateral ditches which were constructed by the defendant on its land, the "annual water rate of one dollar per year for each acre of said land * * * shall become permanent." But this stipulated water rate was conditioned upon supplying the land with a specified quantity of water each year. By reason of the drought, there was a total failure of consideration for the annual water rate for that season. May it reasonably be said that under the terms of this contract the defendant was bound to pay an annual water rate of $1 per acre for 38 years, even though for a series of years, on account of drought, he obtained no water whatever? To use an extreme illustration, may it be said that even though the entire source of supply were permanently destroyed by drought or other cause over which the plaintiff had no control, the consumer would still be required to pay the annual water rate throughout the entire term? We think not. Since the contract may be segregated into uniform annual periods, during which reciprocal obligations are created to supply a specified quantity of water on the one hand, and to pay a definite amount thereof upon the other hand, a total failure to furnish water during an entire year should relieve the consumer from the obligation to pay for what he did not receive. The ground of this release from liability is the failure of consideration.

We are therefore of the opinion that the judgment should be modified to the extent of disallowing the water tax for the year 1924, together with the interest thereon.

[6] There is no merit in the contention of appellant that his land was not liable for the unpaid water charges which accrued prior to the date upon which it acquired the title thereto. The contract specifically created a lien upon this land to secure the payment of these charges. The purchaser of the land had constructive notice of this lien, for the contract was duly recorded. A lien is a charge imposed upon the property to secure the fulfillment of an obligation. Section 2872, Civ. Code. Such a lien may be created by contract (section 2881, Civ. Code), but imposes no personal obligation to perform the act for which the lien is a security (section 2890, Civ. Code). The lien, however, is binding upon the land in the hands of a subsequent grantee, with notice thereof, and may be enforced by foreclosure with the same effect as though the title had not been transferred. Fresno Canal Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 22 P. 53, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112; 3 Kinney on Irrigation and Water Rights (2d Ed.) 2728, § 1515.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the water rate for the year 1924, in the sum of $320 and interest on said sum from the 1st day of September, 1924. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed, respondent to recover its costs on appeal.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 735

SMITH v. CALLEY et al. (Civ. 97.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Feb. 5, 1930.

1. Damages $\S$ 188(1)—Evidence which merely showed cost of automobile, that it was wrecked, and thereafter sold for junk, held insufficient to support finding of damages (Civ. Code, $\S$ 3333).

Evidence which merely showed cost of automobile, that plaintiff had had it five or six months, and that after accident it was "a complete wreck," and plaintiff sold it for junk, held insufficient to support finding as to amount of damage, under Civ. Code $\S$ 3333, making measure of damages for destruction of personal property the value of the property destroyed.

2. Damages $\S$ 113—Detriment caused by injury to personal property is difference in value before and after injury, unless repairs can be effected for smaller sum (Civ. Code $\S$ 3333).

Under Civ. Code $\S$ 3333, making measure of damages for destruction of personal property the value of the property destroyed, detriment caused by injury to property is difference in value immediately before and after the injury, provided that, if repairs can be effected for smaller sum, that sum becomes the limit of recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by Roy Smith against Elaxazer Calley and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Emmons, Aldrich & Mack, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

George M. Cook, of Taft, for respondent.

MARKS, J. Respondent instituted this action in the court below to recover a judgment for damages resulting from a collision between his automobile, driven by himself, and a motor truck, driven by Elaxazer Calley for the Maricopa Creamery and A. C. Ross, who were its owners. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of respondent, which, according to the findings, was composed of the following items: $528.40, as damages to respondent's automobile; $51.60, for loss of wages; and $20, expended for medical attendance and nursing.

Appellants complain that there is no evidence to support the finding that the automobile was damaged to the extent of $528.40.

The only evidence in the record on this point was given by respondent as follows:

"Q. What did you pay for the Dodge car? A. The car cost me $1184.00 complete.

"Q. Did you buy it new? A. Yes.

"Q. How long had you had it at the time of the impact? A. Five or six months.

"Q. What did you do with it after the wreck? A. I sold it for junk.

"Q. You sold it for junk? A. Yes.

"Q. What did you get for it?

"Mr. Emmons: We object to that as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial.

"Mr. Cook: To show the value of the car.

"Mr. Emmons: They have alleged the elements of damage, and they are limited to proving damages as alleged in their complaint.

"Mr. Cook (after argument): Withdraw the question.

"Q. What damage, if any, occurred to your car from the impact? A. It was a complete wreck.

"Mr. Emmons: Move to strike out the answer as being the conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Cook: Q. What do you mean by 'a complete wreck'? A. The motor was busted open; the frame of it 'shot'; the radiator 'shot' to pieces; the body of the car wasn't injured so much, only the dash—the motor was shoved back into the dash. I would like to have looked at it close at that time, but I couldn't stand up.

"Mr. Emmons: Move to strike out the last statement as not responsive.

"The Court: It may go out.

"Mr. Cook: Yes, that may go out.

"Q. After the injury, did you consult anybody to get an estimate as to what it would cost to repair the damage done? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Emmons: Object to that as hearsay.

"The Court: Put the other fellow on the stand and prove that by him.

"Mr. Cook: As a matter of fact, you allege in the complete—you allege it was a complete wreck; is that correct?

"Mr. Emmons: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial; what the pleadings allege is shown by the pleadings themselves, but that is not evidence; he alleges special damage in the sum of $714.40.

"Mr. Cook: That is all the damage we are asking for.

"Mr. Emmons: What are you trying to prove now, then?

"The Court: He has described pretty well what happened to the car."

[1, 2] The injury to the automobile of respondent was amply proven, but the measure of his financial loss following such injury is entirely lacking. The automobile had been driven by respondent several thousand miles, and its original cost to him was no measure of its value at the time of the accident. There is no evidence of the amount of money required to repair the injuries, if they could be repaired, nor the value of the car after the accident. That it was sold shows that it had some value. "Under section 3333 of the Civil Code, the measure of damages for the destruction of personal property is the value of the property destroyed. Its cost is not the standard, nor is money expended in replacing it. The detriment caused by the injury or partial destruction of personal property is the difference in value immediately before and after the injury, provided that if repairs can be effected for a smaller sum, that sum becomes the limit of recovery." 8 Cal. Jur., p. 814; Olds & Stoller, Inc., v. Seifert, 81 Cal. App. 423, 254 P. 289; Byrne v. Western Pipe & Steel Co., 81 Cal. App. 270, 253 P. 776; Menefee v. Raisch Imp. Co., 78 Cal. App. 785, 248 P. 1031. There is no evidence in the record to support the finding that respondent had been damaged in the sum of $528.40 by the injury to his automobile. No measure of the damages was furnished to the trial court.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; BARNARD, J.

103 Cal. App. 730

BARNES v. OSGOOD et al. (Civ. 5639.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1930.

1. Brokers ⇨49(1)—Vendor's definite refusal to comply with agreement to sell excused broker from tendering performance (Civ. Code, §§ 1440, 1511, 1512, 1515).

Where vendor's refusal to comply with his agreement to sell was definite and certain, broker of performance is excused by refusal in chaser and vendor face to face, as formal ten-advance to accept performance, under Civ. Code, §§ 1440, 1511, 1512, 1515.

2. Brokers ⇨49(1)—Broker's performance as to one co-owner was performance as to her co-obligor, where both had given broker exclusive right to sell (Civ. Code, §§ 1475, 1488).

Where co-owners as joint obligors gave broker exclusive right to sell property, broker's performance as to one was performance as to her co-obligor under Civ. Code, §§ 1475, 1488.

3. Brokers ⇨49(1)—Broker obtaining binding agreement to purchase from prospective purchaser for price and on terms specified by owners held entitled to commission.

Where broker secured from prospective purchaser valid and binding agreement to purchase for price and on terms specified by vendors in their listing agreement, broker held required to do nothing more to entitle him to commission.

4. Brokers ⇨63(1)—Broker who was to receive, as commission, price received above vendors' selling price, held entitled to commission, although vendors refused to complete sale.

Where broker's contract provided that broker was to receive as commission price received above vendors' selling price, broker held entitled to commission although vendors refused to complete sale, since, in absence of agreement to contrary, broker had performed his contract and was entitled to commission when he produced purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Raymond J. Barnes against Wendell J. Osgood and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John C. Miles, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Sheran, Alvord & Hearn and Thomas H. Hearn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. The appellants, who owned an equity in two lots in the city of Los Angeles, entered into a written listing agreement with the respondent whereby they granted to him "the exclusive and irrevocable right to sell the same" within the period of 45 days after February 14, 1925, "for $7000, and to accept a deposit thereon, cash 1027, balance as per contract—three payments 1991 each, interest and taxes to date of assignment to be paid by seller." (Italics ours.) The agreement further provided: "I hereby agree to pay said agent as commission price received above 7000 of the selling price." Within the time limit of this agreement the respondent interested one Cornitius in the property and secured from him a deposit of $100 and a written agreement to purchase the property "for the purchase price of eighty-two hundred dollars, payable as follows: $2287 cash (of which $100 is above acknowledged) and the balance as per contracts of purchase issued between the Security Trust & Savings Bank and E. May Eaton and Wendell Osgood; together with interest at the rate of 7% per annum, payable quarterly." (Italics ours.) The court found, and the appellants do not dispute the fact, that Cornitius was ready, willing, and able to purchase the land for the price and on the terms above outlined; nor do the latter contend that those terms differ from those specified in the listing agreement. Thereafter respondent, after several abortive efforts, finally succeeded in reaching appellant Osgood on the telephone and told him that he had a purchaser for the property and a deposit on the purchase price. Osgood stated that neither himself nor Miss Eaton wanted to sell the land, to which respondent replied: "I have it sold, you gave me an exclusive option on the property, and I have a purchaser and a check from him, he wants the property, ready to buy it and is able to buy it." Osgood's answer was, "Well, you are not going to get it." In a second conversation over the telephone, Osgood said to respondent, "You haven't made a tender on it yet," to which respondent answered that he would "come right down and make it." Osgood said he would be in his office "for the afternoon," but when respondent called there he was not in, and after waiting for him half an hour, calling at his home, and attempting to locate him by use of the telephone, all without success, respondent went to the home of Miss Eaton, who also stated that she and Osgood did not want to sell. A couple of days later respondent again called on Miss Eaton, accompanied by Cornitius, whom he introduced to her as the purchaser of the property, stating that they were there to close the deal. In reply to the question, "What was done about offering her the money?" respondent testified: "I took my pocketbook out and said, 'Miss Eaton, Mr. Cornitius is ready to buy the lot; I am here to pay you what you have got coming on the lot.'" Miss Eaton was, to quote respondent's testimony, "very antagonistic; she said, 'No, you are not going to steal that lot from me, you are not going to get it.'" She also said that Mr. Osgood "looked after all her business and that all transactions must be made through him." After vainly attempting to again communicate with the elusive Osgood, respondent brought this action for his commission and recovered the judgment from which this appeal is taken.

[1, 2] Appellants' first point is that "the plaintiff did not produce to the defendants, and particularly to the defendant Osgood, a purchaser ready, willing and able to purchase the property." It is not contended that Cornitius was not ready, able, and willing to purchase the property for the price and upon the terms specified by appellants in their listing agreement with respondent, but merely that respondent did not "produce" him. The foregoing review of the evidence is sufficient, without further comment, to demonstrate the utter lack of merit in this contention as applied to Miss Eaton. As to Osgood, it is apparent that he was deliberately avoiding respondent, and that for the latter to have brought the purchaser face to face with him would have been a vain act had respondent been able to perform it. His refusal to comply with his agreement to sell was definite and certain. The law does not require the performance of a vain act, and a formal tender of performance is excused by the refusal in advance of the party as to whom such performance should be made to accept the same. Civ. Code, secs. 1440, 1511, 1512, 1515; Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 77 P. 996; Scribner

v. Schenkel, 128 Cal. 250, 60 P. 860; Peardon v. Markley, 50 Cal. App. 257, 195 P. 70. Furthermore, the obligation of Osgood and Miss Eaton was a joint obligation, and performance as to her was performance as to her co-obligor. Sections 1475 and 1488, Civ. Code; Hoover v. Wolfe, 167 Cal. 337, 139 P. 794.

[3] But apart from the question as to physical production of the purchaser, and even if he had not been brought face to face with either of the defendants, the evidence establishes the fact that respondent did all that could be required of him to entitle him to the commission for which he was awarded judgment. There are three methods either one of which a licensed broker employed to sell real property may follow in order to entitle him to his commission. All of them require that he shall, within the life of his contract or any extension thereof, find a buyer who is ready, able, and willing to purchase the principal's property for the price and on the terms demanded by the latter. Having done this, he may either (1) obtain a valid and binding contract from the purchaser agreeing to buy for such price and on such terms, (2) bring the buyer and seller together and thus enable them to enter into a contract of sale, or (3) produce such purchaser who verbally accepts the seller's terms and offers to the latter to enter into a written contract embodying said terms and binding on both parties. Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542, 544; Meline Co. v. Kleinberger, 77 Cal. App. 193, 246 P. 136; Coulter v. Howard, 203 Cal. 17, 262 P. 751. The record before us shows, and the appellants do not otherwise contend, that respondent had secured from Cornitius a valid and binding agreement to purchase for the price and on the terms specified by appellants in their listing agreement. Having thus pursued the first of the three methods above set forth, he was required to do nothing more to entitle him to his commission.

[4] Appellants' other contention is that respondent "was entitled to a commission only out of the money received from the sale of the property, and inasmuch as no sale, was made and no money was received from said sale," he is entitled to no commission. The clause as to agent's commission in the agreement of employment does not bear out any such construction. In the absence of any agreement to the contrary, the broker has performed his contract and is entitled to his commission when he produces the purchaser by any of the three methods above outlined (Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 P. 1111), "regardless of whether a written contract is actually entered into [between buyer and seller] or whether the sale is ever consummated by the delivery of the property and the payment of the purchase price." Twogood v. Monnette, supra; Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 P. 1105; Merwin v. Shaf-ner, 31 Cal. App. 374, 160 P. 684. And this was held to be the case even where the agreement was to pay the commission on the sale "when the same is consummated." Purcell v. Firth, 175 Cal. 746, 167 P. 379, 380.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

MCGAFFEY CANNING CO., Inc., v. BANK OF AMERICA et al. (Civ. 7232.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 1, 1930.

Rehearing Granted March 3, 1930.

1. Attachment ⇨296—Third-party claim not being pleading, technical niceties in verification should not overshadow claimant's rights to possession of attached property (Code Civ. Proc. § 689).

Third-party claim to attached property not being a pleading, technical niceties, such as absence of phraseology used in verifying pleadings under Code Civ. Proc. § 689, should not overshadow claimant's rights to legal possession of property.

2. Attachment ⇨296—Affidavit stating facts, and sworn to before authorized officer, held sufficient third-party claim without phraseology for verifying pleadings; "verify"; "claim verified by his oath" (Code Civ. Proc. § 689).

Third-party claim to attached property in form of affidavit, setting out facts and sworn to before authorized officer, is a "claim verified by his oath" within Code Civ. Proc. § 689, and puts attaching creditor to his election to protect sheriff with sufficient indemnity bond or submit to release of property, without addition of phraseology used in verifying pleadings; "verify" meaning "to affirm under oath," "to testify or affirm formally or upon oath."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Verification; Verify.]

3. Attachment ⇨299—Sheriff and surety held not liable for conversion of property released to apparent pledgee after attachment creditor's refusal to furnish indemnity bond (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Third-party claim, averring loans by claimant to owner on security of attached property, which claimant held in pledge under warehouse receipts, issued and delivered to it before attachment, being sufficient to state apparent right to possession by claimant as pledgee, sheriff and surety on his bond were not liable to attachment creditor for conversion of property because of sheriff's withdrawal of keeper and release of property by warehouse company to claimant after creditor's refusal to furnish indemnity bond on grounds that there was no change of possession, required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to consummate pledge.

4. Trial ⇨165—Testimony conflicting with testimony supporting plaintiff's contention must be disregarded for purposes of nonsuit.

For purposes of nonsuit, testimony in conflict with testimony supporting plaintiff's contention must be disregarded.

5. Warehousemen ⇨15(3)—Delivery of warehouse receipt to one lending money on security of merchandise stored is equivalent to delivery of merchandise, but efficacy of pledgee's symbolio possession depends on pledgor's complete relinquishment of possession and control.

Delivery of warehouse receipt to one lending money on security of merchandise, actually delivered to warehouseman with actual and explicit change of possession, is legal equivalent of delivery of merchandise itself, but efficacy of such symbolio possession by pledgee depends on complete and actual, as distinguished from merely formal or colorable, relinquishment of possession and control by pledgor.

6. Warehousemen ⇨15(3)—Warehousing on pledgor's premises only far enough to get goods represented by documents is ineffective.

Warehousing on premises of owner proposing to pledge his merchandise is effective when done in obedience to legal requirements, but when done only far enough to get the goods represented by documents, without really storing them, such documents are but scraps of paper.

7. Warehousemen ⇨15(3)—Warehousing by pledgor without open, visible, unequivocal change of possession, manifested by substantial outward signs that his control of property has wholly ceased, is ineffective (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Warehousing, including "field warehousing," cannot be effectively conducted by pledgor without complying with Civ. Code § 3440, requiring open, visible, unequivocal change of possession, manifested by such substantial outward signs as to make it evident to world that his control has wholly ceased and that another has acquired and is openly exercising exclusive dominion over property; merely colorable or constructive change of possession being insufficient.

8. Pledges ⇨11—"Actual change of possession," required to validate pledge, means actually existing and truly and absolutely carried out (Civ. Code, § 3440).

"Actual change of possession," required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to validate pledge, means existing in fact and truly and absolutely carried out, as opposed to formal, potential, virtual, or theoretical change.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Actual and Continued Change of Possession.]

9. Pledges ⇨11—Actual change of possession validating pledge must be shown by particular facts and circumstances and usually determined by court or jury from all evidence (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Whether actual change of possession, required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to validate pledge, is shown, depends on facts and circumstances of each particular case, and must usually be de-terminated by court or jury after hearing evidence adduced on both sides.

10. Warehousemen ↪ 15(3)—Appointment of pledgor or his agent as warehouseman's custodian of goods must be considered on question of actual change of possession, though not conclusively ineffectual (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Appointment of owner of goods or one of his staff as warehouseman's custodian thereof must be carefully weighed, in connection with other facts in evidence, in determining whether there was actual change of possession, required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to validate pledge to holder of warehouse receipts, though not conclusively ineffectual.

11. Pledges ↪ 11—Pledgee of property in pledgor's field warehouse must so segregate and mark it as to indicate his possession to ordinarily prudent business men.

It is duty of pledgee so to segregate and mark property on pledgor's premises or in field warehouse as to indicate pledgee's possession thereof to business men of ordinary prudence dealing with pledgor in ordinary course of business on faith of such property.

12. Warehousemen ↪ 15(3)—Actual, open, visible, and unequivocal change of possession, validating pledge of attached goods to holder of warehouse receipts, held for jury (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Whether there was actual, open, visible, and unequivocal change of possession, required by Civ. Code, § 3440, to validate pledge of attached canned goods by canning company to bank by means of warehouse receipts, issued and delivered to bank before attachment, held for jury in attachment creditor's action against pledgee and warehouseman for conversion of goods.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by the McGaffey Canning Company, Incorporated, against the Bank of America and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Meserve, Mumper, Hughes & Robertson and Baldwin Robertson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James C. Hollingsworth, of Ventura, for respondents Robert E. Clark and National Surety Co.

Frank M. Bering, of Los Angeles, for respondents Bank of America and Lawrence Warehouse Co.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This action, begun in Los Angeles county and afterwards transferred for trial to Ventura county, sounds in conversion. A jury was impaneled for the trial of the case; but the court having granted a motion for a nonsuit, the plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon entered in favor of defendants.

This action is a sequel to an action brought by the same plaintiff in Los Angeles county against William F. Gasman, in which judgment for $10,240 went in favor of plaintiff on May 2, 1924. In that action plaintiff had caused a writ of attachment to issue on August 20, 1923, to the sheriff of Ventura county. The writ was accompanied by instructions to attach certain canned goods in a canning establishment located at Camarillo, in Ventura county, and operated in the name of the Ventura County Canning Company, a co-partnership composed of Gasman and two others, William Heck and W. A. Clarke.

Acting under the writ, the sheriff levied upon 12,000 cases of canned apricots, valued at about $30,000, also upon other personal property, and placed a keeper in charge. Thereupon a third-party claim was made by the Bank of America through its vice president. In the claim the bank averred that it had made certain loans to the Ventura County Canning Company on the security of the attached property, which it held in pledge by virtue of warehouse receipts issued by the Lawrence Warehouse Company in favor of the bank, and delivered into the bank's possession before the attachment. The Lawrence Warehouse Company is a corporation with its office and principal place of business in Los Angeles.

Upon receipt of this claim the sheriff duly notified the plaintiff. After some hesitation, the plaintiff refused to furnish an indemnity bond to the sheriff upon the ground that the claim was legally insufficient, and that there had not been the change of possession required by law for consummation of a pledge. Left without the protection of an indemnity bond, the sheriff withdrew his keeper; and the goods were ultimately released by the warehouse company to the bank and sold by the bank for its own account, the entire proceeds being applied toward satisfaction of its loans.

The judgment obtained later by plaintiff against Gasman remaining wholly unsatisfied, plaintiff began this action on December 8, 1924, against the bank, the warehouse company, the sheriff, and the surety on the sheriff's official bond to recover damages for conversion.

[1, 2] So far as the sheriff and his surety are concerned, the chief point presented by plaintiff relates to the sufficiency of the third-party claim. It was made on behalf of the bank by the vice president in the form of an affidavit to which the affiant took oath before a notary public. Plaintiff contends that an oath so taken by a claimant, without addition of the phraseology used in verifying a pleading, is not a "claim verified by his oath" within the meaning of section 689, Code of Civil Procedure. Such a claim, however, is not a pleading, and may frequently have to be drawn by persons unfamiliar with legal jargon. The affidavit criticized conforms to the usual practice; and in such matters technical niceties should not overshadow the rights of a claimant to legal possession. One of the definitions of the word "verify" in the Standard Dictionary is "to affirm under oath"; and in the new English Dictionary one of the meanings given is "to testify or affirm formally or upon oath." In our opinion an affidavit setting out the facts and sworn to before an authorized officer meets fully the demands of the law; and puts the attaching creditor to his election either to protect the sheriff with a sufficient indemnity bond, or to submit to release of the property seized.

The plaintiff argues that the sheriff's liability is governed by the decision in Arena v. Bank of Italy, 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441. In that case, however, there was first filed a claim clearly insufficient on its face; and hence it furnished no basis for the demand for indemnity made by the sheriff. An amended claim was then filed, and upon the strength of the amended claim, the sheriff without any further demand released the attached property. Such release without notice to the attaching creditor or renewal of the demand for indemnification was held to be contrary to law. The case has no similarity to the case before us.

[3] In this instance the contents of the claim were sufficient to state an apparent right to possession by the bank as a pledgee; and the sheriff was not required to assume a judicial pose, and determine, at his peril, whether or not the circumstances connected with the issuance of the warehouse receipts and their delivery to the bank satisfied the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code. Where a litigant's courage oozes under the pressure of a demand for indemnification against a third-party claim sufficient on its face, the law will not make the sheriff the scapegoat. Taylor v. Bernheim, 58 Cal. App. 404, 408, 209 P. 55. The motion for nonsuit in behalf of the sheriff and his surety was properly granted.

The really vital question in the case, between the plaintiff on the one hand and the bank and the warehouse company on the other, is whether there had been a change of possession of the seized property sufficient to protect the bank as a pledgee.

The circumstances surrounding the dealings between the parties were as follows: The canning business of the Ventura County Canning Company was carried on in a workshop or factory at Camarillo rented from the California Fruit Confection Company, which conducted its business on the other side of a wooden partition. The rent payable by the canning company was 12½ cents per case; and its output for the canning season was about 50,000 cases. A man named Pace, employed by the canning company, served as its cookroom foreman and superintended the canning operations at a salary of $60 per week.

Cal.Rep. 284-286 P.—19.

With the consent of its landlord, the canning company on June 28, 1923, sublet its entire shop on a month to month tenancy to the Lawrence Warehouse Company at a rent of $1 per month for warehouse purposes. This lease was recorded July 28, 1923.

Notwithstanding this sublease, the canning company continued to conduct its business in the shop as before, using during the apricot season 150 to 200 employees. Pace continued to act as cookroom foreman, and at the same time he acted also as the sole representative of the Lawrence Warehouse Company on the premises. In fact, he drew his salary of $60 a week from the Warehouse Company, and that company then rendered a bill for the amount to the canning company. Practically all Pace's time was given to superintendence of the canning processes. At night an employee of the canning company slept on a cot in a cubby-hole above a small office partitioned off from the shop; and during the night the premises with its contents were in his care.

When the cans had been filled and were ready for stacking, they were moved on trucks to another part of the shop, and stacked by skilled employees of the canning company in rows set about 4½ feet apart, and reaching to the ceiling. At the time of the attachment there were three or four such stacks in place. Frames made of slats were placed around the several stacks for the purpose of separating them and simplifying the count. The canning was done at the north end of the shop, and the storage at the south end. There was nothing to separate the canning department from the storage department except an intervening space about 15 feet in width.

As the cans were stacked they were inventoried by Pace, who kept the records. He then issued nonnegotiable warehouse receipts for the Lawrence Warehouse Company. The form used was an acknowledgment of receipt for storage "for account of, and to be delivered upon written order, without surrender of this receipt, to Bank of America, Los Angeles."

Referring to these receipts, Heck, one of the partners interested in the cannery, said in his testimony: "We jumped in the car as soon as we got them, and went to Los Angeles, and to the Bank of America, and got all the money we could."

As receipts were issued, stack cards of the Lawrence Warehouse Company were placed on the stacks about 6 feet from the floor, each specifying the aisle, stack, and mark, and giving the date, lot number, and quantity. These cards bore also the statement, "Warehoused to Bank of America."

When fruit was to be marketed, a release was issued from the Los Angeles office of the Lawrence Warehouse Company on order of the Bank of America; and upon delivery of the release to Pace, withdrawal of the quantity designated followed. The cans were then labeled, packed in cases, and shipped by the canning company to fill orders obtained through brokers, who appear to have assumed responsibility to the bank for the proceeds of sale.

The canning company really paid Pace's salary; and though the warehouse company, according to the sublease, was charged the nominal rent of $1 per month, there was an accompanying agreement obligating the canning company to pay the warehouse company for issuing receipts 3 cents per case for the first 50,000 cases and lesser amounts for additional quantities.

[4] No sign of the Ventura County Canning Company seems to have been displayed on the building. There was a sign of the California Fruit Confection Company on the outside, and a sign of the Lawrence Warehouse Company inside the shop near the south end. While Mr. Heck said the warehouse company had two of its signs on the outside, his co-partner, Mr. Clarke, said there was none on the outside to his knowledge. For purposes of nonsuit the testimony of Heck on this point must be disregarded.

The question now before us is whether, under the circumstances recited, there was error in granting the motions of the bank and the warehouse company for a nonsuit instead of letting the case go to the jury as to them.

[5] When there is actual delivery of merchandise to a warehouseman, with actual and explicit change of possession, and a warehouse receipt is issued and delivered to one lending money on the security of the merchandise in store, the delivery of the warehouse receipt is the legal equivalent of the delivery of the merchandise itself; but such symbolic possession by the pledgee is dependent for its efficacy upon complete and actual, as distinguished from merely formal or colorable, relinquishment of possession and control by the pledgor.

If, under the facts of this case, there was a transfer of possession from the canning company to the warehouse company, of such exclusive character that it must be declared as a matter of law that there was indisputable compliance with the requirements of section 3440, Civil Code, then the judgment of nonsuit was properly entered; but if a contrary conclusion was reasonably deducible from the evidence, the case should have been allowed to go to the jury as the triers of the facts.

It is contended by the defendants that the warehouse company used the premises as a so-called field warehouse; and cases from other jurisdictions are cited in support of such a system and as authority for the order of nonsuit.

Union Trust Co. v. Wilson, 198 U. S. 530, 25 S. Ct. 766, 49 L. Ed. 1154, certifies answers to certain questions propounded by the Circuit Court of Appeals in a case arising in Illinois. A leather dealer named Flanders walled off a part of his basement and let it at a nominal rental to the Security Warehouse Company. The compartment had doors fastened with padlocks, bearing the name of the company; and the warehouse company had the only keys. It had also a key to the building so as to have access both day and night. There were two signs on the outside, stating in large letters that the premises were occupied by the company as a public warehouseman. The company received leather from Flanders, stored it in the locked compartment, and issued warehouse receipts which were indorsed by Flanders to the Union Trust Company as security for loans. Flanders became bankrupt, and the trustee for creditors filed a bill claiming the leather in storage. The court said that no question under the statutes of Illinois was suggested; and that since the warehouse company had the leather under lock and key in a place not visible to Flanders' patrons, to which the company had legal title and right of free access, and since there was no reason to doubt the good faith of the transaction, there was a sufficient delivery to validate the pledge. In so ruling the court is careful, however, to say (page 537 of 198 U. S., 25 S. Ct. 768): "We deal with the case before us only. No doubt there are other cases in which the exclusive power of the so-called bailee gradually tapers away until we reach those in which the courts have held as matter of law that there was no adequate bailment."

Manufacturers' & Traders' Bank v. Gilman (C. C. A.) 7 F. (2d) 94, is a similar case. There engines and engine parts were kept in a locked room for the bank as a pledgee. There was a written indenture of trust, whereby the general manager of the pledgor was named as trustee for the bank. He had the key to the room, which was rented to the bank; and the stored material was tagged so as to state that it was "property of N. B. Gladwin Trustee." In a proceeding instituted by the receiver in bankruptcy against the bank, it was held that there was a valid pledge.

Sexton v. Kessler & Co., 225 U. S. 90, 32 S. Ct. 657, 56 L. Ed. 995, is a case brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside a certain alleged illegal preference in the transfer of securities. The New York house of Kessler & Co. was indebted to the English house of the same name, and for the protection of that creditor set apart certain earmarked securities, which were kept on a separate shelf in the firm's vault and listed in a document transmitted to the English house. In the panic of 1907 the New York house became embarrassed, and filed a petition in bankruptcy. Before doing so, however, it delivered the earmarked securities to an agent of the English house, then in New York. It was held that the English house had an equitable lien superior to the rights of the trustee. This case can hardly be said to have a bearing on the case before us, especially since such securities are not in the same class with goods and chattels.

The remaining cases cited by defendants were either heard upon appeal after a decision in the trial court upon the facts, or were decisions rendered by the trial judge after taking the evidence himself, or upon a hearing after reference to a master to take testimony and report his conclusions. Thus, in Dunn v. Train (C. C. A.) 125 F. 221, 222, the court said: "It being a question of intention, and a question whether the change in the situation of the property was such as to be notice of a change of possession, it was, under the circumstances, largely a question of fact, to be determined under rules of law." And the findings of the trial judge in favor of the pledgee were sustained. A similar situation existed in Love v. Export Storage Co. (C. C. A.) 143 F. 1.

Bush v. Export Storage Co. (C. C.) 136 F. 918, and Evans v. New York & P. S. S. Co. (D. C.) 163 F. 405, were decisions by the trial judge after submission of the cause upon the evidence taken before him. Again, Philadelphia Warehouse Co. v. Winchester (C. C.) 156 F. 600, and American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co. (C. C.) 171 F. 548, were decisions confirming the master's report. Israel v. Woodruff (C. C. A.) 299 F. 454, falls into the same category, being an appeal from a decree confirming the report of the master. The appellate court there said (page 456 of 299 F.): "The experienced trial judge having approved the master's report, it will be permitted to stand, unless an obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious or important mistake appears to have been made in the consideration of the evidence." National Union Bank v. Shearer, 225 Pa. St. 470, 74 A. 351, 17 Ann. Cas. 664, and State v. Robb-Lawrence Co., 17 N. D. 257, 115 N. W. 846, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, have but a remote application to the present case; but each came up for review of a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury, and the judgment was affirmed.

While in American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co. (C. C.) reported in 171 F. at page 548, the trial judge approved the master's report to the effect that the goods pledged were conspicuously marked and set apart in a way to give the pledgee exclusive dominion, yet in a companion case, bearing the same title and reported in the same volume, at page 540, the same judge, dealing with other goods, found that there was only a semblance of an attempt to warehouse those goods in the premises of the pledgor. Accordingly, in that case he held that there was no such change of possession as to validate the receipts in the hands of the pledgee. The judgments in both these cases were affirmed on appeal in American Can Co. v. Erie Preserving Co. (C. C. A.) 183 F. 96, 98; the court, as to the case reported in 171 F. 540, saying: "Warehouse receipts would give constructive possession of goods actually warehoused; but it is plain that the warehousing company did not maintain a warehouse in any proper sense, because it had no exclusive and unequivocal possession."

In Macdonald v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 90 Conn. 415, 97 A. 332, cited also by defendants, one Rodebaugh, a grain dealer at Buffalo, entered into a written contract with the American Warehousing Company, whereby he leased to the warehouse company as a "field storage warehouse" the property on which his grain business was conducted. The plot of ground was marked at the corners by stakes bearing the initials of the warehouse company; and one of Rodebaugh's employees acted as custodian for the warehouse company. Warehouse receipts were issued to the Bank of Buffalo as collateral security for loans to Rodebaugh. The bank was further protected by bonds given by the Aetna Indemnity Company to indemnify against any loss "through the negligence or dishonesty" of the warehouse company or its custodian. After the lease to the warehouse company, and before the issuance of receipts to the bank, Rodebaugh transferred his business to the Niagara Company of which he became president, and upon Rodebaugh's death a few months later, the Niagara Company filed a petition in bankruptcy, and a receiver was appointed, who took the grain into his possession. Immediately after Rodebaugh's death, however, the warehouse company had asserted its right to possession of the grain, and placarded the interior of the mill, the elevator, the bins, and bags with conspicuous signs declaring its interest in the property, and maintained possession until ousted by the receiver. The receiver having taken and sold the grain, the bank caused suit to be brought by the insurance commissioner on the indemnity bond furnished by the warehouse company, charging negligence by that company. In the trial court the judgment sustained the claim of the Bank of Buffalo under the bond. This judgment was reversed on appeal, but the court said that up to the time of Rodebaugh's death there had been no such change of possession as to validate a pledge; that the marking of corner stakes was not adequate notice, and any possession of the custodian, who remained in the employ of the pledgor, was really the possession of his employer. The case turned on what was done by the warehouse company the day following Rodebaugh's death and two weeks before the appointment of the receiver. The court ruled that possession was then actually taken before any specific lien had been acquired by any creditor, and that there had been no illegal preference under the bankruptcy law.

In its decision the court took into consideration the statute of New York. At the time of the transactions, which occurred between January, 1906, and August, 1907, the statute had a qualification not embodied in section 3440 of our Civil Code. The statute then in force in New York declared transfers without actual change of possession fraudulent, "unless it appear on the part of the person claiming under the sale or assignment that it was made in good faith and without intent to defraud such creditors or purchasers." 4 Birdseye's Cons. Laws of N. Y., § 36. Under our law good faith, without good works, supplies no saving grace.

In Union Trust Co. v. Wilson, 198 U. S. 530, 537, 25 S. Ct. 766, 768, 49 L. Ed. 1154, the general principle applicable in cases of questioned change of possession was couched by Judge Holmes in this form: "When there is conscious control, the intent to exclude and the exclusion of others, with access to the place of custody as of right, there are all the elements of possession in the fullest sense." At the same time he added a word of caution about cases where the exclusive power of control "tapers away."

Such a case is exhibited in Re Rodgers (C. C. A.) 125 F. 169. There, Rodgers, a dealer in seeds in Chicago, prior to his bankruptcy, had made certain written contracts with the National Storage Company, whereby Rodgers leased to the company part of his premises, and the storage company agreed to store his seeds therein and issue its receipts therefor. The receipts were used by Rodgers as collateral security for loans. The storage company had some signs inside the building, but not conspicuously placed; and its inspector visited the premises several times a week. The keys, however, were kept by Rodgers alone, access being obtainable only through him; and he continued to conduct his business on the premises as of old. Upon each pile of bags for which receipts were issued, there was placed a small tag; but Rodgers was left in a situation to deal with the seeds much as he pleased. In a controversy which arose between the trustee in bankruptcy and the holders of receipts, the court ruled upon appeal that there had never been a change of possession sufficient to validate the receipts, and consequently there existed no enforceable pledge.

In Security Warehousing Co. v. Hand, 206 U. S. 415, 421, 27 S. Ct. 720, 722, 51 L. Ed. 1117, 11 Ann. Cas. 789, affirming the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals upon the facts recited in 143 F. 32, the court said in reference to certain warehouse receipts issued to the Racine Knitting Company and transferred to pledgees: "The general law of pledge requires possession, and it cannot exist without it. Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779. There was scarcely a semblance of an attempt at such change of possession from the hands of the knitting company to the hands of the warehousing company. Actual possession of the property in question was exercised by and existed with the knitting company substantially the same after the issuing of the receipts as before. It is a trifling with words to call the various transactions between the knitting company and the warehousing company a transfer of possession from the former to the latter. There was really no delivery, and no change of possession, continuous or otherwise. The alleged change was a mere pretense, a sham."

In that case the Racine Knitting Company had leased to the warehouse company certain portions of the knitting company's premises, both at Racine and at Stevens Point, Wis. Employees of the knitting company, nominated by the warehouse company, acted as custodians for the latter. The stored goods were kept within slatted inclosures or fence-like palings, and the inclosures were provided with sliding doors with padlocks to which the appointed custodian had keys. These, however, were kept by the custodian in such way as to be accessible when desired by officers of the knitting company. There were some interior signs of the warehouse company, and some use was made of identification cards also. Nevertheless, it was held that the facts did not show the open, exclusive, unequivocal possession required by law.

[6] Warehousing on the premises of the owner proposing to pledge his merchandise is effective when done in obedience to legal requirements; but when done only far enough to get the goods represented by documents without really getting them stored, the documents are but scraps of paper. The term "field warehousing" is not a talisman to give dominion by enchantment. Taking exclusiveness of possession and control as the criterion, we find now and then a case where it may be said as a matter of law that, through the field warehouse, open, exclusive, and unequivocal possession passed constructively to a pledgee; and then again in other cases we find that as a matter of law the possession of the warehouseman "tapers away" to nothingness. Between these two extremes lies the aggregation of cases in which the facts are such that different men may with reason reach opposing conclusions. Cases of that character, when tried by a jury, must be allowed to go under proper instructions to the jury for their determination of the facts in controversy.

[7] Whether warehousing is called "field warehousing" or by any other name, it cannot be effectively conducted in this state without compliance with the law as declared in section 3440 of the Civil Code. Merely colorable or constructive change of possession accomplishes nothing in favor of a pledgee. There must be open, visible, unequivocal change of possession, manifested by such substantial outward signs as to make it evident to the world that the control of the owner has wholly ceased, and that another has acquired, and is openly exercising, the exclusive dominion over the property. Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 506, 76 Am. Dec. 500; Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 197, 201; Godchaux v. Mulford, 26 Cal. 316, 324, 85 Am. Dec. 178; Sequeira v. Collins, 153 Cal. 426, 431, 95 P. 876; Hassell v. Bunge, 167 Cal. 365, 366, 139 P. 800.

[8, 9] Actual change of possession means existing in act, and truly and absolutely carried out, as opposed to formal, potential, virtual, or theoretical change. Bunting v. Saltz, 84 Cal. 168, 170, 24 P. 167; Guthrie v. Carney, 19 Cal. App. 144, 150, 124 P. 1045. The proof required to show actual change of possession is not measured by any fixed set of rules. Dependence must be placed upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case; and usually the determination must rest upon the finding of the court or the jury after hearing the evidence adduced on both sides. Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 501, 503, 26 P. 1077; Dubois v. Spinks, 114 Cal. 289, 293, 46 P. 95; Feeley v. Boyd, 143 Cal. 282, 285, 76 P. 1029, 65 L. R. A. 943; Jarvis v. Webber, 196 Cal. 86, 99, 236 P. 138; Bosbyshell v. Cline, 51 Cal. App. 109, 113, 196 P. 274; Gray v. Little (Cal. App.) 275 P. 870.

[10] The appointment of the owner, or one of his staff, as a warehouseman's custodian of goods stored, while not conclusively ineffectual, is nevertheless a circumstance to give pause, and must be carefully weighed in connection with the other facts in evidence. Goldstein v. Nunan, 66 Cal. 542, 544, 6 P. 451; Hickey v. Coschina, 133 Cal. 81, 84, 65 P. 313; Bucher v. Allen, 11 Cal. App. 650, 651, 105 P. 942; Vall v. Nichibei Bussan Co., 65 Cal. App. 60, 63, 223 P. 577; Gray v. Little (Cal. App.) 275 P. 870.

[11] In this case a foreign element is introduced by the interjection of the warehouse company between the pledgor and the pledgee. If the loans had been made without resort to warehouse receipts, and the fruit had been stacked and kept on the premises as shown in the evidence, with Pace as custodian for the bank, there would then have been the simple question whether the pledgee had been placed in actual exclusive possession and control. Instead of actual possession, the bank claims to have obtained symbolic possession by virtue of the warehouse receipts; but those receipts can have no virtue, unless the warehouse company had the same actual and exclusive possession and dominion which would have been essential to the protection of the bank, if it had acted independently in reliance on the goods instead of on the receipts.

In re Spanish-American Cork Products Co. (C. C. A.) 2 F.(2d) 203, 204, the company, desiring to borrow money from a bank, leased a portion of its premises to one of its employees; and there, in care of the employee as agent for the bank, was stored under lock and key the cork intended to be pledged, the doors having a placard, reading, "Property of A. E. Nichol, Agent." The custodian had general instructions from the bank to receive payments in its behalf and released cork; and as payments were made he supervised removal of the quantity released. Upon the trial of an issue between the trustee in bankruptcy of the cork company and the bank, the District Court decided that the bank had not the possession necessary to a pledge, and the decree was affirmed on appeal. The court expressed its views in the following language: "All authorities agree that possession is necessary to the validity of a pledge. The necessary indication of possession varies, of course, according to the nature and bulk and situation of the property. The rule is the pledgee must either have actual exclusive possession of the property, or if it remains on the pledgor's premises he must so separate and mark it as to give notice of his possession to the public, who might deal with the pledgor on the faith of it. In this case the cork was in the building occupied by the bankrupt, engaged in the cork business. Those who dealt with it had a right to assume in the absence of notice that the stock of cork carried in the building for use in the business was the property of the company which was using it. There was nothing on the outside to put anybody on inquiry. The public dealing with the cork company or interested in it could not be required to search for notice of some other ownership of the stock of cork by making an obtrusive and prying inspection of the inside of the cork company's premises to find and inquire the meaning of the signs of agency of one of the bankrupt's employees. There is no binding nor well-considered case that goes to that length. It is the duty of the pledgee to make such segregation and marks as will indicate his possession to business men of ordinary prudence dealing with the pledgor in the ordinary course of business."

What is there said concerning a transaction directly with a pledgee applies with equal force to a transaction through the medium of a "field warehouseman."

[12] In the discussion in which we have indulged we are not to be understood as intimating any opinion upon the question whether the circumstances in evidence do or do not show a change of possession satisfying the law. As is said in Byrnes v. Moore, 93 Cal. 393, 394, 29 P. 70: "Every case of the kind here involved has its own peculiar features, and must be determined on the particular facts which surround the given transaction or transfer." We hold merely that the circumstances are not such that it can be said absolutely as a matter of law that there was an actual, open, visible, and unequivocal change of possession. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to the submission of the facts to the jury for their verdict under appropriate instructions as to the rules of law by which they should be guided.

The judgment in favor of the sheriff, Robert E. Clark, and his surety, National Surety Company, is affirmed; and that in favor of the defendants Bank of America and Lawrence Warehouse Company is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 599

ROBERTS et al. v. PRISK et al. (Civ. 3976.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 1, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1930.

1. Trial $\S$ 163—Fact that defendants' counsel when making motion for nonsuit used word "proof," instead of "evidence," held not to affect validity of motion (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 581, subd. 5).

In action against directors of corporation to recover moneys alleged to have been misappropriated, fact that defendants' counsel used word "proof," instead of word "evidence," when making motion for nonsuit, on ground plaintiffs' charges of fraud had not been established, held not to affect validity of motion, in view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 581, subd. 5, providing for dismissal upon defendant's motion when upon trial plaintiff fails to prove case sufficient for jury; provision of statute also being applicable to actions tried before court.

2. Corporations $\S$ 386—If directors had authority to authorize purchase of stock in another corporation, they had authority to ratify previous purchase.

If board of directors of corporation had authority to authorize purchase of stock in another corporation, they were authorized to ratify purchase before passing resolution authorizing purchase.

3. Corporations $\S$ 389—Burden of proof is upon party claiming purchase of stock in another corporation is unauthorized.

Burden of proof is upon party who claims that purchase and ownership of corporate stock was not within scope of corporate powers, since corporation is not presumed incapable of purchasing and holding shares of stock of another corporation.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 909(5)—Where plaintiff appealing from judgment in action to recover funds used to purchase stock in another corporation did not introduce articles of incorporation, appellate court cannot presume purchase was unauthorized.

On appeal by plaintiff suing directors of corporation to recover money alleged to have been misappropriated to purchase in another corporation, where plaintiff had not introduced articles of incorporation of corporations involved, appellate court cannot presume that corporation purchasing stock did not have authority to make purchase.

5. Corporations $\S$ 377(2)—Absent fraud, lack of good faith, or breach of trust, fact of interlocking directorates held not to invalidate purchase of stock in another corporation.

Fact that corporation purchasing stock in another had same directors and stockholders as corporation whose stock it was purchasing held not to invalidate purchase of stock, absent showing of fraud or lack of good faith or breach of trust, in addition to fact of interlocking directorates.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wilbur F. Downs, Judge.

Action by Belle McCord Roberts and another against W. F. Prisk and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. A. Anderson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Knight & Goddard, of Long Beach, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This action was begun by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover of and from the four individual defendants mentioned the sum of $75,000, and directing that such sum be repaid to the defendant Press Telegram Publishing Company, a corporation, that an accounting be had, a receiver appointed, and an injunction issued; it being alleged in the complaint that the four individual defendants mentioned had misappropriated the funds of the Press Telegram Publishing Company, a corporation, the gist of the action being to restore to the treasury of the defendant Press Telegram Publishing Company all the moneys alleged to have been misappropriated by the individual defendants named, the Press Telegram Publishing Company being made a defendant because it refused to join as a plaintiff in this action.

The complaint alleges the corporate existence of the Daily Telegram Company of Long Beach, the Press Telegram Publishing Company, and the Press Telegram Building Company; the latter being the present name of the corporation originally known as the Long Beach Press Building Company. The board of directors of the Press Telegram Publishing Company are the defendants named in this action, together with S. S. Conklin, Oscar Conklin, and the plaintiff Belle McCord Roberts. The directors of the Press Telegram Publishing Company, a corporation, are identical in personnel with the directorate of the Press Telegram Building Company. The complaint also alleges that the individual defendants named in this action constitute a majority of the board of directors of both companies. It is then further alleged in the complaint that the Press Telegram Building Company undertook to erect a large building in the city of Los Angeles, and became heavily indebted; that the individual defendants in this action being in control of said corporation, as aforesaid, and also the defendant Press Telegram Publishing Company, at divers times appropriated, used, and diverted the funds and money of the Press Telegram Publishing Company to said Press Telegram Building Company, in the sum of $75,000. It is further alleged that on or about the 20th day of December, 1926, at a meeting of the board of directors of said Press Telegram Publishing Company, the individual defendants above named, then constituting a majority of the board of directors, caused to be adopted a resolution, in which resolution it was provided and declared that the said Press Telegram Publishing Company should purchase 650 shares of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company. It further appears in the complaint that the board of directors of the defendant Press Telegram Publishing Company have purchased, all told, 658 shares of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company.

Stripped of its legal verbiage, the record shows that the directors of the Press Telegram Publishing Company and Press Telegram Building Company are identical; that the Press Telegram Building Company has been erecting a building to be occupied by the Press Telegram Publishing Company. Some time prior to the beginning of the erection of the building referred to, the Daily Telegram Company of Long Beach and the Press Publishing Company of Long Beach, respectively publishing newspapers, were consolidated, and thereafter only one paper was published, and known as the "Press Telegram," by the Press Telegram Publishing Company. In the consolidation of the companies it appears that the Daily Telegram Company of Long Beach was given 32 per cent. of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company and 32 per cent. of the Press Telegram Publishing Company. The Long Beach Press Publishing Company, under the consolidation, was given 68 per cent. of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Publishing Company, and was given 68 per cent. of the capital stock of the Press Building Company. The capital stock is still owned in the same proportions by the same companies. In the construction of the Press Telegram Building the Press Telegram Publishing Company advanced money from time to time to the building company in the aggregate of $80,800, and had received from the building company, at the date of the trial, 808 shares of its capital stock. The records introduced upon the trial show the following resolutions adopted by the Press Publishing Company on December 20, 1926: "Be it Resolved that the Press Telegram Publishing Company accept from the Press Telegram Building Company, in payment of $15,000.00 advanced during the year 1926, 150 shares of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company, at par. Be it further Resolved that during the year 1927 that this Corporation purchase at par, as much of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company, not to exceed 500 shares, as the president may deem it advisable, and that such purchase be made from time to time from the profits of the Press Telegram Publishing Company on hand. Be it further Resolved that the actions of this Corporation in purchasing such capital stock of said Press Telegram Building Company during the year 1926, be, and the same is hereby approved and ratified as the acts and deeds of this Corporation." The action before us was begun in January, 1928. Summarized, the complaint alleges that the individual defendants used and diverted funds and money belonging to, and in the treasury of, the Press Telegram Publishing Company; that said acts were fraudulent and a breach of trust of said individuals; that said acts were done by said individual defendants for their own profit, benefit and gain; that the Press Telegram Building Company is insolvent and its shares of stock worthless. The record further shows that $75,000 was borrowed by the Press Telegram Publishing Company from the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles, by resolution introduced by the plaintiffs in this action and voted for by all of the directors of the Press Telegram Publishing Company. While there is no action of the directors of the Press Telegram Publishing Company called to our attention relative to the purpose for which this money was to be used, it does appear that the directors all understood that it was to be used for the purpose of advancing money to the Press Telegram Publishing Company, and that the capital stock of the publishing company to which we have referred should be accepted for the money so advanced. It may be further stated, to clarify whatever confusion might result from the use of the moneys herein, that the stockholders of the Press Telegram Publishing Company were the seven directors thereof, and that the stockholders of the building company were the seven directors thereof. Thus, while the two corporations were distinct entities, the directors and stockholders were the same in both corporations. So far as we have been able to trace the money set forth in the transcript originally borrowed by the Press Telegram Publishing Company, or that may have come from the profits of the Press Telegram Publishing Company and advanced to the building company, all went toward the payment of the expenses incurred in erecting the building occupied by the Press Telegram Publishing Company, and, as presented by the record, the Press Telegram Building Company owns the building, and the Press Telegram Publishing Company and the directors thereof own all of the capital stock of the building company. The money referred to, although charged in the complaint to have been appropriated to the uses and purposes of the individual defendants, thus appears to have gone into and paid for properties owned by all the parties concerned. The record shows that the stock of the building company has become quite valuable and is paying sufficient to justify a dividend in the sum of 7 per cent. on the investment, which controverts the allegation of insolvency. Upon the conclusion of plaintiffs' testimony the defendants interposed a motion for nonsuit, which was granted and judgment entered thereon, from which judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

[1, 2] No testimony whatever was introduced showing any fraudulent acts on the part of the individual defendants named in this action. The only question presented upon the record, in view of the want of testimony showing fraud or that the defendants individually profited to the disadvantage of the plaintiffs, is the want of legal authority to purchase stock in the Press Telegram Building Company by the Press Telegram Publishing Company. While some technical objection has been made to the motion for nonsuit, we think it sufficiently shows that there was presented to the court, for its consideration, the want of testimony to show any breach of trust on the part of the defendants, or any fraudulent misappropriation of money by them, or any fraudulent diversion of money from one corporation to the other for the gain and profit of the individual defendants named in this action. The argument that counsel for the respondents used the word "proof" instead of the word "evidence" when making his motion for nonsuit, on the ground that none of the charges had been established, seems to us too technical to necessitate further consideration than the citation of subdivision 5 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing for a dismissal. It is there said: "An action may be dismissed * * * By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury." The action under consideration was tried before the court, but the subdivision of the section applies in such instances. Some question is also made that the purchase of the stock referred to was partly made before the board of directors had passed a resolution authorizing the purchase of the same, but, if the board of directors had authority to authorize the purchase, they had power to ratify the previous purchase of the 150 shares. See Fletcher on Corporations, vol. 3, at p. 2151; 6 Cal. Jur., pp. 119 and 120.

[3] The appellants call our attention to the case of Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 P. 1047, 1050, where it is said: "A private corporation has no implied authority to invest in shares of another private corporation"—citing a number of authorities. And likewise calls our attention to section 9 of article 12 of the state Constitution limiting the power of corporations to engage in business other than as expressly authorized by its charter. In that case the articles of incorporation of the two corporations involved were introduced in evidence and show the purposes for which the respective organizations were formed, and it is upon these articles of incorporation that the court held that the subscription of one corporation to the capital stock of the other corporation was ultra vires and void. As applied to the facts in that case the authorities cited by appellants appear to have fully settled the law that one corporation has no implied power to purchase the stock of another corporation, but the cases cited, however, and the principle of law there involved, are not applicable to the instant case. The record fails to show that the articles of incorporation of any of the corporations involved in this case were introduced in evidence; therefore, the following decisions of our Supreme Court are decisive: In the case of Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. 112, 4 P. 1089, having under consideration the question of ultra vires of one corporation purchasing shares of the capital stock of another corporation, it is said: "A corporation is not presumed incapable of purchasing and holding shares of the stock of another. The burden of proof is upon the party who claims that the purchase and ownership of the stock was not within the scope of the powers of the corporation."

In the case of Stockton Savings Bank v. Staples, 98 Cal. 189, 32 P. 936, 938, where the same principle was involved, but the property held was a tract of land, and articles of incorporation were not introduced in evidence, the court said: "Under these circumstances * * * it must be presumed * * * that the corporation had power to purchase and hold the land." And further: "It does not appear under what statute, or for what purpose, the plaintiff was incorporated, nor what business it was engaged in, nor for what purpose the property was purchased or used." And quoting from the case of People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 8 P. 84, it is further stated: "If there was anything in its charter, or the business in which it was engaged, or in the law under which it was organized, in any manner abridging its right to hold land, it does not appear of record; hence we deem the objection untenable."

[4] And in Kennedy v. Savings Bank, 101 Cal. 495, 35 P. 1039, 40 Am. St. Rep. 69, the cases to which we have just referred were reaffirmed, and, it there appearing that the articles of incorporation were not introduced in evidence, it was held that the law would not presume that the corporation did not have the power to purchase or subscribe for shares of the capital stock of another corporation. Not having introduced the articles of incorporation of the various corporations involved in this action, we cannot presume that the Press Telegram Publishing Company did not have authority to make the purchase of the capital stock of the Press Telegram Building Company.

[5] Again, the fact that the record shows interlocking directorates is urged as a reason why the transaction should be held void. However, as no fraud was shown, and no other reason advanced upon which the trial court could have entered judgment in favor of the appellants, this objection is also untenable. There must be either fraud or a lack of good faith, or some breach of trust shown in addition to the fact of interlocking directorates. In 14 C. J. 873, § 1332, the law relating to dealings between interlocking directorates is thus stated: "The fact that part or all of the stockholders of two corporations are the same does not have the effect of rendering the corporations legally identical. It does not make either corporation responsible for the contracts of the other or for the acts of its members as members of the other. Neither does it prevent the corporations from dealing with each other, although where the same majority is in control of both corporations, the dealings of the corporations with each other will be subjected to a careful scrutiny and the rights of minority stockholders will be protected by the courts. However, it is held that the fact that the same persons constitute majority stockholders in each of two corporations, does not enlarge the jurisdiction of equity to interfere with the management of one of these corporations in relation with the other, at the suit of a minority stockholder." Many authorities are cited in the footnotes in support of the text just quoted. See, also, Sausalito Bay Land Co. v. Sausalito Improvement Co., 166 Cal. 302, 136 P. 57.

No reason having been shown why the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, it is hereby ordered that the same be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 691

In re SEEDELKEN'S ESTATE. *

WITT et al. v. SCHMITZ et al.
(Civ. 7251.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 6, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1930.

1. Habeas corpus §112—On collateral attack, court must assume order in habeas corpus proceedings restoring competency was based on evidence which court deemed sufficient to prove sanity.

As against collateral attack, court must assume that order in habeas corpus proceedings restoring person to competency was made on evidence which court deemed sufficient to prove sanity, where order recited it was made after the hearing.

2. Wills §55(1)—Testimony as to sanity of deceased warranted finding that deceased at time of his destruction of will was sane.

Testimony of witnesses that testator was sane at time of his destruction of will was sufficient to sustain finding in will contest that he was sane at the time.

3. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Finding which has competent evidence to support it will not be disturbed on appeal.

Finding will not be disturbed on appeal if there is competent evidence to support it, unless testimony on which finding is based is wholly improbable or contrary to physical facts, so that reviewing court can say as a matter of law that the finding is not supported by competent evidence.

4. Wills §386—Finding in will contest that deceased's destruction of will was not induced by undue influence of contestant, though against preponderance of evidence, was supported by contestant's testimony.

In will contest, finding that deceased was not induced by undue influence of contestant to destroy will was supported by contestant's testimony, though great preponderance of evidence was otherwise.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Petition by Sophie Witt and others for letters of administration with the will annexed in the estate of John Seegelken, also known as Johann Seegelken, deceased, in which contest was interposed by Louise Schmitz and others. Judgment for contestants, and petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

John L. McNab and Byron Coleman, both of San Francisco, Walter E. Rode, of Oakland, and Albert Jacoby, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Dinkelspiel & Dinkelspiel, F. A. Devlin, and David K. Lener, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. A petition was filed for letters of administration with the will annexed in the above-named estate. Contest was joined upon the ground that the will had been destroyed by the testator with the intention of revoking it. The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and resulted in findings and judgment for contestants. Petitioners appeal upon typewritten transcripts.

The petition alleged that the physical destruction of the will was made at a time when the testator was of unsound mind, and that it was accomplished through the undue influence and fraud of Louise Schmitz, a niece of the testator, whose participation in the estate would be greatly increased by the revocation of the will.

The will was duly executed in 1914, when the testator was admittedly sane. In 1918 he was committed to the insane asylum at Agnew after proceedings duly had in the superior court of Monterey county. Just prior thereto he had been duly adjudged to be incompetent in proceedings in the same court, and a guardian of his person and estate had been appointed. A few months after his commitment habeas corpus proceedings were instituted in Santa Clara county, upon the hearing of which he was restored to competency and returned to his guardian in Monterey county. Immediately thereafter, upon stipulation of all interested parties, the guardianship proceedings in Monterey county were terminated, and Seegelken was restored to competency.

The deceased was an unmarried man. He left a number of nieces and nephews, many of whom were given special bequests in the will of 1914. One of these nieces, Louise Schmitz, feeling aggrieved because two of the nieces had been particularly favored in the will, endeavored to stir up the other nephews and nieces to take some action. Unable to interest the others, she went to Salinas immediately after the incompetency proceedings were dismissed, and persuaded her uncle to return with her to her home in San Francisco, where he lived until his death in March, 1927. She testified that in November, 1918, the decedent destroyed the will by burning it in her kitchen stove, and that he told her at the time that he did not want the will—that he was through with it. Soon thereafter she applied for and obtained letters of guardianship over his person and estate, and this relation continued until his death.

[1-3] On this appeal the petitioners attack the order upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings that the decedent was mentally competent at the time the will was destroyed, and that he destroyed it with intent to revoke it. In this connection they argue that the previous adjudication of insanity is evidence of continued mental incompetency, because the only evidence heard in the habeas corpus proceeding demonstrated a condition of insanity at that time. This, however, is merely a collateral attack upon the judgment in the habeas corpus proceeding, and, as that order recites that it was made after a hearing, we must assume that the court deemed the evidence sufficient to prove sanity.

In reference to the condition of the decedent at the time the will was destroyed, witnesses were produced who testified that he was then sane. This testimony was sufficient, if believed by the trial court, to sustain the finding that at the time the will was destroyed the decedent was sane, and knew the consequences of his act. When the sufficiency of the evidence is the basis of the appeal, our power ends when we find competent evidence which supports the finding, unless the testimony upon which the finding is based is wholly improbable or contrary to physical facts, so that we can say as matter of law that the finding is not supported by competent evidence.

[4] As to the issue of fraud and undue influence, we should add that the great preponderance of the evidence points unmistakably to a fixed course of conduct on the part of Louise Schmitz by which she secured possession of the decedent and his effects for the purpose of influencing him to destroy the will, but preponderance of the evidence alone does not justify a reversal. These charges were all denied by her, the trial court believed her, and her testimony alone is sufficient to support the findings adverse to appellants on these issues.

No errors in the conduct of the proceedings are assigned, and we find none in the record. Order affirmed.

I concur: STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 420
(Cr. 20.)

PEOPLE v. WILSON.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 25, 1930.

1. Criminal law ⇨1202(3)—Evidence held sufficient to support verdict of former convictions, defendant being identified as person named in records of prior judgment and imprisonment (Pen. Code, § 644).

Where defendant was charged with prior convictions and commitments for felonies, the authenticated record of conviction, sentence, and imprisonment of persons under various names, and identification of defendant as being person confined in different prisons at periods covered by respective sentences under names given in the judgments, was sufficient evidence to support judgment of former convictions and sentence to life imprisonment under Pen. Code, § 644.

2. Criminal law ⇨1159(2)—Verdict will be set aside only where it is clear that evidence is insufficient to support trial court's conclusion upon any theory.

On appeal, a verdict cannot be set aside on ground that it is unsupported by evidence unless it clearly appears that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support conclusion of trial court.

3. Criminal law ⇨339—Foundation being laid by proof that person sentenced to one prison was transferred, evidence was admissible to show defendant's identity.

Where it was shown that a person had been committed to San Quentin and later transferred to Folsom, evidence of identification of defendant as person thus transferred was properly received in support of identification of defendant as person committed to San Quentin.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

George Wilson was convicted of prior convictions, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

See also 280 P. 137.

Albert E. Weller and Fred Duffy, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and George H. Johnson, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for the People.

SLOANE, P. J. The defendant, George Wilson, pleaded guilty to an information filed by the district attorney of San Bernardino county charging him with the crime of burglary. Upon such plea of guilty the court proceeded to pass judgment and sentenced defendant to serve a term of imprisonment in the California state prison at San Quentin, of date January 14, 1929.

Immediately following such sentence a supplemental information was filed, charging four separate prior convictions and commitments for felonies previously committed by the defendant. Under this supplemental information it was charged that the defendant, George Wilson, under the name of Frank Clark, was in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Tulare, on or about the 6th day of June, 1914, convicted of the crime of burglary in the first degree, a felony, and was sentenced to serve a term of one year in the California state prison at San Quentin therefor.

That the defendant, George Wilson, under the name of William Henry Duncan, was in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Yuba, on or about the 9th day of April, 1919, convicted of the crime of burglary in the second degree, a felony, and was sentenced to serve a term of five years in the California state prison at San Quentin therefor.

That the defendant, George Wilson, under the name of Harry Jackson, was in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Yuba, on or about the 14th day of April, 1919, convicted of the crime of burglary in the second degree, a felony, and was sentenced to serve a term of five years in the California state prison commonly known as Folsom prison therefor.

That the defendant, George Wilson, under the name of Will Duncan, was, in the Second Judicial district court of the state of Nevada, in and for the county of Washoe, on or about the 17th day of July, 1926, convicted of the crime of attempted burglary in the second degree, a felony, and was sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment in the state prison at Carson City, Nev., therefor.

The third count in this information was dismissed for the reason that the commitment to the state prison at Folsom was for the same offense charged in the second count, and the commitment to the Folsom prison was merely a transfer of the defendant from San Quentin to Folsom, to which place of confinement defendant had been previously committed.

On the trial under the supplemental information defendant was convicted before a jury on the three remaining counts of former conviction. By reason of the former convictions defendant was sentenced to life imprisonment, pursuant to section 644 of the Penal Code.

The only question presented on this appeal is the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to identify the defendant, George Wilson, as the same person convicted and imprisoned under the former convictions and under the names, respectively, of Frank Clark, William Henry Duncan, and Will Duncan.

The evidence as shown by the record consists of authenticated copies of the judgment and commitment of the person named in each of the charges of former conviction and the receipt of the person so convicted at the respective prisons. Supplementing this evidence as to the first former conviction was the testimony of a witness, J. H. Carpenter, captain of the guard of the San Quentin penitentiary, who testified that he knew and saw, as a prisoner in the state prison at San Quentin, in June, 1914, an inmate there held under the name of Frank Clark, and identified in open court the defendant, George Wilson, as being that person.

The same witness also testified that in April, 1919, he knew and saw at the San Quentin penitentiary a person confined as a prisoner in said institution under the name of William Henry Duncan, alias Harry Jackson, who was afterwards transferred to the Folsom penitentiary, and identified in open court the defendant, George Wilson, as being that person.

A witness, John F. Connell, a guard at Folsom prison of some 30 years' employment, in further identification of the defendant, George Wilson, as the prisoner confined at San Quentin as William Henry Duncan, alias Harry Jackson, and afterwards transferred to Folsom, testified that he saw and knew in 1919 an inmate of the prison under the name of Harry Jackson and identified in open court the defendant, George Wilson, as being that person.

The authenticated copy of the record of the conviction and commitment to San Quentin of the person last mentioned, identified as the defendant, Wilson, shows that he was named in the judgment as William Henry Duncan, alias Harry Jackson.

On the identification of defendant under the Nevada conviction and commitment, it appears that the judgment and commitment in that case was in the name of Will Duncan. The witness Harland L. Howard, assistant district attorney of Washoe county, Nev., testified that he saw and knew the said Will or William Duncan in the courtroom of the Second judicial court in and for the county of Washoe, state of Nevada, and that he was the person described in the authenticated copy of judgment of conviction from that court, introduced in evidence in the present case, and that said Duncan and the defendant, George Wilson, are one and the same person.

[1] The authenticated record of a former conviction, sentence, and imprisonment of persons under the name of Frank Clark, William Henry Duncan, alias Harry Jackson, and Will Duncan, respectively, and the positive identification of the defendant as being the person confined under commitment in the three prisons named, at the periods covered by the respective sentences under the names given in the judgments, is sufficient evidence to support the verdict and judgment of the former convictions set out in the supplemental information in this case.

It is true that the identification of the defendant, Wilson, as being the same person convicted and imprisoned under the former convictions, is an essential part of the case for the prosecution, but it cannot be disputed that the introduction of the record of the conviction and imprisonment of the defendants named as Frank Clark, William Henry Duncan, alias Harry Jackson, and Will Duncan, and the identification by a competent witness of the defendant here as being the same person serving sentence under these respective judgments of conviction, is a sufficient identification.

On a former appeal of this case from an order granting a new trial, reported in (Cal. App.) 280 P. 137, the proof of conviction and identification of defendant under precisely the same evidence as was given in this case was upheld by the appellate court with reference to the convictions and commitment to San Quentin prison from Tulare and Yuba counties, and a new trial was granted on the ground of insufficient proof of the record of conviction in Nevada, which defect has been supplied in the present case.

As is stated in People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 184 P. 389:

[2] It is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after judgment, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached by the trial court.

[3] The alleged prior conviction of defendant and sentence to imprisonment in Folsom penitentiary was dismissed and eliminated from this case as one of the judgments of prior conviction, but under the showing that the party named in the prior conviction from Yuba county was transferred to Folsom, the evidence of identification of the defendant as the party so transferred was properly introduced in support of the conviction, and identification in the proceeding under which such transfer was made.

The judgment of conviction and order overruling and denying defendant's motion for new trial are affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 656

FLETCHER v. COMMERCIAL DISCOUNT
CO. et al. (Civ. 3974.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 1, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 3, 1930.

1. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨299(9)—Automobile held so far within dealer's control when ordered as to invalidate sale without change of possession as against subsequent innocent purchaser (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Evidence held to warrant inference that automobile was so far within control of dealer when ordered by original purchaser that former could have made delivery on payment of balance of price, so that sale without immediate delivery, followed by actual and continued change of possession, was fraudulent and hence void against subsequent innocent purchaser from dealer, under Civ. Code, § 3440.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨139—Transfer of automobile to purchaser by dealer, without delivery and change of possession, held void as against subsequent innocent purchaser from dealer (Civ. Code, § 3440).

Transfer of automobile to purchaser by dealer, from which it was ordered while in possession of distributor, without delivery and change of possession, held void as against subsequent purchaser in good faith from such dealer, under Civ. Code, § 3440.

3. Pleading ⇨434—Defective allegation of defense, not demurred to and clearly established by stipulation and evidence admitted without objection, held not available error.

Defective allegation of defense held not available on appeal, where no demurrer was filed, case was tried on theory that facts constituting defense were in issue, and defense was clearly established by stipulation and evidence admitted without objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by D. Fletcher against the Commercial Discount Company, a corporation, and another. From a judgment for named defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye and Ralph E. Wallace, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hardy, Elliott & Aberle and Rex Hardy, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of an automobile or its value. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant Commercial Discount Company for the possession of the automobile and in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant Hollywood Marmon Company for the value thereof. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment.

It was stipulated at the trial that on April 5, 1927, the Hollywood Marmon Company was "a motor vehicle dealer, * * * dealing particularly in Marmon automobiles"; that on that day the plaintiff "ordered from said Hollywood Marmon Company a certain five-passenger * * * automobile * * * for the sum of $4,405" and delivered to that company a 1925 Marmon sedan "as part payment in the sum of $2,250"; that on April 13, 1927, the plaintiff paid the balance of the purchase price and was given a memorandum of sale of the automobile, stating the motor number and other particulars to identify the machine; that the plaintiff never took possession of the automobile, "nor was there ever any actual or continuous change of possession of said automobile between the Hollywood Marmon Company and the plaintiff"; that the plaintiff "did not record any bill of sale or other indicia of ownership" or cause the automobile to be registered in the Motor Vehicle Department of the state; that "on April 21, 1927, and while said new automobile was then and there in the possession of the Hollywood Marmon Company, it sold and conveyed said new automobile and the title thereto to the defendant Commercial Discount Company, which thereupon entered into a conditional contract of sale * * * with said Hollywood Marmon Company; * * * that then and there and as a part of the same transaction, the defendant Commercial Discount Company paid to the Hollywood Marmon Company the sum of $2,890; that thereupon said Hollywood Marmon Company" caused the automobile to be registered in the Motor Vehicle Department "in the name of the Hollywood Marmon Company, with the legal ownership of said automobile registered in the name of the defendant Commercial Discount Company," which "received from said Motor Vehicle Department the customary and usual pink certificate of registration"; that the Commercial Discount Company did not "come into the actual possession of said automobile until May 6, 1927," up to which time the automobile remained in "the physical possession of said Hollywood Marmon Company"; that on said 6th day of May the "Commercial Discount Company took possession of said automobile and removed same from the place of business of the Hollywood Marmon Company"; that before it so removed the automobile "the plaintiff personally demanded of * * * the defendant Commercial Discount Company and of said Hollywood Marmon Company the possession of said new automobile, then and there stating that he was the owner of same."

In addition to the facts stipulated by the parties, the court found "that the Commercial Discount Company * * * had no notice expressed or implied of the transaction had between the plaintiff and the defendant Hollywood Marmon Company until May 5, 1927," and that "the automobile in question was prior to April 21, 1927, placed upon the sales floor of the defendant Hollywood Marmon Company and was offered for sale by said company to the general public."

From the foregoing facts the court drew conclusions of law as follows:

"That the defendant Commercial Discount Company * * * was innocent in the entire transaction"; that the plaintiff placed the Hollywood Marmon Company "in ostensible authority to sell and dispose of said automobile; * * * that as against the defendant Commercial Discount Company * * * title to the automobile involved in this litigation never passed to the plaintiff; that the defendant Commercial Discount Company is entitled to retain the possession of said automobile as against the plaintiff."

[1] The findings are supported by the evidence. Every transfer of personal property of the kind here involved "is conclusively presumed if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property; and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, * * * against purchasers or encumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer." Civ. Code, § 3440. Appellant contends that the automobile was not in possession of the Hollywood Marmon Company at the time the plaintiff ordered the machine, and that therefore section 3440 is not applicable. It appears from the evidence that on April 5, 1927, the automobile was in the possession of the Pelton Motor Company, distributor of Marmon automobiles, and that on that day the sales agent of the Hollywood Marmon Company and the plaintiff inspected it, and that thereupon the plaintiff selected that particular automobile, but with the understanding that, if another shipment of automobiles was received by the Pelton Motor Company by April 15, the plaintiff might select one of them in lieu of the one he had inspected, but the order which he signed on that day does not describe any particular automobile. It was addressed to Hollywood Marmon Company, dealer, "subject to your acceptance." No acceptance by the dealer is indorsed thereon. The memorandum of sale of April 13 contains, after the description of the automobile, the words, "or to be selected." R. E. Brown, the salesman through whom the plaintiff ordered the automobile, testified that, at the time the order was signed by the plaintiff on April 5, "he told me he better wait and see what came in, that he was in no hurry about a car, and so the deal was left open," and that "after the receipt (memorandum of sale of April 5) had been made I gave it to Mr. Fletcher and he stated that he did not want that automobile, so I asked him how I could give him a receipt for a car that I did not know anything about, I could not show any name or serial number, and then he said to insert 'or to be selected,' which was done by the stenographer." In explanation of a statement he had made to the district attorney, the defendant testified: "I stated that the reason I did not take possession of the automobile on or before the 13th, prior to payment, was because Mr. Brown had promised that a new shipment would arrive not later than the 15th of April, and * * * we decided that the car in question was actually purchased and paid for on the 13th and accepted by me on the 15th." The automobile came into the possession of the Hollywood Marmon Company on April 15th. The reasonable inference from the evidence is that the automobile was so far within the control of the Hollywood Marmon Company on April 5 that it could have made delivery thereof upon payment by the plaintiff of the balance of the purchase price, and it appears from the plaintiff's own testimony that he did not finally select the particular automobile in question until April 15th, when it was in the actual possession of the Hollywood Marmon Company. It must be held, therefore, that section 3440 is applicable.

[2] The transfer of the automobile from the Hollywood Marmon Company to the plaintiff was void for want of delivery and change of possession as against the Commercial Discount Company, which was a subsequent purchaser in good faith.

[3] The first separate defense alleges that such transfer was void. If it be conceded that such defense was defectively alleged, no demurrer thereto was filed and the case was tried upon the theory that the facts constituting such defense were in issue. The defense was clearly established by the stipulation referred to and evidence admitted without objection. The findings in relation thereto are determinative of the cause, and therefore it was unnecessary to find on other issues. 24 Cal. Jur. 947.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PLUMMER, J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 650

MILLER v. PRICE et al. (Civ. 3964.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 31, 1930.

1. Pleading Ⓒ349—In action for wrongful execution, granting defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings because plaintiff did not file affidavit denying genuineness of sheriff's instructions and return, made part of answer, held improper (Code Civ. Proc. § 448).

In action for damages for wrongful execution, where answer set forth certain writings relative to instructions given sheriff, and return of sheriff, granting judgment on pleadings for defendants, under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing that when defense to action is founded upon written instrument made part of answer, genuineness and due execution are admitted unless plaintiff file affidavit denying same, held improper, since writings in case were not binding on plaintiff, who was not party thereto.

2. Execution Ⓒ183—Levying of execution on property of one under claim that it belonged to another would entitle the former to begin action to determine adverse claims immediately (Code Civ. Proc. § 738).

Levying of execution on property of one under the claim that it belongs to third person would entitle the former to begin action immediately under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, to determine such adverse claim.

3. Appeal and error Ⓒ916(1)—On defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings, appellate court could only consider complaint.

On defendants' motion for judgment on pleadings, only complaint can be considered, and on same basis as though it were before appellate court on general demurrer.

4. Pleading ⚡34(4)—Presumptions are that pleader stated case as favorably as possible, and further presumptions are against pleader.

In considering complaint, all presumptions are that pleader has stated his case as favorably as possible, and if any further presumptions are to be indulged in they are against pleader.

5. Pleading ⚡8(9)—Allegation that sheriff wrongfully levied execution held to plead only a conclusion of law.

Allegation in action for damages for wrongful execution that sheriff wrongfully levied execution held demurrable as pleading only a conclusion of law.

6. Pleading ⚡17—Matters of substance must be alleged in direct terms.

Matters of substance must be alleged in pleadings in direct terms, and not by way of recital.

7. Execution ⚡470—Complaint in action for wrongful execution held insufficient to state cause of action.

In action for wrongful execution, complaint which did not allege exclusive ownership, and which did not charge defendants with giving wrongful instructions to sheriff under which sheriff levied execution, held not to state cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Loren L. Miller against W. C. Price and others. Judgment for defendants on pleadings, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 283 P. 348.

L. C. Woods, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. [1] This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendants upon the pleadings. The complaint in the action alleges that on, and prior to, the 11th day of February, 1926, the plaintiff was the owner of certain real property situate in the county of Los Angeles, particularly described in the complaint; that said property was, at the date mentioned, and at the date of the beginning of this action, of the value of $11,500, incumbered to the amount of $2,638, secured by a deed of trust payable on the 17th day of March, 1926; that on the 11th day of February, 1926, the said defendants caused to be issued out of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, an execution in an action entitled "W. C. Price v. John P. Hight et al.," and that acting under and by virtue of said writ of execution, and under the instructions of said defendants as to what property to levy upon, the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles did, on the 13th day of February, 1926, wrongfully, and without right so to do, levy upon the property hereinbefore referred to; that at the time of the levy upon said property, the plaintiff was negotiating for a loan of sufficient amount to satisfy the aforesaid incumbrance, and was at such time offering as security for the money to be loaned, a deed of trust on the foregoing property, and that the plaintiff had no other means by which to obtain a sufficient sum to satisfy said incumbrance; that by reason of said wrongful levy as aforesaid, the plaintiff was unable to secure the money with which to satisfy the said obligation, and that on the 30th day of July, 1926, the trustees in said trust deed named, sold said real property to satisfy the obligation referred to; that by reason of the foregoing wrongful acts on the part of the defendants, the plaintiff has suffered damage in the sum of $8,862. To this complaint the defendants interposed both a general and special demurrer. The demurrer being overruled, the defendants answered, denying the ownership of the plaintiff, and set forth in their answer certain writings relative to the instructions given the sheriff, and the return of the sheriff that he had levied upon the interest of one L. B. Miller in the real property described in the plaintiff's complaint. Thereafter the defendants, relying upon the provisions of section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: "When the defense to an action is founded upon a written instrument, and a copy thereof is contained in the answer, or is annexed thereto, the genuineness and due execution of such instrument are deemed admitted, unless the plaintiff file with the clerk, within ten (10) days after receiving a copy of the answer, an affidavit denying the same, and serve a copy thereof on the defendant," interposed a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Judgment went for the defendants upon this motion. Irrespective of what we may say hereafter, it is clearly apparent that the basis assigned for the defendants' motion is unsound. The writings referred to are writings with which the defendants only were connected, and with which the plaintiff had nothing to do. Such writings, not being binding upon the opposite party, furnish no grounds whatever for a judgment against such party. If such papers are admissible at all in evidence, they are only in the case for what they are worth, and not as instruments binding upon the plaintiff in this action. Such papers are binding only upon the parties who have signed the same. This clearly appears from the following cases: Heath v. Lent, 1 Cal. 411; Marx v. Raley & Co., 6 Cal. App. 479, 92 P. 519; Citizens' Bank & Trust Co. v. Pocatello, 41 Idaho, 403, 240 P. 186; Krug v. Warden, 57 Cal. App. 563, 207 P. 696; Interstate Realty & Improvement Co. v. Clark, 77 Cal. 558, 247 P. 244.

[2] Practically admitting that these decisions are conclusive against respondents for the reasons first presented in support of their motion for judgment, it is contended that the order granting the motion and the judgment entered thereon should nevertheless, for other reasons, be affirmed. In this behalf it is argued that an execution issued in an action in which the plaintiff was not a party, and the levying thereof upon the lands claimed by him, fail to cast a cloud upon the title of the plaintiff, as it would appear from the record that the plaintiff, not being named as a party, the proceeding is void upon its face, and therefore an action in equity to remove the cloud would not lie. This contention of the respondents appears to be well taken, as appears in the case of Russ & Sons Co. v. Crichton, 117 Cal. 695, 49 P. 1043, and the cases there cited. This, however, does not relieve the respondents from liability if they are otherwise sufficiently charged in the plaintiff's complaint. While the weight of authority is in support of the contention that equity will not interfere to remove a cloud upon title to real estate where the invalidity of the instrument said to cast such cloud appears upon the face thereof, this apparent defect in affording a landowner a remedy has been obviated by section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to adverse claims. In Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 443, 21 P. 946, 947, the Supreme Court had before it the question of when an action would lie to determine an adverse claim, rather than by a proceeding in equity to remove a cloud. It is there said, quoting section 738: "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim." * * * The distinction between the two kinds of action is clear. They are different not merely in form, * * * but in purpose. In the former case the proceeding is aimed at a particular instrument, or piece of evidence, which is dangerous to the plaintiff's rights, and which may be ordered to be destroyed in whosoever hands it may happen to be; while in the latter the proceeding is for the purpose of stopping the mouth of a person who has asserted or is asserting a claim to the plaintiff's property [whether such claim be founded upon evidence or utterly baseless]. It is not aimed at a particular piece of evidence, but at the pretensions of an individual. * * * The statute enlarges the class of cases in which equitable relief could formerly be sought in the quieting of title." The opinion further goes on to approve cases holding that it is not necessary that the adverse claim should be of any particular character. A like question was before the Supreme Court in the case of Dranga v. Rowe, 127 Cal. 506, 59 P. 944, 945, where it was said, quoting from the language of the same court in Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 564, 25 P. 58: "It is contended that the complaint does not warrant any relief, because it shows that the adverse claims of defendants rest upon proceedings which are void upon their face. But this objection is not available in an action to determine an adverse claim, under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such an action may be maintained against a person who claims under a void tax deed." From which it follows that the levying of an execution upon the property of one person, under the claim that it belongs to a third person, would entitle the plaintiff to begin an action immediately to determine such adverse claim, and we think it is scarcely open to question that no one would either care to loan money upon the security of real estate or to purchase the same where adverse claims thereto are undetermined.

[3-6] This brings us to the crucial question determinative of this appeal: Does the complaint state any cause of action? Upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings only the complaint can be considered, and upon the same basis as though it were before the court upon a general demurrer. This is the well-settled law of this state. Elmore v. Tingley, 78 Cal. App. 460, 248 P. 706, and the authorities cited in the opinion in that case. Upon the premise thus laid down, let us examine the complaint. Paragraph one of the complaint alleges the ownership of the plaintiff to the real property set forth therein, but it does not allege possession or exclusive ownership. The Civil Code describes ownership of property as being either absolute or qualified. Admitting that this may be only an ambiguity which should be reached by special demurrer, yet the fact remains that the judgment does not show exclusive ownership or possession of any kind, and for all that the complaint shows the person against whom the execution ran may have been in possession of the premises and the owner of a qualified interest therein which would be subject to sale on execution. A vital defect, however, appears in paragraph three of the complaint, where it is attempted to charge wrongful levy of the writ of execution. It is there set forth that in an action entitled "W. C. Price v. John P. Hight et al.," the sheriff of the county of Los Angeles, acting under instructions of the defendants, wrongfully, etc., levied upon the property described in the complaint. There is not one word in the paragraph referred to, or in any other portion of the complaint, charging the defendants in this action with giving any wrongful instructions. The wrongdoing is charged as the act of the sheriff, who is not a party to this action. Furthermore, the charge that the sheriff wrongfully levied the execution is not a statement of any fact tendering an issue, but is only a conclusion of law. 21 Cal. Jur., p. 31, § 16. Paragraph four of the complaint sets forth that at the time of the levy of the execution the plaintiff was negotiating for a loan to be secured by a trust deed covering the property involved. There is nothing in the complaint showing the character of such negotiations, or that the same would have been successful. Paragraph five of the complaint alleges that by reason of said alleged wrongful levy of execution, the plaintiff was unable to secure the money with which to satisfy the obligation, and that on the 30th day of July, 1926, the trustee in the deed of trust referred to sold the property mentioned in the complaint. This paragraph does not contain a single statement of fact, but is a pure conclusion of the pleader. It must be here borne in mind that the complaint shows that the levy of the execution was made on the 13th day of February, 1926, and the sale of the property did not take place until the 30th day of July, 1926, lacking thirteen days of being just six months thereafter. There is nothing in the complaint showing that any adverse claims to the property could not have been determined during the time between the levy of the execution and the sale of the property. Not a single fact is set forth in the complaint as to anything done or performed by the plaintiff relative to securing money to take up the obligation secured by the trust deed, and the whole cause of action simply rests upon the conclusion of the pleader that he was unable to do so by reason of the alleged wrongful levy of execution. There is nothing in the complaint from which it can be concluded that the plaintiff was not a party to the action in which the execution was issued. The defendants in that action are named as "John P. Hight et al.," and there is no statement of any facts showing that the person referred to by the words "et al." possessed no interest in the property levied upon. In considering the complaint, all the presumptions are that the pleader has stated his case as favorably as possible, and, if any further presumptions are to be indulged in, they are against the pleader. See Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 192 P. 534. It is further held in the case just cited that matters of substance must be alleged in direct terms, and not by way of recital.

[7] Upon this analysis of the complaint, which was not made upon the original hearing hereof, we are led to the conclusion that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and that the defendants were entitled to prevail upon their motion, and that the judgment entered thereon should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

COSSINS v. HERSHEL CALIFORNIA FRUIT PRODUCTS CO. (Civ. 3948.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 29, 1930.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Feb. 28, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨989—In determining whether evidence supports finding, appellate court determines merely whether there is substantial supporting evidence.

The function of an appellate court in determining whether evidence is insufficient to support finding is to determine merely whether there is substantial evidence to support the finding.

2. Sales ⇨153, 177—Refusal of buyer to accept tomatoes tendered and notice to seller it would receive no more was repudiation of contract, relieving seller from making further tender.

Buyer's refusal to accept tomatoes it had agreed to purchase from plaintiff seller which buyer's inspector had inspected, and information conveyed to seller through another that buyer would receive no more tomatoes from him, held to be such a repudiation of contract as to relieve seller of necessity of making any further tender of tomatoes.

3. Sales ⇨181(12)—Failure to show that tomatoes rejected by buyer's inspector under contract to purchase them were of marketable quality held fatal defect in proof.

Failure to show, in action for damages for alleged refusal to accept and pay for tomatoes which buyer had agreed to purchase from plaintiff seller and his assignors, that tomatoes of two of assignors which inspector of buyer rejected were of marketable quality, held to be fatal defect in proof.

4. Damages ⇨62(4)—After buyer's rejection of one load of tomatoes from crop it agreed to purchase, sellers had duty to make reasonable efforts to minimize their damages (Civ. Code, § 3353).

After inspector of buyer sued for alleged failure to accept and pay for tomatoes it had agreed to purchase from plaintiff seller and his assignors had rejected carload of tomatoes, it was duty of sellers to make reasonable efforts to minimize their damages as required by Civ. Code, § 3353.

5. Sales ⇨181(11)—Evidence held insufficient to support finding that one of sellers tendered delivery of certain tomatoes to buyer refusing to accept them, for which loss damages were claimed.

Evidence, in action for alleged failure of buyer to accept and pay for tomatoes it had agreed to purchase from plaintiff seller and assignors, held insufficient to support finding that one of seller's assignors tendered delivery of certain tomatoes to buyer but that buyer refused to accept them, for loss of which damages were claimed.

6. Sales  83—That buyer furnished seller of tomatoes with boxes for some of shipments did not render buyer liable for failure to furnish boxes demanded for other shipments contrary to contract.

Where contract for purchase of tomato crop provided that, if for convenience of seller buyer furnished boxes to seller for delivery of fruit and vegetables, rental charge per box for each time used should be paid by seller and that buyer would not be held accountable or responsible for failure to furnish boxes at any particular time, that buyer did in fact furnish one of sellers with boxes for some of his shipments did not render it liable on that account in damages, contrary to express provisions of contract for failure to furnish boxes demanded for other shipments.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Action by B. T. Cossins against the Hershel California Fruit Products Company. From an adverse judgment, the defendant appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Levinsky & Jones and Charles H. Epperson, Jr., all of Stockton, for appellant.

G. M. Steele, of Lodi, and Scott Rex, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an action for damages for the defendant's alleged refusal to accept and pay for tomatoes raised by the plaintiff and his assignors during the year 1926, and which the defendant had agreed to purchase, and for balances due for tomatoes delivered and accepted by the defendant. The complaint contains five counts, based on five separate contracts. The plaintiff is the seller named in the first contract, A. F. Donald and F. Ascrizzi in the second, C. C. Burnett and P. Giordano in the third, E. Leventini in the fourth, and Thomas Lazini in the fifth. Judgment for damages was entered in favor of the plaintiff on the first four counts and for the defendant on the fifth. The judgment is in favor of the plaintiff also for the amount which the answer admits was due for tomatoes accepted by defendant. The defendant has appealed from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

Each contract provides that the buyer "has bought" the crop of "Early Anna" tomatoes to be grown by the seller upon a specified acreage during the year 1926 at $14.10 per ton, delivered f. o. b. cars "as hereafter directed by buyer." The defendant supplied the sellers with seed, a part thereof being of a different variety from that specified in the contract. This departure from the terms of the contract appears to have been made by mutual consent and is not material here. It seems to have been understood between the parties that the tomatoes were to be delivered at Peltier station.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings in favor of the plaintiff. Some parts of the appellant's argument go to the weight of the evidence rather than its insufficiency. Since the function of an appellate court in this respect is to determine merely whether there is substantial evidence to support the findings, it is deemed sufficient to state the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff.

Early in July, when from two to four tons of tomatoes per acre were ripe and ready for market, the defendant refused to take them. This refusal constituted a plain breach of the agreements with the growers. However, at the defendant's suggestion, the growers sold their tomatoes, as they ripened, to other buyers, until the defendant opened its cannery, and they have made no claim for damages arising out of this first breach.

The defendant's cannery was opened in the early part of August, and during the remainder of that month the defendant accepted the tomatoes shipped to it by the growers, making deductions, however, for those claimed to be of inferior quality. The cannery is located at San Jose. At the inception of the transactions in question, the defendant employed J. S. Triolo, who was engaged in the fruit and produce business in the city of Stockton, "to contract these tomatoes, supervise the loading, pay for the labor of loading, for the sum of 75 cents a ton on all contracts," and also to inspect the tomatoes before shipment and "keep a proper daily report of each car that is shipped." He or his assistant, Victor Ghiorzo, inspected all shipments of tomatoes involved in this action made during August but, apparently, not to the satisfaction of the defendant. About September 3, the defendant employed John Vasconcellos to inspect the tomatoes of the Peltier growers. His first act was to reject tomatoes offered for shipment by the growers mentioned in the first three counts. The plaintiff testified that those so offered by him "were in good condition. They were sorted tomatoes, picked very carefully * * * and sorted. * * * We threw all the bad tomatoes in the ditches, absolutely trying to get by the inspector, and they were excellent tomatoes, in fine shape, solid; the boxes were well filled; they were not mashed. * * * I got plenty of instructions through Mr. Triolo from Mr. Hershel (president and general manager of defendant) to keep me from moving my 510 tons. * * * He gave me the instructions Hershel sent word that he didn't want anything more to do with Cossins at all, he would receive no more tomatoes from his ranch. * * * He told me that about the second day after the inspection took place." Triolo testified that shortly after September 3 Hershel "told me he wanted nothing more to do with Cossins." Hershel's statement appears to have been induced by violent language and conduct of plaintiff towards Vasconcellos at the time of the inspection mentioned. Triolo testified, without objection, as follows: "I said to him, 'you are a tomato inspector?' 'Well,' he says, 'No, I can't say I am. * * * I am in the tire business in San Jose.' I said, 'You have no experience in growing tomatoes or anything?' He said, 'No, I have not, but I know just what I want to accept.' * * * On one particular occasion I * * * brought the subject up, what kind of tomatoes he (Cossins) had to deliver. Mr. Vasconcellos at that time informed me that they had to be perfect, no deductions were allowed. * * * He told me he would stand for no dockage at Peltier."

Mrs. Burnett testified Vasconcellos said he could not accept the Burnett tomatoes inspected at the time mentioned "because they are not 100% pure. I told him, 'You can not raise anything like that.' He said, 'Well I know that, but that is my instructions, not to take them unless they are 100% pure. * * * Perhaps not that word, but 'perfect.' * * * He said the tomatoes were good, but he could not take them because they were not 100% perfect." Mr. Burnett testified that at another time Vasconcellos inspected two loads of tomatoes belonging to the witness and "said, 'I reject these.' I said, 'What is the matter, those tomatoes are all right.' * * * He said, 'Those tomatoes are all right, those tomatoes are good, but my instructions are that they must be at Peltier 100% perfect. At Stockton I am allowed to make deductions and let them go on, but at Peltier they must be 100% perfect. * * * I am sorry, I am not anything but a hired man, I must follow my instructions.'" Another witness testified that the tomatoes so rejected were "all right tomatoes, all in good condition, * * * good, merchantable tomatoes." Ghiorzo testified that Vasconcellos found a few of Burnett's tomatoes "kind of cracked, and some with green ends at the stem, and he said that he could not accept those tomatoes under his directions. * * * That is, he could not accept them unless they were 100% perfect." Triolo testified: "An Early Anna tomato has a characteristic or individuality, no matter how ripe it gets, there is always at the butt end of the tomato a sort of greenish spot. * * * That tomato will rot and still the green spot will be on it." It was stipulated at the trial that the Early Anna tomato will not "ripen up so that the green spot where the stem has been will disappear and turn red."

The plaintiff and his assignor Burnett made no further effort to deliver their tomatoes to the defendant, but sold as many of them as they could find markets for to other buyers at the best price obtainable, which was lower than the defendant had agreed to pay therefor; the market price having fallen below such agreed price. The court gave judgment for damages in the amount of the agreed price of the unsold tomatoes, less the estimated cost of picking and delivering them.

[2] The appellant contends that the growers did not make a sufficient tender of the tomatoes to put the buyer in default. While the evidence would support a finding either way on that issue, it cannot be held as a matter of law that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding to the effect that the defendant repudiated its contract with the plaintiff and that with Burnett and Giordano. It not only refused to accept plaintiff's tomatoes which Vasconcellos first inspected, but informed the plaintiff through Triolo that it would receive no more tomatoes from him. This was such a repudiation of the contract as to relieve the plaintiff of the necessity of making any further tender. Tomboy Gold & Copper Co. v. Marks, 185 Cal. 336, 197 P. 94. The defendant unreasonably refused to accept the tomatoes of Burnett and Giordano. One of the grounds upon which they were rejected was the presence of green spots at the stem end, a condition which it was impossible to avoid, a fact the defendant must have known when it agreed to purchase Early Anna tomatoes. In justice to the defendant, it may be added that much of the damaging testimony given against it was denied by its witnesses, but the determination of the conflict was within the exclusive province of the trial court.

The evidence is conflicting also as to the tonnage of tomatoes lost by the plaintiff and his assignors because of the defendant's repudiation of the contracts. Such evidence is too extensive to be set forth herein, but an examination thereof shows that it is sufficient to support the findings in relation thereto.

[3, 4] The evidence fails to show that tomatoes of Donald and Ascrizzi which Vasconcellos rejected were of marketable quality. This is a fatal defect of proof. It appears from Donald's testimony that after Vasconcellos rejected one load of tomatoes they "stopped irrigating" and made no effort to market the remainder of the crop. He testified: "There was no use of picking if you were under contract with a cannery and the cannery would not take them, and I was not going to take chances to sell to somebody else and then get in trouble over that." It was the duty of these sellers to make reasonable efforts to minimize their damages. Civ. Code, § 3353; Vitagraph, Inc., v. Liberty Theatres Co., 197 Cal. 694, 242 P. 709; Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal. 5, 29 P. 406; 8 Cal. Jur. 782, 787.

[5] It appears from Leventini's testimony that he continued to deliver tomatoes to the defendant until about the first of November. His claim for damages, according to his testimony, was based on defendant's failure to furnish him a sufficient number of boxes for the shipment of his tomatoes. The complaint does not allege any such default on the part of the defendant and the court made no finding in relation thereto. The complaint alleges that Leventini "tendered delivery of said tomatoes to defendant," but that the defendant refused to accept those for the loss of which damages are claimed. The court found to the same effect. There is no evidence to support this finding. The written agreement does not obligate the defendant to furnish boxes. The contract provides: "If, for the convenience of seller, buyer shall furnish boxes to seller for delivery of fruit and vegetables, a rental charge of one cent per box for each time used * * * shall be paid by seller. * * * Buyer will not be held accountable or responsible for failure to furnish boxes at any particular time."

[6] The defendant did, in fact, furnish Leventini with boxes for some of his shipments, but it cannot be held on that account that it is liable in damages, contrary to the express provisions of the contract, for its failure to furnish boxes demanded for other shipments.

The other grounds urged by appellant for the reversal of the judgment on the first and third counts have been considered, and it is deemed sufficient to say that they appear to be without sufficient merit to warrant a discussion thereof.

The judgment in favor of the plaintiff for damages in the sum of $1,085.80 on the second count of the complaint and $715.43 on the fourth count is reversed, and in all other respects the judgment is affirmed.

The trial court is directed to retry the causes of action for damages alleged in the second and fourth counts of the complaint.

We concur: R. L. THOMPSON, J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 703

SINAN v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO.
et al. (Civ. 203.) *

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California. Feb. 4, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1930.

1. Carriers ⇨291—Passenger carrier is not insurer of safety of traffic.

Although extreme care and diligence is required of railway company carrying passengers in keeping its track in safe condition, it is not an insurer of safety of traffic.

2. Carriers ⇨320(22)—Where passenger train ran into open switch, negligence in employees' failure to notify train master that switch had been spiked held for jury.

In action for injuries sustained by passenger when train ran into open switch and was wrecked, question whether there was actionable negligence in failure of employees of carrier to notify train master that switch had been spiked held for jury.

3. Carriers ⇨316(5)—Burden was on carrier to prove wreck was caused by malicious tampering with switch and that carrier was not negligent in failing to discover condition in time to avert accident.

In action for injuries sustained by passenger when train ran into open switch, burden was on defendant carrier, not only to satisfy jury that wreck was caused by malicious tampering with switch, but that carrier was not guilty of negligence in failing to discover condition of track in time to avert accident.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1001(1)—Appellate court cannot disregard jury's findings, where sustained by evidence.

Where evidence is sufficient to raise an issue for jury, it is not province of appellate court to disregard its findings.

5. Carriers ⇨320(22)—In action by passenger for injuries sustained when train ran into open switch, question whether wreck was caused by malicious tampering with switch held for jury.

In action for injuries sustained by passenger when train ran into open switch, question whether wreck was caused by malicious tampering with switch held for jury.

6. Carriers ⇨320(22)—Where train wreck was caused by open switch, carrier's negligence in not discovering condition in time to avert accident held for jury.

In action for injuries sustained by passenger when train ran into open switch, question whether carrier was negligent in not discovering condition of switch in time to avert accident held for jury.

7. Trial ⇨253(7)—When instruction directs verdict if jury finds certain facts, it must embrace all things necessary to support verdict.

When instruction directs verdict, if jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all things necessary to support verdict and to show legal rights or liability of party in whose favor verdict is directed to be returned.

8. Carriers ⇨321(12)—Where train ran into open switch and was wrecked, instruction finding of derailment of train by act of third party entitled carrier to verdict, without mentioning subsequent negligence in failing to discover displaced switch, held erroneous.

In action for injuries sustained by passenger when train ran into open switch, instruction in effect that finding of derailment of train by act of third party not employed by carrier entitled carrier to verdict in its favor, which instruction entirely relieved carrier from any showing as to opportunity or diligence in discovering condition of switch in time to have averted accident, held erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Antoine Sinan against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company and others for damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Fred C. Peterson, of Oakland, and Emmons & Aldrich, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

E. W. Camp and Robert Brennan, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, P. J. This is a case in which the decision on appeal rests chiefly on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury, and in which, it is conceded by both plaintiff and defendant, there is no conflict in the evidence.

The verdict was for the defendant, and the correctness of such verdict must rest upon the justification from the undisputed facts for the inferences and conclusions which must have been arrived at to support the verdict.

As the testimony of the numerous witnesses, shown in the bill of exceptions, is in substantial accord, nothing is to be gained by reviewing such testimony in detail.

The consensus of the separate narrations as to the facts pertaining to the accident is as follows:

On the 2d day of December, 1922, train 22 of the defendant railway company departed from Ferry Point, on San Francisco Bay, bound for Barstow, Cal. Plaintiff was a passenger on this train at the time and place of the accident. While the train was moving southerly about four miles north of the city of Bakersfield, it was derailed, and the plaintiff thereby received the injuries complained of.

The roadbed at the scene of the derailment was practically level, without curves, and was rock-ballasted and in good condition. The train passed the station of Shafter at 5:21 p. m., a distance of 16 miles from the scene of the wreck, and arrived at the place of the accident at 5:37 p. m., after dark, covering the intervening distance in 16 minutes. The rate of speed on the approach to the point of derailment was variously estimated by witnesses at from 45 to 60 miles per hour. The accident occurred at a junction of the main line with a little-used spur track known as the Shattuck-Nemo spur, which was connected with the main line by the usual switching appliances.

This spur track had not been used for a considerable period of time, and the switch not only was kept locked, but a spike had been driven at the point of connection of the spur rail with the main line, so as to furnish an additional safeguard against opening the switch. On reaching this point, the engine and train ran in and upon the spur track and was derailed, the engineer killed, the fireman injured so that he died soon after, and the injuries complained of inflicted on the plaintiff.

Immediately after the accident, an inspection disclosed that the switch was open so as to deflect the moving train from the main line upon the spur track, thus causing the derailment. The switching device was, however, found locked, and the signal lights attached were found burning, with the green light facing the approaching train, and other signal devices in place, indicating that the main track was open for passing trains.

The position and operation of these signals is explained in the testimony as follows: Testimony of L. E. Heaster, a brakeman on the wrecked train, who examined the switch and signals immediately after the accident: "When I examined the switch I found it was locked, and that the switch and signals were in a position for a clear main line track. When I first observed the connecting rod of the shuttle box which operates the electrical signal device, I found it disconnected, lying on the ground with the bolt missing therefrom, and the cotter pin was gone. The same situation existed with respect to the pitman rod—it was resting on the ties, with the bolts and other appliances used to connect it to the pitman rod missing."

Other witnesses testified to the same effect as to the condition of the switch and signaling devices immediately after the wreck.

The record on appeal does not make the relation of these parts to each other very clear to the layman, but it appears that photographs and diagrams not included in the transcript were displayed to the jury, purporting to give the jurors a clear understanding of the situation.

To quote another of several witnesses who testified to practically the same conditions immediately following the accident, the witness Clark, a porter on the train, in the employ of the Pullman Company, testified: "I saw the light on the switch-stand was showing east and west and saw it was clear. I looked underneath and saw this switch was thrown, which would cause the train to go on the switch instead of the main line, and the bolts were disconnected from the rod, between the rods from the switch-stand to the rails, and at that time I called the conductor's attention to it. He and I and some other passengers went there again to look for bolts, but we did not find any. I do not know the technical names of the rods or appliances, but the rod that reaches from the switch-stand over to the rails, and the rod that reaches from the electric box to the rails was disconnected. They had been disconnected by the removal of the bolts and the rods were lying on the ground."

The evidence also discloses that the spike which had been driven to hold the switch closed had been bent over to such an extent as to permit the switch rail to pass over it. It also appears that another south-bound train had passed this point safely a few hours previously, indicating that the switch was not open at that time.

We do not see how the jury could reach any other conclusion than that the wreck was caused by the train running into an open switch.

Some contention is made that the switch might have been thrown by the operation of a car wheel with a sharp flange, concerning which there was some evidence. But appellant concedes that there was sufficient conflict in the evidence to justify the jury in rejecting that theory.

The question next presents itself: Who was responsible for the open switch? Appellant contends, and respondent concedes, that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies to this accident, and that the presumption of negligence rests on the defendant, and, to rebut such presumption, the burden was on the defendant to satisfy the jury that the open switch was not the result of lack of due care and diligence on the part of the employees and servants of the railway company. Respondents claim to have met this requirement by showing of facts justifying a finding that the displacement of the switch was an act of malicious vandalism on the part of persons unknown.

The controversy on this appeal rests chiefly upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support this implied finding of the jury.

There are two other theories on which the jury might have acted, either of which would have established the liability of the defendant: First, that defendant's employees, within the scope of their employment, had left the switch open, after removing and negligently failing to replace the disconnected parts of the switching apparatus; or second, that the defendant company had sufficient opportunity and notice to have enabled it, in the exercise of due care and diligence, to have discovered the dangerous situation in time to have averted the wreck.

There is no direct evidence to support the first of these theories, and the extent of the disarrangement of the appliances, the number of detached parts, and the fact that so short a time had elapsed since trains had passed safely over this part of the road, rendered such situation extremely improbable. It is inconceivable that this switch could have been left in the condition shown by the evidence by the mere negligence or carelessness of an employee. The combination of displacements points more logically to a deliberate act of sabotage.

[1] On the second theory, while extreme care and diligence is required of the railway company in keeping its track in a safe condition, it is not an insurer of the safety of traffic. The evidence discloses that inspection of the track and switches was made daily by the company in the manner and at intervals accepted as adequate and customary in such matters. Such inspection, of course, cannot require the oversight of every foot of the roadway during every hour of the day. It does not appear very clearly just when this particular switch was inspected prior to the accident, but there is evidence that some time during the day one Medina, a trackwalker for the railway company, had made a report to one of his superiors to the effect that the spike heretofore referred to had been driven at the switch as an additional safeguard against accidental displacement of the rail. It appears that the using of such a spike was customary at spur tracks which were infrequently used.

Appellant argues that, with knowledge that this spike had been driven, it was incumbent on the defendant company to have immediately sent some one to inspect the switch, or to have notified traffic on the road of the position of the spiked rail. The defendant Frank Stewart, a foreman in the Bakersfield yards of the defendant company, testified as follows: That about noon of the date of the accident a trackwalker by the name of Jesus Medina came into the yards at Bakersfield on his trackwalking velocipede, and told the witness Stewart that he (Medina) had spiked the switch at the spur across the river. The witness testified that the only spur within the jurisdiction of Medina across the river was the spur at which the accident occurred. Stewart then endeavored to find Welsh, the timekeeper, but failed to do so, and did not report to any official of the company that he had received the statement of Medina. He made no effort to telegraph the trainmaster at Fresno that the switch had been spiked.

A rule of the railroad company, No. 600, provides as follows: "In case it becomes necessary to spike a switch, the trainmaster must be advised by telegraph or telephone as soon as possible, and also advised when switch is ready for use."

Archibald Wood, trainmaster of the defendant railway company at Fresno, the official to whom the report should have been made, testified that no reports were made to him as trainmaster, nor to his office, that the Shattuck-Nemo spur had been spiked by any person. He also testified that, in the event a switch had been spiked and a report made to him thereof, a special bulletin of caution would have been issued to the operating crew of every train which would pass over the spiked switch from the time the report was received by the trainmaster until a further report was received that the switch had been repaired, and it would then be the duty of the train operators to run at a slow rate of speed and use caution over the spiked switch.

[2] The circumstances just narrated evidence some degree of negligence on the part of the employees of defendant in conforming to the rules of the company, but we cannot say as a matter of law that any failure in this regard proximately contributed to the accident. It was a matter to be considered by the jury as to whether there was actionable negligence in this respect. There is nothing in the record to indicate that in this particular instance the presence of the spike in question added anything to the danger of the situation. The practice of spiking the switch rail at unused switches would seem to be a very reasonable precaution against possible accidental displacement of the switch rail, but the evidence discloses that the ordinary switching appliances which existed at this point are deemed entirely adequate at the numerous switching stations along the railroad. Had notice of the presence of this spike been given to the train crew in advance of the accident, it is possible that the train would have approached the spur track in question with a degree of caution which might have prevented the accident, notwithstanding the signal lights showing an open track on the main line. But we think it was for the jury to determine whether there was negligence on the part of the railroad employees in failing to advise the proper authorities under rule No. 600 quoted, or whether or not the presence of this spike, in view of the other evidence relating to the displacement of the switch, in any way contributed to the wreck.

If the switch itself had not been tampered with, it would under usual circumstances have been a sufficient safeguard against accident, irrespective of the presence or absence of the additional precaution of the spike.

We do not find any support in the evidence for appellant's claim that Medina's report of having spiked the switch rail resulted from his finding the switch out of order, or that he did find it out of order or so reported.

Of course, if he did so find, his failure to report to that effect in the due course of his employment would establish negligence on the part of the railway company. The mere spiking of the switch rail would raise no inference that the switch itself was out of order, as the testimony shows that it was a customary precaution at unused side tracks.

It is our conclusion that the verdict of the jury exonerating the defendant company from liability rests on the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a finding that the wreck was caused by an act of vandalism by some one not acting in the course of employment as a servant to defendant and of sufficient evidence to disprove a presumption of negligence in discovery.

Counsel for appellant have gone into the law relating to the degree of proof necessary to sustain a finding of sabotage with much industry and research. It is their contention that the evidence on this point was insufficient to overcome the presumption of negligence resting upon the defendant under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

[3] The burden was on the defendant company not only to satisfy the jury that the wreck was caused by malicious tampering with the switch, but that the company was not guilty of negligence in failing to discover the condition of the track in time to avert the accident. Counsel for appellant cite the case of Chicago, M. & St. P. Co. v. Irving (C. C. A.) 234 F. 562, 569, as indicating the degree of proof required to sustain a defense of vandalism. The opinion in that case recites:

"The defense relied upon evidence largely circumstantial, tending to show that some person unknown to it had deliberately pulled some spikes, removed angle bars, and displaced a rail. This may have been a correct way of accounting for the derailment, but the reasonableness of such a conclusion was evidently not clear to the jury and to the District Judge and, as we read the testimony, is by no means a satisfactory explanation to us."

[4] The difficulty in applying this case to the situation here presented is that the jury there found for the plaintiff, evidently rejecting the defense of vandalism, and the appellate court merely holds that such a finding by the jury was justified by the evidence. In this case, if the jury had found on this issue for the plaintiff, we would not be in a position to dispute the correctness of their verdict. Where the evidence is sufficient to raise an issue for the jury, it is not the province of the appellate court to disregard its findings.

The case of Norton v. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 1044, 1046, is also relied upon by appellant.

In that case the only issue presented by the petition was the unsafe condition of the track by reason of a failure to properly spike and tamp the ties, and to fill in between them and surface the same where old ties had been removed and new ones substituted; this being the only ground of negligence presented by the pleadings in evidence. Under its general denial, the defendant sought to show that it employed skillful trackmen to care for the track, and that they performed that duty in a careful and prudent manner the day before the accident occurred. The defendant also set up the defense that the wreck in question was caused solely by reason of the act of some person or persons not connected with the defendant company. The verdict and judgment was for the defendant. The issue of vandalism was submitted to the jury under an instruction that, "if you believe from the evidence that defendant's train, upon which plaintiff was a passenger, was derailed solely by reason of the act of some person or persons not connected with the defendant company, you must return a verdict for the defendant." The appellate court held that there was not sufficient evidence of vandalism to justify the submission of this issue to the jury. The only evidence on this point was that the employees of the company had left a push car and tools at the place where the wreck occurred. The push car was found on the morning of the wreck about 600 or 700 feet east of where it had been left. It required from two to four men to put the push car on the track. It was down a dump near the track. It was not shown that any of the tools had been molested or used. The opinion says:

"We do not think the facts raise the issue. That the push car had been lifted on the track by four or six men, carried 600 or 700 feet, and then dumped off down an embankment, merely had a tendency to show that persons had been at or near the place of the wreck before it occurred and had moved the push car, and did not tend to show any tampering with the track."

The opinion further states:

"The evidence raised merely a suspicion or surmise that wreckers might have caused the derailment, and that was not sufficient to warrant a submission of the question to the jury."

There was to all intents and purposes no evidence whatever on that point. The conclusion was that the submission of the question of vandalism to the jury was unwarranted.

The opinion further holds, as is the law of the instant case, that the burden of proving that the derailment took place on account of the track having been tampered with by malicious persons rested on appellant, and carried with it the burden of showing that due care had been used in inspecting the track so as to discover the defects—citing authorities. The opinion continues:

"In submitting the issue to the jury the duty of inspection and care in discovering the dangerous condition of the track should be coupled with it, for proof of the track having been interfered with, without proof of the exercise of reasonable diligence in discovering the defect, was an imperfect defense."

[5] In the instant case, as we have indicated, the evidence of vandalism was sufficient to go to the jury.

Another citation relied upon by appellant is that of Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Gaither (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 266, 268, in which the allegations of vandalism as the cause of the accident was pleaded in defense. The court says:

"The testimony of the defendant on this issue tended to show that the switch was in good condition, but that the bolt had been abstracted by some person not under the control, and without the knowledge, of the railway company. The evidence was amply sufficient to justify the jury in reaching the conclusion that the switch was out of repair, as contended for by plaintiff, and that the switch was open as a result of this defective condition."

But the court further held in that case that "the evidence was sufficient to justify the conclusion that the switch had been defective for some time, and that the railway company was guilty of negligence in not discovering and remedying this defect. Though the jury might have believed and accepted the theory of the defendant that the rod was abstracted by some person alien to its employment, and without its knowledge or consent, still the evidence indicated that the employees of defendant were not sufficiently watchful as to the condition of this switch, and the jury were warranted by the evidence in concluding that the railway company was guilty of negligence in not discovering that the switch was out of place."

Here again is a verdict accepting the theory of a malicious displacement of a switch by the vandalism of the third party, but at the same time holding against the defendant on the issue of sufficient opportunity and negligence in remedying the defect. The court in this connection says:

"Though the jury might have believed and accepted the theory of the defendant that the rod was abstracted by some person alien to its employment, and without its knowledge or consent, still the evidence indicated that the employees of defendant were not sufficiently watchful as to the condition of this switch, and the jury were warranted by the evidence in concluding that the railway company was guilty of negligence in not discovering that the switch was out of place."

In this connection it is the contention of appellant that the consideration of the question of negligence on the part of the defendant subsequent to the malicious interference with the switch was improperly presented to the jury under an instruction XVI, excepted to by the plaintiff, which predicated the nonliability of the defendant solely on the issue of vandalism. This instruction reads as follows:

"If you find by a preponderance of the evidence that the accident to the train referred to in the complaint and described in the evidence, and the derailment thereof, were caused by the act of third parties who were not employed by defendants or either of them, then you will at once return a verdict in favor of the defendants, because the defendants would not be liable for the malicious acts of third parties."

Appellant's argument is that this instruction entirely relieves the defendant from any showing as to opportunity or diligence in discovering the condition of the switch in time to have averted the accident. It is argued that this instruction placed the liability of the defendant company solely upon the defective condition of the switch, caused by parties for whom the defendant was not responsible, without taking into account the question of reasonable opportunity to have remedied the defect in time to have prevented the accident.

Unless this omission is remedied by other instructions given at the trial, the omission was a serious one. Notwithstanding there may have been evidence before the jury to show that the defendant was without negligence in failing to discover and report the displaced switch, this instruction clearly eliminates the consideration of such evidence by declaring unequivocally that a finding of the derailment of the train by the act of third parties not employed by defendants entitled defendants to a verdict in their favor, irrespective of subsequent negligence in failing to discover and repair the displaced switch. We fail to find elsewhere in the instructions anything calling attention of the jury to the fact that proof of vandalism causing the accident should be accompanied by evidence showing that the accident could not have been averted by the exercise of due care and diligence on the part of defendant.

[6] The jury may well have found from the evidence that the defendant railway company was not responsible for the displacement of the switch, and have been led by the instruction to disregard, or at least fail to take into account, whether or not there was subsequent negligence in failing to discover the condition of the track in time to replace it or warn the train crew. As hereinbefore held, there was sufficient evidence on this point to make it a question for the jury.

It is true that the jury was elsewhere instructed in general terms that, if they found that the derailment occurred by reason of a defect in the appliances, or a failure to keep the appliances used by the defendant in repair, "and if you find that the defendants were negligent in failing to discover, or in failing to remedy such defect, the mere fact of the employment of an inspector will not release the defendants from the consequences of that negligence." If this instruction had concluded with the admonition "that the mere fact that the disrepair of the switch was caused by a malicious act of vandals would not relieve the defendants from the consequences of that negligence, without a showing of diligence in discovering and repairing the defect," it might have supplied the omission complained of in instruction XVI. In spite of the instruction last above quoted, the jury might well have understood that negligence in failing to discover and remedy the defect did not apply where the direct cause of the accident was occasioned by trespassers.

The doctrine seems to be accepted in this state that an instruction directing a verdict under given conditions must include all the conditions necessary to support such verdict, and that an omission of a material matter of consideration cannot be cured by reference thereto in some other instruction. A recent statement of this rule by the Supreme Court is contained in the opinion in Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 393, 264 P. 237, 238. The court says:

"The authorities are legion to the effect that a so-called 'formula' instruction must contain all the elements essential to a recovery, and the absence of any one of such elements may not be compensated for nor cured by a reference thereto in other instructions correctly and fully stating the law.

"This principle is well stated in Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 9, 209 P. 1015, 1016, wherein it is held that: 'If an instruction by its terms purports to state the conditions necessary to a verdict, it must state all those conditions and must not overlook pleaded defenses on which substantial evidence has been introduced. "It is clear that an instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff in the event that the jury finds certain facts to be true must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion contained therein that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, and such is the rule in this state."'

In Pierce v. United G. & E. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 184, 118 P. 700, 704, it is said:

"It is clear that an instruction directing a verdict for the plaintiff in the event that the jury finds certain facts to be true must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion contained therein that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, and such is the rule in this state. * * * It is true that other instructions were given at the request of defendant that stated the law in these respects as favorably to defendant as was warranted, if not more favorably. But the giving of these other instructions simply produced a clear conflict in the instructions given the jury by the court, and it is impossible for us to say which instruction the jury followed in arriving at a verdict in favor of plaintiff. * * *

[7] The rule is that, where an instruction directs a verdict if the jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal rights or liability of the party in whose favor the verdict is directed to be returned.

Other California authorities bearing on this point are: Starr v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 201 P. 599; Keena v. United R. R. of S. F., 57 Cal. App. 124, 207 P. 35; Dunne v. Hines, 50 Cal. App. 345, 350, 195 P. 276; Beyerle v. Clift, 59 Cal. App. 7, 209 P. 1015; Humphres v. Western Pac. R. R. Co., 173 Cal. 428, 160 P. 415; Killelea v. Calif. Horseshoe Co., 140 Cal. 602, 74 P. 157; Darrell v. Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 44 Cal. App. 523, 186 P. 620; Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248-253, 107 P. 309.

[8] Counsel for respondent cites a number of authorities to the general rule that instructions must be considered as a whole, and that, if the instructions thus considered fairly state the law, the insufficiency of some single instruction will not be considered reversible error. We do not think that this general rule corrects the present situation. The instruction complained of definitely states a certain condition under which the defendant is entitled to a verdict, and unconditionally directs, if that state of facts is found by the jury, that their verdict shall be for the defendant. Under this instruction the jury may well have understood that, if the misplaced switch caused the accident, and that its displacement was occasioned by trespassers over whom the defendant had no control, these facts alone required the verdict as directed.

Appellant assigns other grounds of error in the instructions, and in the admission of evidence, but we doubt if these points are well taken. In any event, in view of our conclusion that there was prejudicial error in giving instruction XVI, it is unnecessary to discuss the matter further.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; BARNARD, J.

104 Cal. App. 128

JOHANNSEN v. KLIPSTEIN et al.

(Civ. 242.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Feb. 18, 1930.

1. Pleading $\S$ 68—Allegation on information and belief that note sued on was duly sold and indorsed to plaintiff held sufficient, where purchase was made from payee's transferee and complaint was verified by attorney.

Where note sued on had been first assigned by payee to another and by the other assigned and transferred to plaintiff, and where complaint was verified by plaintiff's attorney, allegation therein that plaintiff was informed and believed, and alleged upon information and belief, that the note was duly sold, assigned, transferred, and indorsed to plaintiff, who was the owner and holder thereof, held sufficient.

2. Trial $\S$ 395(1)—Judgment for plaintiff on note held sustained by findings that allegations of complaint were true and those of answer untrue and that note was not materially altered by indorsement without consent of makers.

In action on note in which defense was that note had been materially altered without consent of makers or their knowledge, finding of trial court that it was not true that the note was materially altered by indorsement thereon without the knowledge and consent of the makers, together with findings that all the allegations of the complaint were true and that all of the allegations of the answers were untrue, held sufficient to sustain judgment for plaintiff.

3. Alteration of instruments $\S$ 12—If indorsements on note were made with consent of makers, it was immaterial whether indorsements constituted material alteration (Civ. Code $\S$ 3205).

Where indorsements on note were made with knowledge and consent of makers, it was immaterial, as regards liability of makers, whether such indorsements constituted a material alteration within the meaning of Civ. Code $\S$ 3205.

4. Bills and notes $\S$ 125—Where note provided for interest from maturity, interest was payable from maturity date given on face of note, notwithstanding subsequent indorsements allowing extensions.

Where note on its face was payable on or before July 1, 1922, with interest at rate of 7 per cent. from maturity until paid, interest was payable from maturity date so stated on face of note, notwithstanding subsequent indorsements on back of note providing for extensions.

5. Bills and notes $\S$ 116—Parties' intention is gathered from face of note.

Intention of parties to note is to be gathered from the face of the instrument.

6. Appeal and error $\S$ 1033(9)—Defendants on appeal could not complain that judgment against them was for insufficient amount.

Defendants on appeal in action on note could not complain that court by some erroneous computation had entered judgment against them for amount less than it should have been.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by C. E. Johannsen against T. E. Klipstein and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 90 Cal. App. 106, 265 P. 568.

Homer Johnstone, of Los Angeles, and E. F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

W. E. Simpson and Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, all of Fresno, and F. E. Borton and James Petrini, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an action upon a promissory note, which, with its indorsements, reads as follows:
"$9,500.00

"Bakersfield, California, April 29, 1922.

"On or before July 1, 1922, after date, for value received, I, we, or either of us, promise to pay John V. Bock or order, at First National Bank of Bakersfield, in Bakersfield, California, the sum of Nine Thousand Five Hundred 00/100 Dollars, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from maturity until paid, interest payable, * * * and if not so paid to be compounded annually and bear the same rate of interest as the principal. * * *

"T. E. Klipstein,

"C. E. Lucas,

"C. F. Johnson,

"Chas. Haberkern.

"Extended for 60 days.

"Pay to the order of Warren H. Stetson.

"Extended to April 10th, 1923, John B. Bock

"Date	Principal Paid	Balance due on Principal
"June 22	3000	6,500

"John V. Bock

"Warren H. Stetson."

The defendants have appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and through the failure of appellants to perfect a bill of exceptions, this appeal rests entirely upon an inspection of the judgment roll.

[1] The first point urged by appellants is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This contention is based upon one paragraph of the complaint, reading as follows:

"That plaintiff is informed and believes and upon such information and belief alleges the fact to be that thereafter and prior to the commencement of this action, for valuable consideration, said note was duly sold, assigned, transferred and indorsed to the plaintiff herein, who is now the owner and holder thereof."

It is urged that this violates the rule laid down in Hall v. James, 79 Cal. App. 433, 249 P. 876, that one may not allege on information and belief facts which are peculiarly within his own knowledge, but unknown to the other party. This rule does not apply to such an allegation as the one in question. The note had been first assigned by the payee named therein to one Stetson, and the court found that it had been duly assigned and transferred to the plaintiff herein. While some of the facts in relation to these two transfers may have been within the knowledge of the plaintiff, it is by no means apparent that all of them were, and the regularity, validity, and genuineness of each step therein may have been believed by the plaintiff without being within his positive knowledge. In addition, the fact appears that the complaint was verified by plaintiff's attorney, and the complaint may have been thus worded because the attorney had no personal knowledge as to those particular facts.

[2, 3] It is next insisted that the conclusions and judgment are not supported by the findings. In this connection it is argued that the two indorsements on the note, extending the time of payment of the same, were material alterations which released the makers of the note from liability, since the findings did not show that such alterations were made with the consent of the makers. The court made the following finding:

"That it is not true that without the knowledge and consent, or knowledge and consent, of all, or any, of the parties who were the makers of said note, that said note was materially, or at all, altered by two indorsements thereon, one of which indorsements extended the time of payment of said note for a period of sixty days and the other indorsement one which extended the time of payment of said note to the 10th day of April, 1923. * * *"

It is urged that the court thus admits that the note was altered by the two indorsements, but finds that it is not true that these alterations were without the knowledge or consent of the makers, and then fails to find that the appellants ever gave their consent to said indorsements. This contention is without merit. Even if we assume that such indorsements constitute a material alteration, this becomes entirely immaterial if they were made with the knowledge and consent of the makers. The court found all of the allegations in the complaint to be true. It also found all of the allegations of the answer to be untrue. This was sufficient to sustain the judgment. Fritz v. Mills, 170 Cal. 449, 150 P. 375; County of Sutter v. McGriff, 130 Cal. 124, 62 P. 412; Carr v. International Indemnity Co., 58 Cal. App. 617, 209 P. 83. The answer alleged that without the knowledge or consent of all or any of the parties, said note was materially altered by the two indorsements in question, and that both of said indorsements were made without the knowledge, consent, or approval of any of the makers of the note. In addition to the general findings that all of the allegations in the complaint are true, and all those in the answer are untrue, the court found on this particular matter as above quoted. The court thus made specific findings negating the facts affirmatively alleged in the answer. As the court said in Turner v. Turner, 187 Cal. at page 636, 203 P. 109, 111:

"* * * In answer to the first of these contentions it may be stated generally that a finding which is in identical language a negation of the allegation in the complaint is sufficient. Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 91, 44 P. 331; McCarthy v. Brown, 113 Cal. 15, 45 P. 14; Hayne, New Trial and Appeal (Rev. Ed.) § 242. It should also be stated as a general rule that findings are to be construed so as to support the judgment. It was evidently the intention of the trial court in this case to make a finding against the plaintiff in the identical language of the complaint, except as such finding was attempted to be cast in the negative form."

The intention of the court to find that the indorsements here in question were not made without the knowledge and consent of the makers of the note is too apparent to be questioned, and taking all of the findings together, it is equally apparent that the court has found that such indorsements were made with the knowledge and consent of the makers of the note. The important matter to be determined in this connection is the question of consent on the part of the makers of the note, to the indorsements referred to. The defendants having alleged in their answer that they did not consent to the indorsements, and this allegation having been found by the court to be untrue, it becomes immaterial whether or not such indorsements constituted a material alteration within the meaning of section 3205 of the Civil Code.

[4, 5] The next point raised is that the judgment is contrary to the findings and conclusions. It is argued that the allowing of interest from July 1, 1922, is in fatal conflict with other findings to the effect that the indorsements were made with the consent of the makers of the note, for the reason that if these indorsements were made with the consent of the makers, the date of maturity of the note was thus postponed to April 10, 1923, and therefore interest could be allowed only from that date. It is admitted that $3,000 was paid on the principal of the note on June 22, 1923. The note on its face was payable on or before July 1, 1922, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. from maturity, until paid. The note itself was a contract. The intention of the parties is to be gathered from the face of the instrument. There is an express agreement to pay on or before a certain date, and a provision that interest shall be payable from maturity. This was equivalent to saying that interest should be paid from July 1, 1922. That this was the intention of the parties, and that they contemplated that interest should be paid during any extension, is indicated by the provision on the face of the note that it shall bear interest from maturity, until it is paid. The indorsements later made merely postponed the date on which payment might be enforced, but there is nothing to indicate any intention to relieve the makers from paying the interest which is provided on the face of the note, to be paid from the date of maturity until the time of payment.

[6] It is further argued that since the judgment was for $8,170 and the conclusions of law, drawn from the findings, were that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for $6,500 (the balance remaining unpaid on the principal sum), together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. from July 1, 1922, and for the sum of $343 attorney's fees, such a conflict appears that the judgment must be reversed. The claim is made that if the interest is correctly figured from April 10, 1923, to the date of the judgment, the amount will be less than the amount of the judgment actually given, whereas if the interest is correctly figured from July 1, 1922, the amount will be larger than the amount of the judgment actually entered. The court correctly found that interest was due from July 1, 1922, and the defendants cannot complain because by some erroneous computation the court has actually entered a judgment against them for slightly less than it should have been. Moore v. Borgfeldt (Cal. App.) 273 P. 1114.

We are of the opinion that the judgment is not contrary to the findings, that it is fully supported by them, and that the complaint stated a cause of action. No reversible errors appear upon the face of the judgment roll, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 744

WARDEN v. BRANDES. (Civ. 3985.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 6, 1930.

1. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 460(4)—Extrinsic evidence is admissible in aid of description in deed which is prima facie insufficient to identify the property.

Where description of land in a deed is prima facie insufficient to identify the property, extrinsic evidence is admissible as means of identification.

2. Evidence $\Rightarrow$ 460(4)—Defect in deed conveying fractional lot 78, introduced in action to quiet title to lot 78, could be cured by proof of identity.

In action to quiet title to lot 78, plaintiff introduced deed conveying fractional lot 78, referring to a specified tract and a recorded map thereof; there being therefore a variance. Held defect on face of deed would have been cured, if plaintiff had proved there was only one lot 78, whether described as fractional or otherwise, and only one such tract and only one map thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Action to quiet title brought by Grace P. Warden against Lulu Brandes. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff commenced this action to quiet her title to "Lot Seventy-eight of Tract 1889 as per Map recorded in Book 21, page 29 of Maps, Records of Los Angeles County." The defendant answered denying the plaintiff's ownership and alleged title in herself.

At the close of plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was granted, and judgment of nonsuit was thereupon entered. The plaintiff appeals therefrom.

In support of her claim of title plaintiff offered and the court received in evidence records of proceedings of the city of Los Angeles, creating a certain sewer assessment district; also records purporting to levy an assessment upon the land in said district including fractional lot 78 of tract 1889, as per map recorded in book 21, p. 29, of maps, records of Los Angeles county. The plaintiff thereupon offered, and the court received, in evidence a deed made and executed by the treasurer of the city of Los Angeles to the plaintiff herein. Said deed recited the various proceedings in the matter of the above-mentioned assessment district, and also the levying of an assessment thereunder and the sale to the plaintiff of "Fractional Lot 78, Tract 1889, Map Book 21, page 29, Records of Los Angeles County" for an unpaid assessment of $55.98. The plaintiff thereupon rested, and on motion of the defendant the nonsuit was granted. The motion was made on the ground that lot 78, described in the complaint, and fractional lot 78, described in the assessment proceedings and in the plaintiff's deed, were not the same property.

[1] It seems to be conceded by both parties that there is a variance between the description contained in the complaint and that described in the assessment proceedings and the deed. We are of the opinion that such is the case. However, it has been held that, where a description of land in a deed is prima facie insufficient to identify the property intended to be described, extrinsic evidence is admissible as a means of identification. Thompson v. McKenna, 22 Cal. App. 129, 133 P. 512; Green v. Palmer, 68 Cal. App. 393, 229 P. 876; Campbell v. Shafer, 162 Cal. 206, 121 P. 737.

[2] Appellant contends that, because her deed recites the assessment numbers, bond numbers, and the district in which the improvements were made, the warrant, assessment roll, and map diagram introduced in evidence contain the same assessment numbers, bond numbers, and description contained in the deed thereby cures any defect on the face of her deed. But the same description appears throughout the assessment records as appears in her deed, and therefore does not constitute a connecting link between the land described in her complaint and that described in her deed, nor does it identify them as one and the same parcel of land. Had plaintiff proved that there was but one lot numbered 78 in the tract, whether denominated as fractional or otherwise, and but one tract numbered 1889, and but one map of such tract, then the parcels of land would be properly identified and the defect cured. The deed itself is prima facie evidence of its contents, and the other evidence introduced merely supports the prima facie showing made by the deed.

In McLauchlan v. Bonyng, 15 Cal. App. 239, at page 242, 114 P. 798, 799, it is said: "In order to identify the property by such description, there should be evidence, not only of the existence of a map, but such map itself, with proof that it was the only map of any tract in the city of Los Angeles known as the Clifton tract existing at the time when the assessment was made, and showing that the lots in question were delineated thereon, should be presented to the court." To the same effect is Thompson v. McKenna, 22 Cal. App. 129, 133 P. 512, and Campbell v. Shafer, 162 Cal. 206, 121 P. 737.

Under the above decisions the plaintiff was entitled to introduce evidence that lot 78 described in the complaint and fractional lot 78 were the same. This could have been done by the method pointed out in McLauchlan v. Bonyng, supra, or any other appropriate method, but, having failed to do so, the court was correct in granting the motion for a nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

103 Cal. App. 796

COHN v. SAN PEDRO, L. A. & S. L. R. CO.
et al. (Civ. 3922.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

1. Eminent domain ☞323—Whether railroad abandoned property condemned for railroad purposes held question of fact.

Question of railroad's abandonment of property received by it by condemnation for use for right of way for side tracks, turnouts, roundhouses, switches, freight yards, and other uses necessary and incident to maintaining railroad, held one of fact for determination of trial court sitting without jury, in action by owner of naked legal title to quiet title.

2. Abandonment ☞2—"Abandonment" involves act of leaving property vacant and intention of not returning.

To constitute an "abandonment" of property, there must be concurrence of act and intent, that is, the act of leaving the premises or property vacant, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Abandon; Abandonment.]

3. Eminent domain ☞323—Where railroad, after dismantling buildings and removing tracks, used property for storing railroad materials, and thereafter moved house thereon for foreman, finding that there was no abandonment of right acquired by condemnation to use property for railroad purposes held justified.

Evidence that railroad acquiring property by condemnation, after dismantling roundhouses and other buildings on the property and removing tracks, used the property for storing railroad materials, and thereafter moved house on lot to be used by section foreman in charge of railroad property, justified finding that there was no abandonment by railroad of use of property in question for railroad's purposes.

4. Eminent domain ☞323—Intention to abandon property condemned for railroad purposes was not shown by conversation of railroad's general manager looking to purchase of fee.

In action by holder of legal title to quiet title to property condemned for use by railroad, conversation with railroad's general manager looking to purchase of fee in property did not alone establish intention on part of railroad to abandon.

5. Eminent domain ☞324—Trial court properly found railroad using property condemned for storing railroad materials and for headquarters and house of foreman did not violate condemnation decree permitting use for purposes incident to constructing, maintaining, and efficiently operating railroad.

In action by owner of naked legal title to quiet title to property acquired by railroad by condemnation, trial court properly found railroad, using property for storage of railroad materials incident to dismantling of buildings and removal of tracks, and thereafter moving house on lot to be used as headquarters and living accommodations for section foreman, did not use premises contrary to condemnation decree permitting use for purposes "necessary and incident to constructing, maintaining and efficiently operating plaintiff's line of steam railroad."

6. Appeal and error ☞169—Appellant may not raise point not submitted below.

Appellant is not permitted to urge point in reviewing court which was not made an issue by the pleadings, and was not contended for at the time of the trial, but was sought to be raised for the first time on appeal.

7. Eminent domain ☞317(3)—On city's abandonment of street abutting lot condemned for railroad purposes, right of fee owner in street was subject to railroad's easement.

Where lot was condemned by railroad for use for railroad purposes, reversion to fee owner of one-half of street on which lot abutted, as result of city's abandonment of street by ordinance, was subject to railroad's easement, and fee owner could not take possession of the abandoned portion of the street without regard to the rights of the railroad.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Abraham B. Cohn against the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company and others. From a judgment for defendant named, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Newby & Newby, and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred E. Pettit, Jr., E. E. Bennett, and Harry B. Ellison, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, Abraham B. Cohn, brought this action to quiet title to a piece of real estate situated in the city of Los Angeles. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was entered in favor of the defendant railroad company, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

The pleadings admit these facts: Appellant, Abraham B. Cohn, was, prior to December 8, 1902, the owner in fee of lot 9, block A of Jacoby & Thorne's subdivision of a part of the "Blow Tract" in the city of Los Angeles. On December 8, 1902, the respondent, by its then corporate name, San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, acquired the property above described from the appellant, Abraham B. Cohn, by its right of eminent domain. The final decree of condemnation reads in part as follows: "It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the lands and premises described in plaintiff's complaint and in this decree hereinafter described, become the property of the plaintiff for use as a right of way for its side-tracks, turn-outs, roundhouses, switches, freight yards and such other uses and purposes as are necessary and incident to constructing, maintaining and efficiently operating plaintiff's line of steam railroad. The land and premises affected by this judgment and order are particularly described as follows, to-wit: Lot 9 in Block 'A,' * * * all in the Jacoby & Thorne's Subdivision of the part of the Blow Tract in the City of Los Angeles, County of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in Book 18, page 97, Miscellaneous Records of said County. * * *

At the time the final decree of condemnation was entered, Anderson street, which was 60 feet wide, bounded the lot in question on the east, but in 1905 the city of Los Angeles, by proper proceedings, abandoned Anderson street. The lot in question, together with the abandoned portion of Anderson street, has been used by respondent for railroad purposes ever since its acquisition by respondent, and particularly used for its roundhouses, shops, stores, building tracks, etc.

In September, 1924, respondent commenced the moving of its roundhouses, shops, storehouse, and tracks from the vicinity in which this property was situated to its new terminal known as "East Yards," near Telegraph road, city of Los Angeles, at which time the buildings above referred to were dismantled, and the tracks leading to and from said buildings were removed. The dismantling of said buildings and the removal of the tracks and the reconditioning of the property in question consumed considerable time. After the buildings were dismantled and the tracks removed, and during the period of removal, the property herein involved was used for the storing of railroad materials incidental to, and made necessary by, the dismantling of the buildings, the removal of the tracks, etc.

On or about the 12th day of June, 1925, respondent moved onto the lot here in question a house to be used as the headquarters of, and living accommodations for, its section foreman in charge of the railroad property and line of railroad in this vicinity. Respondent's line of railroad tracks are located between 350 and 400 feet west of the lot in question, between which there are several tracks used for storage and switching.

The plaintiff and appellant commenced this action during the removal period and while the railroad materials were being stored on the lot in question, and three days before the section foreman's house was moved onto the said lot. The house has been used by the railroad company as section foreman's house and headquarters in connection with the operation of its railroad ever since it was moved on said premises.

Added to these admitted facts, we have the testimony of plaintiff himself to the effect that on or about April 1, 1925, the general manager of respondent railroad company called upon him and admitted that plaintiff was the owner of the lot and also the 30-foot strip acquired by the abandonment of Anderson street, and offered to purchase the entire property from plaintiff, etc.

The trial court found that, by virtue of said final order of condemnation, the respondent entered into possession of said parcel of land described in plaintiff's complaint in this action, and "said parcel was thereupon placed in use for the purposes in said judgment and final order of condemnation mentioned; and that said parcel of land at all times since has continuously been so possessed and used, and is now so possessed and used; and that the plaintiff in this action, by virtue of said condemnation proceedings, has but a bare legal title to the land described; subject, however, to the right of way and easement hereinbefore mentioned."

[1, 2] Appellant contends that there has been an abandonment by the railroad company of the rights acquired by the eminent domain proceeding, and that the use of the premises by the railroad company has been contrary to the judgment and final decree in the condemnation proceeding.

We find no merit in either of these contentions. The law is well settled that the abandonment in such a case is made up of two elements, viz. "Act and Intention." Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., 147 Cal. 228, 81 P. 512, 514. See Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) Book 2, pp. 1171 and 1223. The "act and intention" were both questions of fact to be determined by the court; or, in other words, abandonment is a question of fact to be determined by a jury or the court, when sitting without a jury. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., supra, and cases there cited.

In Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co., supra, it is said: "To constitute such abandonment, there must be a concurrence of act and intent, viz., the act of leaving the premises or property vacant, so that it may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning." Judson v. Malloy et al., 40 Cal. 299; Bell et al. v. Bed Rock Tunnel & Mining Co., 36 Cal. 214; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333, 95 Am. Dec. 181; St. John v. Kidd,

26 Cal. 272; Richardson v. McNulty et al., 24 Cal. 345; Willson v. Cleaveland, 30 Cal. 192. The mere intention to abandon, if not coupled with yielding up possession or a cessation of user, is not sufficient; nor will the nonuser alone, without an intention to abandon be held to amount to an abandonment."

[3] The trial court found, as above indicated, that the respondent never abandoned the use of the property in question for railroad purposes. This finding is amply supported by the evidence; in fact, we are unable to find any substantial evidence that would support a contrary conclusion. The findings of the trial court are therefore conclusive on appeal.

[4, 5] Appellant lays great stress upon the conversation that he had with the general manager of respondent, looking toward the purchase of the fee in the land in question, to establish an intention to abandon on the part of respondent, but this evidence falls far short of establishing an intention to abandon on the part of the respondent. The conversation, viewed in its most favorable light to appellant, establishes nothing more than an attempt on the part of the respondent to purchase from the appellant the fee in the property, which, according to appellant's own testimony, he refused to sell, and as a result thereof the evidence clearly shows that respondent continued using the property for the purpose for which it was dedicated under the eminent domain proceedings.

There is no substantial evidence in the record to support the contention of appellant that the property in question was not being used for railroad purposes. The trial court also found against appellant upon this point, and we are fully satisfied that the trial court's conclusion was correct.

[6, 7] The next and final question presented by this appeal is this: Has plaintiff the right in this action to have his title quieted to that portion of Anderson street vacated by the city of Los Angeles in 1905, while respondent was using the lot in question for railroad purposes in accordance with the condemnation judgment? This contention is raised in this court for the first time. It was not made an issue by the pleadings, nor was it contended for at the time of the trial. For this reason alone the appellant is not permitted to urge this point in this court for the first time. However, when a city, by ordinance, abandons a public street, one-half thereof reverts to the abutting owner. Respondent admits this to be true, but contends that the fee owner may not in such a case take possession of the abandoned portion without regard to the rights of the person holding an easement over the fee. In view of the record here presented, we think this contention must be sustained. Challiss v.

Atchison Union Depot & Railroad Co., 45 Kan. 398, 25 P. 894.

We think the judgment of the court below was correct, and should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 786
LINDEMANN v. ANDERSON et al. ★

(Civ. 204.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Feb. 3, 1930.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Feb. 24, 1930.

1. Mortgages ⇨507—Mortgage foreclosure sale commissioner must file undertaking approved by judge with oath (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729, one appointed commissioner to sell realty under mortgage foreclosure decree must file an undertaking approved by the judge, together with his oath faithfully to perform the duties of his office.

2. Statutes ⇨205—Each part of statute should be given force and effect when possible.

Statutes should be so construed as to give each part thereof force and effect when possible.

3. Mortgages ⇨507—Statute providing for mortgage foreclosure sale of realty should be strictly complied with, and commissioner must qualify as therein provided.

Statute providing for sale of real property in mortgage foreclosure proceedings should be strictly complied with, and commissioner must qualify in manner set forth therein before acting as such.

4. Appeal and error ⇨607(1)—Notice to prepare transcript, transcript itself, and certificates of clerk and judge, held sufficient showing that undertaking of mortgage foreclosure sale commissioner was not approved by court (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729).

Appellant's notice to clerk, requesting preparation of transcript, including oath and bond of commissioner appointed to sell realty under mortgage foreclosure decree and order approving bond, transcript containing copy of bond showing no approval thereof by court or judge, clerk's certificate that such copy was correct, and judge's certificate that transcript was true and correct, held sufficient, in absence of contrary showing, to show that commissioner's undertaking was not approved by court, as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729.

5. Appeal and error ⇨905—Presumption of regularity of trial court proceedings does not supply omitted instrument required by statute.

Presumption in favor of regularity of proceedings in trial court does not go to extent of ★Rehearing denied.

supplying instrument made necessary by statute, when record shows entire absence of such instrument.

6. Mortgages ☞507—Mortgage foreclosure sale by commissioner whose bond was not approved by court was void, irrespective of substantial injury to mortgagor (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729).

Sale of realty under mortgage foreclosure decree by commissioner, whose bond was not approved by court as required by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 726, 729, was void, whether or not mortgagor was substantially injured; taking of property without due process of law being sufficient injury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Gustaf Lindemann against D. A. Anderson, Robert Marsh, and others. From a deficiency judgment, entered after a purported sale of real property under a mortgage foreclosure decree, defendant Marsh appeals. Judgment reversed and set aside.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Simon & Garber, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an appeal from a deficiency judgment entered by the clerk after a purported sale of real property, by a commissioner, in an action for foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate. The mortgage in question had been given to secure a note for $3,800, and the deficiency judgment, subsequently docketed, was for $3,295.17. The decree of foreclosure, among other things, provided:

"And it is further ordered and decreed, that M. J. Davis of the County of Kern, state of California, be and he is hereby appointed commissioner to sell the hereinafter described property; and the court does hereby require of said commissioner an undertaking in the sum of $500.00 with sufficient sureties in the manner and form required by law."

The commissioner named in the decree filed his oath as such commissioner, and on the same day filed a purported undertaking in the sum of $500, executed by himself as principal with two sureties. Neither on the bond so filed nor anywhere else in the record does there appear any approval of the bond by the court or by the judge thereof. An order of sale having been issued, and the commissioner's report and account of sale filed, the clerk entered a deficiency judgment, from which the defendant has appealed. The only proposition presented as a ground for reversal is that, since the bond of the commissioner was not approved by the court, the sale, the deficiency judgment based upon the return of the commissioner, and all acts performed by the commissioner were void.

[1, 2] The most important question on this appeal is whether or not the provisions of sections 726 and 729 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relative to the approval and filing of the bond of a commissioner are mandatory; or, in other words, whether the failure of a commissioner to strictly comply with those provisions affects his jurisdiction and his right to act. The history of the legislation upon this subject throws some light upon the matter. Prior to 1901, the provisions of the Code in regard to the appointment of a commissioner did not require that the "undertaking so approved" should be filed. At that time the only provisions applicable were the following portions of section 726 and section 729 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

"The court may, by its judgment, or at any time after judgment, appoint a commissioner to sell the encumbered property." Section 726, Code Civ. Proc. (St. 1895, p. 98).

"The commissioner, before entering upon his duties, must be sworn to perform them faithfully, and the court making the appointment shall require of him an undertaking, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the court, in an amount to be fixed by the court, to the effect that he will faithfully perform the duties of commissioner, according to law." (Section 729, Code Civ. Proc. (St. 1893, p. 119).)

In the case of May v. Hatcher, 130 Cal. 627, 63 P. 33, 34, which was decided in December, 1900, the Supreme Court held that the provisions of these sections did not require a written oath, nor that the same be filed, the court saying:

"* * * Appellant's position is that the facts that no written affidavit of the commissioner was on file in the clerk's office, and that the clerk's register of actions did not show that such affidavit had been filed, are conclusive proof that no oath was taken, and that no other evidence was admissible on the subject. But this position is not tenable. The statutory provision touching the matter is merely that 'the commissioner, before entering upon his duties, must be sworn to perform them faithfully.' Code Civ. Proc. § 729. There is no provision that he must make a written affidavit, or that an affidavit must be filed anywhere; and there is abundant evidence in the record not only that he was sworn, but that he made a written affidavit."

In 1901 the Legislature amended section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure, making the portion of said section applicable to the question under consideration read as follows:

"The court may, by its judgment, or at any time after judgment, appoint a commissioner to sell the encumbered property. It must require of him an undertaking in an amount fixed by the court, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the judge, to the effect that the commissioner will faithfully perform the duties of his office according to law. Before entering upon the discharge of his duties he must file such undertaking, so approved, together with his oath that he will faithfully perform the duties of his office." (Italics ours.)

It will be noted that the Legislature thus inserted into section 726, directly after the old provision giving authority to the court to appoint a commissioner, a sentence which is in almost the same language as that portion of section 729 which is above quoted, and which had been interpreted in May v. Hatcher, supra, as not requiring a written oath nor the filing of the same. And immediately following that the Legislature inserted these words: "Before entering upon the discharge of his duties he must file such undertaking, so approved, together with his oath that he will faithfully perform the duties of his office." (Italics ours.) The Legislature may have considered that under the ruling of the Supreme Court the quoted portion of section 729 was of no very great benefit, since, to say the least, an oath not required to be in writing, and not to be filed anywhere, might make possible a very great uncertainty. From the language used, and the arrangement thereof, it would clearly appear that the change was intentionally made, and the statute was amended to read that, "before entering upon the discharge of his duties," a commissioner must file not only an undertaking, but one approved by the court, which must be accompanied by his oath that he will faithfully perform the duties of his office. Under these circumstances, the intention of the Legislature seems especially clear, and, in addition, the language of the statute is unequivocal in setting forth what is required in order to enable a commissioner to qualify for his office. We think it is incumbent upon the commissioner, not only to file some undertaking, but to file one that has been approved by the judge. If this were not so, that part of the requirement of the statute would be useless, and it is a general principle of statutory construction that they should be so construed as to give each part thereof force and effect when this is possible.

[3] The respondent urges that a sale under foreclosure is not to be set aside for light or trivial reasons, and in support thereof cites the following cases: Hopkins v. Wiard, 72 Cal. 262, 13 P. 687; Meux v. Trezevant, 132 Cal. 487, 64 P. 848; Connick v. Hill, 127 Cal. 162, 59 P. 832; Anglo-California Bank v. Cerf, 142 Cal. 303, 75 P. 902; Humboldt Savings & Loan Society v. March et al., 136 Cal. 321, 68 P. 968; Bechtel v. Wier, 152 Cal. 443, 93 P. 75, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549. So far as the question under consideration is concerned, these cases turn on the effect of the sale of land in one parcel, rather than in separate parcels. All of them involved the acts of duly appointed, qualified, and acting officers. On the other hand, the instant case presents a question of whether the officer ever qualified. It would hardly be argued that the mere naming of a commissioner by the court would comply with the requirements of these statutes and enable him to act as such commissioner. He must qualify, and the manner of qualification is particularly set forth in the statutes providing for his appointment. The commissioner derives his power only from these statutory provisions, and we think it is equally true that he derives his power only after he has complied with the requirements of these same statutes. One of these is that he file the undertaking "so approved." If the requirement for a bond is compulsory, the requirement that he must file such bond "so approved" seems equally compulsory. There seems no good reason for sustaining respondent's contention that this particular provision may be omitted, and at the same time holding that the other provisions may not be omitted. Good reason exists for holding that slight variations in the method of sale by an officer who has duly qualified shall not invalidate a sale because those variations are as to matters not covered by the statutes. Being matters which could have been dispensed with by the court, they may well be held to be trivial, where no real injury is shown. But in a sale of real property under foreclosure proceedings, property is being taken by process of law, and under general principles the statutes providing therefor should be strictly complied with. We think the particular provisions herein involved are mandatory, and that under the provisions of these Code sections such an undertaking must be approved in writing, and both the bond and approval filed.

Section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if a receiver is appointed upon an ex parte application, the court, before making the order, must require an undertaking. The language of this section has been held to be mandatory. Ryan v. Murphy, 39 Cal. App. 640, 179 P. 517. In Pryor v. Downey, 50 Cal. 388, 19 Am. Rep. 656, it was held that an administrator appointed by the court does not become such administrator until he has qualified, and that a purported sale of real estate made by such a person prior to the time he has qualified was void. In view of the circumstances surrounding the adoption of these provisions, a reasonable interpretation of these sections of the Code leads to the same conclusion in regard to a purported sale of real estate by one appointed as a commissioner in a foreclosure proceeding, unless the record affirmatively shows that he has qualified himself as required by law.

[4, 5] As a second proposition, the respondent insists that the record on appeal does not affirmatively show that the undertaking here involved was not approved by the court. Appellant's notice to the clerk requesting the preparation of a transcript and setting forth the matters and things desired to be included therein, includes the following: "The oath of commissioner; the bond of commissioner, together with any and all orders made in connection with said bond, last mentioned; and the order, if any, approving said bond." The transcript sets forth a copy of the bond, which copy shows no approval by the court or judge, nor is such approval shown anywhere else in the record. The certificate of the clerk, after setting forth that the transcript has been prepared in accordance with the provision of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and pursuant to the notice of appeal, certifies as follows:

"That each of said copies is a full, true and correct copy of the document of which it purports to be a copy, and full, true and correct copy of the bond showing all acts of the court taken thereon."

The judge who tried the case has also certified to the record as follows:

"The foregoing clerk's transcript is true and correct, and the same is hereby settled and allowed."

Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure provides a party desiring to appeal may give notice of what he desires included in the transcript, including "acts or statements of the court," and the judge shall examine the same, as to various matters set forth, including "acts or statements of the court," and then the judge shall certify to the truth and correctness of the transcript. In the instant case the appellant asked for the undertaking in question, together with any and all orders made in connection with said undertaking, and the order, if any, approving said bond. The clerk's certificate is to the effect that the transcript shows the bond and all acts of the court taken thereon, and the judge has certified this to be all true and correct. We feel that this is a sufficient showing, in the absence of any showing to the contrary. Appellant was entitled to bring this question up on appeal, and there would seem to be no other way to lay the foundation for his appeal than to show the entire record as it actually existed. While there is a presumption in favor of the regularity of the proceedings in the trial court, this presumption does not go to the extent of supplying something made necessary by a statute, when the record shows an entire absence of such required instrument.

[6] The further claim is made that the situation should not be disturbed, since there is no showing that the error complained of has resulted in any substantial injury to the appellant. Whether or not the sureties on the bond were, in fact, sufficient, we, of course, do not know. It is not necessary, however, that we should guess as to this, nor that we should guess whether or not the amount of the deficiency would be less upon a new sale held by an officer properly authorized thereto. In any event, the taking of property without due process of law is a sufficient injury. A mortgagee is entitled to have the rights of the mortgagor foreclosed, but the mortgagor is entitled to have the jurisdictional requirements of the law strictly followed. The commissioner in this case, not being qualified had no right to act, and his acts are void; the question of injury being immaterial. The power of the court to appoint such a commissioner, and the authority of the commissioner to act, both depend upon these statutes, and both are limited by the provisions thereof. It follows that no judgment of deficiency can be entered until a legal sale has taken place.

The purported sale of real property in this proceeding is vacated and set aside, and the deficiency judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 718

ROBINSON v. McKNIGHT et ux. (Civ. 7113.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1930.

1. Evidence $\S$ 116—Plaintiff's testimony, in malicious prosecution suit, as to what was said and done when defendant testified that plaintiff brandished gun and threatened to kill her, held admissible.

Where defendant, in action for malicious prosecution of charge of assault with deadly weapon, testified that plaintiff brandished a gun before witness, and repeatedly threatened to take her life during visit to her home, plaintiff was properly permitted to testify in detail as to what was done and said during such time, though her statements were highly inflammatory, outside issues on question of truth or falsity, largely hearsay, and self-serving.

2. Malicious prosecution $\S$ 59(2), 60(3)—Plaintiff's testimony as to her statements reflecting on defendants' uprightness, honesty, and generosity with their relations held admissible on questions of malice and probable cause in action for malicious prosecution.

In action for malicious prosecution of charge of assault with deadly weapon, plaintiff's testimony as to statements by her seriously reflecting on defendants' uprightness and honesty and their generosity with their relations during time that defendants claimed plaintiff was threatening life of one of them with gun pointed toward her held admissible on questions of malice and probable cause.

3. Evidence ⇨99—Evidence admissible for one purpose is not inadmissible because not satisfying rules applicable thereto in some other capacity.

An evidentiary fact, admissible for the purpose for which it is offered, is not inadmissible, because it does not satisfy rules applicable thereto in some other capacity, nor because the jury might improperly consider it in latter capacity.

4. Appeal and error ⇨216(2)—Appellants not requesting further instruction on subject covered by instructions given on their request cannot complain of absence thereof.

Where court gave defendants' requested instruction at close of plaintiff's testimony not to consider her statements as proof of facts contained therein, and substantially repeated instruction of its own motion at close of all testimony, defendants, who requested no further instruction on subject, cannot complain of absence thereof on appeal.

5. Malicious prosecution ⇨60(1)—Testimony of defendant's father as to his demands on defendant, whose replies evidenced animus against his sisters, held admissible in trial for malicious prosecution of sister.

In action against husband and wife for malicious prosecution of husband's sister, testimony of their father that he asked son to give him automobile in place of one obtained from him by son, who replied that he would not do so as long as father associated with "those skunks of sisters of mine," and that witness demanded repayment of money, of which he claimed he was unjustly deprived by son, who replied that witness and his daughters were plotting to get son's money, held admissible.

6. Malicious prosecution ⇨60(1)—Evidence of defendant's financial controversies with his father held admissible in action for malicious prosecution of his sister, in view of father's claim that son deprived him of property which should have gone to daughters.

In action against husband and wife for malicious prosecution of husband's sister on charge of assaulting wife, evidence of financial controversies between husband and his father held admissible on question of malice, in view of father's claim that son deprived him of property which should have gone to his daughters and son's feeling of animus against daughters.

7. Malicious prosecution ⇨60(1)—Wide latitude is allowed in proving malice prompting prosecution.

In action for malicious prosecution, a wide latitude is allowed in proving malice.

8. Trial ⇨62(2)—Plaintiff in action for malicious prosecution could rebut defendants' evidence refuting claim that defendant deprived his father of property which should have gone to plaintiff.

Defendants having introduced evidence, in action for malicious prosecution to refute claims of father of one of them, that such defendant had deprived him of property which should have gone to his daughters, including plaintiff, it was open to plaintiff to rebut such testimony.

9. Malicious prosecution ⇨60(2)—Parties' previous relations may be shown in action for malicious prosecution.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the previous relations between the parties may be shown.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Admission of record of preliminary hearing, in action for malicious prosecution, solely to show termination of action in plaintiff's favor, held harmless.

Admission of record of preliminary hearing in action for malicious prosecution held harmless to defendants, even if dismissal of such proceeding had been unequivocally admitted by answer, where jury was correctly instructed that record was admissible solely for purpose of showing termination of action in plaintiff's favor and was no evidence of want of probable cause.

11. Appeal and error ⇨930(2)—Appellate court must assume that jury followed trial court's instruction as to purpose of evidence.

The Court of Appeal must assume that trial court's instruction as to purpose for which evidence was admitted was followed by the jury.

12. Malicious prosecution ⇨64(2)—Evidence in action for malicious prosecution held to support finding of malice and want of probable cause.

In action for malicious prosecution, evidence held sufficient to support finding of malice and want of probable cause for plaintiff's arrest on charge made.

13. Malicious prosecution ⇨32—Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause for prosecution.

In action for malicious prosecution, malice may be inferred from want of probable cause.

14. Malicious prosecution ⇨22—That defendants, falsely stating facts to district attorney, acted on his advice, is no defense in action for malicious prosecution.

That defendants acted on advice of district attorney is no defense, in action for malicious prosecution, if they falsely stated facts to such officer.

15. Malicious prosecution ⇨40—That defendant testified under subpoena at preliminary hearing was no defense, in action for malicious prosecution, if she testified falsely.

That defendant in action for malicious prosecution testified against plaintiff at preliminary hearing under subpoena was no defense, if she testified falsely.

16. Malicious prosecution ⇨59(1)—Evidence of police officer's advice held properly excluded in action for malicious prosecution.

In action for malicious prosecution, exclusion of evidence of advice of police officer was not error.

17. Malicious prosecution ⇨58(1)—Plaintiff's checks to her father, who claimed that defendant deprived him of money which should have gone to plaintiff, held inadmissible in action for malicious prosecution.

In action for malicious prosecution, checks showing that plaintiff had given small sums of money to her father, who claimed that defendant deprived him of property which should have gone to plaintiff, held inadmissible.

18. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Admission of plaintiff's checks to her father, who claimed that defendant deprived him of money which should have gone to plaintiff, held not prejudicial to defendants in action for malicious prosecution.

Admission in evidence of checks showing that plaintiff had given small sums of money to her father, who claimed that one defendant in action for malicious prosecution deprived him of money which should have gone to plaintiff, held not prejudicial to defendants.

19. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1)—Introduction of jail record, showing plaintiff's possession of toy pistol, held not prejudicial to defendants, in action for malicious prosecution, on charge of assault with deadly weapon.

In action for malicious prosecution of charge of assault with a deadly weapon, introduction in evidence of jail record, to which words "one toy pistol" were added at later date, held not prejudicial to defendants, where jailer's testimony that plaintiff had only $1.76 on her person when received at jail was not contradicted and no attempt was made to show that she had any deadly weapon at such time.

20. Appeal and error ⇨1004(3)—Excessiveness of verdict for plaintiff, in action for malicious prosecution, was primarily for trial judge.

Excessiveness of verdict for plaintiff, in action for malicious prosecution, was a question primarily for consideration of the trial judge.

21. Malicious prosecution ⇨69—$10,000 damages for malicious prosecution of lecturer, spending 11 days in jail, becoming unable to continue work and losing lecture contract, held not excessive.

Verdict awarding $10,000 actual damages for malicious prosecution of lecturer, who spent 11 days in jail, became highly nervous, upset physically, and unable to continue work because of her experience therein, and lost a lecture contract as result of newspaper account of charge, held not excessive.

22. Malicious prosecution ⇨68, 77—Allowance of $100 attorney's fees and $500 punitive damages to plaintiff, in action for malicious prosecution, held proper.

Allowance of $100 attorney's fees and $500 punitive damages to plaintiff in action for malicious prosecution held not error.

23. New trial ⇨143(1)—Verdict cannot be impeached by dissenting juror's affidavit.

A verdict cannot be impeached by the affidavit of a dissenting juror.

24. New trial ⇨142—Verdict cannot be impeached by juror's hearsay affidavit as to what another juror's husband told her about complaining party.

A verdict cannot be impeached by juror's hearsay affidavit as to what another juror's husband told her about party against whom the verdict was rendered.

25. New trial ⇨56—Statement to juror by her husband during trial as to what he heard about defendant held not prejudicial, where 11 jurors voted for verdict against defendants.

Where 11 jurors voted for verdict against defendants, the latter were not seriously prejudiced by statement to one of such jurors by her husband during trial as to what he had heard about one of defendants.

26. New trial ⇨104(1)—Denial of new trial for newly discovered merely cumulative evidence on collateral matter held not abuse of discretion.

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence which was merely cumulative and on a collateral matter.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by Lillian E. Robinson against John F. McKnight and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hamilton & Lindley and Hamilton, Lindley & Higgins, all of San Diego, for appellants.

P. A. Whitacre and Thomas Whelan, both of San Diego, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. In this action for malicious prosecution, tried with a jury, plaintiff had judgment for $20,600. On motion for new trial the amount of the judgment was reduced to $10,600. From this amended judgment defendants appeal.

Appellants are husband and wife, and respondent is the sister of appellant John F. McKnight. Appellant John F. McKnight swore to a criminal complaint charging respondent with assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of his wife, the other appellant. Upon this charge respondent was arrested, confined in jail for 11 days, and, after a hearing before a committing magistrate, dismissed.

The incident out of which the criminal charge grew occurred at the home of appellants on the morning of December 14, 1925. On that morning respondent went to the home of the McKnights and saw Mrs. McKnight, Mr. McKnight having left for his office before respondent's arrival. Although there was a maid present in the McKnight home during the interview, she was not present in the room with respondent and Mrs. McKnight, and the only witnesses to what occurred during the interview are respondent and Mrs. McKnight. As to what occurred during that visit, which is agreed to have consumed one and one-half hours or longer, the two witnesses are in sharp conflict.

Mrs. McKnight testified, both at the preliminary hearing and on the trial of this action, that at the outset of their interview respondent leveled a revolver at her and said that she had come with the avowed intention of killing her; that this revolver was held in the same threatening position during practically the entire time that respondent was present in her home, and that respondent further stated that "she had a second gun loaded with gas that they used during the war to get two of my boys." Respondent testified, on the other hand, that she made no threats of any sort against the life of either Mrs. McKnight or her children, although she admits that she took with her a child's toy pistol, which was not exhibited, but which she intended to use to make her escape if she was threatened with injury by either of the appellants while she was in their home.

[1] As a part of her case in chief, respondent's counsel examined Mrs. McKnight, under Code of Civil Procedure, § 2055. Having elicited from her her testimony that respondent had held the gun leveled at her during practically the entire visit, and had repeatedly threatened her life and that of the children, counsel for respondent questioned her at some length as to what else had been said by respondent during the interview. Respondent was afterwards placed on the stand, and, over the objection of counsel for appellants that the matters were hearsay, self-serving declarations, and not within the issues, was permitted to testify in detail as to what was said while she was present in the McKnight home. This consisted largely of a long, accusatory harangue by respondent in which she recited the catalogue of her real or fancied grievances against the McKnights from the time of John McKnight's birth to the date of the interview. In this conversation, as testified to by respondent, she accused Mrs. McKnight of committing perjury in proceedings to have her husband declared a bankrupt, "with your diamonds pinned in your corset"; that she had cared for John McKnight when a baby at the sacrifice of her own health; that John McKnight had repudiated a child in bastardy proceedings that grew up "to be his image and is called John McKnight"; that the McKnights had dishonestly deprived the father of John McKnight and respondent of $23,000 and an automobile; that the McKnights had accused respondent of killing her husband, of being a dope fiend, and of stealing $4,000 of her mother's money. Enough has been recited to show that these statements were highly inflammatory before the jury, and, on the question of their truth or falsity, outside the issues of the case. They were also largely hearsay and all self-serving. Appellants claim that they were inadmissible, and that their admission, over repeated objection, constituted prejudicial error.

In an opinion written by the learned trial judge in passing on the motion for new trial he has this to say concerning this phase of the case: "There is no sort of doubt that much of the matter which the plaintiff testified that she then told Mrs. McKnight, and which, so far as appears from the evidence she may actually have told Mrs. McKnight, was of a character seriously to reflect on the uprightness and honesty of both the defendants, as well as upon their generosity in dealing with their relations. The jury were charged, however, with the duty here of deciding whether or not the defendants in charging the plaintiff with a crime were animated by malice. To determine that question it was vital that they have the means of deciding whether the defendants in charging the plaintiff with a crime really believed that she had committed it. The plaintiff's whole conduct on the day of the occurrence was what was presented to Mrs. McKnight and what she must be deemed to have taken into consideration in charging the commission of the crime. * * * The whole conversation on the part of Mrs. Robinson is objected to as self-serving. But if it is important to show, not the truth of what she said, but what she did say, and if the jury is entitled to know what she said, as necessary in determining the defendants' motives in what they did, I apprehend that it was admissible."

This language of the trial judge, in our opinion, presents a correct solution of this problem. The first question in issue before the jury was whether the conduct of respondent in the McKnight home was such as to lead appellants reasonably to believe that she had committed the crime with which they charged her. Her conduct was a composite of acts and words, what she did and what she said during the hour and a half that she was in their home. Mrs. McKnight contended that during the entire period she was brandishing a gun before her and making repeated threats to take her life and that of her children. To meet this testimony respondent had two alternatives—she could deny categorically that she brandished the gun and made the threats, or she could give her own version of what she said and what she did during the period covered by Mrs. McKnight's testimony. The effectiveness of a categorical denial is questionable under the circumstances of this case. Accused before a jury of threatening Mrs. McKnight for an hour and half with a revolver, her answer would be a simple, "I did not." Who can doubt the comparative force and effect of a detailed statement by Mrs. McKnight of what was done and what was said during an hour and a half of conversation when opposed by a simple, unelaborated denial. Being confronted by such a detailed statement of what she said and what she did, respondent would find herself at a decided tactical disadvantage unless she could meet such testimony by her own version of what was said and done on that occasion.

In Johnson v. Opfer, 58 Neb. 631, 79 N. W. 547, 548, plaintiff introduced evidence of a conversation with defendant, in which defendant was alleged to have made certain admissions. Defendant offered a witness to prove his version of the conversation, and an objection on the ground that such testimony would be of self-serving declarations was sustained. In holding that this was reversible error the Supreme Court of Nebraska said: "The evidence sought to be elicited by the interrogatory to which the objection was sustained was open to the criticism of it that an answer to it would allow of evidence a 'statement of the defendant in error in his own favor, a self-serving declaration.' It would be thus objectionable if to be considered as substantive evidence, or as in any degree bearing directly on the question of the execution of the note by the party who made the statement; but, notwithstanding this, here was a matter, a conversation relative to which all who testified of it agreed that it had transpired, and that there had been but one, and they but differed in regard to its time and place, and what was said. We think clearly the evidence offered was competent, and should have been received. Its tendency would have been to show that the defendant in error and his witness had been mistaken in regard to the time and place of the conversation, and further, to prove that when it did take place no admissions were made by plaintiff in error. For such purposes it was entirely pertinent, and should have been admitted, and submitted to the * * * jury under proper instructions stating, limiting, and prescribing the purpose of its reception and consideration."

More succinctly the same rule was stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Carver v. U. S., 164 U. S. 694, 17 S. Ct. 228, 229, 41 L. Ed. 602, 603: "If it were competent for one party to prove this conversation, it was equally competent for the other party to prove their version of it. * * * Where the whole or a part of a conversation has been put in evidence by one party, the other party is entitled to explain, vary, or contradict it." 22 C. J., p. 417; Fidelity, etc., Co. of New York v. Dorough (C. C. A.) 107 F. 389, 393, 394; Dalton v. Bowker, 8 Nev. 190, 202.

[2] However, we do not solely justify the reception of this evidence on this narrow ground, but on the broader ground that, in order to fairly determine the questions of malice and probable cause, the jury were entitled to be placed in possession of all the evidence as to what actually transpired during the hour and a half that appellants claim respondent was almost wholly occupied in threatening Mrs. McKnight's life with a gun pointed toward her. What actually was done and what actually was said during that hour and a half was the first essential subject of this inquiry.

[3, 4] The evidence being admissible and competent for this limited purpose, the rule respecting it is covered by Adkins v. Brett, 184 Cal. 252, 256, 193 P. 251, 253: "When an evidentiary fact is offered for one purpose, and becomes admissible by satisfying all the rules applicable to it in that capacity, it is not inadmissible because it does not satisfy the rules applicable to it in some other capacity, and because the jury might improperly consider it in the latter capacity. This doctrine, although involving certain risks, is indispensable as a practical rule." In the Adkins Case the court further held that, if he requests it, the opposing party for his protection is entitled to have the jury instructed as to the limited purpose for which the evidence is admitted, and such an instruction may at times be necessary at the very time that the evidence is received, but the failure to ask for such an instruction will constitute a waiver. At the close of respondent's testimony on this phase counsel for appellants asked the court to instruct the jury "that they are not to consider the statements made by this witness as proof of the facts contained in those statements to Mrs. McKnight." The court immediately so instructed the jury. In their requested instructions in writing appellants' counsel submitted no instruction on this subject, but the court of its own motion repeated the instruction in substantially the language above quoted, which was the language chosen by counsel for appellants themselves. If they had desired any further instruction on the subject they should have asked for it, and, having failed to do so, they have no valid ground for complaint.

[5] To prove malice counsel for respondent placed the father of respondent and John McKnight on the stand to prove certain conversations had by the father with John McKnight, in which the latter had evidenced animus against his sisters, including respondent. These statements, which occurred prior to the prosecution, were certainly admissible. But inextricably interwoven with them were the claims by the father that John McKnight had unjustly deprived his father of $23,000 and an automobile for which the father was endeavoring to get restitution partly for himself and partly for his daughters. As examples, the father testified that he asked his son to give him an automobile to take the place of the one the son had obtained from him, and John McKnight in substance replied that he would not give him one so long as he associated with "those skunks of sisters of mine." On another occasion the father testified that he demanded the repayment of $23,000, and John McKnight flew into a rage and said: "I know, because I am rich, you and the girls are plotting how you can get my money." That so much of the father's statements to his son which drew forth such replies, as is necessary to a clear understanding of the replies, is admissible cannot be questioned. Estate of Arnold, 147 Cal. 583, 82 P. 252. Counsel for respondent went no further than this in their case in chief.

[6-8] As a part of their defense, however, counsel for appellants recalled father McKnight to the stand and had him identify a number of promissory notes given by John McKnight to the father at various times and receipts signed by the father and given to the son. Counsel for respondents had these documents marked for identification, but did not offer them in evidence. On cross-examination counsel for appellant offered the documents so marked and identified, and they were received in evidence over objection. It may well be, although we do not express an opinion on the question, that by examining father McKnight concerning these documents, counsel for respondent opened the door to their admission on cross-examination. 40 Cyc. pp. 2499, 2500. From that time forth, however, both parties devoted a good deal of time to developing the financial controversies between father and son. Of this counsel for appellants complains that it was outside the issues and highly prejudicial. We think, however, that it was properly admitted on the question of malice.

Inextricably bound up with the claims of father McKnight against the son was his contention that John McKnight had deprived him of what should properly have gone to his daughters, including respondent, and the feeling of animus against the daughters in the breast of John McKnight because of what he felt, or claimed to feel, was an unjust claim by his sisters or on their behalf. In the proof of malice a wide latitude is necessarily allowed. Certainly it was open to respondent to prove in a general way that her brother harbored ill will against her on account of claims by her father against him on her behalf, particularly in view of the fact that, according to her testimony, it was to press those very claims that she went to the McKnight home on the day of the alleged assault. That the testimony on this phase bulked so large in the trial is chiefly due to the fact that appellants chose to introduce evidence calculated to refute the claims of the elder McKnight. Once that evidence was in, it was open to respondent to rebut it. That, though the zeal of respective counsel, it assumed such proportions toward the close of the trial that there may have been danger of the tail wagging the dog is chiefly due to the insistence of counsel for appellants in undertaking to explain it away.

In its general outlines the jury was entitled to have before it the evidence of this family feud, involving, as it did, a claim by, or on behalf of, respondent against John McKnight. It was competent on the question of malice.

In the early case of Lyon v. Hancock, 35 Cal. 372, 376, 377, our Supreme Court said: "Malice, like fraud, is generally to be inferred from facts and circumstances. Hence the plaintiff is entitled to prove any facts or circumstances which tend, even in the slightest degree, to show malice on the part of the defendant. For the same reason, the defendant is entitled to prove any facts and circumstances which tend, in the slightest degree, to show a contrary motive. * * * It certainly is not contrary to human experience to find a unity of feeling and action accompanying the family relation. Feuds descend from father to son. An injury to one is an injury to all. * * * It certainly is not contrary to human experience for the wife to sympathize with her husband, to share his feelings, to look upon his enemies and friends as hers also. Such are the teachings of our instincts and of our observation and experience."

In Monske v. Klee, 38 Idaho, 314, 221 P. 152, 154, the Supreme Court of Idaho said, in holding admissible evidence of family differences in an action for malicious prosecution: "The rule contended for by appellant is based upon the broad principle that evidence of malice of defendant against persons other than the plaintiff, in an action for malicious prosecution, does not show malice against the plaintiff. Admitting the rule in so far as it applies to persons not members of plaintiff's family, and the reasons for the rule, we think an entirely different rule applies where defendant's acts tend to show malice toward a member of plaintiff's family, particularly his wife. The family is perhaps the strongest human tie. Many who are indifferent to personal abuse or attack are aroused to the highest pitch of fury by unwarranted attacks upon the person, character, or reputation of a member of the family."

[9] In such an action the previous relations between the parties themselves may be shown. Pickles v. Anton, 49 N. D. 47, 189 N. W. 684; Allison v. Bryan, 50 Okl. 677, 151 P. 610. We are satisfied, under the circumstances here shown, particularly in view of the fact that the father's claim was largely made on behalf of respondent and his other daughters, and the animus shown against respondent by John McKnight in connection with such claim, that it was not error to admit the evidence complained of.

[10, 11] Appellants likewise complain of the admission of the record of the preliminary hearing on the ground that the dismissal of that proceeding was admitted by the answer. The admission of the answer was not entirely unequivocal and was connected with an allegation that the committing magistrate stated: "Under all the circumstances the case must fall." But even if the admission of the record was erroneous, which is at least doubtful (Martin v. P. G. & E. Co., 203 Cal. 291, 264 P. 246), it is hard to see how appellants were harmed. The jury were correctly instructed that the record was admissible solely for the purpose of showing the termination of the action in favor of plaintiff, and that it was no evidence of want of probable cause. We must assume that this instruction was followed by the jury.

[12, 13] Appellants insist that malice and want of probable cause were not shown. In addition to the testimony above summarized, evidence was introduced that John McKnight had stated that, if respondent ever came to his house, he would have her arrested. This would support a finding of malice. If respondent's testimony was believed by the jury, and it must have been, Mrs. McKnight testified falsely as to the facts and there was no assault, and hence no probable cause for her arrest on that charge. Malice may also be inferred from want of probable cause. Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 204 P. 578.

[14-16] Appellants also claim protection from the fact that they acted on the advice of the district attorney. But if, as the jury must have found, they falsely stated the facts, that advice was no protection. Murphy v. Davids, 181 Cal. 706, 186 P. 143; Franzen v. Shenk, 192 Cal. 572, 576, 221 P. 932. Nor is it a defense that Mrs. McKnight testified under subpoena, if her testimony was false. 16 Cal. Jur. 733. It was not error to exclude evidence of the advice of a police officer. 38 C. J., p. 431, and cases cited in notes 72-75.

[17-19] It was error to admit in evidence checks showing that respondent had given her father small sums of money, but we are satisfied that appellants were not prejudiced thereby. Nor do we think appellants were prejudiced by the introduction of the jail record, to which record had been added at a later date: "One toy pistol." The jailer testified that when respondent was received at the jail she had on her person only $1.76. This was not contradicted, nor was it attempted to be shown that she had any deadly weapon at that time. In this state of the record appellants can have suffered no prejudice.

[20-22] The verdict, as cut down by the court, was not excessive. This was a question primarily for the consideration of the trial judge. Respondent spent 11 days in jail. She testified at the trial that she had spent many years in Europe assembling material for lectures, that she had been giving lectures for some time, and that by reason of her experience in jail she was highly nervous and upset physically and unable to continue this work. An account of the charge appeared in two San Diego papers, and as a result a contract to give a series of lectures was canceled. Under the circumstances we cannot say that $10,000 actual damages is excessive, or shows passion and prejudice. No complaint can be made of $100 for attorney's fees for her defense or $500 punitive damages.

[23-25] On motion for new trial appellants produced the affidavit of the sole dissenting juror that a woman juror had told him after the verdict that during the trial her husband had told her that he had heard John McKnight was a prince of an S. B. Another affidavit recited that the husband when interviewed had admitted this. The verdict cannot be impeached by the affidavit of a dissenting juror (Saltzman v. Sunset T., etc., Co., 125 Cal. 501, 504-506, 58 P. 169), nor by the hearsay affidavit of what the husband said. Nor, since 11 jurors voted for the verdict, can it be seen how appellants could have been seriously prejudiced.

[26] Appellants' claim of newly discovered evidence was merely cumulative and on a collateral matter. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial on this ground. We are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that appellants suffered no prejudice from the few errors that may have crept into the trial.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

103 Cal. App. 757
LEMKA v. NAUMAN et al. (Civ. 3874.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied March 8, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨242(6) — Inference arising from defendant's ownership of automobile and that driver was acting within scope of employment held not overcome by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence.

In action for damages for personal injuries arising out of automobile accident, inference that driver of defendant's automobile was acting within scope of employment arising from defendant's ownership of automobile and driver's general employment held not overcome by clear positive and uncontradicted evidence.

2. Trial ⇨140(2) — Truth of defendant's contradictory statements in action for personal injuries held for jury.

Truth of contradictory statements of defendant in action for personal injuries arising from automobile accident held for jury.

3. Appeal and error ⇨994(2) — Appellate court on defendant's appeal from judgment in action for personal injuries cannot determine jury was wrong in their estimate of defendant's testimony.

On defendant's appeal from judgment in action for damages for personal injuries, appellate court cannot determine jury was wrong in their estimate of defendant's testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Claud Lemka against Harry A. Nauman and another. Action was dismissed as to defendant Robert Parks, and from a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Harry A. Nauman appeals. Affirmed.

Irving D. Gibson and Gilford G. Rowland, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh and Joseph W. Mento, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiff had judgment against the defendant Harry A. Nauman in the sum of $750 for and on account of injuries alleged to have been received by the plaintiff by reason of a collision between an automobile in which the plaintiff was riding and an automobile belonging to the defendant Harry A. Nauman, and driven by the defendant Robert Parks, an employee of the defendant Nauman. From this judgment the defendant Harry A. Nauman appeals.

The record shows that on or about the 26th day of July, 1926, at the intersection of Nineteenth and L streets in the city of Sacramento, there was a collision between an automobile owned and driven by the plaintiff, and an automobile owned by the defendant Nauman and driven by the defendant Parks. The record shows that for some years prior to the incident just mentioned the defendant Nauman owned and at the time in question was conducting an undertaking establishment at 1811 G street in the city of Sacramento; that during all the times mentioned in this proceeding defendant Nauman resided at 1712 N street, being at a place about seven blocks south of his place of business; that Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets were the ones usually traveled in going from the undertaking establishment to the residence of the defendant Nauman at 1712 N street. It further appears from the transcript that the defendant Nauman maintained a garage at his undertaking establishment, and also at the place of his residence; that at times the Studebaker car belonging to the defendant Nauman, involved in this action, was kept at the garage maintained at the undertaking parlors, and at times would be kept at the garage belonging to the defendant Nauman, and situate at 1712 N street; that the defendant Robert Parks, an employee of the defendant Nauman, slept at the undertaking establishment. The record further shows that the defendant Nauman usually left his place of residence on N street to go to the undertaking parlors at about 8 o'clock each morning. It further appears that frequently the defendant Nauman would telephone to Parks, when the Studebaker car was housed in the garage on G street, to bring the car over to the residence of the defendant Nauman and take the defendant Nauman from his residence to the undertaking parlors. In doing this Parks would drive down either Eighteenth or Nineteenth street and return by one of said streets. The collision referred to in this action occurred at about 8 o'clock in the morning. During the night previous the Studebaker car had been housed in the garage maintained on G street in connection with the undertaking parlors. The collision was on Nineteenth street, being one of the streets used in traversing the distance between the two places mentioned, and one of the streets ordinarily used by Parks when on his way to the residence of the defendant Nauman to pick him up and take him to the undertaking parlors. The ownership of the car is admitted; nor is it disputed that the defendant Parks was in the employ of the defendant Nauman. The only issue tendered in this case is whether the evidence of the defendant Nauman is sufficient not only to rebut the prima facie case made out by showing the ownership of the car involved in the issue and the fact that the defendant Parks was an employee of the defendant Nauman, and the reasonable inferences to be drawn from the circumstances that the defendant Parks, as an employee of the defendant Nauman, was acting in the course of his employment when driving the car southward on Nineteenth street toward the residence of the defendant Nauman. It is contended on the part of the appellant that the testimony of the defendant Nauman is such as to demand a judgment in his favor; that it is of such a character that the jury was unwarranted in bringing in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff; that the inference to be drawn from the fact of ownership of the car and the general employment of the defendant Parks is so squarely met by the testimony of the defendant Nauman that a conclusion that the defendant Parks was engaged on a mission in the course of his employment for the defendant Nauman is wholly unwarranted.

In the case of Fahey v. Madden, 56 Cal. App. 594, 206 P. 128, this court, in considering the legal relation necessary to charge the owner of a car, held as follows (we quote from the syllabus): "In an action for damages for personal injuries caused by being struck by an automobile, proof of ownership of the machine by one person and its operation by another with the knowledge and consent of the former makes out a prima facie case of agency between the owner and the operator, based on an inference, but that inference will not serve to create a conflict in the evidence as against clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence that such relationship did not exist." A number of cases are there cited which we need not review, but we may call attention to the case of Perry v. Paladini, 89 Cal. App. 275, 264 P. 580, where a number of cases are cited having to do with the same subject, and where the same rule of law is affirmed. This leaves but one question to determine: Is the prima facie case made out by the admitted ownership of the Studebaker automobile by the defendant in this action, and the fact that it was being driven by an employee of the defendant Nauman, been met by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence that while the relationship of principal and agent existed between the defendant Nauman and the defendant Parks, that the defendant Parks was not acting within the scope of his agency on the morning of July 26, 1926, at the time of the collision? This is best answered by quoting the testimony of the defendant Nauman, touching the vital question in this case. Called under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant Nauman testified as follows:

"Q. Mr. Parks slept at the undertaking establishment, did he not? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, isn't it a fact that Mr. Parks would go to your house and take you from your place of residence to your place of business? You would telephone him to come over with the car and he would take you over as a matter of custom? A. No, it was not, no; unless I telephoned to him. I usually walked over if the car was over there. Some mornings I would feel indisposed, so I would telephone for him to come for me.

"Q. Now, isn't it true this particular morning you telephoned for Mr. Parks to come over there with the car to take you from your place of residence to your place of business? A. No; I cannot testify to that because I do not know.

"Q. You cannot say whether you did or not, can you? A. No.

"Q. On the particular morning of the accident, Mr. Nauman, the Studebaker car was not in your garage back of your place of residence that morning, was it? A. As near as I know it was not at the residence that morning.

"Q. It was not at the residence that morning? A. No.

"Q. Isn't it true, the times when Mr. Parks would go from the undertaking establishment over to your place of residence to your place of business, was when the car would be at the undertaking establishment during the night? A. Yes.

"Q. So far as calling him on this particular occasion on the telephone, you cannot swear whether you did or not, can you? A. I cannot, I cannot, no sir."

On examination by defendant's own counsel, the defendant testified as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. Nauman, you knew, as a matter of fact, did you not, that on this particular morning, at the time of the accident, namely, about 7:40 a. m. on the morning of July 26, 1926, that Robert Parks was not doing anything for you with the automobile? A. That I am positive, yes.

"Q. You are positive he was not doing anything for you at the time of the accident, with the automobile? A. I am positive of that.

"Q. You are also positive you had given him no directions that morning to drive the automobile for you? A. Yes, I am positive.

"Q. You recollect hearing afterwards there was a collision at Nineteenth and L streets? A. Oh, yes.

"Q. If Mr. Parks was driving the automobile at 20 minutes to 8 on the morning of July 26, 1926, then he was driving the car without your permission, was he? A. He was, yes.

"Q. And without your consent? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Had you previously notified Mr. Parks, on different occasions, that he should not use the Studebaker automobile without your consent? A. I had.

"Q. Had you heard of his using the car without your consent before you had told him not to use it? A. Yes.

"Q. And told him not to do it again? A. Yes, sir."

On redirect examination by counsel for plaintiff, Mr. Nauman further testified as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. Nauman, you testified just a moment ago that you could not swear whether or not you had telephoned Mr. Parks to bring that car, that Studebaker car, to your house, and take you over to your place of business, didn't you? A. On what day?

"Q. On the morning of the accident? A. I testified I did not know.

"Q. That you did not know whether you had telephoned him to bring the car over to your place of residence and take you over to your place of business? A. If I testified, I testified erroneously, because I am positive I did not instruct him to call for me."

Here the witness was shown a statement made by him in a deposition taken before a notary public, containing the following questions and answers:

"Q. Well, had you given him permission to use it on this particular morning, the morning of the accident? A. That I cannot tell, either.

"Q. Do you remember that question being asked you, and you having made that answer? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. (Reading). 'Q. You cannot tell whether you did or not? A. No, no.' Was that question asked you, and did you make that answer? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. (Reading). 'Q. And, you don't remember whether you telephoned to him to come and to bring the automobile over there, or drive it over there to take you to the undertaking establishment, do you? A. No, I could not tell you that.'

"Q. Do you remember that question being asked you and you making that answer? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. (Reading). 'Q. There were occasions when you would telephone to him and tell him to bring the automobile over to the house to bring you to the undertaking establishment? A. Yes, sir.'

"Q. That was asked you, and answered? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. (Reading). 'Q. And that was quite a common practice on your part, was it? A. Yes, sir.'

"Q. (Reading). 'Q. As to whether or not you called him up on this particular morning, and asked him to bring the automobile over there to take you back, you do not recall at this time? A. Not positively, no.'"

Upon further examination of the defendant by his own counsel, the witness stated that he was confused at the time of the examination.

[1-3] It is evident from a reading of this testimony that there is no clear, positive evidence on the part of the defendant rebutting the inference arising from the fact of ownership of the car and the general employment of the defendant Parks by the defendant Nauman. To be sure, testimony is not directly contradicted. However, the testimony is of such a nature that the jury might very well draw the conclusion that the witness had contradicted himself. Again, the circumstance that the employee Parks was driving directly from the undertaking parlors toward the residence of the defendant Nauman, at the hour in the morning when he would usually be driving in that direction for the purpose of picking up the defendant Nauman and taking him to the undertaking establishment, was a matter to be considered by the jury in connection with the testimony of the defendant Nauman, in determining the true facts. Another thing the jury had a right to take into consideration in determining whether the employee Parks was on a mission in the interest of his employer Nauman, on the morning in question, was the leading character of the questions to which he made answer. When questioned by counsel for the plaintiff, the witness testified that he did not know whether he had called Parks on the telephone on the morning of July 26, 1926, and likewise had given the same testimony in a deposition previously taken, but when led by his counsel, he was positive that he had not so telephoned. This presented an issue for the jury to determine as to which statement set forth the truth. If the jury believed the statement of the witness given in answer to questions propounded by counsel for the plaintiff, then and in that case the verdict is amply supported.

We cannot, upon appeal, determine that they were wrong in their estimate of the testimony of the defendant; and hence the requirements set forth in the cases which we have cited and the ones there referred to have not been met so as to justify a reversal. It may be stated that the defendant Parks did not appear upon the trial, and his whereabouts appear to have been unknown to the respective parties, and the cause of action as to him was dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

KLING v. GUSTASON. (Civ. 5530.)

103 Cal. App. 575

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1930.

Costs $$237$ —Where trial court failed to determine merits of defendant's counterclaim, he was entitled to costs on his appeal, although judgment was partially affirmed.

In action for attorney's fees where defendant interposed counterclaim for negligence, and court gave judgment for attorney's fees but failed to make any findings on issues raised by counterclaim, contention that defendant was not entitled to costs on his appeal could not be supported even though judgment for attorney's fees, which was affirmed as modified, might have been corrected in lower court, in view of fact that defendant was successful in obtaining partial reversal based on court's failure to pass upon merits of counterclaim.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by David G. Kling against David G. Gustason. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Modified and affirmed in part, reversed in part (Cal. App.) 281 P. 407. Motion by plaintiff to recall the remittitur issued therein and to issue another remittitur refusing allowance of defendant's costs. Motion denied.

Van Lee Hood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

D. G. Kling and William Ellis Lady, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. Respondent moves this court to recall the remittitur issued herein on part reversal of the judgment ([Cal. App.] 281 P. 407) and to issue another remittitur in its place, omitting therefrom the words "appellant to recover costs on appeal."

The action was one for attorney's fees, the defendant responding thereto by a pleading referred to by the parties both as a cross-complaint and a counterclaim—and to which the plaintiff interposed an answer—seeking to recover damages for alleged negligence of the plaintiff as an attorney in the handling of various matters for the defendant. On the issues tendered by the counterclaim and the answer thereto the court below failed to make any findings. As to the award of attorney's fees the judgment was affirmed on appeal, as modified, however, by the deduction therefrom of interest erroneously allowed and a small sum representing a mistake in addition. The reversal was based upon the failure of the court below to find upon the issue as to plaintiff's alleged negligence and the damage claimed to have been suffered by defendant therefrom.

The fact that the error as to amount of the award of attorney's fees might have been corrected in the trial court is immaterial for any purpose relevant to the present motion. Had it been there corrected and judgment entered for the amount as to which we affirmed that portion of the judgment, appellant would still have had the right to prosecute an appeal for the purpose of reviewing the action of the court below as to the other branch of the case. Having successfully done so, he is entitled to his costs.

The motion is denied.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 747

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 1563.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 7, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1930.

1. Escape ☞—One given indeterminate sentence was, after sentence was fixed, prisoner "committed to state prison for term less than life," within law relating to escape (Pen. Code, §§ 106, 1168).

Where term of one convicted for robbery and given indeterminate sentence under Pen. Code, § 1168, was thereafter fixed by board of prison directors at ten years, he was thereafter a prisoner "committed to the state prison for term less than for life," within meaning of section 106, relating to escape or attempt to escape by a prisoner committed to state prison for a term less than for life.

2. Escape ☞—"Prison guard," as used in law relating to escape of prisoner, does not mean position or office existing at prisons (Pen. Code, § 106; St. 1923, p. 667).

"Prison guard," as used in Pen. Code, § 106, relating to escape or attempt to escape by prisoner committed to state prison for term less than life, does not mean position or office which exists at each of prisons, there being nothing in St. 1923, p. 667, showing that when in road camps the prisoners are to be guarded by or under surveillance of persons holding appointments as prison guards.

3. Criminal law ☞778(11)—Instruction on flight was proper in prosecution under law relating to escape of prisoner (Pen. Code, § 106).

In prosecution under Pen. Code, § 106, relating to escape or attempt to escape by prisoner committed to state prison for term less than for life, instruction on flight was proper as being pertinent to gravamen of charge under investigation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Maurice T. Dooling, Judge.

Russell Smith was convicted of violating law relating to escape of prisoners committed to State Prison for a term less than for life, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Spagnoli and Walter F. Lynch, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

STURTEVANT, J. The defendant was convicted of violating section 106 of the Penal Code and has appealed from the judgment.

On May 25, 1925, the defendant was convicted of robbery in the second degree and was given an indeterminate sentence under section 1168 of the Penal Code. Thereupon he was sent to San Quentin. On August 13, 1927, the board of prison directors fixed the term of the defendant at ten years. On February 2, 1928, the defendant made an application to be sent to one of the road camps. On April 16, 1928, he was sent to "Camp 15." On September 16, 1928, the records show he escaped. It was that escape which the district attorney charged in the information on file in this action.

[1] The defendant contends that the evidence is insufficient to show: (1) That the defendant was, prior to the filing of this information, committed to a state prison for a term less than life; (2) that he escaped while under the surveillance of a prison guard; (3) to identify him with the person who was convicted of robbery; and (4) to show that the defendant was under any surveillance. All of these attacks except the third rest on the construction which the defendant places on the statute and the information which purports to plead the provisions of the statute. The defendant calls attention to the fact that the judgment entered in Los Angeles county was for robbery in the second degree. He then asserts that he was sent to prison for a life term (Pen. Code, § 671) as distinguished from a term for less than life. In making this contention the defendant claims that in every instance under the Indeterminate Sentence Law the defendant is sent to prison for the maximum term. In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 P. 958. Conceding that for certain purposes such is the rule, we think that even the defendant must concede that the very nature of the new statute is that it provides that every sentence will be indeterminate. So far as the facts of this case are concerned, the sentence was required to be, and in fact was, indeterminate when the trial judge rendered the sentence. It is equally clear that thereafter when the board of prison directors fixed the term, the sentence which was theretofore indeterminate became determinate. All of these facts had transpired before the defendant was sent to camp 15. As stated above, the indeterminate sentence was imposed on May 25, 1925. If on a subsequent day he had been pardoned, thereafter his status would not be that of a prisoner "committed for life" or for any other term. Likewise, when on August 13, 1927, the board of prison directors fixed his term at ten years, thereafter he was a "prisoner committed to the state prison of the State of California at San Quentin for a term less than for life."

[2] In asserting that when the defendant escaped he was not "under the surveillance of a prison guard," the defendant uses the words "prison guard" as meaning the position or office which exists at each of the prisons. There is nothing in the Penal Code, section 106, showing that the words were so limited and there is nothing in chapter 316 of the Statutes of 1923 showing that when in road camps the prisoners are to be guarded by or under the surveillance of persons holding appointments as "prison guards." However, at such times and places, the prisoners are to be under surveillance.

In claiming that the evidence is insufficient to identify the defendant with the person who was convicted of robbery in the second degree, the defendant does not quote the record and does not cite any authorities sustaining the point, therefore we pass on.

[3] The trial court gave an instruction on flight. The defendant contends the instruction should not have been given. In effect he concedes that the law was stated correctly in the instruction, but that the subject-matter was not pertinent to the case on trial. As the gravamen of the charge under investigation was flight, it is not clear why the law on that subject was not pertinent. The defendant cites no authority supporting his contention.

The trial court gave an instruction defining "a term less than life" within the meaning of section 106 of the Penal Code. The defendant claims the instruction was erroneous. If our construction of the statute as above set forth is correct, and we have no doubt but what it is, then there was no error in the instruction.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: NOURSE, J.

103 Cal. App. 577

In re WHITNEY'S ESTATE.

PELKEY v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA
ASS'N OF SEVENTH DAY AD-VENTISTS et al.

(Civ. 7040.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. January 30, 1930.

Wills ⇨ 132—Instrument in testator's handwriting, except for printed portions of place and date line, on sheet of corporation's office stationery, held holographic will.

Purported will written on one sheet of corporation's office stationery in testator's handwriting, except for printed names of city and state and figures "192-", following blank space for month and day, held an holographic will; names of corporation, its officers and directors, not being part of instrument, while presence of words "last will and testament of" testator at top of sheet was immaterial, even if essential portion of will.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Proceedings by the Southern California Association of Seventh Day Adventists, a corporation, and another, to probate the will of Joseph M. Whitney, deceased, contested by Clara Louise Pelkey. From an order refusing to revoke the probate of the will, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas W. Cochran, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kemper Campbell and Chas. L. Nichols, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Southern California Ass'n of Seventh Day Adventists.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. The appeal is from an order refusing to revoke the probate of an alleged holographic will. Although the contestant had included several grounds in her petition, all but one of these were abandoned at the hearing, so that the only question presented to the court below and to us on this appeal is whether or not the document was "entirely written, dated and signed by the testator himself."

The purported will was written upon one sheet of what appears to be the office stationery of the Allied Petroleum Corporation, and except for the printed matter thereon was in the handwriting of and signed by the testator. Approximately one and one-quarter inches below the top of the sheet, and in large type, are printed or embossed the words "Allied Petroleum Corporation." There is a margin of about two and a quarter inches on each side of these words, which occupy a space of about three and one-half inches in length. In the upper left-hand corner of the sheet are printed in much smaller type the words "Officers and Directors," and directly under these words the names and titles of the president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer, while in the corresponding position in the right-hand upper corner, and in the same sized type, appears the word "Directors," and under it the names of three individuals. Commencing at the middle of the sheet, and about three-eighths of an inch below the words "Allied Petroleum Corporation," is the following: "Montebello, California. ——— 192-." This is all the printed matter which is contained on the sheet, all else being admittedly in the handwriting of the testator and consisting of the following: At the top of the sheet, between the list of officers and directors occupying the right and left-hand upper corners thereof, and just above the printed words "Allied Petroleum Corporation," are the written words "Last Will an [sic] Testament of Joseph M. Whitney." To the left of the printed words "Montebello," etc., appear the words "In the Name of God Amen," this phrase being written at so slight a distance below the line of the word "Montebello" that the upper loops of the letters extend above said line prolonged to the left. The space above the line between the word "California" and the figures "192-" has written in it the date "January 9th," while the figure "4" is written in the space following the figures "192." Below the words "In the Name," etc., and the date line filled in as above described is the body of the will, the last paragraph of which (excepting for an addition or codicil) reads: "In witness heref [sic] I have set my hand and seal this 10th day of Jany Nineteen hundred & Twenty four A. D." Below this is the signature of the testator.

It is appellant's contention that the presence of the printed matter on the sheet on which the will was written, and particularly of the date line reading "Montebello, California, January 9th, 1924," the italicized portion of which was in the testator's writing and the rest printed, vitiates the document as an holographic will. In support thereof she relies on Estate of Thorn, 183 Cal. 512, 192 P. 19; Estate of Francis, 191 Cal. 600, 217 P. 746, and Estate of Bernard, 197 Cal. 36, 239 P. 404, in each of which cases it was held that the presence of printed matter in and forming a part of the instrument involved vitiated it as an holographic will.

These decisions, however, are distinguished, if not in effect overruled, by the later rulings of the Supreme Court in Estate of Oldham, 203 Cal. 618, 265 P. 183, 184, and Estate of De Caccia (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 552, 554, 61 A. L. R. 393.

In the first of the cases last cited the will in question was written by the testator on three sheets of paper, each of which had printed at the top thereof the name and office address of the testator, below which appeared the words, also printed, "Los Angeles, Calif." In other words, the paper used was the office stationery of the decedent. On the first sheet the words "Los Angeles, Calif." were followed by the date, written approximately on the same line. Discussing the Bernard Case, relied on there, as here, by the appellants, the court noted that it had there held that the instrument in question was not an holographic will because the printed words were incorporated in and doubtless were intended to be made a part of the heading of the document, and that "it was expressly held that, by the use of this heading, the deceased had made not only the date, which was absolutely necessary to the validity of the document as a testamentary disposition, but also 'the printed portion, designating the place of the making of the document, an essential part of the document.'" Distinguishing the instrument involved in the Bernard Case from that in the case under review, the opinion proceeded: "In the instrument now before us, and which, it is contended, is the last will of John Y. Oldham, deceased, we find no reference whatever to the printed words appearing upon stationery used by the deceased in the preparation of said instrument. These printed words are not expressly, by direct reference, or impliedly, by inference or otherwise, made a part of the written instrument set forth on the sheets of paper upon which they appear." Referring particularly to the contention that the testator had, by writing the date after and on approximately the same line as the words "Los Angeles, Calif.," made those printed words a part of the written document, the court said: "In Estate of Bernard a similar situation was referred to, and was considered as a possible circumstance which taken in connection with the fact that these printed words appeared in the caption of the instrument along with the words written by the deceased, tended to show an intent on the part of the deceased to make the printed words a part of the instrument itself. This circumstance, standing alone, as it does in the present proceeding, is so slight that it would not warrant the conclusion that the deceased, by simply writing after the printed words the date of the document, thereby intended to make such printed words any part of the document itself." The opinion closes with the following language: "The printed words appearing upon the three sheets of paper upon which the deceased attempted to write his will are wholly disconnected from the writing itself, and they form no part thereof. Our attention has not been called to any authority, nor are we aware of any such, which holds that the mere presence of printed words upon a sheet of paper, used by a person for the purpose of writing thereon an holographic will, renders the will invalid when such printed matter is no part of the writing, and is wholly dissociated therefrom. It follows from the views expressed herein that the document admitted to probate was the valid will of said deceased, and the order denying appellants' contest and admitting to probate said document as the last will and testament of said deceased should be, and is hereby, affirmed."

In the De Caccia Case the will was written on stationery upon which the words "Oakland, California," were printed; these words being followed by the date, written by the testator, as was the balance of the instrument. The body of the will commenced near the upper left-hand corner of the sheet on which it was written. The first three lines terminated but a short space beyond the center of the sheet, or over an inch to the left of the printed words, and the first line commenced directly opposite the same. The decedent, however, did not follow a straight line in his chirography, with the result that the last words of the first line written by him were slightly nearer the top of the page than were the printed words. The whole of the second line was below the level of the printed words. The entire will consisted of nine lines only. It contained no date except as above stated. The trial court had held "that the printed words 'Oakland, California' were a part of the instrument executed and signed by the decedent, and therefore, that the instrument was not entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, and for that reason could not be and was not his last will and testament."

Reversing this ruling, the Supreme Court held that the rule announced in the Oldham Case was applicable, and again distinguished the Bernard Case. We quote from the opinion: "The instrument now before us resembles in many respects that held to be a valid holographic will in the Estate of Oldham, supra. The date simply follows the printed words appearing upon the instrument. The printed words are not preceded by any writing of the decedent in which a reference is made to said printed matter, as was found to be the case in Estate of Bernard, supra, indicating that it was the intention of the testator to make them a part of the instrument. It is true that decedent in the writing of the document began the same to the left and directly opposite to the printed words, and that the first line written by him ended slightly nearer the top of the page than were the words, 'Oakland, California,' but there was nothing in this line, or, for that matter, in any part of the instrument, referring in any manner to said printed words, much less indicating an intention to make them, as was said in Estate of Bernard, supra, 'an essential part of the document.' Respondents make mention of the fact that the first line of the will is slightly above the printed words, and rely upon this circumstance as indicating an intention by the testator to make the printed words a part of the will. * * * It is further contended by respondents that the deceased used scrupulous care to write the date, 'Feb. 14th-27,' on the same line and as close as possible to the printed words, 'Oakland, California,' and thus manifested a clear intention to connect the printed words in the instrument with the date of its execution. The difference between the relative position of the printed words and the written date following in the instrument now before us and in that considered in Estate of Oldham, supra, is so slight as to be almost negligible. In the Oldham will the date was so nearly in line with the words, 'Los Angeles, Calif.,' that in deciding that case we referred to them as 'being followed by the date, written approximately on the same line.' We do not believe that this slight difference in the two instruments in this respect would justify a decision in one upholding it as a legal instrument and in the other a decision declaring it invalid. In other words, we are of the opinion that the two instruments in the respect just referred to are so similar that the rules governing their construction must apply alike to both documents, and that, if one was upheld as a valid will, the same ruling must apply to the other. * * * The mere fact that the decedent placed the date immediately after and upon the exact line with the printed words in the instrument is not in itself sufficient to show that he thereby intended to make said printed words a part of said instrument. Nowhere in said instrument is there any reference made to the printed words upon the sheet of paper used by said decedent for the purpose of writing his will. The printed words are in no way essential to the validity of the instrument as an holographic will, and we are not to presume that the decedent made them a part of the instrument he executed without some evidence appearing upon the face of the instrument itself manifesting such an intention. The mere presence of printed matter upon stationery used by a person for the purpose of writing his holographic will which forms no part of the written instrument, and to which no reference directly or indirectly is made in the written instrument, will not destroy the effect of such instrument as an holographic will."

The will under consideration here presents even a stronger case for the proponents than did either of the instruments found to be holographic wills in the two cases just reviewed. Here the date written at the top of the instrument following the printed words "Montebello, California," may be deemed not to have been intended by the decedent at the date of the instrument at all, since the last sentence of the will proper states that it was executed on January 10th, a day later than the date first written. It most certainly could not be deemed that the name of the corporation or the names of its officers and directors were intended by the testator as any part of the instrument. The presence of the words "Last Will an [sic] Testament of Joseph M. Whitney" at the top of the sheet as above described is immaterial even if such words be deemed an essential portion of the will, which they are not.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 698

PEOPLE v. HILLARD. (Cr. 1906.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 19, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 3, 1930.

1. Criminal law $\S$ 1211—Increased punishment for petty theft was properly imposed under statute dealing with larceny, where amendment required substitution of word "theft" therein (Pen. Code §§ 484-490 amended, and section 490a added, by St. 1927, p. 1046; Pen. Code § 666).

Contention that Pen. Code, § 666, dealing with larceny, did not include petty theft, could not be sustained in view of sections 484-490 amended, and section 490a added, by St. 1927, p. 1046, requiring the term "theft" to be substituted in any statute referring to larceny, and therefore second conviction of crime of theft was a felony and within jurisdiction of superior court.

2. Statutes $\S$ 118(6)—Amending statute substituting word "theft" for "larceny" was applicable to statute dealing with larceny, although not specifically referred to (Pen. Code § 666; St. 1927, p. 1046).

Contention that Pen. Code, § 666, not being mentioned by title or number, was not re-enacted or otherwise affected by St. 1927, p. 1046, was fallacious, since it did not violate constitutional requirement that it must include but one subject which must be expressed in its title.

3. Statutes $\S$ 109—Statute does not violate Constitution if terms can reasonably be deemed to be described by title, or necessary to attainment of purpose.

If provisions of statute can fairly be regarded as falling within subject-matter indicated in title, or necessary to attainment of its object, it will not be held to conflict with Constitution.

4. Constitutional law $\S$ 45—Objection to statute substituting "theft" for "larceny," on ground it increased scope of larceny, cannot be passed on in case where alleged offense was committed after enactment (St. 1927, p. 1046).

Objection that Pen. Code, § 490a, added by St. 1927, p. 1046, by substituting the word "theft" for the word "larceny," had widened scope of larceny and hence might include some offense other than stealing, could not be passed on as applied to a case where alleged offense occurred after passage of statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Corries Hillard was convicted of petty theft after conviction upon a charge of having previously committed petty theft. From an order granting his motion for a new trial, the People appeal. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

Frederic H. Vercoe, Public Defender, and Franklin Padan, Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J. The people appeal from an order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial upon conviction in the superior court of Los Angeles county of petty theft, after conviction in the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles, upon a charge of having previously committed petty theft.

Respondent was alleged by information to have unlawfully taken away personal property of another on or about August 1, 1929, and by a second paragraph it was charged that on or about May 2, 1929, he was tried in the municipal court and there found guilty of petty theft, and thereafter sentenced and served a term of imprisonment. He pleaded guilty to the last-mentioned charge and, after a trial before the court, was convicted of the later offense. A motion for a new trial was interposed and was granted upon the theory that section 666 of the Penal Code, increasing the punishment upon the commission of a second offense, does not include petty theft among the prior offenses therein specified, and hence that the superior court had no jurisdiction of the instant case. It is argued that, being convicted of petty theft as defined by sections 486 and 488, inclusive, of the Penal Code, the charge and plea of guilty upon the bare allegation of a previous conviction of the defendant having committed "petty theft," might subject him to punishment for either of several offenses, since larceny, embezzlement, stealing, and false pretenses were by amendment embraced within the single definition, but that section 666 of the Penal Code was not amended accordingly.

The Legislature of 1927 (Stats. 1927, ch. 619, p. 1046), expressly amended sections 484 to 489, both inclusive, and section 490 of said Code and added thereto section 490a, providing that:

"Wherever any law or statute of this state refers to or mentions larceny, embezzlement, or stealing, said law or statute shall hereafter be read and interpreted as if the word 'theft' were substituted therefor."

Section 666 reads as follows:

"Every person who, having been convicted of petit larceny and having served a term therefor in any penal institution, commits any crime after such conviction, is punishable therefor as follows:

"* * * If the subsequent conviction is for petit larceny then the person convicted of such subsequent offense is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years."

[1] It is obvious that while this section is not specifically mentioned by said amendment, the quoted provisions are plainly within the language of the new section. In People v. Giron (Cal. App.) 270 P. 462, it was contended that an information drawn in the language of the statute did not charge a public offense, for the reason that larceny might be committed in various ways. It was there held that: "So far as the new definition of larceny is concerned, the change of name is one of form and not of substance. The amendments did not wipe out the common-law definition of larceny, nor did they destroy the universal meaning of the word wherever English is spoken, that larceny is a form of theft. To think otherwise would be to defy common sense." To the same effect are People v. Campbell, 89 Cal. App. 646, 265 P. 364, and People v. Maddux (Cal. App.) 282 P. 996. Again, as recently held by this court, "former crimes of larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining property by false pretenses are merged into the one crime of theft." People v. Plum, 88 Cal. App. 575, 263 P. 862, 265 P. 322." People v. Stevenson (Cal. App.) 284 P. 487. The Legislature must be presumed to have been familiar with and to have had in mind the acts of previous Legislatures when it enacted the amendments to the Penal Code above mentioned. Rosenberg

v. Bump, 43 Cal. App. 376, 185 P. 218. And all its parts must be harmonized and construed together, so that it may stand as an entirety. People v. Strickler, 25 Cal. App. 60, 142 P. 1121; People v. Merrill, 24 Cal. App. 206, 140 P. 1075; People v. Pryal, 25 Cal. App. 779, 147 P. 114, 115.

From the foregoing we think it apparent that section 666 of the Penal Code must be included with the other laws and statutes of this state in which the term "theft" is substituted for "larceny," without special mention. This being true, it necessarily follows that the term was inserted in said section with the effect with which sections 486 to 488, inclusive, were intended to operate. Hence, if respondent had previously committed the crime of "theft" within the purview of the sections last mentioned, and had served a sentence therefor, the subsequent conviction of a like offense would constitute a felony, and fall within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

[2, 3] Another point urged by respondent is that section 666 of the Penal Code was not mentioned by title nor by number in the amending statute, and was not re-enacted. We think this contention fallacious in that the title to the enactment of 1927 does indicate a scope and purpose which clearly include the substitution of the word "theft" for the word "larceny" in said section. Its object was "to amend sections four hundred eighty-four * * * and to add a new section to the Penal Code, to be numbered four hundred ninety a, defining the crime of theft and prescribing punishment therefor." It is not in conflict with the constitutional requirement that it must "embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." This case is not analogous to that presented in Lewis v. Dunne, 134 Cal. 291, 66 P. 478, 55 L. R. A. 833, 86 Am. St. Rep. 257, as an endeavor to deal "with a vast variety of subjects, many of which are totally distinct from each other," "for the purpose of revising said code." Comprehensive as it is asserted to be, its sole object and express purpose is but to define and denounce the crime of theft. "It is enough if it intelligibly refers the reader to the subject to which the act applies, or which is affected by it." Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 P. 915, 919, 45 P. 1057. Rather than embarrass legislation by too strict construction, if the provisions of an act can by fair intentment be considered as falling within the subject-matter indicated in its title, or necessary to the attainment of its object, it will not be held to conflict with the Constitution.

[4] The remaining objection that since "theft" is now of broader range than was the offense commonly known as "larceny" prior to the amendments of 1927, and might imply a prior violation of law other than stealing, is not presented by the facts. It is admitted that both of the alleged offenses were committed in 1929. Hence we are not permitted to pass upon the question which might be presented if the act constituting the offense had occurred previously to the taking effect of the section in question. We are not required to say that it was the intention of the makers of this law that it should apply to any prosecution occurring before its enactment, nor to consider whether or not if such had been their intention the statute would have been unconstitutional on that account. No rule is better established than that a statute will never be so construed as to render it unconstitutional unless such an interpretation is clearly indicated, and here there is nothing to suggest an intent of that character.

What we do hold is that section 666 of the Penal Code as applied to acts committed after it became effective is not violative of the Constitution upon any ground argued by the respondent in this case.

The order granting a new trial is reversed.

We concur: IRA F. THOMPSON, J.; BURNELL, J. pro tem.

103 Cal. App. 473

MERCHANTS' TRUST CO. v. HOPKINS,
County Assessor. (Civ. 7118.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

1. Taxation ☞466—"Boards of equalization" are quasi judicial bodies established to remedy excessive assessments.

Boards of equalization of taxes are quasi judicial bodies established by law to remedy excessive assessments made by assessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Board of Equalization.]

2. Taxation ☞453—Taxpayer must submit question of property valuation to board of equalization to be entitled to attack its determination in court.

Taxpayer must fairly submit question of value of his property to board of equalization in order to be entitled to attack its determination in court.

3. Taxation ☞453—Taxpayer making no showing of inequality of assessment before board of equalization could not attack assessment on appeal on such ground.

Where taxpayer made no showing of inequality of assessment before board of equalization, taxpayer held precluded from attacking assessment on ground of inequality on appeal.

4. Evidence ☞113(15, 16), 142(1)—Evidence of sales of other property or of offers to buy or sell property in question is not competent to prove value for taxation.

Value of property for taxation purposes cannot be proved by evidence of sales of other property, or of offers to buy or sell property in question.

5. Taxation ☞453—Taxpayer held not to have sustained burden of proving before equalization board that assessment was unequal, and hence, on appeal, could not attack board's action (Pol. Code, § 3821).

In action to enjoin sale of property for taxes under authority of Pol. Code, § 3821, taxpayer held not to have sustained burden of proof in proceeding before board of equalization to show that assessment was either unequal or excessive, and hence could not attack action of board in appellate court.

6. Taxation ☞576—Assessor could not sell ownership in perpetuity of mineral rights in ground under authority to sell possession of, or claim to, land; the perpetuity being realty (Pol. Code, §§ 3820, 3821).

In view of Pol. Code, § 3617, where taxpayer had perpetuity in mineral rights in ground, but did not own fee simple, in surface estate, assessor could not sell, for taxes, ownership in perpetuity, under sections 3820, 3821, which provides that assessor may collect taxes by seizure and sale of right to possession of, or claim to, land, when, in his opinion, taxes are not a lien upon real property sufficient to secure payment thereof, as perpetuity was fee simple ownership which assessor had no authority to sell.

7. Taxation ☞550—Assessor's power to collect taxes being purely statutory, it must be measured by statute.

Since assessor's power to collect taxes is purely statutory, it must be measured by terms of statute.

8. Taxation ☞63—Ownership in perpetuity of minerals in ground held taxable as "real estate" (Pol. Code, §§ 3628, 3650; Const. art. 13, § 3).

Ownership in perpetuity of minerals in ground held assessable as real estate, in accordance with Pol. Code, §§ 3628, and 3650 and Const. art. 13, § 3, although owner of mineral estate was not owner of surface estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Real Property.]

9. Action ☞6—Prayer in action to enjoin sale of property for taxes for 1926 held insufficient to advise court that taxpayer was seeking declaratory judgment as to validity of 1925 assessment (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

Prayer, in action to enjoin assessor from selling property for taxes for year 1926, held insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, to advise court that taxpayer was seeking declaratory judgment as to validity of assessment for 1925.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 900—Appellate court must indulge every presumption not contradicted in trial court's favor.

Appellate court must indulge every presumption not contradicted by record on appeal in favor of action of trial court.

11. Appeal and error $\S$ 172(1)—Appellate court would not decide whether assessments for certain year were valid, where it was not brought to attention of trial court that appellant was seeking declaratory relief therefor (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1060).

Where, in action to enjoin assessor from selling property for taxes for year 1926, it was not clearly brought to attention of trial court that taxpayer was seeking declaratory relief under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1060, for assessments for 1925, appellate court would not decide whether assessments for 1925 were valid.

12. Taxation $\S$ 610—Taxpayer is not entitled to equitable relief unless he pays or tenders amount of taxes which he is bound to pay.

Taxpayer is entitled to no relief in equity, unless he pays or tenders amount of taxes which he is fairly bound to pay.

13. Costs $\S$ 230—Taxpayer entitled to enjoin tax sale could recover cost on appeal, although he could not obtain return of tax deposit, as assessment was not shown excessive or unequal.

In action to enjoin sale of perpetuity in mineral rights for taxes, where trial court, as condition of issuance of injunction, required taxpayer to deposit in court sum to insure payment of taxes and costs, if court should adjudge tax valid, taxpayer held entitled to cost on appeal, although he could not obtain return of deposit as amount of assessment was not shown to have been excessive or unequal, since taxpayer was entitled to injunction, on ground that property was not assessed as realty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' Trust Company against Edward W. Hopkins, County Assessor of the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part, with directions.

J. E. Hannon, of Los Angeles (Joseph C. Meyerstein, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. Appellant commenced this action to enjoin the respondent, as assessor of Los Angeles county, from selling certain property for taxes under the authority of section 3821 of the Political Code and praying for other relief. The form and effect of the prayer, in so far as such other relief is concerned, is more fully discussed hereinafter.

Appellant is the owner in fee of the coal and mineral rights in certain land in Los Angeles county, such rights having been expressly reserved by appellant's predecessor in interest when the fee in the land was sold by such predecessor in interest in 1883. The coal and mineral rights were never separately assessed for taxes until 1926, when the assessor for the first time attempted to assess these rights at the aggregate value of $80,700; and, on the theory that they had escaped taxation in 1925, assessed them also for that year. Subsequently the assessor advertised the coal and mineral rights for sale for the 1926 taxes only, amounting to $2,565.58, and such sale was enjoined by preliminary injunction in this action. As a condition of the issuance of such injunction the trial court required appellant to deposit in court the sum of $2,800 to insure the payment of the taxes and costs if the court should after trial adjudge the tax to be valid and collectible. Final judgment was entered in the action on February 11, 1927, adjudging the property to have been validly assessed for 1926, and requiring the payment out of the sum deposited in court of the amount of the tax and $3 costs of sale, and for defendant's costs.

Appellant contends on appeal: (1) That the assessment was grossly exorbitant and excessive; (2) that the assessor had no power to collect the taxes on a fee simple interest in minerals; (3) that the property was not properly assessed, in that the assessment was not entered in the proper assessment book or in the manner required by law. Other points are also made by appellant which will be later noticed.

It is appellant's first contention that the assessment was both excessive and unequal. In this connection appellant contends that the property had at most a value of $30,000, and that similar property similarly situated was assessed at a much lower value. It is to be remarked in this connection that before the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, no evidence was introduced of the assessments upon other property of a similar character, and the only evidence of the value of appellant's property was of sales by appellant of other similar rights outside of the tract in question and the offer by appellant to sell its right in the tract in question as a whole for $30,000. By this showing before the board of equalization we are satisfied that appellant laid no predicate for an attack upon the amount of the assessment in a court of equity.

[1, 2] Boards of equalization are quasi judicial bodies established by law to remedy excessive assessments made by the assessor. The taxpayer must fairly submit the question of the value of his property to them in order to be entitled to attack their determination in court. Were this not true the taxpayer could practically disregard them by making only a perfunctory showing before them and could reserve his real showing for a later appeal to the courts. Such a procedure cannot be countenanced for obvious reasons. This rule is clearly laid down in Wild Goose C. Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal. App. 339, commencing at page 341, 212 P. 711, 712, where the court says: "The evidence shows without conflict, and the court found, that at the hearing before the board of equalization no evidence was presented or offered bearing upon the value of the plaintiff's lands or the value of any property in Butte county or tending to show that any property in the county was assessed at other than the full cash value thereof. * * *

In Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 9 A. L. R. 1277, 121 P. 384, it was held that, after the board of equalization has upheld an assessment in a case such as this, any fraud on the part of the assessor becomes immaterial, and that the determination of the board 'cannot be avoided, unless the board has proceeded "arbitrarily and in wilful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers," * * * or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board.' The assessment is presumed to be fair, and the burden of proof rested upon petitioner in the proceeding before the board. Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Township of Wakefield, 247 U. S. 350, 62 L. Ed. 1154, 38 S. Ct. 495. In the absence of evidence tending to show the value of plaintiff's lands, or of other lands in the county, the premises were wanting from which a conclusion could be drawn by the board that inequality of assessments existed."

[3] Appellant having made no showing of inequality of assessment before, the board of equalization is precluded, under this rule, from attacking the assessment on the ground of inequality here.

[4] Its showing before the board of equalization on the question of the value of its own property was, in our judgment, equally futile. No rule is better settled in California than the rule that the value of property cannot be proved by evidence of sales of other property, or of offers to buy or sell the property in question. Central Pac. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247; Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 P. 681; Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 538, 34 P. 224; San Luis Obispo v. Brizzolara, 100 Cal. 434, 34 P. 1083, 1084; Reclamation District v. Inglin, 31 Cal. App. 495, 160 P. 1098; Palladine v. Imperial Valley F. L. Ass'n, 65 Cal. App. 727, 225 P. 291, 303. This rule was examined at large and restated in Estate of Ross, 171 Cal. 64, 151 P. 1138, and in Palladine v. Imperial, etc., Ass'n, supra, it was held reversible error to refuse to instruct a jury that in determining value "they should not consider whether land of similar character could have been purchased at a lower price in other localities," the court saying: "The prices at which other lands of like quality and adaptability and similarly situated could be purchased do not constitute a proper standard for ascertaining the actual value of the land in question." In San Luis Obispo v. Brizzolara, supra, the court said that such "evidence was proper in cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, for the purpose of testing the accuracy and honesty of the opinions which they had given of the value of the land in their direct examination; but, as it would not have been admissible as affirmative evidence for the purpose of establishing the value of the land in question, it was not competent for the court to consider it for that purpose."

[5] We have then, so far as this phase of the case is concerned, no evidence of inequality of assessment, and no competent evidence of the value of the property assessed, presented to the board of equalization. It is evident from this that appellant did not sustain the burden of proof which rested upon it in the proceeding before the board of equalization to show that the assessment was either unequal or excessive, and hence cannot now attack the action of the board on either of those grounds.

There is nothing in Mahoney v. City of San Diego, 198 Cal. 388, 245 P. 189, inconsistent with this conclusion. In that case the complaint alleged and the court found "that the said board of equalization in regular session had and held a hearing thereon whereat the plaintiff herein appeared before said board and presented to said board all of the facts in his complaint herein alleged as to the irregularity and invalidity of said assessment and demanded the correction and equalization of the same, but that the said board at said hearing denied said plaintiff said relief, and that said action was taken by said board with full knowledge of all of the facts pleaded herein." 198 Cal. 393, 245 P. 191. In the Mahoney Case the evidence of inequality was presented to the board. In the instant case it was not.

[6] Appellant's second point, that the assessor had no power to sell its coal and mineral rights for the taxes, is well taken. Its predecessor in interest in reserving the coal and mineral rights in perpetuity reserved a fee simple interest in that portion of the land. This is conceded by respondent. But respondent claims that, even though appellant's interest is in fee, the assessor is nevertheless authorized by Political Code, §§ 3820, 3821, to sell it for the taxes, relying on the rule laid down in Bakersfield, etc., Co. v. Kern County, 144 Cal. 148, 77 P. 892; Graciosa Oil Co. v. County of Santa Barbara, 155 Cal. 140, 99 P. 483, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211, and Mohawk

Oil Co. v. Hopkins, 196 Cal. 148, 236 P. 133. In all of these cases the interest taxed was a mere leasehold right to take minerals from the land and not the ownership of the minerals in fee simple. The difference between such a leasehold right and a fee simple title is well stated in the Graciosa Case, supra, at page 144 of 155 Cal., 99 P. 486: "The plaintiff, it is true, does not own an absolute present title to the oil strata in place. Such an absolute estate in an underlying stratum may be created and the estate of the owner of the overlying land and of the owner of the subterranean stratum will be as distinct and separate as is the ownership of respective owners of two adjoining tracts of land. For purposes of separate ownership, land may be divided horizontally as well as superficially and vertically. Jones on Real Prop. § 537; State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 70. But contract in question vests no present title in a stratum in place. It leaves the title to the oil in the landowner until it is brought to the surface."

Section 3820 above referred to reads: "The assessor must collect the taxes on all property when, in his opinion, said taxes are not a lien upon real property sufficient to secure the payment of the taxes. The taxes on all assessments of possession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land, and the taxes on taxable improvements located upon land exempt from taxation, shall be immediately due and payable upon assessment and shall be collected by the assessor as provided in this chapter." In the three cases relied upon by respondent the leasehold right to take minerals was treated as a claim to or right to possession of land under the second sentence of this section. Respondent concedes that appellant's fee simple interest is something more than a possession of, claim to, or right to, possession of land; but insists that, because of the frequently transitory and ephemeral value of the mineral rights, the assessor may collect the taxes on such rights under the authority of the first sentence of section 3820, "when, in his opinion, said taxes are not a lien upon real property sufficient to secure the payment of the taxes."

[7] But in making such contention respondent fails to take into consideration other material sections of the Political Code. Section 3821 reads: "In the case provided for in the preceding section, at the time of making the assessment, or at any time before the first Monday of August following the assessment, the assessor may collect the taxes by seizure and sale of any personal property owned by the person against whom the tax is assessed, or if no personal property can be found, then the assessor may collect the taxes by seizure and sale of the right to the possession of, claim to or right to the possession of land." Sections 3820 and 3821 must be read and construed together. The limit of the assessor's authority, so far as sales for taxes are concerned, is if, and only if, no personal property can be found to seize and sell the possession of, claim to, or right to, the possession of land. Nowhere is the assessor authorized to sell a fee simple ownership of land or of any part of land. That such a fee simple ownership is not a mere "possession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land" within the meaning of these sections is made certain, if any doubt could otherwise exist, by the language of Political Code, § 3617, which enumerates as "real estate" "the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land." The inclusion of the words "ownership of" in section 3617 and their omission from sections 3820, 3821, compels the conclusion that the "ownership of" land was not intended to be included among the classes of property which the assessor may sell for taxes. Since the assessor's power in this regard is purely statutory, it must be measured by the terms of the statute. So measured it does not extend to the sale of the ownership in perpetuity of minerals in the ground.

[8] What has just been stated is applicable in large part to appellant's third major point. Political Code, § 3617, divides property into "real estate" and "personal property" for purposes of taxation. Subdivisions 1 and 2, enumerate under real estate: "1. The possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to possession of land. 2. All mines, minerals, and quarries in or under the land. * * *" Appellant's interest may be classified either as "ownership of" a portion of the land or as "minerals" under the above enumeration. It is certainly more than "the possession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land." In Bakersfield, etc., Co. v. Kern County, supra, the Supreme Court held that, even the possessory leasehold right to take oil from the land was properly assessable as real estate. There can be no doubt on that point where the interest is in fee simple as here. What logical distinction can exist between fee simple estates divided horizontally, to repeat the language of the Graciosa Case, and those divided superficially and vertically? In either case the owner has an interest in perpetuity in a portion of the land. It follows that appellant's interest should have been assessed in accordance with sections 3628 and 3650 of the Political Code and section 3, article 13, of the Constitution. This was not done. Instead the assessment was entered in the unsecured property assessment book with no sufficient description to clearly identify the separate parcels. This, in our judgment, was error on the part of the assessor and of the board of equalization, who were asked by appellant to correct the assessment in this particular.

Appellant further complains of the failure of the trial court to find and adjudicate the invalidity of the assessment for 1925. In this connection appellant claims that it sought a declaratory judgment of the court as to the validity of the assessment for that year, and that the court's failure to give such a judgment is reversible error.

The provisions for declaratory relief added to the Code of Civil Procedure in 1921 are still somewhat of a novelty in our system of judicial procedure. It may be questioned whether, in the absence of an actual threat by the assessor to collect the taxes for 1925, appellant would be entitled to such declaratory relief without making the county of Los Angeles a party. Once the assessment is made, the county would seem to become the real party in interest to sustain the validity of the assessment. However, this question was not argued by counsel, and we do not find it necessary to decide it.

[9] Code of Civil Procedure, § 1060, provides that in certain enumerated cases "any person interested * * * may, in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an action in the superior court for a declaration of his rights and duties in the premises. * * * He may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief." In construing this section it must be borne in mind that it provides for a new and additional form of relief to that theretofore available in the courts, and, where an action is brought seeking affirmative relief and declaratory relief in addition thereto, the complaint and the prayer should be so framed as to clearly advise the trial court and the adverse party that the plaintiff is seeking, in addition to some affirmative relief theretofore open to him, a declaratory judgment under this section of the code. The language of the section itself, being simply permissive in form, makes this perfectly clear: "He may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief."

While appellant's complaint contains allegations concerning the validity of the 1925 assessment, the actual controversy between it and the respondent assessor was precipitated by the assessor's threat to sell the property for the 1926 taxes only, and, when we look to the prayer of the complaint, we fail to find any clear prayer for declaratory relief, as to the 1925 assessment. The prayer may be fairly summarized as follows: "That it be adjudged and declared that defendant as assessor is without authority to collect any taxes upon plaintiff's real estate, and that such taxes are collectible by the tax collector only at the times and in the manner provided by section 3746, Political Code; that it further be adjudged that the assessment is exorbitant, excessive, invalid, illegal and void; for a temporary and permanent injunction restraining the assessor from demanding or collecting any taxes on such property or making a sale and for general relief."

Having in mind that the immediate controversy concerned a threatened sale by the assessor for 1926 taxes, we are satisfied that nothing in the prayer was calculated fairly to advise the court that appellant was seeking declaratory judgment as to the validity of the assessment for 1925. Fairly construed, the prayer asks that it be adjudged: (1) That the tax collector and not the assessor is the proper officer to collect the taxes; (2) that the assessment is excessive and void; (3) for a temporary and permanent injunction to prevent the assessor from proceeding to collect the taxes as threatened; and (4) for general relief. Nowhere in the prayer is the 1925 assessment mentioned in terms.

[10, 11] We must indulge every presumption not contradicted by the record on appeal in favor of the action of the trial court. The right to ask for declaratory relief is optional with the plaintiff. We must, and do, in support of the trial court's action, presume that neither by prayer of the complaint nor otherwise was it brought clearly to the attention of the trial judge that appellant was seeking declaratory relief under section 1060, Code of Civil Procedure. For that reason we deem it unnecessary to consider or decide whether the assessment for 1925 was valid or not, although, from what has already been said, it is clear that it was not sufficiently entered in the assessment book.

[12] Finally, appellant complains of that portion of the judgment that the sum of $2,565.58, the amount of the tax on its property for 1926, be paid out of the amount deposited by it in court. Appellant in its complaint alleged the tender of $1,200, the amount which it claimed and admitted to be a proper amount due as taxes for 1926 on the property involved, renewed the tender in its complaint and further offered to furnish such security as the court might deem adequate to secure the payment of such taxes as the court might finally determine to be due. As a condition to the issuance of the temporary injunction, the court required the deposit of $2,800 for this purpose. This was in accordance with the settled rule that a taxpayer is entitled to no relief in equity unless he pays or tenders the amount of taxes which he is fairly bound to pay. Stege v. City of Richmond, 194 Cal. 305, 228 P. 461; Steele v. County of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 785, 93 P. 1020; Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 671, 33 P. 765; Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 P. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168.

In Couts v. Cornell, supra, the assessment was invalid because the property was not sufficiently described in the assessment book. The plaintiff brought suit in equity for a decree declaring the assessments and sales made for such taxes invalid and enjoining the delivery of a tax deed. No tender or payment of the taxes was made by plaintiff. The court held that, in the absence of such tender or payment, plaintiff was entitled to no relief, the court saying, at pages 561-563 of 147 Cal., 82 P. 195:

"We think the case thus presented is without equity, and that on the familiar principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, the plaintiff should be denied the equitable relief which he demands. The obligation to pay his just proportion of the taxes legally levied is one of the highest civic duties of the citizen to the state. * * * The principle justly applicable to the case is thus tersely stated in Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 674, 33 P. 765: 'So long as the moral obligation to pay any portion of the tax exists, a court of equity will not lend its aid to prevent a cloud upon the title, but will leave the party to his remedy at law.' * * *

"Nor can the rule be limited to cases where it appears that only a part of the original tax is just. If the entire tax or charge should justly be paid, the complainant would have no standing at all in equity, and he is allowed relief in any case solely because he offers to pay all that is just. * * *

"The fact that the assessment is imperfect as to the description does not, in view of the circumstances here appearing, destroy the moral obligation to pay the tax."

This case appears to us to be controlling on this point. Holding, as we do, that appellant is in no position to attack the amount of the tax, because of its failure to make any sufficient showing on that question before the board of equalization, it stands in court entitled to relief solely because the assessment was insufficient in form and the assessor was without authority to collect the tax by sale. It is precluded from questioning the amount of the assessment, because it failed properly to present that question at the outset to the body constituted by law to afford it relief. Being in no position to question the amount of the tax, it must pay it in order to have standing in a court of equity.

There is nothing in Las Animas, etc., Co. v. Preciado, 167 Cal. 580, 140 P. 239, cited by appellant, in conflict with this conclusion. In that case lands not within the jurisdiction of the taxing officers were sought to be taxed. The distinction is pointed out by the court in that case at page 587 of 167 Cal., 140 P. 242: "The equitable consideration of a disturbance of revenues is entirely absent, in that this is an assessment, not by an authorized power which has irregularly exercised its power, but is an assessment by a school district acting absolutely without jurisdiction and authority."

The foregoing discussion makes it unnecessary to consider certain minor points urged by appellant.

By the judgment appealed from it was adjudged: 1. That appellant's property was validly assessed on the unsecured property roll for 1926; (2) that the amount of the taxes for 1926 on appellant's property in the sum of $2,565.58, together with $3 costs incurred in the sale of said property, be paid out of the sum deposited in court; (3) that defendant recover his costs; (4) that any balance of the sum paid into court be refunded to plaintiff.

[13] It is clear from what has been said that appellant, rather than respondent, is entitled to its costs of suit, since it was entitled to have the assessor enjoined from making the sale and to a decree adjudging the 1926 assessment invalidly made; and that the $3 costs of the unauthorized sale should not be charged to appellant. It is likewise clear that that portion of the judgment adjudging the appellant's property to have been validly assessed on the unsecured property roll is erroneous.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed only as to that part which provides for the payment of the sum of $2,565.58 taxes out of the fund deposited in court, striking therefrom the portion providing for the payment of $3 incurred in the sale of said property, and as to that part which provides for the payment to plaintiff of the balance of the sum previously deposited in court; and as to all other portions thereof the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in accordance with this opinion. Appellant to recover its costs on appeal.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

108 Cal. App. 610

AYRES et al. v. WRIGHT et ux. (Civ. 6897.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 31, 1930.

1. Landlord and tenant §169(11)—Where tenant's injuries were caused by collapse of rotted porch railing, issue of defective condition, being admitted, was properly withheld from jury.

In action for personal injuries caused by collapse of porch railing, where evidence showed that interior of railing had rotted, issue whether porch was in fact decayed was properly withheld from jury, where such condition was admitted by answer.

2. Landlord and tenant §169(6)—Landlord's knowledge of rotted condition of porch railing could not be inferred from act of driving spikes therein three years before.

In action by tenant for injuries caused by defective porch railing, statement by landlord that at some time prior to 1923 spikes were driven into railing to assure its security raised no inference of any knowledge on his part of any known defect when cottage was rented to plaintiff in June, 1925.

3. Landlord and tenant ⚡164(7)—Landlord, having knowledge of latent defects, must reveal them, if not reasonably discoverable, but landlord is not insurer of safety of tenement.

A landlord is not an insurer of safety of the premises, although it is his duty to disclose hidden defects known to him, but not discoverable by tenant on reasonable inspection.

4. Landlord and tenant ⚡169(11)—Tenant's evidence that rotted condition of porch railing was concealed, in absence of landlord's knowledge thereof, entitled landlord to directed verdict.

In action by tenant for fall caused by rotted porch railing, where tenant insisted that bark on railing prevented him from detecting rotted condition, landlord as matter of law was exempt from liability; there being no evidence to charge him with any more notice than that of tenant.

5. Landlord and tenant ⚡169(11)—Court properly refused submission of question whether by reasonable care landlord could have discovered rotted condition of porch railing.

In action by tenant for injuries resulting from collapse of rotted porch railing, contention that jury should determine whether by reasonable care landlord could have discovered defect could not be sustained; the question in such case being what the landlord did know, and not what he ought to have known.

6. Depositions ⚡96—Witnesses ⚡56(3)—Deposition by husband was inadmissible against wife under statute, and also because taken before wife was made defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 1).

In tenant's action for injuries caused by breaking of rotted porch railing, where negotiations for renting cottage had been conducted by owner's husband, deposition by husband was properly excluded under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 1, and also because taken before wife was made a party to action.

7. Evidence ⚡123(10)—Landlord's statement, two days after collapse of rotted porch railing, that he knew railings were weak, was not part of res gestæ.

In action for injuries caused by breaking of rotted porch railing, wherein owner of premises and her husband were made defendants, husband's statement that he knew railings were weak, made two days after accident, when he went to premises at wife's request, was properly excluded, since any statement as to past incidents or state of mind was no part of the res gestæ.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Rolfe L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Florence C. Ayres and another against C. A. Wright and Mamie C. Wright.

Action dismissed as to defendant first named. From a judgment for defendant last named, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Geary & Geary and C. J. Tauzer, all of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

JOHNSON, Justice pro tem. This action was instituted to recover damages for personal injury sustained by the plaintiff Florence C. Ayres in consequence of a fall, resulting from the sudden disjunction of a rustic railing, forming the outer barrier of the porch of a cottage owned by the defendant Mamie C. Wright, and hired by plaintiffs.

The action was tried by a jury, which under direction of the court, returned a verdict in favor of the defendant Mrs. Wright. From the judgment entered upon that verdict, the plaintiffs have appealed.

The legal question presented is the familiar one as to the liability of a landlord for injury to a tenant, due to a defect unknown to either.

The defendant Mamie C. Wright, a resident of Santa Rosa, was the owner of a summer cottage at Rio Nido, on the Russian river, which had been built by her in 1908. Attached to the cottage was a porch running along the front and one side, where a flight of steps led to the ground. The porch, both in the front and on the side, was guarded by a railing made of redwood saplings, toenailed into the redwood uprights. The front porch was covered with a roof, but the side porch, built as a pergola, was exposed to the action of the elements; and through a hole cut in the floor near the junction of the front and the side porch there grew a redwood tree, stretching above the porch and the cottage. When the guardrail was constructed, the saplings, both those in the front and those on the side, had their covering of bark. In course of time the bark had been abraded from the front rails, but still clung to the lengths composing the side railing and also to the uprights.

Beneath that bark, and in a way to be unobservable to the eye, the wood had rotted at the joints, particularly at the spot where the side railing was nailed to the corner upright near the redwood tree. It was at this point that the side railing broke loose from the upright when Mrs. Ayres and a friend were leaning against it, and caused Mrs. Ayres to be precipitated several feet to the ground, whereby she suffered grave injury to the neck and spine.

The plaintiffs had taken possession of the cottage on July 1, 1925; Mr. Ayres having rented it for the use of his family for the month of July. The accident occurred on July 5th.

The owner, Mrs. Wright, being an invalid and of the age of about 67 years, had not visited the cottage for more than a year and a half prior to the accident; and in hiring the cottage Mr. Ayres dealt with Mr. Wright, whom he supposed to be the owner. Accordingly, when the suit was brought, Mr. Wright was named as the sole defendant; and it was only when his deposition was taken that Mrs. Wright became known to the plaintiffs as the owner, whereupon she was joined as a defendant. Between that time and the time of trial Mr. Wright died; and thereafter the action was dismissed as to him. One of the points urged as justification for reversal is the ruling of the court in sustaining objection to the introduction by plaintiffs of Mr. Wright's deposition, upon the ground that, under subdivision 1 of section 1881, Code of Civil Procedure, testimony of the husband cannot be received without the consent of the wife; and on the further ground that a deposition taken before Mrs. Wright was made a defendant was not admissible against her.

While Mrs. Wright's answer admitted a hidden defect in the railing, it denied all knowledge of the defect on the part of Mrs. Wright or her husband, who acted as her agent in renting the cottage on this occasion. The evidence was directed largely, therefore, to the question of knowledge.

The Wrights themselves had not occupied the cottage, except occasionally at the weekend, for a period of about ten years; but had been in the habit of renting the house, furnished, during the summer months, or allowing members of their family to occupy it. And, in preparation for the occupancy of the plaintiffs, Mr. Wright had taken a carpenter to the premises in the latter part of June. This was done at Mrs. Wright's suggestion, and under her instructions to repair certain doors and windows and "anything else that needed attention." A few days later Mrs. Wright sent her housekeeper, together with Mr. Wright and a daughter-in-law, to set the house in good order. No weakness of the railing was observed by any of these persons; and two days before the accident Mrs. Ayres remarked to her husband that the cottage was "about the best house we have occupied since we have been coming up the river with the children."

Indeed, it is conceded by plaintiffs and all their witnesses that the bark on the side rails looked new, and the railing appeared sound; in fact, stronger than the bare front railing. Even Mrs. Ayres herself testified that the side railing looked safe because the bark was heavy, and one could not see that it was rotten underneath. The testimony of the witnesses of the defendant is to like effect. The railing gave way when Mrs. Ayres and a visitor were "resting against it"; their combined weight being about 315 pounds,

According to the testimony of some of the defendant's witnesses, the railing had been subjected to lesser strains in June, 1925, without showing weakness. On June 20th a party composed of the son of the Wrights, his wife and children, and two friends, Mr. and Mrs. Woodward, had visited the cottage, and Mr. Woodward had walked without any mishap along the top of the side railing from opposite the redwood tree to the corner and then along the entire front railing. And a few days later, on the visit of the daughter-in-law with Mrs. Wright's housekeeper to set the house in order, bedding and mattresses were hung over the side railing and beaten. On that occasion, also, the daughter-in-law had sat upon the rail, holding her young child, but noticed no weakness. Likewise, occupants of the cottage in 1924 testified that, though their children had climbed upon the railing, they had had no reason to fear for its soundness.

[1] Because of this evidence, in contrast with evidence of the actual rottenness of the wood beneath the bark, as disclosed after the accident, plaintiffs contend that the case should have gone to the jury without a specific direction. But it must be remembered that the defendant admitted that there was a condition of decay. Hence this point was not in issue. The issue was whether the circumstances showed Mrs. Wright to have had knowledge of the dangerous condition. Upon this issue there is really no conflict. All the testimony is in agreement that the defect was so latent as to be beyond suspicion to an observer.

[2] In the appellants' brief stress is laid upon a statement by Mrs. Wright that at some time prior to 1923, but otherwise undefined, she had had her husband drive some spikes into the railing. She further testified that this was done, not because of any noticeable defect, but "to be sure that it was secure." Such testimony raises no inference of any known defect when the cottage was let to plaintiffs in June, 1925.

There being not a glimmer of evidence imputing to Mrs. Wright either knowledge or a want of knowledge due to her own culpability, the sole question upon the conclusion of the testimony was the question of law, which the court resolved correctly in its direction to the jury.

The controlling principle has been so clearly expounded in our decisions as to require no elaboration here.

[3] A landlord is not an insurer of the safety of premises about to be let. If there are patent defects discoverable by reasonable examination, knowledge of them is imputed to the tenant. On the other hand, if there are hidden defects known to the landlord, and not discoverable by the incoming tenant by a reasonable inspection, the landlord is then under duty to make disclosure. But, where the defect is hidden and unknown to the landlord, and there is nothing to charge him with bad faith, fraud, or concealment, the tenant, on entering the premises, takes them without implied warranty, for better or for worse, in the condition in which he finds them, and must assume the risk of injury from defects of which both parties are innocently unaware. After-acquired knowledge of pre-existing defects will not alone suffice to make the landlord liable.

Discussion of these rules in their relation to liability for injury suffered through collapse of a railing is to be found in De Motte v. Arkell, 77 Cal. App. 610, 621, 247 P. 254, and Hassell v. Denning, 84 Cal. App. 479, 481-482, 258 P. 426. For a general exposition of the law on the subject, reference may be made, also, to Daley v. Quick, 99 Cal. 179, 183, 33 P. 859; Smelser v. Deutsche Kirche, 88 Cal. App. 469, 473, 263 P. 838; Nelson v. Myers (Cal. App.) 270 P. 719; Farber v. Greenberg (Cal. App.) 277 P. 534.

[4] Throughout the trial the plaintiffs were insistent in impressing upon the judge and the jury that the defect in the railing was so effectually concealed beneath the bark as to escape their notice; and, there being no evidence before the court to charge Mrs. Wright with notice any more than the plaintiffs themselves, she was exempt from liability, and entitled to a verdict at the direction of the court.

[5] The plaintiffs urge, however, that the jury should have been permitted to determine, not merely whether Mrs. Wright did know of the latent defect, but whether by reasonable care she could have discovered the unsafe condition. In this contention reliance is placed on the decision in Hines v. Wilcox, 96 Tenn. 148, 33 S. W. 914, 34 L. R. A. 824, 832, 54 Am. St. Rep. 823. This annexation of a new element imported from the law of negligence is, as said by the writer of the annotation in 34 L. R. A. 824, and again in 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 798, a departure from the law of landlord and tenant as almost universally administered. And, while the Tennessee court has been followed in Georgia, its innovation has been expressly repudiated in Iowa in Kutchera v. Graft, 191 Iowa, 1200, 184 N. W. 297, 26 A. L. R. 1257; in Kentucky in Franklin v. Tracy, 117 Ky. 267, 77 S. W. 1113, 78 S. W. 1112, 63 L. R. A. 649; in Maine in Whitmore v. Orono P. & P. Co., 91 Me. 297, 39 A. 1032, 40 L. R. A. 377, 64 Am. St. Rep. 229; in Massachusetts in O'Malley v. Twenty-Five Associates, 178 Mass. 555, 60 N. E. 387, the opinion being written by Judge Holmes; and in Ohio in Shinkle Co. v. Birney, 68 Ohio St. 328, 335, 336, 67 N. E. 715, where the court says that in cases of this character there is no place for the doctrines or phrases of the law of negligence, and that what the law exacts is not care, but honesty.

An enlightening discussion of the topic is furnished in Stumpf v. Leland, 242 Mass. 168, 136 N. E. 399, which likewise presented a case of injury suffered by reason of a fall due to the defective railing of a porch. The trial court had instructed the jury that, if the landlord was aware of the defect, or, in the exercise of ordinary care and prudence, ought to have been aware of it, and had left the tenant unaware, he had failed in his duty. This instruction was declared on appeal to be a misconception of the principles governing the relation of landlord and tenant. After reiterating the general rule, the court said: "This obligation does not exist in the absence of knowledge on the part of the landlord. It does not impose the duty of inspection in order to find defects and consequent liability for negligent performance of such inspection."

It may sometimes happen, indeed, that there are conditions which may tend to create a nuisance, with surrounding circumstances such as would reasonably and justly put an owner on inquiry. And, when a landlord knows of specific facts calculated to subject occupants to dangers, his actual knowledge of such facts may justify the conclusion, based on the teachings of common experience, that there was notice of defects equivalent to knowledge. Hence when, under such circumstances, liability attaches, it is because, in the eye of the law, the landlord did know, not because he ought to have known.

In the case last cited the court, referring to such instances, says (page 173 of 242 Mass., 136 N. E. 399, 401): "That is far different from allowing anybody to infer a duty of inspection and then to impose liability for that which it may be thought 'he ought to have known' if he had performed such inferred duty. There is no duty of inspection resting on the landlord in such a case. It is only when the knowledge of specific facts concerning the condition of the tenement, constituting defects, has come to him, that the question of liability can arise."

And in closing its discussion the court restates the rule in these words: "It is plain that the rule is now as it has been that, in the absence of express contract or of fraud or misrepresentation, a tenant cannot recover of his landlord for injuries resulting from a hidden defect in the demised premises unless the landlord actually knew of the facts constituting the defect and failed to disclose the defect to the tenant. There is no duty resting on the landlord to make, for the benefit of the tenant, search for hidden defects. Whether the landlord ought to have known of the defect is an inquiry which does not arise in this connection and which has no relevancy upon the question of liability."

A landlord is always under duty not to expose his tenant to risks of which he has knowledge. But there must be proof of knowledge or its equivalent; and knowledge is not shown by evidence of inspection which failed to lead to discovery. The question is, not what the landlord ought to have done or known, but what he did in fact do and know. Clark v. Sharpe, 76 N. H. 446, 447, 83 A. 1090, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 47.

[6] It remains to consider plaintiff's objections to the rulings of the court excluding certain evidence. Objection was sustained to the introduction by plaintiffs of Mr. Wright's deposition, taken before Mrs. Wright was made a defendant. It is insisted that, notwithstanding the language of subdivision 1 of section 1881, Code of Civil Procedure, the testimony of the husband was admissible, because, it is contended, he was his wife's agent in supervising the premises.

In some jurisdictions not governed by statutory regulation, an exception is made by judicial decree in favor of admission of testimony by a spouse who acted as agent for the other. Then, again, some states have a statute expressly embodying such an exception, as in Arkansas (Kirby's Digest, § 3095), Missouri (Stat. 1919, § 5415), Oklahoma (Comp. Laws 1909, § 5842), and perhaps others.

We are governed, however, by a Code provision which makes no such exception, and it is presumed that, in the absence of an express exception, no such qualification of the rule was intended. Trout v. Ogilvie, 41 Cal. App. 167, 174, 182 P. 333; Forbes v. City of Los Angeles (Cal. App.) 282 P. 528. In construing an enactment identical in language, the Supreme Court of Idaho declared that the statute was controlling, and admitted no exceptions other than those placed there by the Legislature. Watkins v. Lord, 31 Idaho, 352, 171 P. 1133. See, also, Falk v. Wittram, 120 Cal. 479, 481, 52 P. 707, 65 Am. St. Rep. 184; Marple v. Jackson, 184 Cal. 411, 414, 193 P. 940.

Likewise, in Michigan, under a statute reading, "A husband shall not be examined as a witness for or against his wife without her consent," the court declared, in People v. Werner, 225 Mich. 18, 22, 195 N. W. 697, 698, that even to call the husband as a witness, and put the wife to the necessity of refusing consent in the presence of a jury, was a transgression of the rule, which in that particular case was deemed sufficiently prejudicial to cause reversal.

While there may be reasons in favor of modification of the rule embodied in our statute, there are also reasons against it, which are vigorously expressed in State v. Kephart, 56 Wash. 561, 563-565, 106 P. 165, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

Even where the exception is made, the power to compel the testimony of a spouse is closely guarded. The agency must be one in fact; and not merely activity, unexpected and unauthorized, but exercised as an accompaniment of a harmonious conjugal relationship. Oklahoma Natural Gas Co. v. Crenshaw, 91 Okl. 269, 217 P. 370. And, after proof of factual agency and its scope, the questions must be so framed as to confine the evidence within its legitimate limits. The testimony of a husband whose competency as a witness depends on his agency for the wife must be limited strictly to those things which he did and had a knowledge of by reason of his agency, and cannot be extended to matters not embraced within the real scope of his agency. Goesel v. Davis, 100 Wis. 678, 76 N. W. 768; Gottschall v. Geiger, 207 Mo. App. 89, 107-110, 231 S. W. 87; Council Grove Ry. Co. v. Center, 42 Kan. 438, 22 P. 574; St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Courtney, 77 Ark. 431, 92 S. W. 251.

We approve the action of the trial court in excluding the husband's deposition, both by reason of the statutory disability of the witness and because the deposition had been taken before the wife was made a party. Wright v. Sparks, 127 Ga. 365, 56 S. E. 442. In consequence of the latter fact, she had not had her opportunity to cross-examine. We may add that our examination of the deposition convinces us that, even if it had been admitted, it contained nothing to alter the aspect of the case. The effort was to show that at times prior to 1925 some repairs had been made to the railing, and to ascertain how often Mr. Wright had tested it. Yet there was no proof that in making such repairs or any tests or examination Mr. Wright was acting as an agent, or doing more than rendering those helpful amenities customary between husband and wife. His actual agency, so far as shown in the evidence, did not go beyond the letting of the premises to plaintiffs and the preparations immediately preceding their occupancy.

[7] Exception is taken, also, by plaintiffs to the refusal to admit certain proffered testimony to the effect that, after the accident, Mr. Wright was heard by a witness to say to Mr. Ayres that he knew the railings were weak, but hoped they would last another year. This statement is represented to have been made on July 7, 1925, when Mr. Wright visited the premises at his wife's request for the purpose of having the railings removed. He was present for that special purpose, and not to make declarations concerning matters dissociated from the business in hand. Any statement as to past incidents or former state of mind or opinions constituted no part of the res gestæ in the cause before the court, and under the settled rule could in no way be binding on Mrs. Wright. Hence there was no error in exclusion of the offered testimony. 10 Cal. Jur., 1116-1118.

The accident was, indeed, most unfortunate; and we doubt not that the trial court, equally with ourselves, entertained sympathy for plaintiffs both on account of the serious injury to Mrs. Ayres and the heavy medical and hospital expenses incident to her care. The evidence was not of a character, however, to cast legal liability upon Mrs. Wright; and, accordingly, the court was in duty bound to direct a verdict in her favor.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

103 Cal. App. 430

GREEN v. HANSON et al. (Civ. 6887.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1930.

1. Action ⇨27(1)—Though relationship between parties is contractual, liability in tort action may nevertheless arise from negligent manner of performing contract.

Where relationship between parties is contractual, liability of one to the other in action of tort may nevertheless arise from negligent manner in which some act provided for in contract is done.

2. Negligence ⇨111(1)—In action for damages for negligently performing contract to raise building, complaint held sufficient to state cause of action.

In action for damages for negligence in performing contract to raise building, complaint alleging facts showing violations of contract in failing to perform work in good and workmanlike manner and negligence in manner of doing work causing damage to plaintiff held sufficient to state cause of action.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1040(10)—Error in overruling demurrer to complaint for uncertainty is without prejudice, where defendant is not misled and cause of action is fairly apparent or allegations are immaterial.

Error, if any, in overruling demurrer to complaint for uncertainty is without prejudice, where defendant is not misled by defects in pleading and cause of action is fairly apparent, or where allegations attacked are immaterial and not essential to recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Marian G. Green against Ben Hanson and others, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Hanson Brothers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Clay, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Tobin & Tobin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendants in the above-entitled action undertook, for a consideration, to raise a building owned by plaintiff; the object being to make the same correspond with a change in the grade of an adjoining street. It was agreed that the structure be raised 28 inches above its foundation. After the building had been raised to the stipulated height, it was found that the proper level was a few inches lower, and accordingly, by agreement, it was lowered to a level about 25 inches above the original foundation, which in the meantime had been built up by the plaintiff to the new level.

Plaintiff alleged that the defendants neglected, before raising the building, to free the sills in front and on the sides thereof from the steps and cement sidewalk, thus causing the building when raised to be wrenched and warped; that when the same was lowered to the new foundation it was warped to such an extent that the south side of the structure was about 6 inches above the foundation, and also overlapped an adjoining lot for a distance of 3½ to 4 inches; that defendants after much delay shored up and braced the structure so that the same, with the exception of a portion which overlapped about half an inch, rested upon the new foundation; that the wrenching of the building was due to the negligent manner in which the work was done, and caused the plaster in the building to crack and considerable portions to fall, the roof and pipes thereof to be broken, and the paint to be damaged; and that defendants after shoring up the building removed their braces and tools used therefor without bracing or tying the structure, to remedy which plaintiff was compelled to employ labor. She alleged an expenditure of $544.50 in that connection, and also that the building, due to defendants' negligence, was permanently injured, causing her further damage. Defendants denied that the injuries alleged were due to their negligence, alleging that the same, if any, were caused by the improper construction of the new foundation, which they claimed was not level. They also sought by a counterclaim to recover a balance of $200 unpaid on their contract with plaintiff and $470 for extra work in connection with the raising and lowering of the building.

The court found for the plaintiff and entered judgment in her favor for $350.

Defendants, who have appealed therefrom, contend that their general and special demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint should have been sustained on the ground that owing to the contractual relations between the parties no liability for negligence could arise, and that the findings are unsupported.

[1-3] It is well settled that where the relationship between the parties is contractual the liability of one to the other in an action of tort may nevertheless arise from the negligent manner in which some act which the contract provides for is done. Coleman v. Iowa R., etc., Co., 189 Iowa, 1063, 178 N. W. 365; Hanna v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 89 Kan. 503, 132 P. 154; Coen v. Central Tel. Co., 95 Neb. 814, 146 N. W. 998; Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co., 139 Wis. 357, 121 N. W. 157, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876; 45 Cor. Jur., Negligence, § 17, p. 643. And while the contract in the present case provided that the work should be performed in a good and workmanlike manner, the facts alleged showed violations of the contract in this respect, and also negligence in the manner in which the work was done, causing damage to the plaintiff, and were sufficient to state a cause of action. The only averments of the complaint which could reasonably be said to be uncertain or ambiguous were immaterial allegations. Error in overruling a demurrer to a complaint for uncertainty is without prejudice where the defendant cannot be said to have been misled by the defects in the pleading and the cause of action is fairly apparent from the complaint. Contreras v. Merck, 131 Cal. 211, 63 P. 336; Alexander v. Central Lumber, etc., Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 P. 410; Irrgang v. Ott, 9 Cal. App. 440, 99 P. 528. Nor is such error ground for reversal where the allegations attacked are immaterial and not essential to recovery. Hill v. Horsley, 142 Ga. 12, 82 S. E. 225; Lammers v. Wolfertz (Tex. Civ. App.) 164 S. W. 1102; 4 Cor. Jur., Appeal and Error, § 2910, p. 937.

The testimony on the issues presented was conflicting, and a review of the voluminous record in the case would answer no useful purpose. It will be sufficient to say that plaintiff's contentions were supported by the testimony of competent witnesses familiar with the work undertaken, and the conclusions of the trial court are fully sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

103 Cal. App. 465

ARMSTRONG et al. v. DAY. (Civ. 6890.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division I, California. Jan. 28, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002—Jury finding on conflicting testimony as to how automobile accident occurred cannot be disturbed on appeal.

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained when struck by automobile at street intersection, finding on conflicting testimony as to how accident occurred cannot be disturbed on appeal.

2. Pleading ⇨236(5), 237(3)—Allowance of amendment to complaint to conform to proof rests within sound discretion of trial court, and may be made at any stage of trial.

Allowance of amendment to complaint during trial to conform to proof rests in sound discretion of trial court, and may be made at any stage of trial.

3. Pleading ⇨236(5)—Allowing amendment to complaint to conform to proof in action for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident held not abuse of discretion.

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries arising out of automobile accident where original complaint alleged plaintiff sustained fracture of left side of pelvis and numerous bruises and contusions, causing her to become permanently disabled, allowing amendment to complaint so as to allege in detail injuries in sacroiliac region, resulting in arthritis and injuries to pelvic bones, bladder, and nerves, held not abuse of discretion.

4. Trial ⇨260(8)—Refusing defendant's instruction, in personal injury action, substantially covered by instruction given, held not error, though offered instruction was proper.

Refusing defendant's instruction, in action for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, substantially covered by instruction given at defendant's request, held not error, though offered instruction was proper.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1170(9)—Giving instruction in personal injury action on imminent danger, though error, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice precluding reversal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, giving instruction regarding care required of one suddenly confronted with imminent danger, though error because not supported in evidence, held not to have resulted in miscarriage of justice, precluding reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Automobiles ⇨246(20)—Instruction that jury should find defendant striking pedestrian was not driving automobile at unlawful speed held properly refused (California Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. (a)).

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, refusing defendant's instruction that there was no evidence that defendant was driving at unlawful speed, to wit, 15 miles per hour, and that consequently jury should find defendant was not driving at unlawful speed, held proper under California Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. (a), St. 1923, p. 553, prescribing speed limit of 15 miles per hour, where accident occurred, provided, however, that every person driving vehicle on public highway shall drive same at careful and prudent speed under circumstances.

7. Automobiles ⇨168(2)—Speed of automobile greater than is reasonable and proper under circumstances is unlawful, irrespective of whether greater rate of speed is specified (California Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. (a)).

California Vehicle Act, § 113, subd. (a), St. 1923, p. 553, does not fix speed at which driver may propel automobile and escape liability by claim that he is not exceeding speed limit, but, under its provisions, speed greater than is reasonable and proper under circumstances is unlawful, irrespective of whether greater rate of speed is specified in any other subdivision of same statute.

8. Negligence ⚡86—One whose faculties are impaired must exercise degree of care sufficient to make good these defects.

One whose faculties are impaired is required to exercise degree of care sufficient to make good these defects.

9. Automobiles ⚡246(58)—Refusing defendant's instruction on care required by pedestrian with defective eyesight held not error, where it undisputably appeared pedestrian saw everything which normal vision would have disclosed.

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained when struck by automobile, refusing defendant's instruction to effect that one whose eyesight is defective must exercise greater care and caution than required of one whose vision is normal held not error, where it undisputably appeared plaintiff saw everything which normal vision would have disclosed.

10. Automobiles ⚡246(57)—Refusing defendant's instruction, in pedestrians' action for personal injuries, on defendant's nonliability for injuries resulting from independent cause, held not error under evidence.

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained when struck by automobile at street intersection, refusing defendant's instruction to effect that, if injury was sustained by reason of interposition of some independent cause, there could be no recovery, held not error, in absence of evidence showing intervening cause.

11. Trial ⚡260(10)—Refusing instruction that pedestrian struck by automobile could not recover exemplary damages held not prejudicial, in view of complaint asking for only compensatory damages and other instructions.

In pedestrians' action for personal injuries sustained when struck by automobile, refusing defendant's instruction that plaintiff could recover actual damages only, and that no allowance could be made for exemplary damages, held not prejudicial, where complaint did not ask for exemplary damages, and jury was fully instructed that under circumstances compensation was proper measure of damages, and they might include reasonable value of physicians' and nurses' services.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Nellie Armstrong and husband against William C. Day. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Myrick & Deering and Scott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles W. Dooling and Edwin V. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by Nellie Armstrong (who will be hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff) and her husband against William C. Day to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of defendant's negligent operation of an automobile. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant has appealed from the judgment entered thereon.

As grounds for reversal it is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, that the court erred in allowing an amendment to the complaint during the trial, and in giving and refusing certain instructions.

The injuries occurred at the corner of Post and Kearny streets in San Francisco. These streets run east and west and north and south, respectively. On each street, and occupying the center thereof, are double tracks of a street railway, and a track connecting the northerly track on Post street with the westerly track on Kearny street rounds the northwest corner of the intersection. The westerly sidewalk on Kearny street is 14 feet wide, and it is 11 feet 7 inches from the most northerly rail of the tracks on Post street to the northerly curb line of said street.

On Saturday, October 23, 1926, at about 2:45 o'clock p. m., the plaintiff, who was about 60 years of age, and in good physical condition, except for the entire loss of vision of the left eye, started to cross Post street. She was walking in the center of the pedestrian pathway about 7 feet from the westerly curb line of Kearny street; her course being from south to north. According to her testimony, before stepping from the sidewalk into Post street, she looked both ways, ascertained that it was safe to proceed, and continued to look while crossing the street. When she reached a point between the most northerly rail of the car tracks on Post street and the northerly curb of that street, she was struck by a Buick sedan driven by defendant, which rounded the corner from Kearny street, and it was testified that no audible signal of its approach was given. Plaintiff testified that she first saw the automobile when it suddenly rounded the corner, and was about 7 feet away, and that the front of the automobile struck and knocked her down. Her left hip and left arm and head were abraded, and the left side of her body bruised, and she also received internal injuries.

[1] According to the testimony, a person riding with the defendant declared in his presence immediately after the accident, "We struck her. We do not deny it," and the defendant at the same time and place said, "We don't deny striking her." The defendant and his witnesses testified that plaintiff stumbled and fell against the automobile; and testimony as to where her body lay after the accident tended to confirm their testimony. On the other hand, according to the plaintiff and another witness, she had reached a point 5 or 6 feet from the northerly curb of Post street, when she was struck by the front of the car. While it is contended that the only reasonable conclusion as to how the injury occurred corresponds with the testimony of defendant's witnesses, we cannot say that the finding of the jury to the contrary is unsupported. The question was properly submitted to them, and, the evidence being conflicting, their finding cannot be disturbed.

[2] The original complaint alleged that plaintiff suffered a fracture of the left side of the pelvis and numerous bruises and contusions, causing her to become permanently disabled. During the trial an amendment to conform to the proof was permitted. The amended pleading alleged: "A separation of the ilium from the sacrum, causing a sacro-iliac slip and consequent arthritis in and about the left sacro-iliac joint, and a separation of the right ilium from the right side of the sacrum, causing on the left side thereof a sacro-iliac slip and a consequent arthritis in and about said joint." Further, that "by reason of said injuries to the pelvic bones the bladder and nerves thereof were injured and the normal function thereof disturbed." These allegations received support from the testimony of a physician called by the plaintiff.

The allowance of such amendments rests in the sound discretion of the trial court (Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 P. 44), and may be made at any stage of the trial (Gartlan v. G. A. Hooper & Co., 177 Cal. 414, 170 P. 1115).

[3] The facts of the present case afford no ground for the contention that the defendant was prejudiced thereby or that the court abused its discretion.

[4] Defendant offered, and the court refused, an instruction in effect that the presence or absence of negligence is not to be tested by the event. While the offered instruction was proper, the subject was substantially covered by the following instruction given by the court at defendant's request: "Upon plaintiffs rests the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that it was the negligence of the defendant which caused the injury. Unless plaintiffs make this proof they cannot recover. A mere surmise that there may have been negligence on the part of defendant, or the mere fact that an accident happened to the plaintiff, Mrs. Armstrong, does not entitle the plaintiff to a verdict."

[5] The court instructed as to the care required of one suddenly confronted with imminent danger. Appellant complains that the instruction was erroneous in omitting to state that one seeking the benefit of the rule must be without fault; and, further, that there was no evidence to which such an instruction was applicable.

While the authorities leave the correctness of the instruction as an abstract statement of law in doubt, the second contention must be sustained. It is the rule that instructions must find support in the evidence (Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 P. 315; Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 P. 641); but notwithstanding this, to justify a reversal it must appear that a miscarriage of justice resulted (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Estate of Baird, 193 Cal. 225, 223 P. 974; Lawrence v. Goodwill, 44 Cal. App. 440, 186 P. 781; Hoffman v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 45 Cal. App. 751, 188 P. 597; Straten v. Spencer, 52 Cal. App. 98, 197 P. 540; Freeman v. Adams, 63 Cal. App. 225, 218 P. 600), and there is nothing in the present case to support that conclusion.

[6] The court refused to instruct that there was no evidence that defendant was driving at a rate of speed in excess of that allowed by law, viz., 15 miles per hour, and that consequently it was the duty of the jury to find that he was not traveling at a speed in excess of that allowed by law.

While there was no evidence that the defendant was traveling more than 15 miles per hour, the instruction nevertheless was properly refused. Section 113 of the Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553) provided that: "Subject to the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section and except in those instances where a lower speed is specified in this act, it shall be lawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed not exceeding the following. * * * Subd. (b). This section fixed a limit of 15 miles per hour for the locality where the accident occurred, subject, however, to subdivision (a) thereof, which was as follows: "Any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this state shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person."

[7] It has been held repeatedly that the Vehicle Act does not fix the speed at which a driver may propel an automobile and escape liability by a claim that he is not exceeding the speed limit prescribed by the act, as under the provisions of subdivision (a) of the above section a speed greater than is reasonable and proper under the circumstances is unlawful, irrespective of whether a greater rate of speed is designated in other subdivisions of the same section. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125; Griffith v. Oak Ridge Oil Co., 190 Cal. 389,

212 P. 913; Power v. Crown Stage Co., 82 Cal. App. 660, 256 P. 457; Davis v. Brown, 92 Cal. App. 20, 267 P. 754.

[8, 9] Defendant offered two instructions to the effect that one whose eyesight is defective is for that reason required to exercise greater care and caution for his own protection than would be required of one whose vision is normal. Both instructions were refused. As stated, the testimony shows that plaintiff had lost the use of her left eye. Her other eye, however, was good. It further appears that, although the defendant did not see the plaintiff until his automobile had turned the corner, she saw the approaching vehicle from the time it commenced to turn, the distance from this point to her position in the pedestrian pathway being about 7 feet. According to her testimony, the turn was made so rapidly that she was unable to avoid the collision. It is the rule that one whose faculties are impaired is required to exercise care sufficient to make good these defects. Furtado v. Bird, 26 Cal. App. 152, 146 P. 58; 45 Corp. Jur., Negligence, p. 996, §§ 549, 550. But here, it being undisputed that plaintiff saw everything which normal vision would have disclosed, the only question was whether, after seeing the approaching automobile, she used due care to avoid it. Under these circumstances, the refusal of the instruction was not error.

[10] The court also refused an instruction to the effect that, if the injury was sustained, not as the natural consequence of some act of the defendant, but by reason of the interposition of some independent cause, there could be no recovery. In the present case there is no evidence of an intervening cause of the injury, and the instruction was properly refused.

[11] An instruction that the plaintiff was entitled to recover actual damage only, and that no allowance could be made for exemplary damages, was also refused. The refusal was not prejudicial. The complaint prayed for no punitive damages; and the jury was fully instructed that in cases of this character compensation is the measure of damages; furthermore, that this might include the reasonable value of physicians' and nurses' services and hospital care, with such reasonable sum as the jury might award as general damages for the mental and physical pain caused by the injury or certain to be suffered in the future, not exceeding the amount prayed for in the complaint.

We are satisfied that the verdict is fairly supported, and, after an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, are of the opinion that no error is disclosed which can reasonably be said to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE v. DAVIS et al. (Civ. 41.)

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California. Jan. 29, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1930.

1. Automobiles ⇨216—Pedestrian exercising reasonable care has same right to travel on highway as automobile driver.

A pedestrian has the same right to travel on a public highway as has the driver of an automobile, subject to the right being exercised with reasonable amount of care under existing circumstances.

2. Automobiles ⇨160(1)—Driver of automobile may not proceed under assumption that, while traveling on right side of highway at low speed, path will remain clear.

A driver of an automobile may not proceed on a public highway under the assumption that, so long as he is on the right side of the highway, and proceeding at a low rate of speed, the path in front of him will remain clear.

3. Automobiles ⇨146—Driver must keep control of automobile and use reasonable care under circumstances.

It is incumbent on the driver of an automobile being operated on public highway to keep control of his automobile at all times and to use reasonable care and caution under the circumstances and conditions of the particular time.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(9)—Whether driver of truck striking automobile stopped on highway at night without lights, and person standing alongside was negligent, held for jury.

Whether or not driver of automobile truck striking another automobile stopped on public highway at night without lights, and injuring person who was attempting to repair lights of unlighted automobile, was guilty of negligence, held question of fact for jury to determine.

5. Automobiles ⇨244(8)—Evidence supported findings that driver of truck striking automobile without lights stopped on highway and person standing alongside was negligent.

Jury's finding of negligence on part of driver of truck striking automobile without lights, stopped on highway, and person who was attempting to repair lights of automobile, held to be sufficiently supported by evidence.

6. Negligence ⇨136(26)—Whether facts constitute contributory negligence as matter of law or whether question is for jury depends on circumstances.

Solution of question as to whether given state of facts constitutes contributory negligence as matter of law or whether it is matter that should go to jury as question of fact depends entirely on the existing circumstances in each particular case.

7. Automobiles ⇨245(75)—Whether man struck by truck while standing alongside automobile without lights, stopped on highway at night, was contributorily negligent, held for jury.

Whether man standing alongside of automobile without lights, stopped on highway at night, attempting to repair lights, and who was struck by automobile truck attempting to pass, was contributorily negligent, held question of fact for jury to determine.

8. Automobiles ⇨160(1)—Driver of automobile must anticipate presence of other persons on highway.

The driver of an automobile must anticipate the presence of other persons on the highway.

9. Trial ⇨253(4)—Instruction held erroneous as omitting question whether driver of truck striking plaintiff knew of his presence or whether pedestrian knew of truck's approach.

Instruction, in action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by passing automobile truck while standing on highway at night alongside of automobile without lights, held erroneous as leaving out of consideration question as to whether driver of truck should have known of presence of plaintiff or whether or not plaintiff himself knew of approach of truck and was oblivious thereto.

10. Negligence ⇨67—General rule that person may assume others will perform duty and obey law applies only to one who is himself not negligent.

General rule that every person has right to presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey law, and that, in absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, it is not negligence to assume he is not exposed to danger coming to him only from violation of law or duty by other person, does not apply to every person, but only to one who is himself not negligent.

11. Negligence ⇨68—Person must use reasonable care to observe conduct of other person as it may affect own safety.

A person may not blindly rely on the unaided care of another, but must use reasonable care to observe the conduct of such other person so far as it may affect his own safety.

12. Negligence ⇨136(26)—Whether reasonable care is used under circumstances in relying on presumption other person will perform duty and obey law is for jury.

Whether or not reasonable care is used under the circumstances in relying on presumption that every person may presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey law is question for jury to determine.

13. Trial ⇨191(7)—Instruction held erroneous as assuming that plaintiff, struck by truck while standing on highway alongside unlighted automobile at night, had right to be there without taking additional precaution.

Instruction, in action for injuries plaintiff sustained when he was struck by automobile truck while standing on highway at night alongside unlighted automobile, held erroneous as assuming that plaintiff had right to be where he was without taking additional precaution, where question whether he had right and also right to assume driver of truck would see him were questions for jury.

14. Automobiles ⇨163(5)—Negligence of driver of truck striking pedestrian and unlighted automobile stopped on highway at night facing in opposite direction depended on whether he used reasonable care under circumstances (California Vehicle Act 1923).

Question of negligence on part of driver of automobile truck striking man standing alongside unlighted automobile facing in opposite direction on highway at night depended on whether he used reasonable care under circumstances, and not on whether he complied with California Vehicle Act (Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128), requiring that any vehicle overtaking another vehicle proceeding in same direction shall pass at least two feet to left thereof.

15. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1)—Automobiles ⇨246(41)—Instruction that driver of truck striking pedestrian was negligent, if lights did not reveal pedestrian, held misleading and prejudicially erroneous, where evidence showed pedestrian was not revealed (California Vehicle Act 1923).

Instruction, in action for injuries sustained when plaintiff was struck by automobile truck while standing on highway at night alongside unlighted automobile, in effect telling jury driver of truck was guilty of negligence as matter of law, if his lights did not in fact reveal plaintiff to him, held misleading and prejudicially erroneous, where evidence showed that plaintiff was not actually revealed to driver of truck prior to collision, California Vehicle Act (Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128) requiring only that vehicle at night have ample driving light.

16. Automobiles ⇨245(9)—What constituted ample driving light on truck striking pedestrian standing alongside automobile on highway without lights at night held for jury (Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 101).

What constituted an ample driving light on automobile truck striking pedestrian standing on highway at night alongside automobile without lights, as required by General Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 101, under the circumstances, was question for jury to decide.

17. Trial ⇨296(3)—Instructions submitting contributory negligence did not cure prejudicial error in instruction that driver of truck striking pedestrian was negligent, if lights did not reveal pedestrian.

Instructions submitting question of contributory negligence to jury did not cure prejudicial error in instruction that driver of truck striking pedestrian standing on highway at night alongside automobile without lights was negligent, if lights did not actually reveal plaintiff to him, which implied that plaintiff was justified in relying on being seen by driver of truck.

18. Damages ⇨132(9)—$30,000 for injuries necessitating amputation of man's leg slightly below knee, where man earned $140 monthly, and total expense was $605, held excessive; "miscarriage of justice" (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

$30,000 for injuries necessitating amputation of man's leg slightly below knee four days after injury, where total expense was $605, and injured person received $140 per month as employee of gasoline station, held excessive, resulting in "miscarriage of justice" within contemplation of Const. art. 6, § 4½, and to require reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Miscarriage of Justice.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

Action by George White against R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Coachella Valley Transportation Company, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, Gilligan & Cobb, of Los Angeles, and Nichols, Cooper & Hickson, of Pomona, for appellants.

H. L. Thompson, of Riverside, and B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, J. This is an appeal from a judgment, based upon the verdict of a jury, in a personal injury action. The accident out of which the action arose occurred on the night of June 1, 1925, between midnight and 1 o'clock a. m. on the main traveled state highway between Los Angeles and the Imperial Valley, generally known as the Valley boulevard, and at a point just within the westerly corporate limits of the city of Ontario. The total width of the street at the point of the accident was 80 feet, but there was a drainage ditch on each side of the highway. There was a pavement 16 feet in width, with a 3-foot oiled shoulder on each side of the pavement, and 4 feet of graded dirt surface between the shoulder and the ditch on each side of the road, giving a total width of 30 feet of roadway available for travel. While proceeding in a westerly direction immediately prior to the accident, at a point nearly a mile east of where the accident later occurred, plaintiff passed the truck which was involved in this controversy. The truck was traveling westward at from 12 to 15 miles an hour. Shortly after passing the truck, plaintiff observed a Ford car which had stopped on the highway, with neither front nor rear lights. Plaintiff stopped his own car about 30 to 35 feet in front of the Ford, and, leaving both his headlights and tail-light burning, walked back to the standing car, where he found a lady, Mrs. De Frates, who told him her lights had gone out. He stepped up beside the hood of the Ford, and attempted to fix the lights for her. The Ford was headed west, and was standing mostly on the pavement, its left wheels being about 4 feet south of the north edge of the paved portion of the highway.

Plaintiff testified that, as he walked back to the Ford, he could see the truck coming, a little over a quarter of a mile away, that it was a few minutes, he thought between 3 and 5 minutes, after he left his car before the truck came up, and that while he was working on the car he looked up and saw the truck again. He estimates the distance between himself and the truck, at that time, at around 100 to 150 yards. At that time Mrs. De Frates was standing about 4 feet from the Ford toward the center of the highway, and plaintiff warned her, saying: "Look out for that truck, he almost got me a while ago." Mrs. De Frates stepped behind the Ford; the plaintiff turned around, resumed his work on the Ford, and, as he testified, "as I turned around the truck was on top of me you might say, within a few feet. I couldn't do anything and couldn't get out of the way and threw myself over next to the Ford as best I could, grabbing hold of the windshield and pulled myself over. The truck was hit and I was hit. I meant the Ford was hit and I was hit." The truck struck the rear left corner of the Ford, and the plaintiff was knocked down and his left leg crushed in such a manner that it was amputated four days later. The plaintiff testified that the last time he saw the lights of the truck before the impact he thought the truck was slightly to the left of the road; that is, not entirely on its own right-hand side. He also testified that the truck appeared to be going directly toward him, that he saw the truck, heard it, and that he did not pay any particular attention to it.

The driver of the truck testified that, when he was about 75 to 100 yards away, he observed plaintiff's car standing on the north side of the highway, and that he could see the tail-light and the light from the headlights; that he did not see the Ford coupé which was between him and the car of the defendant; that he did not look close, but saw the lighted car and nothing else; that he started to turn his truck over to the left at what he thought was 25 or 30 feet before he reached plaintiff's car, and suddenly collided with the Ford car; that, before he started to turn to the left, the right wheels of his truck were 12 inches from the right-hand side of the pavement; that his truck was equipped with electric headlights, and that he could see probably 100 feet ahead as he was approaching the scene of the accident. At another time he testified that his headlights were burning good, and he could see the pavement and obstacles ahead of him for a distance of perhaps 200 feet.

There was a conflict in the evidence as to the degree of darkness that night. Plaintiff testified there was a full moon, and that it was as light as day. There was evidence that the moon was in its first quarter, and that it set at 2 o'clock that morning; also Mrs. De Frates testified she was afraid to drive her car farther off the pavement, as she could not see how close she was to the ditch. The driver of the truck testified that the Ford had no lights whatever, that he did not see the Ford or the plaintiff because he was watching the lights of plaintiff's parked machine, and making ready to pass around it, and that that machine was standing at a slight angle to the right. He testified that he was wide awake at the time, but he admitted that he had been on this trip for more than 24 hours immediately preceding the accident, during which time he had been either driving or loading his truck, except that he had had about one hour of sleep about 3 o'clock the afternoon before. He also said he had come through a wind and sand storm that afternoon, and that his windshield was somewhat dusty and scarred. It is admitted that the speed of the truck immediately preceding the accident was 15 miles per hour. The plaintiff testified he saw no automobiles approaching just before the accident other than the truck in question. Mrs. De Frates testified it was only a second or two at the most after the plaintiff warned her until the truck struck the Ford.

The truck driver testified as follows:

"Q. And immediately prior to the accident you could see through your windshield, in the condition that it was, with your lights in the condition that they were, an object ahead of you for a distance ahead of you on the highway for a distance of 100 feet, is that true? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How fast were you going? A. About 15 miles an hour.

"Q. Then, if you could see an object on the highway for 100 feet ahead of you, why did you not see this Ford coupé? A. It was setting in between those lights, and I saw the one car there, and I never looked for any more, for there was no lights, only the one set of lights is all I could see, and I couldn't see anybody.

"Q. The lights you speak of were headed away from you, were they not? A. No, sir, they were headed angling across the road.

"Q. Which way? A. Kind of north and south.

"Q. That is to the right hand side? A. The tail lights were to the left hand side and the headlights were to the right.

"Q. This car was ahead of this Ford coupé wasn't it? A. It was ahead of it, but the coupé stood right between the lights."

[1-3] Appellants insist that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff is not supported by the evidence. It is their contention that, since the driver of the truck was proceeding on his own right side of the highway at a reasonable rate of speed, and since the plaintiff voluntarily placed himself on the highway in the path of the truck without giving any warning of his presence, no negligence on the part of the driver of the truck is shown by the evidence. As was pointed out in the case of Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 713, 41 A. L. R. 1027, a pedestrian has the same right to travel upon a public highway as has the driver of an automobile, subject to this right being exercised with a reasonable amount of care, under existing circumstances. And a driver of an automobile may not proceed under the assumption that, so long as he is on the right side of the highway, and proceeding at a low rate of speed, the path in front of him will remain clear. It is incumbent upon the driver of an automobile to keep control of his automobile at all times, and to use reasonable care and caution under the circumstances and conditions of the particular time. There was evidence here that the driver of the truck had been driving and loading his vehicle for more than 24 hours next preceding the accident, with only 1 hour's sleep. It was also in evidence that some miles back he had passed through a sandstorm, and his windshield was dusty and scarred, and had not been wiped off. There was conflicting evidence as to whether the night was very light or very dark. The driver testified he did not see the Ford, or the plaintiff, as his attention was upon the lights of the plaintiff's car, which was parked slightly in advance of the Ford. Whether, in the exercise of reasonable care, he should have seen these objects, or whether, in the condition thus created, the Ford was so obscured or so blended with the plaintiff's machine, that it could not be seen by the driver of the truck in the exercise of reasonable diligence, are questions of fact.

"The rule by which appellate courts must be guided in passing upon the question whether findings of fact or verdicts of juries are sufficiently supported by the evidence is this: 'That where an honest difference of opinion between men of average intelligence can arise as to the effect of the evidence—that is, if the evidence is such as that different conclusions upon the matter can rationally be drawn from the evidence—then the case presented is one for the jury, or the court, if the questions of fact be submitted to its arbitrament.' Firth v. Southern Pac. Co., 44 Cal. App. 511, 514, 186 P. 815, 816."

[4, 5] In view of all the circumstances here present, we are of the opinion that the question as to whether or not the driver of the truck was guilty of negligence was one of fact for the jury, and that the jury's finding of negligence on his part is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

It is next urged that the plaintiff was himself guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law. This claim is based upon the following facts, as testified to by the plaintiff: That he had passed the truck shortly before he saw the unlighted Ford standing on the highway; that, after he had parked his car and started back to the Ford, he saw the truck approaching, it being then between a quarter and a half mile away; that he engaged in attempting to repair the Ford while it was parked upon a main traveled highway, without lights; that he again saw the truck approaching when it was 100 to 150 yards away; that the approach of the truck at that time was such that it caused him to warn Mrs. De Frates to move off the highway; that thereafter he paid no further attention to the truck, although he knew it was coming toward him, and that it was headed straight for him; and that during all of this time he was working on the south side of the Ford car, standing right up to the edge of the car, bending over the front fender, where he could not be seen.

In support of their theory that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, defendants cite a number of cases. In Mayer v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 740, 173 P. 174, it was held to be negligence, as a matter of law, where the plaintiff walked out into a crossing, in heavy traffic, without glancing to either side, and being, up to the moment of impact, absolutely oblivious to an approaching automobile. In Moss v. Boynton Co., 44 Cal. App. 474, 186 P. 631, 632, the plaintiff stepped into the street without looking in the direction from which traffic was first to be expected. This was held to be negligence, as a matter of law. In Ogden v. Lee, 61 Cal. App. 493, 215 P. 122, the plaintiff was held guilty of contributory negligence where he saw a light which he thought was standing still, and then proceeded to cross the street with an umbrella obstructing his view, without any precaution to see if any machine was coming. Atkins v. Bouchet, 65 Cal. App. 94, 223 P. 87, is a similar case. The case of Chrissinger v. Southern Pacific Company, 169 Cal. 619, 149 P. 175, and the case of Klusman v. Pacific Electric Railway Company, 190 Cal. 441, 213 P. 38, are both cases where no precautions were taken by the plaintiff. In Reynolds v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Company, 162 Cal. 327, 122 P. 962, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 34, the court holds that the temporary forgetfulness of a known danger, which is not induced by some sudden and adequate disturbing cause, is itself negligence, as a matter of law. In Finkle v. Tait, 55 Cal. App. 425, 203 P. 1031, the court held that the only possible view of the evidence was that the plaintiff either did not look at all, or, if he did, that he saw the automobile and carelessly walked in front of it; his act being negligence, as a matter of law.

In opposition to the claim that he was guilty of contributory negligence, the plaintiff cites the following cases: Graybiel v. Auger, 64 Cal. App. 679, 222 P. 635; Deitchler v. Ball, 99 Wash. 483, 170 P. 123; Coffman v. Singh, 49 Cal. App. 342, 193 P. 259; Blackwell v. Renwick, 21 Cal. App. 131; Hatzakorjian v.

Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., supra. In Moss v. Boynton Company, supra, the court said:

"Contributory negligence 'is a question of law only when the evidence is of such a character that it will support no other legitimate inference than that in the one case the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. * * * When the evidence is such that the court is impelled to say that it is not in conflict on the facts, and that from those facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his own injury, then, and only then, does the law step in and forbid plaintiff a recovery. * * * Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury.' Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513; Wing v. Western Pac. Co., 41 Cal. App. 251, 182 P. 969. And the question of contributory negligence must be determined without regard to any negligence on the part of defendant. Hutson v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 701, 703, 89 P. 1093."

In Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281, 282, where there was a city ordinance requiring automobiles to stop while a street car was receiving or discharging passengers, and where the plaintiff was injured while attempting to board a car, the court said:

"The question of negligence under the usual rule of ordinary care that devolves upon foot travelers, must be examined in the light of all the attendant circumstances, one of which may be knowledge of the existence of a statute or an ordinance prescribing certain fixed regulations for observance by automobile drivers. And it may be that if the jurors in this case rejected, as improbable, respondent's testimony that she looked and saw no approaching automobile, they, nevertheless, concluded—as well they might—that if she did not see the automobile before leaving the sidewalk, she reasoned that its driver would comply with the city ordinance, referred to in the court's instructions, requiring an automobile traveling behind a street car to stop 10 feet in the rear of the car if it stops to let off or take on passengers, until the passengers have safely alighted from or boarded the car. Whether, if she saw the automobile, respondent would have been warranted in going toward the street car without further watching the automobile approach, relying upon a compliance by the appellants with the requirements of the ordinance, was a question upon which men's minds might well differ, and hence it was properly a case for the jury. * * *"

In Carbaugh v. White Bus Line, 51 Cal. App. 1, 195 P. 1066, 1067, the plaintiff at an intersection saw the defendant's stage approaching, but proceeded to cross into the intersection. In discussing the question of contributory negligence, the court said:

"The first contention of the appellant herein is that the plaintiff D. C. Carbaugh, as the driver of said automobile, was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in entering upon and attempting to cross said boulevard after observing the defendant's stage approaching its point of intersection with the Mission drive. This contention is absolutely without merit. The plaintiff D. C. Carbaugh, as he approached the intersection of these two streets, was driving upon the right side of the Mission drive at a rate of speed permitted by law, and had, under the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act, the right of way across Pomona Boulevard in advance of the defendant's stage approaching thereon. Whether or not after observing the approach of said stage and its position upon said boulevard, and the rate of speed at which it was traveling, the said plaintiff was justified in proceeding upon his rightful way across said boulevard in advance of said stage was clearly a question of fact for the jury. Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 116 P. 513; Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 P. 677; Commonwealth Bonding, etc., Co. v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co., 42 Cal. App. 573, 184 P. 29; Robinson v. Clemons, 46 Cal. App. 661, 190 P. 203; Baker v. Western Auto Stage Co., 48 Cal. App. 283, 192 P. 73."

[6] The question as to whether a given state of facts constitutes contributory negligence, as a matter of law, or whether it is a matter that should go to the jury, as a question of fact, is often a close one. The solution depends entirely upon the existing circumstances in each particular case. Unusual circumstances may determine in a given case whether or not reasonable minds might legitimately draw different conclusions on the question of negligence. There seems to be a general rule running through the cases where a pedestrian, or one standing on a highway, is injured by an automobile, which usually determines whether the question of contributory negligence is one of law, or of fact. Where the injured party fails to look at all, or looks straight ahead without glancing to either side, or is in a position where he cannot see, or, in other words, where he takes no precaution at all for his own safety, it is usually a question for the court. Where he looks but does not see an approaching automobile, or, seeing one, erroneously misjudges its speed or distance, or for some other reason assumes he could avoid injury to himself, the question is usually one for the jury.

[7] While a somewhat close question is presented by the facts in the instant case, it can hardly be said that the plaintiff here did not take some precaution, or that he did not have some reason for assuming he could avoid injury. He stood as close as possible to the Ford on which he was working; he warned the lady he was trying to assist to step back so that the way would be more nearly clear; and he noted that there was plenty of room for the defendant to pass on the other three-fourths of the highway. He also testified that when he last saw the truck he thought it was slightly to the left side of the road. He may have thought it was already turning over to the other side of the road, and thus misjudged its position. He may have assumed he could avoid injury, since he thought the lights on the truck were sufficient to reveal the Ford and himself, and that the driver would turn out in time. Whether he could, or should, have moved the machine off the highway, in the time available, may be a debatable question. It was an emergency, in which he was attempting to assist a lady in trouble in the middle of the night. While it would now appear that the highest degree of caution might have saved him from injury, what he, as a reasonable man, was justified in doing on the spur of the moment is a matter upon which reasonable minds might well differ. Under all of the circumstances, we are of the opinion that the question raised, as to contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, was one for the jury.

Since the questions of negligence on the part of the defendant and contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff were properly submitted to the jury, the matter of instructions is important. A number of assignments of error, in connection with the giving or refusing of instructions, are set forth. We deem it necessary to comment only on a few of them. The court gave the following instruction:

"I charge you that under the Motor Vehicle Act of this state which was in full force and effect at the time of this accident, the driver of an automobile in relation to the rights of others traveling upon the highway was required to drive his vehicle in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper and under no circumstances to exceed thirty-five miles per hour, and the law requires of him the necessity of making certain that foot passengers were aware of the rearward approach of the vehicle; and that the vehicle itself is at such a distance from the pedestrian as to avoid running over him in his sudden panic from surprise at knowledge of its unexpected approach, and finally, that the vehicle is under such control as that it may be stopped promptly."

[8, 9] It is, of course, the law that the driver of an automobile must anticipate the presence of other persons upon the highway. Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., supra. In the case just cited, the court held that the driver of the automobile should have known of the presence of the pedestrian, and that blinding headlights were no excuse, as the pedestrian was on the right side of the road, where he had a right to be. While this is the law, it applies more particularly to cases where the driver of the automobile either knew or should have known of the presence of the other party. In effect, the jury was here instructed that the law required of the truck driver in this case that he make certain that the plaintiff was aware of his approach. We think that reasonable diligence, rather than certainty, was required. In view of the fact that the circumstances here were peculiar, that the defendant was running at a low rate of speed on the right side of the road, that he saw an obstruction, being plaintiff's parked and lighted car, that he was turning out in an effort to pass the obstruction he saw, and in view of the doubt as to whether or not the position and effect of the lights on plaintiff's car were such as to have caused the Ford to be so blended with the plaintiff's car as to have reasonably prevented the defendant from seeing the Ford, or the plaintiff, an instruction that the law placed upon the defendant the absolute necessity of making certain that foot passengers were aware of his approach was hardly justified. It left out of consideration the question as to whether the driver should have known of the presence of the plaintiff, or whether or not the plaintiff himself knew of the approach of the vehicle, and was oblivious thereto. We think that under the conditions here present the instruction in question should have been qualified in the manner indicated.

The court also instructed the jury:

"I instruct you that every person has a right to presume that every other person will perform his duty and obey the law, and in the absence of reasonable ground to think otherwise, it is not negligence to assume that he is not exposed to danger which comes to him only from violation of law or duty by such other person."

[10-13] While this is also a general rule, it should have also been qualified under the circumstances of this particular case. The rule does not apply to "every person," but applies to one who is himself not negligent. 19 Cal. Jur. 596, and cases there cited. Reliance upon this presumption will not excuse one who is himself negligent, for such a rule would abrogate the doctrine of contributory negligence. McPherson v. Walling, 58 Cal. App. 563, 209 P. 209. A person may not blindly rely upon the unaided care of another, but must use reasonable care to observe the conduct of such other person, so far as this may affect his own safety. Simonsen v. L. J. Christopher, 186 Cal. 786, 200 P. 615; Harris v. Johnson, 174 Cal. 55, 161 P. 1155, L. R. A. 1917C, 477, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 560. Whether or not reasonable care is used under the circumstances, in relying upon this presumption, is a question for the jury. Mann v. Scott, supra; Scott v. San Bernardino Valley Company, 152 Cal. 604, 93 P. 677. The effect of this instruction was to tell the jury that in this case the plaintiff had a right to rely upon the rule stated, irrespective of whether or not he himself was negligent, and that he had a right to assume that he was not exposed to danger, even though he might know he was in a perilous position. The negligence of the defendant and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff were questions which should have been left to the jury, and this instruction should not have been given, without qualification. It is not a necessary inference from the facts in this case that the danger to be anticipated could come only from a violation of law, but such danger might come from a variety of other causes. Respondent justifies this instruction by the argument that the plaintiff had a right to be where he was, and that he had a right to assume that the lights of the truck would be sufficient for the driver of the truck, if he was obeying the law, to observe the Ford in time to clear it. The vice of the instruction is that it practically assumes, what respondent assumes in this argument, that the plaintiff had a right to be where he was without taking additional precaution. Whether or not he had this right, and also the right to assume that the driver of the truck would see him, were questions for the jury, and may not be assumed as true.

The court also instructed the jury as follows:

"I instruct you that under the Motor Vehicle Act which was in full force at the time of this accident it is provided that, 'any vehicle overtaking another vehicle proceeding in the same direction shall pass at least two feet to the left thereof, and shall not again be driven to the right side of the highway until reasonably clear of such overtaken vehicle.'"

[14] This instruction is not strictly applicable to the facts of this case, as there was no evidence in connection with this accident of any vehicle overtaking another vehicle which was "proceeding in the same direction." In effect, it instructed the jury that the law imposed the duty upon the driver to clear the parked Ford by at least 2 feet, irrespective of the circumstances, and irrespective of whether he knew of the presence of the Ford upon the highway, or, as a reasonable man, under the circumstances, should have known thereof. The question of negligence on the part of the driver depended upon whether or not he used reasonable care under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, and not upon whether or not he complied with this section of the California Vehicle Act.

The court also instructed the jury as follows:

"I instruct you that under the Motor Vehicle Act which was in force at the time of this accident, the defendants were required to carry at the front of their truck at least two lighted lamps of sufficient candle power to reveal any object, vehicle or substantial object on the road straight ahead for a distance of seventy-five feet therefore, in this case, if you find from the evidence that the defendants failed to have headlights on their truck of sufficient candle power to reveal the plaintiff at a distance of seventy-five feet, then I charge you that a violation of this law would be negligence as a matter of law, and if you find from the evidence that the defendants' negligence proximately contributed to the happening of the accident, no matter how slight, then your verdict will be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, if you further find that at that time the plaintiff was in the exercise of ordinary care with regard to his own safety and was without contributory negligence on his part."

[15, 16] The jury were thus instructed that the law required the defendants to have lights of sufficient candle power to reveal any object on the road straight ahead for a distance of 75 feet, and also they were instructed that, if the defendants failed to have headlights sufficient to actually reveal the plaintiff at a distance of 75 feet, this constituted negligence, as a matter of law. There was no law to this effect in California at that time. The instruction is apparently based upon the California Vehicle Act of 1919 (St. 1919, p. 191). This accident occurred on the night of June 1, 1925. At that time the California Vehicle Act of 1923 was in force. This act contains no such requirement. See General Laws 1923, Act 5128. The evidence shows the truck involved in this action was equipped with electric headlights. This instruction, in effect, told the jury the defendant was guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, if his lights did not, in fact, reveal the plaintiff to him. The evidence showed that the plaintiff was not actually revealed to the defendant prior to the collision, and the instruction was misleading and prejudicially erroneous. Wiley v. Cole, 67 Cal. App. 762, 228 P. 550. The jury were here instructed that the law required that the defendant have headlights that must have revealed the plaintiff at a distance of 75 feet, irrespective of where the plaintiff was, and irrespective of what might have interfered with his having been so revealed. In our opinion, this instruction not only was a misstatement of the existing law, but it concerned a matter so closely related to the questions of fact involved that it may have had a not inconsiderable effect upon the jury in reaching their verdict. The act of 1923 established a different test than distance for lights upon motor vehicles. Under that act, lights are required to be, not only sufficient for the purposes of the driver of the vehicle, but also such that they will not unduly interfere with the vision of approaching drivers. The only requirement of this act, in regard to the amount of light, is that it shall be an "ample driving light." General Laws 1923, Act 5128, § 101. What constituted an ample driving light, under the circumstances, was for the jury to decide, and it was erroneous for the court to instruct them that this particular distance was the test. A number of other circumstances are presented by the evidence which should have been considered by the jury, in passing upon whether or not there was any negligence on the part of the defendant.

Respondent argues that, even if this instruction was erroneous, it was harmless. We cannot agree with this point of view. Irrespective of whether or not the driver of the truck could see more than 75 feet ahead of him, it was in evidence that he did not see the plaintiff, and the jury were practically instructed that this was negligence, as a matter of law. Not only this, but the question of whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence depended upon a number of circumstances, among which are the acts and conduct of the defendant himself. If the defendant had improper lights, and thus deceived the plaintiff, who had acted upon the belief that he had proper lights, this would materially affect the question of contributory negligence. The jury might draw the inference that the reason the defendant did not see the plaintiff was because he did not have lights that conformed to this instruction, and they might also draw the inference that, if he had had lights which complied with this instruction, this alone would have justified the plaintiff in remaining where he did, upon the highway.

[17] It is true that there were other instructions submitting the question of contributory negligence to the jury, but this instruction practically told the jury that the defendant was negligent if his lights did not actually reveal the plaintiff to him, and this implies that the plaintiff was justified in relying absolutely upon being seen by the defendant. We think the general instructions on contributory negligence did not cure the error in the last quoted instruction, and that the giving of the same was prejudicial to the defendants. The question of negligence and contributory negligence were, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, very close questions, and should have been left entirely to the jury. It is impossible to say that the instruction here referred to had no part in weighing the balance in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants.

This action was brought against R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Coachella Valley Transportation Company, and also American National Bank of Pomona, a corporation. The jury brought in its verdict in the same form, against R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith, doing business under said fictitious name, and also against American National Bank of Pomona, a corporation. The answer of the American National Bank of Pomona alleged, among other things, that R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith were conducting and operating said business as trustees for the benefit of said bank. It appears that a franchise to act as common carriers had originally been issued by the Railroad Commission to H. L. Boutell and H. S. Fuqua, permitting them to operate as the Coachella Valley Transportation Company. These parties, having become indebted to the said bank, attempted to turn over the business to the bank, and Davis and Smith were appointed by the bank under an agreement with the owners of the line, to conduct the business and protect the interest of the bank. On January 22, 1923, the two owners of the line, and the said Davis and Smith, applied to the Railroad Commission for permission to sell and transfer said business to said Davis and Smith, as trustees, for said bank. Boutell and Fuqua had theretofore given an assignment to the bank. It was stipulated between the parties hereto that, at the time of the accident in question, the truck was being driven by one George Scanlon, who was at that time the agent and employee of the Coachella Valley Transportation Company, and that he was acting within the scope of his authority as such agent and employee. It appears that the assignment made to the bank was taken subject to the approval of the Railroad Commission. The subsequent order of the Railroad Commission contained the following:

"Applicants Davis and Smith sought the transfer of the certificate rights to them as trustees for the American National Bank for the purpose of finding a competent purchaser for the line. Each stipulated, however, that they would accept the transfer to themselves jointly and not as trustees and assume personal responsibility. Mr. Davis is vice president of the American National Bank and Mr. Smith is a hardware merchant. Mr. Smith will continue active management."

"Order. H. L. Boutell and H. S. Fuqua, doing business under the fictitious name Coachella Valley Transportation Company, having made application to the railroad commission for approval of the sale and transfer of all their certificate rights to R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith, as trustees, a public hearing having been held, the matter having been duly submitted and now being ready for decision:

"It is hereby ordered that the application herein be granted for the sale and transfer of said certificate rights to R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith, jointly as individuals, and not as trustees for any person whatever, upon the following conditions:

"5. No vehicle may be operated by the applicants R. M. Davis and H. E. Smith unless such vehicle is owned by them, or is leased by them for a specific amount on a trip or term basis, the leasing of the equipment not to include the services of a driver, or operator of leased cars. All employment of drivers or operators of leased cars shall be made on the basis of a contract by which the driver or operator shall bear the relation of an employee to the transportation company."

As respondent says in his brief, it was necessary to let the case go to the jury on the question of ownership of and who was operating the truck line. Respondent justifies the judgment against the bank by the evidence which shows that the business was assigned to the bank; that the individual defendants accepted the operation thereof only for the bank; that any deficit in the expense of operation was paid by the bank; that Mr. Davis testified that he and Smith operated the line in behalf of the bank, Smith as manager, and Davis as adviser; that Davis testified that, after the order was issued by the Railroad Commission, he and Smith agreed with the bank that they were to operate it for the bank, and that they should have no personal responsibility. Smith testified that he was manager; that the bank paid him; that he was operating the line for the bank; and that he worked for the owners, on a salary. Respondent argues that the bank was therefore liable while they held the assignment, and that the evidence shows that Davis and Smith were operating the line for the bank and for no one else. On the other hand, they justify the verdict against Davis and Smith on the ground that the records of the Railroad Commission showed that these two had assumed personal responsibility. Respondent therefore argues that it was for the jury to determine who, in effect, were the owners and operators of the truck line. We think this contention is correct, but it does not clearly appear that both the bank and the individuals can be held liable under the evidence. They attempt to justify the judgment against the two individuals by the statement of the Railroad Commission that they have accepted liability, but if the order of the Railroad Commission was conclusive as to liability, then the individuals would be responsible, and the bank would not. If the two individuals were, in fact, merely employees, then they were coemployees of the driver of the truck, and, not being directly involved in any negligence of the driver, if such negligence there was, they would not be liable.

While the jury has apparently found that Davis and Smith were the ones doing business under the fictitious name mentioned in the stipulation, they have also found against the bank, and it is not clear whether it was their intention to find that Davis and Smith alone were operating the truck line, or whether they considered the bank as also a party to this operation. Under our view of the case, it will have to be reversed, and we mention this phase of the case in order that it may be guarded against on another trial.

[18] One other point remains to be considered. Appellant urges that the damages are excessive. The jury awarded a verdict of $30,000. The evidence shows plaintiff's leg was amputated slightly below the knee four days after his injury. His total expense, as shown by the evidence, was $605. Plaintiff was an employee of a gasoline filling station, and received $140 a month. While we are aware of the rule that damages for personal injuries cannot be held excessive, as a matter of law, simply because the amount may be larger than ordinarily allowed in such cases, the amount named in the verdict of the jury is large enough to emphasize the fact that the errors herein mentioned were prejudicial to the defendant. Respondent calls attention to section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, to the effect that a judgment should not be reversed, unless an examination of the entire case discloses the fact that the errors complained of have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. In our opinion, the amount of this verdict furnishes an additional reason for the action we feel compelled to take herein.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOANE, P. J.; MARKS, J.

103 Cal. App. 663

PEOPLE v. WOOFTER et al. (Cr. 1108.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 3, 1930.

Criminal law ⇨1182—Conviction would be affirmed where accused filed no brief nor made appearance at time case was called for hearing by appellate court (Pen. Code, § 1253).

Where accused filed no brief on appeal from conviction of escape from prison camp and made no appearance at time case was called for a hearing, conviction would be affirmed pursuant to provisions of Pen. Code, § 1253.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Francis Woofter and others were convicted of escape from prison camp, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Clinton W. Johnson, of Oroville, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendants were convicted in the superior court of Butte county of a felony, to wit, escape from a prison camp.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court December 19, 1929. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellants. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on February 3, 1930. No appearance was made for appellants at the time the case was called for hearing.

Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgments are affirmed.

103 Cal. App: 523

NELSON et al. v. DARLING. (Civ. 5874.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 29, 1930.

Appeal and error ⇨32—Appeal from judgment of municipal court in city wherein cause of action arose lies only to superior court, whose judgment is final.

Where cause of action in suit commenced in municipal court arises in city in which such court is situated, an appeal lies only to the superior court, whose judgment is final.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Action by George A. Nelson and another, copartners doing business under the name of Nelson Bros., against Lucy A. Darling. From a judgment of the Superior Court affirming a judgment of the Municipal Court for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. On respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

E. H. Woodard, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Max Schleimer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNELL, Justice pro tem. This cause is before us on the respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal taken from a judgment of the superior court affirming a judgment of the municipal court of the city of Los Angeles. The action was for the recovery of real estate broker's commissions, and it is evident from an inspection of the clerk's transcript that the cause of action arose within the city of Los Angeles, where the plaintiff brokers had their office and where the agreement for exchange of properties and payment of commissions was entered into.

Where the cause of action in a suit commenced in the municipal court arises, as disclosed by the record therein, in the city in which such court is situated, an appeal lies only to the superior court, and the judgment of that tribunal is final. Johnston v. Wolf (Cal. App.) 280 P. 980; Nelson v. Thomas (Cal. App.) 283 P. 982.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

103 Cal. App. 624

PEOPLE v. KEYES et al. (Cr. 1806.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 31, 1930.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1930. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1930.

1. Indictment and information ⇨125(5½)—Indictment charging single conspiracy to commit crimes of giving bribe and receiving bribe was not duplicitous (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

Indictment charging a single conspiracy to commit the crime of giving and offering a bribe, in violation of Pen. Code § 67, and the crime of asking and receiving, and agreeing to receive, a bribe, in violation of section 68, and alleging that each of ten overt acts pleaded in indictment were committed in pursuance of conspiracy, was not duplicitous as charging two separate conspiracies.

2. Conspiracy ⇨23—Crimes of giving and offering bribe and of asking and receiving bribe were sufficient on which to base charge of conspiracy (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

Crimes of giving and offering a bribe, in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, a bribe, in violation of section 68, were sufficient on which to base a charge of conspiracy, in that a conviction for conspiracy therein would bar a subsequent prosecution for substantive offense of bribery.

3. Criminal law ⇨427(1)—Indictment and information ⇨171—Conspiracy to commit any crime may be proven under charge directly of its commission, and thereafter acts of conspirators are admissible.

A conspiracy to commit any crime may be proven under charge directly of its commission for purpose of swelling volume of testimony otherwise admissible in support of charge, and, after such proof, testimony of any conspirator as to acts in furtherance of conspiracy will be admissible against defendant, himself a party to illicit concord.

4. Conspiracy ⇨45—Letter containing resignation of chief deputy on ground cases were being insincerely prosecuted was admissible in prosecution against district attorney for conspiracy in giving and receiving bribe (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

In prosecution against district attorney and another for criminal conspiracy to commit crime of giving and offering bribe, in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, bribe, in violation of section 68, the admission in evidence of a letter to district attorney from chief deputy offering resignation on ground he did not care to be party to insincere prosecution was not erroneous, in view of fact that letter amounted to charge that certain cases were not being sincerely prosecuted without a denial thereof by district attorney.

5. Criminal law ⇨1036(3)—Objection to records of county assessor's office to establish financial worth as being hearsay was waived without request for instruction limiting effect (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

Where defendants, in prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of giving and offering bribe, in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, a bribe, in violation of section 68, failed to request instruction limiting effect of records of county assessor's office introduced to establish financial worth of person alleged to have transferred money, the objection to such evidence as being hearsay was waived.

6. Criminal law ⇨530—Refusal to compel production of alleged statement taken in shorthand, and afterwards transcribed, without showing that it was signed, held not erroneous (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of giving and offering bribe, in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, a bribe, in violation of section 68, the refusal to compel production of alleged statement of one of defendants concerning facts of case which was taken down in shorthand, and afterwards transcribed, without showing that he signed statement or had ever seen it, held not erroneous.

7. Criminal law ⇨1120(6)—Objection to question on ground it had already been asked and answered was properly sustained without showing in respect thereto.

Ruling of trial court sustaining objection to question on ground that it had already been asked and answered held not erroneous, in absence of showing that such question had not been asked and answered theretofore.

8. Witnesses ⇨201(2)—Question as to witness authorizing attorney to agree with district attorney relative to plea of guilty was properly excluded as privileged communication.

Question, in prosecution for conspiracy, relative to whether witness had authorized attorney to agree with district attorney as to plea of guilty, and that he would testify for prosecution, was properly excluded as calling for privileged communication between client and attorney.

9. Criminal law ⚡1120(6)—Question whether witness, when making statement, expected to be tried, was properly excluded without showing statement referred to.

Action of court in sustaining objection to question relative to whether witness really expected to be tried on charge at time of making statement held not to constitute error, in absence of showing as to nature of statement referred to; the question without such showing being unintelligible.

10. Criminal law ⚡1122(6)—Objection to questions will not be held erroneously sustained without showing in respect thereto.

Appellate court will not hold action of trial court, in sustaining objection to questions, erroneous, in absence of showing in respect thereto by argument or citation of authority.

11. Criminal law ⚡730(3)—Prosecutors were not guilty of misconduct by cross-examination establishing that defendant had been accused of other crimes, in view of instruction limiting effect (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of giving and offering a bribe, in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, a bribe, in violation of section 68, prosecutors were not guilty of misconduct by eliciting from witness on cross-examination the fact that defendant district attorney had been made respondent under accusation for removal from office, and had been indicted for offense different from that under investigation, in view of instruction limiting effect of such testimony.

12. Witnesses ⚡326—Prosecution was properly permitted to introduce testimony tending to show bias on part of impeaching witness in favor of defendants.

Where witness for defendant, in prosecution for conspiracy, had testified to a conversation between himself and witness for prosecution, tending to show bitter feeling on part of state witness against defendant, the prosecution was properly permitted in rebuttal to call witnesses who related statements by defense witness tending to show a bias on his part in favor of some of defendants.

13. Criminal law ⚡427(5)—Telegram held admissible as communication from conspirator, in view of sufficiency of evidence showing conspiracy (Pen. Code, §§ 67, 68).

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of giving and offering bribe in violation of Pen. Code, § 67, and crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive, bribe in violation of section 68, telegram was properly received in evidence as communication from one conspirator to another in and about subject-matter of conspiracy, in view of sufficiency of evidence to show connection of parties with conspiracy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Asa Keyes and another were convicted of the crime of conspiracy, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court 284 P. 1105.

See, also, 279 P. 833.

Milton Cohen and Paul W. Schenck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant Keyes.

Le Compte Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant Rosenberg.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. The defendants appeal from a judgment convicting them of the crime of conspiracy and from an order of the trial court denying them a new trial.

The indictment under which appellants were prosecuted charges them with a criminal conspiracy "to commit the crime of giving and offering a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 67 of the Penal Code, a felony, and the crime of asking, receiving, and agreeing to receive a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 68 of the Penal Code, a felony. * * *" The pleading then alleges that during the times mentioned therein appellant Keyes was the district attorney of the county of Los Angeles, that there were pending in the superior court of the county three criminal actions, one against C. S. Lewis, Jacob Berman, alias Jack Bennett, appellant Rosenberg and others, the second against E. L. Rouse, appellant Rosenberg, and others, and the third against Jacob Berman and others, and that appellant was charged with the duty of prosecuting the three actions.

The nature of the conspiracy—and it will be observed that but one conspiracy is mentioned in the language above quoted—is thus, with the omission of unnecessary verbiage, more specifically set forth in the indictment:

"That continuously throughout the period of time from about the first day of September, 1927, to the first day of September, 1928, * * * the said above named defendants * * * have conspired, combined, confederated and agreed together, and with each other, to commit the crime of giving and offering a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 67 of the Penal Code, a felony, and the crime of asking, receiving and agreeing to receive a bribe in violation of the provisions of section 68 of the Penal Code, a felony, that is to say, that the said defendants then and there and continuously throughout said period of time * * * have conspired, combined, confederated and agreed together that he, the said Asa Keyes, * * * would ask, agree to receive and receive various and divers things of value and advantages and promises and undertakings to give things of value and advantages, and that the said defendants * * * [several defendants other than appellants are named in the indictment] would willfully, unlawfully and feloniously ously give and offer to give to him, the said Asa Keyes, various and divers things of value and advantages and promises and undertakings to give things of value and advantages, with a corrupt intent and upon the agreement and understanding that the action of him, the said Asa Keyes, as such district attorney * * * would be * * * influenced thereby, in that he, the said Asa Keyes * * * would control and direct the prosecution of each of said actions to the end that in so far as said actions related to any of said above named defendants E. H. Rosenberg * * * [and others] that said actions would be disposed of in such manner as to result in the discharge of such defendant [sic] without the conviction of such defendant [sic]."

It will be noted that, in the matter constituting the paragraph immediately preceding this paragraph, but one conspiracy is mentioned.

The indictment charges ten several overt acts performed in furtherance of the conspiracy. The facts concerning each of these acts are set forth in separate paragraphs, ten, of course, in number. The first of these paragraphs is preceded by the heading, "Overt Act No. I." Each of the remaining nine is preceded by a similar heading, but with the number appropriate to it. It is charged in each of the ten paragraphs that the overt act referred to in it was committed, "in pursuance of said conspiracy and to effect the object of the same." Here, then, are ten separate references to the single conspiracy pleaded in the earlier portions of the indictment.

[1] Appellants contend that the pleading is duplicitous, that, indeed, it charges a conspiracy formed for the purpose of "giving and offering a bribe," and a second conspiracy for the purpose of "asking, receiving and agreeing to receive a bribe." The pleading will bear no such construction. Its prefatory portion charges a conspiracy to do both sets of acts. The facts set up to exhibit more fully the nature of the charge exhibit a chain of events creating a conspiracy. Each of the ten overt acts pleaded in the indictment is charged to have been committed in pursuance of a conspiracy. The pleading is therefore not duplicitous.

Appellants also make the point that the indictment is insufficient, for the reason that both sides in a programmed bribery, that is, both the prospective givers and the prospective takers, cannot in the very essence of things conspire to "give and offer" the bribe, and that, also, both the would-be givers and the would-be takers cannot conspire to "ask, receive and agree to receive" it. As the indictment before us makes no charge of separate conspiracies to do, respectively, these things, but a charge of a single conspiracy to do both sets of them, both points fall to the ground.

[2] We now approach a more interesting question. It is insisted that a charge of conspiracy cannot grow out of the facts exhibited in the indictment. Appellants call attention to the undoubted truth that there are crimes which can be perpetrated only by two persons or two sets of persons acting on opposite "sides," to adopt our own terminology. Among these crimes are adultery, criminal rebating, and bribery. It is said as to each of them, and of others like them, that a concord is necessary to its commission, and that therefore the formation of a conspiracy to commit it is included in and swallowed up by the commission. Upon this postulate it is contended that a charge of conspiracy was impossible in the present instance, and that the charge should have been bribery. This is certainly the law in some jurisdictions, under peculiar circumstances, however, which do not exist in California, the cases upon which appellants rely having been decided by the federal courts. The first of these is United States v. Dietrich (C. C.) 126 F. 664, but the reason for the rule, so far as it is of interest here, is perhaps best stated in later decisions. In one of the cases the indictment charged "a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States by inducing the giving and taking of a rebate." Under the federal statutes, the crime of conspiracy is punishable more severely than the crimes of giving and taking a rebate. With this circumstance in mind, the court said: "If Congress has made a certain action an offense and prescribed its punishment, the courts cannot, by giving it some other name, increase the punishment." U. S. v. New York Central, etc., R. R. Co. (C. C.) 146 F. 298, 303. In a later case, charging also a conspiracy to give and accept a rebate, the court said, referring to another class of crimes for purposes of illustration: "It cannot be if * * * the crime of bigamy be punishable in a certain way that the two parties who alone could commit it can be subjected to a charge of conspiracy for committing the same crime, and thereby made to suffer twice for exactly the same offense, or be subjected to a severer punishment on a conviction for the conspiracy than is imposed upon the substantive offense itself." Thomas v. U. S. (C. C. A.) 156 F. 897, 904, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720.

The reasons for the rule in question, so far as they are valid, as stated in the language taken from these two federal cases, do not obtain in this state. It is not possible here to punish a man more severely under a charge of conspiracy to commit a particular crime than under a charge that he has committed the crime itself. If two or more persons "conspire to commit any felony, or to commit any act injurious to the public health, or to public morals, or tending to pervert or to obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws, they shall be punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as in this code provided for the punishment of the commission of the said felony or act, respectively." Pen. Code, § 182. There is therefore room for the invocation here of the familiar maxim that, where the reason for a rule ceases, the rule itself ceases. We shall have more to say upon this subject below.

We have above referred to the "reasons for the rule in question, so far as they are valid," as stated by the United States courts. In employing this language we had in mind the expression in Thomas v. United States, supra, to the effect that one charged with conspiracy might be "made to suffer twice for exactly the same offense." We think this is not a valid reason. We cannot perceive how one charged with crime may be made to suffer twice "for exactly the same offense." The inhibition against double jeopardy would seem to forbid such a possibility. It is to be observed—a circumstance which we have not yet mentioned—that the overt acts charged in the indictment here include acts which amounted to a commission of the very crimes which it is alleged that appellants conspired to commit. The first overt act alleged was the receipt by appellant Keyes, from one of the other defendants, of "a large sum of money, the exact amount of which is to the grand jury unknown, but which was approximately $10,000.00." Others of the ten paragraphs which set up the overt acts allege the receipt by appellant Keyes of articles of personal property. The eighth of those paragraphs charges that appellant Rosenberg "delivered to the said Asa Keyes a certain wrist watch of the value of about $600.00, lawful money of the United States." Under such an indictment for conspiracy as we have before us, we have no doubt that appellant Keyes has been once in jeopardy upon a charge of receiving and appellant Rosenberg upon a charge of giving the bribes referred to in the list of overt acts. A charge of the substantive crimes against them, after a conviction of the crime of conspiracy under such circumstances, could hardly be allowed to stand in a court of justice. A conviction of either, hereafter, upon the substantive charge appropriate to him as distinguished from his coappellant, would be a double punishment—it would be, to quote again from Thomas v. United States, a second punishment—for "exactly the same offense" as that upon which each has already been convicted, this for the reason of which appellants have attempted to make so much, that bribery, like adultery and duelling, itself involves in its very essence a concert of action upon the part of at least two participants in the offense. We have been pointed to no authority upon this question of jeopardy, and we have made no search for such authority. The point seems plain enough to us without it.

[3] In United States v. New York Central, etc., R. R. Co., supra, the court quotes, without specific comment as to its applicability to the point under consideration, the following language of Chief Justice Cockburn in 12 Cox. Cr. Cas. 93: "I am clearly of the opinion that when the proof intended to be submitted to a jury is proof of the actual commission of crime it is not the proper course to charge the parties with conspiracy to commit it; for that course operates, it is manifest, unfairly and unjustly against the parties accused. The prosecutors are thus enabled to combine in one indictment a variety of offenses, which if treated individually, as they ought to be, would exclude the possibility of giving evidence against one defendant to the prejudice of others." We infer that appellants rely upon this expression in the English case, for they take from the opinion of the United States court a quotation which includes the language of Chief Justice Cockburn, and they emphasize the latter by reproducing it in small capitals in the brief. We think, again, that the view of the English court affords no valid reason for the application of the rule of the Federal courts in this jurisdiction. The form in which the indictment is cast no more involves "the possibility of giving evidence against one defendant to the prejudice of others" than would a charge against appellants of the substantive crimes they are here charged with conspiring to commit. In this state, whatever the rule may be in England—and we have made no effort to ascertain its nature—a conspiracy to commit any crime may be proven, under a charge directly of its commission, for the purpose of swelling the volume of testimony otherwise admissible in support of the charge. After such proof, the testimony of any conspirator as to acts in furtherance of the conspiracy will be admissible against the defendant; he himself being a party to the illicit concord. This rule is so well established that we refer to but one case, a late one, in support of it. There two defendants were convicted of the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. We said: "Counsel labor under the misapprehension that a conspiracy may not be proved to exist between two defendants for the purpose of establishing the fact that the act of one in furtherance of the conspiracy is in legal contemplation, the act of both and for which both may be convicted. They have the erroneous notion that, when a conspiracy to commit a criminal act is shown to exist, the conspirators may only be convicted of the criminal conspiracy and not of the crime actually committed. Such is not the law. The books abound with cases where conspiracies have been proved and where the jury under appropriate instructions must have found, of necessity, the existence of a conspiracy in order to have returned a verdict of guilty as to one or more of the defendants. It is sufficient for our purposes to make reference to People v. Matthew, 68 Cal. App. 95, 228 P. 417; People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 229 P. 341, and People v. Seitz (Cal. App.) 279 P. 1070." People v. Bryant (Cal. App.) 281 P. 404, 407.

We conclude that the indictment is not subject to the assault which appellants make upon it. We have seen that all reasons for the rule adopted by the United States courts fall to the ground when it is sought to render the rule applicable here. It is therefore wholly proper to say that the rule itself "ceases" here—it can have no application in this state. We can see no substantial reason, upon any other ground, why it was not proper to cast the indictment in the form in which it rests. In effect it charges appellant Keyes with receiving, and appellant Rosenberg with giving, a bribe. In the history of jurisprudence, the time is come when courts are paying less and less attention, under a more enlightened system of legislation than that which has prevailed in former times, to technical rules of pleading which are invoked for the purpose of staying the administration of justice. No matter what the particular form in which the indictment against appellants is framed, it presents in sufficient substance the facts constituting a charge of giving and receiving a bribe. Appellants were tried upon the same evidence which might have been offered against them under the latter charge. Under the law, when they entered upon the trial of the charge as actually formulated, they saw before them a possibility of the same punishment which might have been inflicted upon a charge, with specific directness, of the substantive crime alleged in the list of overt acts to have been committed. They have not been harmed by the manner in which the indictment was drawn. We are bound to take the same liberal view here, in furtherance of justice, as was taken under not altogether dissimilar circumstances in People v. Jordan, 92 Cal. App. 543, 268 P. 373. We think, further, that it can make no real difference whether the indictment be regarded substantially and actually as a charge of substantive crime or as a charge of conspiracy. We have referred to it as charging the former merely because a concert of action on the part of two "sides" is necessary to a completed giving and taking of a bribe, and because the pleading shows such concerted action. It can as well and as safely be considered substantially as what on its face it purports to be, a charge of conspiracy. By whatever name it is called, the result is the same, and we are not concerned so much with form as we are with results.

[4] Over objection, the trial court received in evidence a letter to appellant Keyes from the chief deputy in his office. The criminal cases mentioned in the indictment were pending when the letter was written, and the deputy had been charged with the duty of handling them in the office. He refers to them in the letter as "the Julian cases." The communication reads: "I hereby resign as chief deputy district attorney because I do not care to be a party to the insincere prosecution of the Julian cases." The letter was admitted in evidence while its writer was on the witness stand, and he had just detailed a conversation with appellant Keyes which had to do with the possible use of appellant Rosenberg as a witness for the prosecution in the pending cases. The witness said: "[W]e were discussing the Julian Case, the preparation of it and trial of it, and I think the question of whether Mr. Rosenberg should be used as a witness came up, and Mr. Keyes stated that he believed that he needed him as a witness. That was the extent of that conversation regarding Mr. Rosenberg. I disagreed with him on it and that was the end of the discussion at that time." The witness also testified that, after the letter had been received by appellant Keyes, he and Keyes had a conversation during which the following transpired: "[Mr. Keyes] said that he would not take that resignation or any other resignation; that I could stay there and handle the case and stay chief deputy as long as I wanted. He said that he had made his suggestion relating to Mr. Rosenberg because he believed that his evidence was necessary. I told him that I felt that he was being made a goat out of * * * by some of his friends and particularly Mr. Dudley Robinson who represented Mr. Rosenberg, and that I did not want to be joined in with him. I reminded him that Mr. Robinson was getting a fee to represent Mr. Rosenberg and I felt that he was imposing on Mr. Keyes' long friendship. He said that it was not that and that I could continue in charge of the case."

It is contended that the court erred in receiving the letter in evidence, but we think the ruling admitting it was correct. The letter amounted to a charge that the "Julian cases" were not being sincerely prosecuted, and the charge was in effect leveled at appellant Keyes, as he was the head of the office which rested under the duty of sincerely and effectively conducting the prosecution. The letter was important as laying a basis for a showing of the reaction which appellant Keyes exhibited to the charge, and it is to be taken in connection with the assertion of the chief deputy that his superior was being made "a goat of" by the counsel of appellant Rosenberg. The district attorney did not deny that the prosecution of the cases was being insincerely conducted. He merely said that he would not accept the resignation of the chief deputy, and that he had made the suggestion as to appellant Rosenberg "because he believed that his evidence was necessary." The situation is affected by the fact, also, that appellant Keyes later told the chief deputy that there would be no dismissals in the Julian cases, but that, while the cases were on trial, he said to the same witness that he would "make a motion for the dismissal of [appellant] Ed Rosenberg for the purpose of using him as a witness." The motion for a dismissal as to Rosenberg was actually made by him, and it was by the court denied. We think the letter of the chief deputy was proper evidence under the rule stated in People v. Mallon, 103 Cal. 513, 37 P. 512, and in later cases which have followed that decision. The effect of what appellant Keyes said after the receipt of the letter was for the jury.

[5] One of the defendants named in the indictment was one Ben Getzoff, and the paragraphs alleging the ten overt acts show, with the exception of the wrist watch delivered to appellant Keyes by appellant Rosenberg, that the money and articles of personal property which were received by Keyes were handed to him by Getzoff. Appellant Keyes offered evidence to prove that he believed Getzoff was a man of great wealth, who, to quote the language of the brief filed by Keyes, was "well able to lavish favors upon his chosen friends." The prosecution offered upon this same issue a showing made by certain records of the county assessor's office. These books were to the effect that in 1925 Getzoff was assessed upon personal property of the value of $750, and paid a total tax of $11.70, that his name did not appear on the assessment rolls for 1926 and 1927, and that in 1928 he was assessed upon personal property of the value of $800 and paid a tax of $13.45. It is insisted that this evidence was hearsay, and also apparently that it was inadmissible even if it were not hearsay. If the rulings admitting the evidence were error—and we do not decide that they were—we think the error was cured, perhaps we might even say that it was invited, by appellants themselves. The following occurred during a discussion of the question whether the evidence should be received: "[Counsel for one of appellants:] And this book is not the evidence of his [Getzoff's] wealth. It is only evidence of the things that it bears on its face. It would be evidence that he was assessed for that much and that he paid so much without any further testimony, but it would not be evidence of the valuation of the man's property under any circumstances, because it was kept under the provisions of the law. [A Deputy District Attorney:] Why cannot we limit it to that then? Or why cannot we limit it to that and have the jury so instructed? [Same counsel for appellant:] It would only be introduced for the purpose that he paid those taxes but it would not have any relevancy to show how much he was

